In Hungary, Piarist schools started to appear quite early: in Podolin (now Podolinec, Slovakia) (1642), Privigye (now Prievidza, Slovakia) (1666), Breznóbánya (now Brezno, Slovakia) (1673), and also Pozsonyszentgyörgy (now Svätý Jur, Slovakia) in the 17th century. The first independent Piarist province was formed in 1721, which had 33 schools by the end of the 18th century. They were very popular and much respected. The national consciousness was systematically promoted, so were the more modern philosophical ideas (ratio educationis), science and literature. Their outreach to the poor is dominant for them. During the War of Independence against Habsburg rule (1848-1849), almost all their students and many members of the Order were conscripted and fought bravely. For example, in the Battle of Branyiszkó excelled the famous army chaplain Imre (Emeric) Erdősi. In 1939 there were ten Piarist high schools: in Budapest, Debrecen, Kecskemét, Magyaróvár, Nagykanizsa, Sátoraljaújhely, Szeged, Tata, Vác and Veszprém, with about 5000 students. Its tertiary college is the Kalazantinum, with its economic center at Merenye (west of Szigetvár). – B: 0945, 1031, 1068, 1429, 1582, T: 7456.→ Branyiszkó, Battle of; Guyon, Count Richard; Religious Orders, Roman Catholic; Catholic Church in Hungary.

Pike (kopja) – An old Hungarian weapon. It is usually a 2-4 m long wooden shaft with an iron or steel head. In the related Votyak and Permic languages, it is still called kopja. The Byzantine cavalry took it over directly from the Avars, or possibly from the Kabars. In Europe, it came into use during the migration period. Below the tip of the pike, a flag was tied as a military symbol, to indicate the particular clan and later, the battle order; this flag was also fitted with a ribbon, shaped like a swallowtail. It spread into the western countries in this form, decked with flags, partly through direct Hungarian influence, partly through Late-Avar mediation. The flag-pike was one of the weapons of the Hungarian cavalry until the 17th century. – B: 1153, 1020, T: 7456.

Pikéthy, Tibor (Kisfaludy) (Komárom-Újszóny 28 March 1884 - Vác, 21 July 1972) – Organist, composer, choirmaster. He acquired his teacher's diploma from the Teachers' Training School in Győr (1904). As a private student he completed his music teacher training at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1907). First, he was the organist at Pannonhalma Abbey; then, from 1915, at the Cathedral of Vác, where he was organist and choirmaster. In the meantime he studied composition and conducting at the Academy of Music and received a diploma. For a while, he taught at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest. Later, he founded a music school in Vác, where he taught music theory and harmony. His first piano piece appeared in 1902. He composed some 105 pieces for piano, choir, and organ, including a Te Deum (1923); Organmusic (1925, 1976); Missa pro Pace (1934); Bach Phantasie (1949), and Introduction and Fugue (Introdukció és Fuga) (1960). A Musical High School is named after him in Vác. – B: 1160, 1792, T: 7103. → Lehotka, Gábor.

Pilgrim (Pilgrin) (?- 20 May 991) – Bishop of Passau from 971 to 991. His ambition was, with the help and friendship of Emperor Otto II, and the Hungarian Reigning Prince Géza, to baptize Hungarians and create a bishopric under his own archdiocese of Laureacum, became Bishop of Passau (971-991). His priests converted Géza and his son Vajk to Christianity. In 974, in his letter to Pope Benedict VII, he proudly reported the conversion of five thousand Hungarians and asked for his appointment as archbishop. He planned to achieve his goal through spurious means, falsified documents etc., which are known as the forgeries of Lorch. Since Prince Heinrich of Bavaria brought Géza into an anti-Otto alliance, and Pilgrim remained a supporter of Otto, Géza turned away from the German missionaries and Pilgrim had to give up his plan. It was to Pilgrim's credit however, that having collected in Latin the German legends dealing with the Huns and Burgundians, his name appeared in the Nibelungenlied. In his conversion and baptism, Vajk (from Baj, a Turkic name for a dignitary), son of Géza, received the name István (Stephen), the name of the patron saint of Passau, St. Stephen the Martyr. – B: 0942, 1138, 1153, 1068, T: 7456, 7103. → István I, King.

Pilinszky, János (John) (Budapest, 25 November 1921 - Budapest, 27 May 1981) – Poet, writer. He completed his studies at the Piarist High School of Budapest, then registered at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Budapest, but did not complete his studies. His writings were published in the periodicals, Sunrise (Napkelet), Life (Élet), Vigilia and Stars (Csillagok) (1938-1944). In 1944 he was conscripted into the army; he was sent to Harbach, Germany, where the concentration camp exercised a lasting impression on him. He was Co-Editor for the literary paper New Moon (Újhold) (1946-1948). His poems were published in the journals Hungarians (Magyarok) and Response (Válasz) (1947-1948). He was on scholarship in Rome in 1947-1948. Since he had a Roman Catholic world-view, he was banned from publishing from 1949 to 1957. During this time, he wrote children's poems. From 1957 he was a contributor to the Roman Catholic weekly, New Man (Új Ember). From the 1960s, he was allowed to travel to western countries. Pilinszky visited America in 1975 and London in 1976. He also wrote religious philosophical meditations. Some of his poems are touched by apocalyptic visions. His selected writings include Trapeze and Rail (Trapéz és korlát) (1946); Harbach, poems (1944, 1946); By the Time You Arrive (Mire megjössz) poems (1948); Golden Bird (Aranymadár) tales (1957); On the Third Day (Harmadnapon) (1959); Requiem (Rekviem), film story, poems, oratorio (1964); Icons of Nagyvárad (Nagyvárad i ikonok) (1970); Splinters (Szálkák) poems (1972); Life Scenes (Életképek) play (1980); Poesie, poems, (Bologna, 1983). Some of his poems were translated into English by Ted Hughes, and into French by Pierre Emmanuel. His collected writings were published in five volumes. Pilinszky's ideals were Hölderlin, Emily Brontë, Dostoyevsky and Attila József. His poetry – similar to that of Attila József -- has cosmic features. He was the poet of cosmic human sin and faith in God, the fallible human and cosmic divine mercy, the consciousness of guilt, and the hope in salvation. The recurring themes in his poetry are the confrontation with the unforgivable sin of the killings in the death camps and paying tribute to the innocent victims. His self-determination was: "I am a writer and a Catholic". He was the most important Roman Catholic poet in 20th century Hungary. His poetry belongs to world literature. He was a recipient of the Baumgarten Prize in 1947, the Attila József Prize in 1970, and the Kossuth Prize in 1980. – B: 0881, 0878, 0877, 1257, T: 7103. → József, Attila.

Pilis Abbeys – The site of the Abbeys is in the Pilis Mountains on the right side of the Danube-bend. It was a royal hunting ground in the Árpád era, with only a few villages. Along the way from Buda to Esztergom, there were four monasteries: three were owned by the Pauline Order (Pálosok), the only Hungarian monastic order, and one by the Cistercians. These were:

(1) The Pilisszentkereszt Cistercian Abbey. It was founded by King Béla in 1184 as a daughter abbey of the Acey Abbey in France. Probably there was a Benedictine Monastery before the Cistercians founded their own. The Abbey burned down in 1526, the year of the lost battle with the invading Turks, and it was never rebuilt after the Turkish occupation in 1686. The ruins are still there and, in the 19th century, there were archeological excavations on the site; László (Leslie) Gerevich, has conducted archeological research from the 1970s on. The broken sepulchral monument of Queen Gertrudis, with finely carved statues, was found. The excavations also unearthed a metallurgic workshop, a fishing lake, and a water system outside the once walled lot of the Abbey. The findings proved that the Abbey had been built in French Gothic style.

(2) The Pilisszentlászló Pauline Monastery. The monastery was founded in 1294 in honor of King László I (St Ladislav, 1077-1095). The monastery functioned until 1526. The monks fled, from the Turks, and the remnants of their buildings were built into the walls of the existing Parish church. The village was built on top of the ruins of the Monastery.

(3) The Pilisszentlélek Pauline Monastery. Its ruins can be found in the vicinity of the village. It was founded by King László IV (Ladislav the Kun, 1272-1290) in 1280, in honor of the Holy Spirit. The Paulines were living there until 1541, the year of the Turkish occupation of the Fortress of Buda; thereafter, the building was reduced to ruins by the Turks. As the result of restoration works, the ancient monastery is now open to the public. – B: 1078, 1793, T: 7103. → Pauline Order.

Pilis, Archeological Site – The Pilis Mountains are in the center of the Carpathian Basin. From the north and east the area is protected by the sharp bend of the Danube River and, in the south and east, the mountains provide shelter. It was already settled in the Old Stone Age (Paleolithic, 100,000 to 40,000 B.C), which is proved by the ruins of a house discovered in 1963. Recently, a bone flute, estimated to be 20,000 years old, was found in a cave by archeologists. On a castle mound, remnants of an ancient copper-mine and smelter were unearthed. Near the ruins of a castle from the Árpád-era, József (Joseph) Korek, the Deputy Director of the National Museum, found some brick works dating from the Hallstatt-period (Hallstatt Culture, 8th to 6th century BC. European Early Stone Age), indicating to him that an Illyrian-Celtic settlement had existed in the area. Before Roman rule, this area was probably the location of Sicambria, though historians are still not in complete agreement about its exact location. According to 13th century chronicler Simon Kézai, the Huns crossed the Danube at Sicambria and defeated the Romans in the battle of Sicambria. They then buried their fallen leaders at Keveaszó (now Kajászó) in the Köves Valley where the stone-idol stood. The probable ruins of the Sicambers' capital of Sicambria (Herculia), containing a remarkable hall of columns, were unearthed early in the 20th century. The original Óbuda, or as it is referred to in Latin Vetus-Buda, was built on the ruins of Sicambria. In medieval documents, the village of Hábod in the vicinity of Pilismarót is mentioned as "Obad" (Obad-Hábod), which is the shortened form of the original Óbuda. This documentary evidence also confirms Óbuda's original location.

According to the Nibelung Song (Nibelungenlied), which is based on an 11th century Hungarian source, Attila's city was Gran (near Esztergom), called Etzelburg. Anonymus, late 12th century Hungarian chronicler, in his work Gesta Hungarorum, refers to old Buda as the city of Attila. It is known from various sources that Old Buda was built and named by Buda, Attila's co-ruler and, on his death it was taken over by Attila. After the arrival of the Hungarians, seven smaller fortresses were built around Vetus-Buda, since each of the Hungarian tribal leaders built one for himself. In the 14th century, in pictures in the Illuminated Chronicle (Képes Krónika), the royal castle is always shown surrounded by seven smaller mountain fortresses. According to Medieval Hungarian sources, the Royal Court of Géza-István, King István I (St. Stephen) was in Esztergom. Similarly, Anonymus relates that both the military command and the royal court were here and that Árpád, the ruling prince, was buried in Attila's city, near the head of a small creek, where the converted Magyars later built the Church of Alba Ecclesia in honor of the the Blessed Virgin.

Until the 15th century the Pilis area remained a royal center. In the Medieval period, according to the custom of the times, the royal court and the religious center remained near Esztergom. King István I (St. Stephen) (997-1038) was born in Esztergom; his son, Imre (Emeric), died allegedly in a hunting accident in the Pilis area. It was at Dömös that the royal throne collapsed under King Béla I (1060-1063), and Prince Álmos and his son, who later became king as King Béla II (1131-1141) was blinded at Dömös. Thus, a large part of the tragedies of the Hungarian Royal House is connected to the Pilis. The best period of the area was under the House of Árpád, and the building of the Pilis Monastery is a good illustration of peacetime activity. It is presumed that the royal cemetery was at Alba Maria, which already existed in 1015, and later on was destroyed by the Turks. (Alba, in Latin means: white - fehér). Among the ancient Hungarians, the color white always meant something excellent, distinguished; it was the royal color (Székesfehérvár – White Castle of the royal family). Archeological digs, carried out recently opposite the mouth of the Ipoly River at Basaharc, revealed huge burial grounds. The upper class graves found here date from the Celtic and Avar periods. The location of the ancient burial ground had been accurately described by Simon Kézai in his ancient chronicle, Gesta Hungarorum, written approximately between 1282 and 1285.

Felhéviz, earlier known as Geysavásár, near Esztergom, was also destroyed by the Turks. In 1992, archeologists of the Balassa Bálint Museum in Esztergom, found the 180 cm wide foundation wall of the Saint Thomas (Szent-Tamás) church on the Szent-Tamás Mount. This church was built by Bishop Job at the end of the 12th century under King Béla III. It was destroyed during the Turkish siege of Esztergom in 1543.

The Pilis Mountain is full the remains of buildings and structures from the Árpád-period. In the Dömös-Pilisszentkereszt-Esztergom area, many ruins of mountain top castles, walls, moats, ramparts, fortifications, paved roads, dams and monasteries can be seen. However, as yet, no systematic archeological excavation has been conducted in the Pilis region. In the years after 2000, private archeological research resumed and yielded some significant findings, including what is assumed to be the assumed burial site of Reigning Prince Árpád. – B: 1230, 1174, 1020, T: 7665.→Anonymus; Attila; Árpád; Kézai, Simon; Illuminated Chronicle; Géza-István, Prince; István I, King; Béla I, King; Béla II, King.

Pilismarót, Massacre of (Pilismarót is north to Visegrád) - On 22 July 1543, Sultan Suleiman with his 100,000-strong army began the siege of Vetus-Buda (Óbuda, then in the Pilis Mountain) and captured it in 3 days. The fate of the fortified monasteries of Pilis is well known in Hungarian history. After the fall of Vetus-Buda, the monasteries were the only defensive line against the Turks, and the members of the Pauline monasteries all died a hero's death trying to slow down the Turkish advance. Suleiman's army began the siege of Esztergom on 23 July 1543, and captured it after 17 days of heavy resistance.

In 1555, 12 years after the Turkish occupation, Butech, a German diplomat, visited Vetus-Buda and wrote that everything was in ruins there. In his letter of 14 March 1568, Sultan Selim II mentioned the agreement made with the Austrian emperor according to which all the castles on the border had to be destroyed and could not be rebuilt by the Turks.

It is known from the 17th century Ottoman traveler and historian, Evliya Çelebi's book, Seyahatname, or Book of Travels that on the day after the capture of Vetus-Buda, the Turks forced the population out onto a square and massacred 70,000 people. Since Hungarian history only knows of one such massacre, referred to as the "massacre of Pilismarót", Evliya Çelebi's information points to Pilismarót as the location of Vetus-Buda (Old Buda). At the time of Evliya Çelebi, Old Buda was a 3-hour carriage ride from the grave of Gül Baba (a Moslem Saint, buried in the mound of Buda Castle); but at that time, he only saw vineyards and orchards, which the Turks had established on the site of the castle. – B: 1230, 1020, T: 7665.→Aquincum; Evliya Çelebi.

Pilis Range – An elongated range, partly of volcanic (Miocene andesites), partly of sedimentary origin (mainly Triassic limestones and dolomites), between the Buda Hills west of Budapest and the Danube Bend Mountains (Visegrád-Szentendre Range enclosed in the sharp bend of the Danube). It has two peaks, Pilis (757 m) and Dobogókő (700 m), separated by a saddle called Two Beech Trees (Két bükkfa). A well-forested mountainous region touristically developed and botanically interesting for its native habitat of the umbelliferous Ferula sadleriana, while Sesleria budensis, Alyssum arduini var. pilisiense, Pirola secunda, etc. grow at a group of rock cliffs called Iron Gate (Vaskapu). In the Pilis Range there is a series of 7 brown-coal beds of Palaeocene age with a total thickness of 22 m along Pilisvörösvár-Pilisszentiván-Solymár. – B: 1068, 7456, T: 7456.

Pillwax Café House (or Pilvax) – The first literary café-house in Pest's inner city on Urak Street, now Sándor Petőfi Street. In 1841 it was owned by József (Joseph) Privorszky; from 1843 by Károly (Charles) Pillwax, and from 1947 by József (Joseph) Fillinger. From the mid 1840s, it was the meeting-place of the Circle of Young Hungarians, thereafter known as the Society of Ten (Tízek Társasága). From the spring of 1848, it became the famous meeting place of the Radical Young Intellectuals. Here, the great poet, Sándor Petőfi, recited for the first time his famous poem, the National Song (Nemzeti Dal), on 15 March 1848, and where the 12 Points were drawn up – the demands of the Hungarian nation from the Habsburg monarch, and here started the Revolution of 1848 and the War of Independence from Habsburg Austria. – B: 1257, T: 7103.→March Youth; March 15; March 1848, 12 points; Petőfi, Sándor.

Pinsec, (Switzerland) Runic Inscription at – Several researchers dealt with the question of the Anniviards' origin, living in the Val d'Anniviers. Anton Karl Fischer, Transylvanian scientist of Saxon origin, carried out the most complete examination to date, and published the result of his work in 1896, an extensive monograph, the results of his work at Zurich. In his writing he mentioned the peculiar runic script of this small ethnic group. Many others, among them some Hungarian researchers, reviewed his work.

In 1990, a filming group of Hungarian Television was working among the valley's inhabitants, when on the ceiling beam of a several hundred years old dwelling house in Pinsec village, István (Stephen) Kiszely and his research group discovered the runic inscription. Sándor Forrai, runic writing expert considered 15 out of 22 signs as self-standing, and 10 as ligatures, i.e. sign abbreviations, which characterises the Szekler-Magyar runic writing. In his opinion the unknown text is one of the valuable relics of the Szekler-Magyar runic script. – B: 1251, 1287, 1020, T: 7669.→Kiszely, István; Forrai, Sándor; Hungarian Runic Script.

Pintér, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 3 July 1948 - ) – Engineer, lawyer, politician and police lieutenant general. He started his higher studies at the Department of Mechanical Engineering of the Budapest Polytechnic, and continued with further studies at the Police Officer's College in 1978, gaining a Degree in Law at the University of Budapest, in 1986. At first, he worked as a chauffeur in the Ministry of Justice; from 1972 he was active as an assistant detective in the Zugló District of Budapest. From 1978 to 1985 he was a lecturer at the Investigative Section of the National Police Headquarters; from 1985 he was Head of the Criminal Section of the Central Police Station, Buda. From 1988 he was Head of the Investigative Section of the Police Station of County Pest, and from March 1991 Police Commissioner of Budapest. From September 1991 to the end of 1996 he was National Commissioner of Police. In 1991 Pintér was elevated to the rank of brigadier-general and, in 1993, to lieutenant general. He retired late in 1996. From 1997 he was security adviser and a member of the Directorate of the OTP Bank and, from 2004, again a member of the directorate. From 1998 to 2002, during the first term of the Orbán Government, he led the Ministry of the Interior. In the second Orbán-Government he again became Minister of the Interior (2010 - ). – B: 2072, T: 7456.

Pióker, Ignác (Ignatius) (Temesrékás, now Reca, Romania, 17 January 1907 - Budapest, 1 November 1988) – Laborer. He was the last but one child in a family of 15 children.

He escaped to Hungary from Romanian rule in Transylvania. From 1928 to 1967 he worked as a planner at the United Incandescent Co. of Újpest (Egyesült Ízzó). During the 1950s, he was founder of the Stakhanovist Movement; he was the Hungarian Stakhanov, that is, a model worker. In 1949 he reached 1470 % in his work, a national peak. From 1953 to 1985 he was a Member of Parliament and, from 1975, a Member of the Presidential Council of Hungary. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1951), the Order of Merit of the Hungarian Republic, Class V (1951), and the Hero of Socialist Work (1953). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation – The first small, hydrogen-filled experimental balloons (1784) are associated with the names of István (Stephen) Szablik and József (Joseph) Domin. In 1811, while traveling as a passenger on a gas balloon from Budapest to Gyöngyös (70 km), Dr. Menner dropped to earth various small domestic animals with little silk parachutes, unharmed. The first Hungarian balloon, the “TURUL”, filled with lighting gas, rose with its two passengers to 4040 meters (13,255 feet) on its first aerial journey (1902) and landed smoothly. David Schwarz (1850-1897) said: “Dirigible aeronavigation can be attained with a rigid body of metal construction” In 1897 his truss girder-structured airship, covered with aluminum sheets, achieved a speed of 35 km/h (22 mph). A Prussian officer as a test-pilot controlled the maiden flight. His name was Lajos (Louis) Martin (1827-1897). A university lecturer, he became the first outstanding aeronautical experimentalist known worldwide. He suggested the use of aileron-surfaces in dynamic aviation. In 1893 his hovering wheel model, which applied one of the technological solutions of today's helicopters, reached completion. In 1896 Béla Tóth gave notice of the first Hungarian patent for an airplane. The Aero News (Repülő-Hírlap), the first aeronautical journal, appeared in 1893 and, in 1902, the first professional journal, The Aëronaut was published. In October 1910 the reformed Hungarian Aero Club was accepted as a member of the Fédération Aéronautique Internationale (FAI). In June 1910 it organized international air-races in Budapest.

1909: Blériot flew over the English Channel (La Manche) and, following that, held his first demonstration flight in Budapest the same year.

Kutassy, Ágoston (Austin) (1879-1932), owner of the Hungarian No.1 pilot certificate, sacrificed almost all his possessions to buy a French (Far-man) airplane during the summer of 1909 to show it at home.

RÁKOSMEZŐ, 1909: The cradle of Hungarian aviation. Here, the first two wooden booth-hangars were built. At the 1910 International Air-Race, already 16 (plus 24 temporary) hangars stood at the disposal of the local Hungarian and the 29 competitors from abroad. The first 3 flying pioneers started from here, flying small Hungarian-built monoplanes successfully.

Adorján, János (John) (1882-1964). He was the first Hungarian pilot to fly in Hungary in his own, self-designed airplane (1910).

Horváth, Ernő (Ernest) (1883-1943). He won the National Prize in the 2nd International Air-Race in Budapest. He started flying in 1910; but after a crash, he withdrew and engaged himself only in design and building. His book, “The Flying Engine” became the textbook of Hungarian and Austrian flying schools.

Zsélyi, Aladár (1883-1943). Famous for his innovations, at the time of the international race, he had already flown 3-4,000-meter (7.4 miles) distances on a circular course. His machine was “the first Hungarian aeroplane constructed by an engineer with a master’s degree”. In 1912 he designed the plan of a 500 h.p. Aerobus, to carry 34 passengers.

Later, in 1912-1913, he experimented with primitive gas turbines as a new source of power for airplanes. In 1913 he passed the pilot examination in Wiener-Neustadt, Austria, built a fast plane, considered as modern for a 66 kW engine - but crashed at its test-flight and he died from a tetanus infection.

Székelly, Mihály (Michael) (1885-1959). His achievement won a distinguished place in the history of Hungarian aviation. In 1911 he flew with a Pischof-monoplane (60 h.p. ENV motor) from Wiener Neustadt to Budapest (240 km). This was the first long-distance flight by a Hungarian. He won second prize in altitude and third prize in speed at the National Air Race in 1913.

Kolbányi, Géza (1863-1936). He was one of the airplane and aero-engine designers of the initial stages of Hungarian flying from 1909. The Kolbányi-Galcsek 6-cylinder, 60 h.p. air-cooled, fan-type engine was the most valuable part of his first machines.

Tóth, József and Kálmán (Joseph, Coloman): two young mechanics. Their machine was the first completely covered, plywood stressed-skin structured plane in Hungary.

Svachulay, Sándor (Alexander) (1875-1954). He dedicated his whole life to experiments in man-powered flying machines. He built one of his first planes "ALBATROS" with a boat hull: this was the first Hungarian experiment with an amphibian.

Kvasz, András (Andrew) (1884-1974). He worked from 1909 as a mechanic at Zsélyi's aero-experiments. He built several planes of his own from 1911, and was an outstanding pilot, the most popular in the country at the time.

Dedics Brothers, Ferenc (Francis) (1874-1929) and Kálmán (Coloman) (1877-1969). They were pioneers of Hungarian aero-engine manufacture from 1909. Kálmán studied in Germany. He built the first airplane engines between 1909 and 1913, when the manufacture of planes was still in its infancy everywhere. He was the first to apply the 6-cylinder radial engine, which caused a sensation in 1911, as it produced 44 kW output with a mere 62 kg (137 lbs) mass. Later, the brothers switched to the production of 7-cylinder rotary engines. Gyula Minár won their greatest success with it, the first prize, in 1914 at Pöstyén (now Piešťany, Slovakia) at the Austro-Hungarian air-race.

Bokor, Mór (Maurice) (1881-1942). At the initial stage of flying, he experimented in America. In 1909 he built a machine for the airship-school there and won the $500 Arlington prize. In 1910 he continued working at home.

Pfitzner, Sándor (Alexander) (1880-1910). He was an American-Hungarian pioneer, who graduated from the Budapest Polytechnic of Hungary. In 1910 he flew 216 km (134 miles), reaching a height of 1100 meters (3600 feet) within 2 hours.

Steinschneider, Lilly (1891-1989?). She was the first Hungarian woman pilot. In 1912 she received, the No. 4 pilot licence.

Lányi, Antal (Anthony) came to Rákosmező in 1911 and became well-known by his flight over Lake Balaton, the largest lake in Central Europe.

Létai brothers, Sándor (Alexander), Lajos András (Louis Andrew) came to the forefront of Hungarian aeronautics by their up-to-date constructions. Their most successful airplane (1913) was a monoplane with closed fuselage, powered by a radial engine, without the common single-skid undercarriage.

Between 1914 and 1918 the Hungarian aircraft industry (established by the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy) began developing. The 3 largest factories were: Hungarian Aircraft Factory (1914), Hungarian General Aircraft Factory (1916) and Hungarian Lloyd Aircraft and Engine Factory (at Aszód, 1916). At Aszód, Tibor Melczer designed types according to his own imagination. 287 aircrafts were built during the war: fighter planes, bombers and reconnaissance planes. The first air-to-air combats produced heroic fights with many tragic losses, among them one of the most famous and most successful fighter-pilot of the Monarchy, József (Joseph) Kiss, holder of 3 Great Gold, 4 Great Silver, and 5 Small Silver Medals of Valor (with 19 victories).

In 1914, at the 3-day Schicht Air Race between the countries of the Monarchy, out of 10 entrants, 3 were Hungarian. The winner, Viktor (Victor) Wittmann won European fame for himself and shining glory for Hungarian avionics: he flew 1092 km (679 miles) within 15 hours, 50 minutes, 18 seconds.

Petróczy, István (Stephen) colonel, played an important role in organizing amateur flying after World War I.

In 1921 the Sporting Flying Club of the University of Technology (MSrE) was set up. Three of its most famous founders were:

Lampich, Árpád (1898-1956). An open-minded construction engineer and pilot, prime mover of the MSrE Club, played a leading role in the rebirth of Hungarian aeronautics in the early 20s.

Rotter, Lajos (Louis) (1901-1983). While still a university student, he achieved outstanding international success with his dissertation for a Swiss helicopter competition. Later, with his glider "KARAKÁN" (1934) he broke the Hungarian distance and duration records with 276 km (171.5 miles) and 24 hrs 14 minutes flights respectively, scoring in 1935 the first international victory for Hungarian gliding. At the 1936 Olympics, with his masterpiece "NEMERE" he flew a 336 km (209 miles) goal-distance world record to great international acclaim. In 1937 the FAI established the golden ISTUS ring for outstanding work in glider sport - this was awarded for the very first time to Lajos Rotter.

Rubik, Ernő (Ernest) (1910-1997). Aircraft engineer, (father of the inventor of the magic cube), was the creator of Hungarian sailplane mass production which enabled pilot training in large numbers. He designed 24 sailplanes archetypes, 5 motor-powered planes, 4 glider UL-aircrafts. Over 1000 of his machines were produced.

Bánhidi, Antal (Anthony) (1902-1994). He became world famous with both his aircraft designs and his performance as a pilot. His plane "GERLE" achieved considerable international success. In 1933, with Tibor Bisits on the "GERLE 13", they flew round the Mediterranean Sea, equal to 12,500 km (7769 miles), in 100 hours, 22 minutes. The moral success of this journey was significant; all known aviation journals mentioned it. The aircraft was rebuilt as an old-timer, and is still flying today.

Kaszala, Károly (Charles) (1891-1932). His world records: in 1927 he flew non-stop for 9 hours 21 minutes in a circular course with his light, low-performance machine. In 1928 he flew with the same plane to Rome, where they painted its later name "ROMA" on the aircraft. With this plane (L-2 Roma), its designing engineer Árpád Lampich made 1022 km (635 miles) in 16 hours - another world record.

In 1930 Hungarian patriots in the US and Canada set up the Hungarian Transatlantic Flight Committee to enable Hungarian pilots to make a transatlantic flight. British politician Lord Rothermere helped by offering a prize and he decided to name the aircraft "JUSTICE FOR HUNGARY." György (George) Endresz was invited to be the pilot for this historic flight. In the summer of 1931, in the focus of international interest, he made the 5,800 km distance with his navigator, Sándor Magyar in record time (26 hours 20 minutes). This successful flight evoked immense international acclaim.

Kármán, Tódor (Theodore) (1881-1963). He was world famous aerodynamicist and a great scientist of the age. In 1912 he was commissioned to organize and manage the Aeronautic Research Institute in Aachen, Germany. During World War I, he already designed a tethered observation helicopter. In 1926 he was invited by the California Institute of Technology to organize the Guggenheim Aeronautical Laboratory in Pasadena, of which he became Director in 1930. His scientific work is preserved in over 100 scientific papers and books. He created the Theory of Edge Surface and, in connection with this, the theory for the design and measurement of wing surface for supersonic flights. Based on his results, he is regarded as the father of supersonic flight. In 1963 he was the first to receive the greatest scientific award of the United States, the National Medal of Science. He was also holder of the Prandtl Memorial Ring, the Watt International Medal, and the Gauss Medal. His main works were published in all major languages.

Besenyei, Péter (1956 -). The most successful Hungarian powered aerobatic pilot of all times, many times Hungarian, European and World Champion. To this day, he is an active member of the FAI World Grand Prix powered aerobatic pilot team, holder of several Gold Medals, and one of the most sought-after air show pilot of Europe. In 1962 the FAI awarded the right to organize the Second World Aerobatics Championship to Hungary. Then there is József (Joseph) Tóth (1933 - ), a glider pilot, holder of a gold diploma with one diamond, who became overall World Champion. This was an achievement never before attained in Hungarian flying sport, and constitutes the most shining pages of Hungarian civilian flying history. In 1966 József Tóth also became the Hungarian National Champion.

In 1980, of the two fully trained Hungarian astronauts, Béla Magyari and Bertalan (Bartholomew) Farkas, the latter flew into space in the spacecraft Soyuz-36 (on board Salyut-6 space station).

In 1999 in Fairford, England, Major Gyula (Julius) Vári, accompanied by Péter Kovács, won for the second time the prize awarded for the best solo demonstration flight of military pilots, controlled maneuvering flight beyond the stall limit with the X31 as test vehicle. – B: 1739, T: 1739, 7103.→Horváth, Ernő; Zsélyi, Aladár; Kolbányi, Géza; Svachulay, Sándor; Létai, Sándor; Petróczy, István; Lampich, Árpád; Rotter, Lajos; Endresz, György; Kármán, Tódor; Farkas, Bertalan; Simonyi, Charles.

Piros, Ildikó (Kecskemét, 23 December 1947 - ) Actress. She completed her training at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. Since 1970 she has been a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. Her roles are characterized by her refined beauty and the kindness and purity radiating from her soul. Her husband is actor Péter Huszti. She played a long list of dramatic leading roles including Lujza and Lady Milford in Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem); Nina in Chekhov's The Seagull (Sirály); Irina in Chekhov's The Three Sisters (Három nővér); Desdemona in Shakespeare's Othello; Ophelia and Gertrud in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Jolán in F. Molnár's The Devil (Az ördög), and Mira in I. Sarkadi's Lost Paradise (Elveszett paradicsom). Among his numerous film roles are *The Sparrow is a Bird too (A veréb is madár)*é Marci Kakuké Cat's Play (Macskajáték); The Music of Life (Az élet muzsikája); Abigél, and Small Town (Kisváros). She taught at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. She was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1983), the best Female Acting Prize (1993), the Déryné Prize (1994), and the Merited Artist title (2003). – B: 1445, 1795, T: 7456.→Huszti, Péter.

Piroska-Eiréné of Hungary (St. Irene) (Esztergom, 1088 - Bythina, 13 August 1133) – She was the daughter of King László I, (St. Ladislas) of Hungary (1077-1095), and Adelaide of Swabia. Her mother died when Piroska was about two years old, and her father died in 1095, when she was seven; King Kálmán (Coloman, 1095-1116), was her nephew and became her guardian. In order to improve relations with the Byzantine Empire, Kálmán negotiated the marriage of Piroska to John II Komnenos, the son and heir of the Emperor. Piroska married John in 1104, following her conversion to the Eastern Orthodox Church. She was renamed Irene (Eiréné, meaning Peace). They had four sons and four daughters. Their youngest son, Manuel I., became Emperor of the Empire and ruled from 1143 to 1180. Irene, instead of playing a part in the government, devoted herself to piety. She established Byzantium's most important monastery, consisting of not only three churches, but a hospital as well. She never felt comfortable with the life of the court. Finally, she retired to a cloister in Bythinia, where she died; but she was buried in Byzantium and, later, she became venerated as Saint Irene. The mosaic portrait of Piroska is in the Hagia Sophia in Istanbul, formerly Constantinople. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→László I, King (St. Ladislás); Kálmán, King, (Coloman); Constantinople, Pantocrator Monastery.

Pitti, Katalin (Catharine) (Szentés, 7 December 1951 -) – Opera singer (soprano). She was born into a teacher's family and educated in her hometown. Her singing talent was revealed early in life. She started singing in the choir of St. Anna's Church, Szentés. In 1972 she registered at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and graduated in 1977. In the same year, she became a singer at the Opera House of Budapest. Her repertoire includes all soprano roles of the Italian operas. She excelled with her technique and charming singing, performing in concerts and oratorios, as well as in operetta roles. She became famous internationally, appearing as guest star on the stages of the great opera houses of the world. She is also a recording artist. Her main roles include Pamina in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata; Leonora in Il Trovatore (A Trubadur); Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet), Cio-cio-san in Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony); Antonia in Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann (Hoffmann meséi); Marie in A. Berg's Wozzeck; Melinda in Erkel's Bánk bán, and in operettas, e.g. in F. Lehar's The Land of Smiles (A Mosoly országa); The Merry Widow (A víg özvegy), and in Strauss Jr's The Gipsy Baron (Cigánybáró). She is a recipient of the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1985), the Gusztáv Oláh Memorial Plaque (1986), the Déryné Prize (1995), the Merited Artist title (2011), and the Pro Urbe Szentés Prize. – B: 1445, 1105, T: 7103.

Pittsburgh Agreement – When T. G. Masaryk arrived in the United States in May 1918, the American Slovak League, the Catholic Slovak Association, and representatives of other Slovak and Czech associations came together in Pittsburgh, PA. to discuss the future relationship of Slovaks and Czechs within a new country, and to decide on the question of unification. The American Slovaks all desired autonomy, most of them with Hungary, a minority within the Czechs. The Czechs offered equality and an agreement was reached. On 30 May 1918 it was stated that the Slovak people would participate as an equal partner in the future Czechoslovakian Republic. The agreement promised full autonomy to Slovakia, the exclusive use of the Slovak language in public administration in the courts and in the schools, and total self-government through the provincial assemblies. The document was signed by T. Masaryk, as the Head of the Provisional Czech-Slovak Government and the prospective President of the future Czechoslovak Republic, as well as by the representatives of the participating Slovak and Czech organizations.

On the basis of the agreement on 18 October 1918, T. Masaryk published the Czechoslovak Declaration of Independence. Since the Czech partner did not ensure the promised autonomy, the American Slovaks demanded on numerous occasions the inclusion of the agreement in the constitution of the Czechoslovak Republic, albeit without success. – B: 1078, 1230, 1138, T: 7665.→Trianon Peace Treaty.

Pivány, Jenő (Eugene) (Budapest, 29 April 1873 - New York, NY, 8 January 1946) – Literary historian. He arrived in the USA in 1900, where he managed the financial affairs of émigré Hungarians. He established good relationships with the leaders of American Hungarians and with members of the still existing Kossuth émigrés. He participated in the establishment of the Hungarian Cultural Association of Trenton in 1903, and in the foundation of the Hungarian Association of America in 1906. During the period of the First World War, he was a correspondent for American Hungarian People's Word (Amerikai Magyar Népszav), and that of the New York Sun in Hungary; later he became Executive Secretary of the Hungarian Association of America. It was in this capacity, through the mediation of President Harding, that the Senate's External Affairs Committee invited him to Washington in 1919; during the course of the hearing he lodged the protest of American Hungarians against the planned dismemberment of Hungary. The American Government published the recorded stenographic minutes of this. He played a role in the USA in signing a separate peace treaty with Hungary on 29 August 1921. After 1920 he was Department Head of the Central Bank in Budapest and, later on, until his retirement, he was its Manager. In 1926, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him as an external member. The title of his inaugural speech was: Hungarian-American Historical Relationships from the Times Preceding Columbus to the Conclusion of the American Civil War.

He examined the Hungarian-American historical relationships and the participation of Hungarians in the American Civil War in numerous English language essays. The Affairs of Hungary 1849-1850 is a collection of diplomatic papers for Congress, which was published in Washington in 1900, and was based on his research. He translated into English the plans of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth for the Danube Confederation; he prepared the Stockholm edition of Zoltán Kodály's Hungarian Folk Music. About a hundred of his writings were published. His library – the largest collection of English language Hungariana in Hungary – was destroyed in a fire during the siege of Budapest, 1945. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7659.→Kossuth, Lajos; Trianon Peace Treaty; Kodály, Zoltán.

Plachy, Sylvia (Budapest, 1943 - ) – Photographer. She escaped from Hungary during the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. She settled in London, where she became a staff photographer for the Village Voice. She became a success with her regular photo column Unguided Tour, with which she won the prize of the International Center of Photography in 1990. Her pictures are held in the Guggenheim Museum, the Museum of Modern Art, the Metropolitan Museum, and the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art. Interestingly, as a Hungarian photographer of some note, she has found many famous compatriots who turned out to be some of the world's most famous photographers: Brassai (pseudonym of Gyula Halász), László (Ladislav) Moholy-Nagy, Robert and Cornell Capa, and André Kertész were also Hungarians, and known to have been helpful to each other in difficult times. – B: 1081, T: 7456.→Moholy-Nagy, László; Capa, Robert; Kertész, André.

Plain, Great Hungarian (Nagyalföld) – An alluvial Plain situated in the middle of the Carpathian Basin, dominated by two large rivers: the Danube, forming its western and southern boundary, and the greatest tributary Tisza, dissecting it down the middle from north to south. Its main component areas are the Danube-Tisza Interfluve, the Trans-Tisza Region, and the Bánát Region. The extent of the Plain from north to south is 460-500 km; and from west to east 220-290 km, an area of more than 90,000 km<sup>2</sup>. Its present name first started to be adopted near the end of the Middle Ages. This large Plain, often appearing monotonous, in fact does not show a uniform picture. Sand hills dominate the Danube-Tisza Interfluve and the Nyírség (in the northeast); the once extensive pusztas (steppes) are now cut by canals, and the River Tisza has numerous ox-bow lakes. The surface of the Plain is a mosaic of lowlands of different altitudes. The Nyírség, encompassed by Nagykároly (now Carei, Romania), Debrecen and Tokaj is a sea of undulating sand hills covered by sparse patches of forests or poor scrub lands; in earlier centuries a barren expanse, but nowadays a region of extensive orchards. The large area formed by the Rivers Berettyó and Karas is the most extensively marshy lowland part of the Plain, several hundred Cumanian hills occur mainly here.

The Plain is generally poor in mineral resources; however, more recent research opened up a number of crude oil and especially natural gas occurrences. They are also rich in thermal waters. In past centuries the Plain was dominated by agriculture, especially livestock farming, using the extensive farming method. In the flood plains and marshy lowlands fishing and hunting used to be a widespread occupation, often in a primitive, predatory way. But the more recent flood-mitigating embankment work and land reclamation by draining has led to much more agricultural activity, tillage of the land and, in the sandy areas, the development of fruit production and viticulture. The climate of the Plain tends to vary and can be extreme; its typical phenomena are the sudden and swift hail storms as well as the Fata Morgana mirages.

The Magyars, following their initial settlement of the Carpathian Basin (896-900), mainly settled alongside the river flats. After the devastation caused by the Mongol-Tartar invasion (1241-1242), King Béla IV (1235-1270) – in order to resettle depopulated areas – brought in Cumanians to the Danube-Tisza Interfluve. Toward the end of the 13th century, the settlement network stabilized itself in a pattern of fairly densely distributed small villages. During the following centuries, the country town and market town pattern developed, but this suffered disruption by the Ottoman Turkish occupation in the 16th and 17th centuries. Subsequently, the Hungarian population of the southern part of the Plain virtually died out or fled further north. New regions of ethnic groups were formed; the population of the central parts of the Plain concentrated in larger settlements and country towns.

From the end of the 14th century, some ethnic groups from the Balkans – fleeing from the Turkish conquerors – regularly received permission to settle on the Plain, mainly on its southern part. A large number of Serbs settled here after the ill-fated uprising against the Turks in 1691. State-run resettlement actions led to the establishment of continuous areas of new German settlers in the Bácska and Bánát areas. At the beginning of the 18th century, Slovakian settlement areas were also formed on the Plain. The more recent Hungarian resettlements came from the tobacco farmers of the Szeged and Csongrád areas and from County Békés during the 19th century. Near the Lower Danube, Szeklers from Bukovina were settled in 1883. After World War II, some of the Germans of the Bácska area and Slovaks of Békés County were deported to their country of origin.

Industrial developments on the Plain were slow to appear and the processing industry was limited; but after 1945, more and more industrial plants were built. The two most important towns of the Plain are the history-rich Debrecen, the center of the northeastern part, and Szeged in the southeast, at the confluence of the Tisza and Maros Rivers. – B: 1078, 1134, 1138, T: 7456.

Plain, Little Hungarian (Kisalföld) – An alluvial plain of the River Danube of ca. 15,000 km<sup>2</sup>, of which about half belongs to present-time Hungary. As a result of the Versailles–Trianon Peace Treaty, the rest was ceded to the newly formed Czechoslovakia (1920), now possessed by Slovakia (1993). Geologically, it is an elongated basin, divided into two equal halves by the Danube; structurally, it is the western part of the Carpathian Basin, bordered by the Hungarian Central Mountains of Transdanubia in the southeast, the hills of Zala and Vas Counties in the southwest, the Lajta River and the eastern end of the Alps, the Rozália Mountain in the west, the Little Carpathian Range in the northwest, the Little Fáttra Range and the Hungarian Ore Mountain in the north and northeast, and the Börzsöny Range in the east.

Agriculturally, it is one of the most fertile parts of the Carpathian Basin. The center of the Basin is filled with enormously thick gravel beds (the Győr sub-basin); west of this is the large alluvial fan (detrital cone) of the Danube, forming the Csalló and Sziget Interfluves (Csallóköz and Szigetköz); southwest of these is the alluvial Hanság sub-basin (with the swampy eastern flats of Lake Fertő), surrounded by thick gravel beds (Kemenes-ridge or Kemeneshát); towards north it reaches deep into the Vág (now Váh, Slovakia) River valley, covered with thick deposits of loess. The Little Plain is characterized by lush, grassy meadows and its rivers are lined by dense, fringing forests. In some places aerated springs occur, rich in carbon dioxide. The land is cultivated by intensive farming; there is also active livestock farming. – B: 1078, 1138, T: 7456.

Planetary Gearshift – A mechanism of power transmission in machines – mainly in vehicles – functioning with specially fashioned cogwheels, instead of the usual types, which can move along an axle as well as rotating with it. The result is a smoother, more easily performing shift between the gears. The inventor is József Galamb (1881-1955), a chief engineer of the Ford Motor Company. He designed the famous Ford T car, and invented the electric ignition plug as well. – B: 0883, T: 7674.→Galamb, József.

Plaster of Paris Bandage – A fixation bandage, made by the usage of burned and dehydrated gypsum powder. It was invented by surgeon János (John) Balassa. There is also a splint variation available. In both cases the addition of water produces a porous mass used in making bandages and casts to support or immobilize body parts in the position desired, when it becomes dry and hard. It is the most ideal fixation material in surgical practice, because it sets hard, follows the body contour well, and produces a perfect shape. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7660.→Balassa, János.

Plesch, János (John) (Budapest, 11 November 1878 - Beverly Hills, California, 12 December 1954) – Physician of Hungarian origin, internal pathologist and physiologist. He was born into a physician's family. At the age of 16, he studied Medicine at the Medical School of the University of Budapest. He became interested in anatomy, physiology and patho-physiology. He went on a study trip to Vienna, Berlin and Italy. Having completed his studies and obtaining a Degree, he worked in a Tuberculosis Sanatorium in Germany. He went to Strasbourg and Paris, where he developed an interest in radioactivity at the Laboratory of Pierre and Marie Curie. In 1903 he moved to Berlin and worked for nine years on his monograph, Hämodynamik (1909), whereby he received a German license to practice medicine and received an honorary lectureship at the University of Berlin. From 1910 to 1933 he worked at the Francis Hospital in Berlin. During World War I, Plesch was working in the army on different fronts until 1917, when he was appointed Professor for internal medicine. In Berlin, he befriended many of the outstanding artists and was a close friend of Albert Einstein. He went on numerous trips around the globe. In 1933, after Hitler came to power in Germany, he emigrated to England, where he worked at the George Hospital, then at the Edward VII Hospital in London, and ran a private practice for heart diseases. After his retirement in 1949, he lived in Montreux in Switzerland. His fields of research and achievement were multifaceted; however, blood pressure, arteriosclerosis and heart diseases were his main concerns. He invented a new method of percussion (Plesch-percussio); described a chromophoto-meter for blood quantitative determination and he developed an apparatus for functional hemoglobin regulation (Kolbenkeilhämoglobinometer). His autobiography was a bestseller. – B: 1730, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.

Pleszkán, Frigyes (Frederick) (Csorna, 1 July 1959 - Óbuda, 24 February 2011) – Jazz piano virtuoso. He started playing piano at the age of 8. He learned classical music from his mother and jazz from his father. At the age of 11, he was impressed by the music of Oscar Peterson and it became his model. In 1973, as a guest, he was admitted to the Jazz Department of the Béla Bartók Music School in Budapest, where he was a student of János (John) Gonda, and later of Béla Lakatos. At the age of 17 he was a soloist at the prestigious Pori Jazz Festival in Finland. The program advertised him as a young prodigy. In 1977 he won the solo piano category in a competition. In 1978 he and two of his Hungarian colleagues won the first three places at the International Jazz Competition at Kalisz in Poland. Besides jazz, he played in other categories. In 1978 and 1979 he was a member of the Lama Ensemble. Pleszkán played the piano part for the Digital May Fest (Digital Majális) GM, in 1985. In 1986 a record appeared, entitled: Keyboard, with two of his compositions. He went abroad, and played a lot in Switzerland. He frequently visited Hungary for concerts and recordings. In 1995 his first album appeared, the Fingerprints, followed by the Second Step (1996), the Pearl in Boogie Shell (1997), and the Magic Hand (1999). In his last years he was interested mainly in jazz-style interpretation of classic music. Pleszkán committed suicide. He left behind compositions enough for three records. He is valued for his virtuosity and style, as well as his humor, both in his music and his life. His talent elevated him to a position among the greatest jazz pianists. – B: 2120, T: 7103.

Plósz, Béla (Pest, 19 May 1863 - Budapest, 1945) – Veterinarian. He obtained his Doctor of Veterinary Medicine Degree (DVM) from the Veterinary College of Budapest in 1885, and earned a Ph.D. in Art in the University of Budapest. From 1887 he worked as a demonstrator at the Surgical Department of the Veterinary Academy. In 1894 he was appointed a titular Professor. From 1897 to 1921 he was Professor of Surgery, from 1900 Professor of Ophthalmology until his retirement in 1921. Afterward, he became Director of horse-breeding in the Ministry of Agriculture; later, took over the position of Deputy Under-Secretary of State. He produced some significant scientific literary work, as, for example, the first veterinary surgery textbooks in Hungarian: Surgery (Sebészeti műtéttan) (1897), and Detailed Surgery, vols. i-ii (Részletes sebészet, I-II) (1907-1911). –

Pluhár, István (Stephen) (Tóváros, 10 December 1893 - Budapest, 1 December 1970) – Sports journalist, radio reporter, sports teacher. He completed his High School studies in Győr, and was member of the City's Gymnastic Club. He read Law at the University of Budapest, and became a member of the Athletic Club of the University (BEAC). While with this Club, he was twice member of the National Soccer Team under the name of Pápai (1921). He was a contributor, then Chief Contributor for the paper, National Sport (Nemzeti Sport) (1924-1933). He quit regular sports in 1927 and became a sports reporter at home and abroad. From 1933, he was the sports reporter of the Hungarian Radio, where he reported on important soccer and water-polo matches. His report on the 1936 Berlin Olympic Games was memorable. He was Soccer Coach for the Sports Academy, Budapest (1931-1944), and Editor for the paper Physical Training (Testnevelés) (1934-1944). After World War II, he continued to work as a radio reporter. His major works include Book of Sports (Sportok könyve) edited (1935); The Berlin Olympic Games (A berlini olimpia) (1936); History of Hungarian Sport Clubs (Magyarországi Sportegyesületek története) editor (1942); Swedish World, Swedish Sport (Svéd világ, svéd sport), (1943), and Our Love, the Microphone (Szerelmünk a mikrofon), with Gy. Szepesi (1947). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7103. → Szepesi, György.

Podmaniczky, Baron Frigyes (Frederick) (Pest, 20 June 1824 - Budapest, 19 October 1907) – Politician, writer. After completing his studies, he became a clerk, working for County Deputy Gedeon Ráday. Until 1847, he was a deputy clerk of County Pest, and he took part in the 1847 Diet of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). In 1848 he was a member and clerk of the Upper House of Parliament. During 1848-1849 War of Independence from Habsburg rule, he was a Hussar Captain and Troop Commander. After the surrender at Világos, as a punishment from the Habsburg Authorities, he had to serve as a private in the Austrian Army in Milan, until 1850. Then he retired from public life and switched to ecclesiastical and literary work. He was Superintendent of the Lutheran Bánya (Mines) District (1867-0873), and was the Editor of the journal, Our Country (Hazánk) (1868-1869). From 1873 to 1905 he worked as the President of the Council of Public Works in the Capital City; he achieved a great deal in the development of the City. Between 1875 and 1885, he was the Administrator of the Opera House and the National Theater, and both of them flourished. From 1861 to 1906 he was a Member of Parliament and President of the Liberal Party (Szabadelvű Párt) until its cessation. His literary works: novels, short stories, travelogues and diaries were popular reading in his time. His works include Dream and Reality vols. i, ii, (Álom és valóság, I,II) short stories (1861). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1859). A Street and a School in Budapest bear his name. – 1068, 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Székács, József.

Podolini-Volkman, Arthur (Podolin, 1891 - Pretoria, South Africa, 1943) – Painter. He studied at Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania), under Károly (Charles) Ferenczy, and then in Italy and Germany. From 1911 on, he exhibited in Budapest's National Salon, and in the House of Arts (Művészház). He founded a progressive private school and exhibited his collective works in the National Salon in 1920; and again in 1923, in the Helikon. After emigrating to the USA in the early 1930s, he settled in New York. Later, he traveled to South Africa and lived in Pretoria, where he established his own private school. His oil paintings include Nagybánya Landscape (Nagybányai táj); Heavy Yoke (Nehéz iga), and Fishing Village in Sunshine (Halászfalu napsütésben). – B: 0883, T: 7677. → Ferenczy, Károly.

Pogány, Frigyes (Frederick) (Budapest, 9 September 1909 - Budapest, 15 December 1976) – Architect, art historian. In 1933 he obtained his Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic. Initially, he worked in the office of the architect Márton Szabó (1933-1935). He was a stage designer at the Hunnia Film Studio; thereafter, worked in state organizations. From February 1949 he worked at the Metropolitan Planning Institute and, later, he was appointed in charge of the studio of the Budapest Esthetic Town Planning Company (BUVÁTI). In this assignment, individually and with his colleagues, he prepared a number of town-planning projects, such as the Danube banks, Inner city, parts of Old-Buda, hotels, plan for the first restoration plan of the Royal Palace, the March 15th Plaza in Vác (north of Budapest), placing of the new National Theater, etc. Pogány organized the registration of historic buildings. From 1949, as an invited lecturer, from 1952 as an assistant professor, and from 1958 as a full professor, he gave lectures in the Department of Town Planning of the Budapest Polytechnic. Concurrently, he gave lectures on the History of Arts at the University of Budapest. In 1964 he became Master of the School of Applied Arts. He published numerous works on the esthetics of building and industrial art, and also on the protection of historic buildings. From the beginning of his career he was a member, and for several years President of the Hungarian Architects' Association, and President of the Special Committee of the Qualifying Committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His works include Practical Architectural Esthetics (Gyakorlati építészeti esztétika) with István Nagy (1952); The Art of Plazas and Streets (Terek és utcák művészete) with Sándor Kasper (1954); Historic Monuments of Budapest (Budapest műemlékei) with Miklós Horler (1955), and the The World of Architecture (Az építészet világa, series) (1975). He was awarded the Ybl Prize (1954) and the State Prize (1966). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Pogány, Judit (Judith) (Kaposvár, 10 September 1944 - ) – Actress. In 1965 she was a minor actress in the Gergely Csiky Theater (Csiky Gergely Színház) of Kaposvár, where, in 1970 she was included among the actors and, until 1978 she was a member of that theater. From 1978 to 1980 she played in the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in Budapest; since 1980 she has again been a member of the theater of her native town. Since 1994 she has been a freelance actress, appearing in the Örkény Theater (Örkény Színház) and the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház). She is an actress of individual physique and voice, her scope unusually wide. She excels equally as a performer of clumsy charm in children's pieces, and as a heroine of tragedies. Her roles include Rosalinda in Shakespeare's As You Like It (Ahogy tetszik); Cressida in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida; Ariel in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar); Anna Petrovna in A. Chekhov's Ivanov; Natasha in Gorky's Night Refuge (Éjjeli menedékhely); Juli in Ferenc Molnár's Liliom, adapted by Benjamin F Glazer as Carousel, set to music by Richard Rodgers, lyrics by Oscar Hammerstein II; and Polina Andrejevna in Chekhov's The Seagull (A sirály). She was involved in a number of films, and roles for radio; she also dubbed films. There are more than 50 feature and TV films to her credit, including 74 Bastion Promenade (Bástyasétány '74) (1974); Imre (1979); Szaffi (1984); Eldorado (1988); Revolt (Lázadás) (1993); Premiere (1999); Sobri (2002); Dinner (Vacsora) (2008), and Feri Zimmer (2, 2010). Among her TV films are The Foreigners (A külföldiek) (1975); The Magic Forest (A bűvös erdő) (1978); Ball of Fools (Bolondok bálja) (1984), and Somebody is Knocking (Valaki kopog) (2000). She was awarded, among others, the Mari Jászai Prize (1978), the Golden Lion Prize (1979), the Artist of Merit title (1987), the Komor Ring (1990), and the Hekuba Prize (1996), the Miklós Gábor Prize (2007), the Kossuth Prize (2008), and she is Life Member of the Society of Immortals (2010). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Pogány, Ödön (Edmund) (Devecser, 3 February 1886 - Budapest, 26 July 1967) – Physician, otolaryngologist and rhinologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1908. Between 1908 and 1912 he was an Intern at the Otolaryngological and Rhinological Clinic. From 1912 to 1919, he was an assistant physician in Rhinology in the Jewish Hospital of Budapest; in 1919 and 1920 a senior physician of the Municipal Hospital of Újpest (suburb of Budapest) but, because of his conduct, he was removed from office. Between 1920 and 1945 he was a private physician. From 1930 to 1945 he worked as Chief Physician of the Israelite Hospice; between 1945 and 1947, he was its Director. In 1947 he became an honorary lecturer. From 1947 to 1953 he served as Chief Physician of the Otological-neurological Section of the National Neurosurgical Institute. He was author of the work: Vegetative Nervous System and the Hearing Organ (A vegetatív idegrendszer és a hallószerv) (1947). – B: 1730, 0883, T: 7456.

Pogány, Ö. Gábor (Gabriel) (Kispest, 21 July 1916 - Budapest, 22 March 1998) – Art-historian. He started his university studies at the University of Budapest and continued in Berlin and Paris. From 1945 he was an associate at the Museum of Fine Arts; from 1947 Director of the Gallery of the Capital City; from 1950 to 1952 Deputy President of the Central Museum; from 1956 to 1957 Deputy Chief Director of the Museum of Fine Arts; from 1967 to 1980 the Chief Director of the National Gallery and Editor-in-Chief for the Fine Art Gazette (Szépművészeti értesítő). Pogány's field of research was 19th and 20th century painting and sculpture. Among his works are Revolutions of Hungarian Painting (A Magyar festészet forradalmai) (1946); Hungarian Sculpturing (Magyar szobrászat) with Endre Gábor (1953), and Hungarian Painting in the 19th Century (Magyar festészet a XIX században) (1959, in English, Russian and German translations). He was awarded the Baumgarten Prize. – B: 1257, 0883, T: 7103.

Pógyor, István (Stephen) (Sárosoroszi, now Orosievo, Carpatho-Ukraine, 26 January 1902 - Budapest, 7 November 1953) – Youth leader. He was born into a poor family of many children. After completing primary school, with the assistance of Sarolta Lukács, President of the Hungarian Red Cross, he continued his studies and passed the maturity examination in a commercial high school. After this he joined the Young Men's Christian Association – YMCA (Keresztyén Ifjusági Egyesület – KIE), soon to become its Assistant Secretary. Between 1925 and 1928 he studied for one year at each of the German towns of Kassel, Stuttgart and Barmen (part of Wuppertal), and became familiarized with the organizing and conducting of youth work. In 1930 and 1931 he studied at the YMCA Academy in Springfield, USA. Returning to Hungary in January 1932, he became National Secretary of the KIE, after the death of Zoltán Töltéssy. Through his influence, the KIE became one of the centers for the struggle for improvement of village life. István Pógyor campaigned for the establishment of peoples' colleges, also in the territories returned to Hungary by the two Vienna Awards (1938 and 1940). He organized a national conference to take place between 12 and 15 August 1939. During World War II, he organized the refugee and ambulance-rescue services. In 1946 the autonomy of the KIE was suspended and in the developing hard-line Communist rule, on 7 June 1951, he was arrested together with Count László (Ladislás) Teleki, and brought to trial on the basis of false allegations in November 1951. He was sentenced to 6 years in prison. The Court of Appeal rejected his appeal. He died, aged 51, in the transit prison in 1953. He was buried in an unmarked grave at the 301 Parcel of the New Common Cemetery (Újköztemető) in Budapest. His tomb's location was revealed only in 1989. A plaque on the wall of the Salétrum Street Reformed Church in Budapest preserves his memory. – B: 0883, 1539, T: 7456. → Christian Youth Association; Töltéssy, Zoltán; Kovács Bálint.

Pohárnok, Jenő (Eugene) (Győr, 28 November 1898 - Munich, 14 November 1962) – Poet, writer, journalist. He taught at the Teachers' College of Győr. Several of his plays appeared on stage in Hungary, and some novels and youth works of his were published as well. He also wrote poems and articles for newspapers. In the spring of 1945, when the fighting in World War II ravaged Hungary, he fled to southern Germany. For a while, he was the publisher of New Hungaria (Új Hungária) in Munich. He also published articles in the papers Shepherd's Fire (Pásztortűz); Canadian Hungarian News (Kanadai Magyar Újság), Hungarian Book Lover (Magyar Könyvbarát) and the Vienna-based Hungarian Courier (Magyar Híradó), as well as in other émigré publications. Apart from poems and stories, he wrote some textbooks. His works include Short Stories (Elbeszélések) (1948); The King of the Children (A gyermekek királya) youth novel (1948); King Saint Stephen (Szent István király) novel (1952); Das Ehrenwort, novel (1959), and Tarcisius, youth novel in German (1961). – B: 1672, 1878, T: 7456.

Poland, Hungarians in – Polish-Hungarian friendly relations existed through the past eleven centuries. Both Poland and Hungary are very old nations of Europe, established their statehoods at about the same time - more than one thousand years ago. Both adopted Western (Roman) Christianity in association with the founding of their national states. Both, at a very early stage of their nationhood, recognized their common fate - being threatened by Pan-Germanism from their western border, and Russia-oriented Pan-Slavism from their eastern side. During their respective histories, the two nations twice had a common ruler: King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382), one of whose daughters, Hedwig (Jadwiga, 1373-1399), became Queen of Poland, Hungary and Lithuania, who was later beatified. István (Stephen) Báthori, Reigning Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) was elected King of Poland (1576-1586) after the Jagiello House died out. The good relationship continued until modern times. In 1939, at the beginning of World War II, many Polish officers and Jews found refuge in Hungary. In the last half-century, some 500 Hungarian people settled in Poland. In 1994 they founded the Association of Hungarians in Poland (Wspólnota Węgierska w Polsce). There is a Hungarian Cultural Institute in Warsaw, and a Polish-Hungarian Friendship Society. At the beginning of the third millennium, Hungarians lived in the areas of Krakow, Katowice and Wrocław, and they founded their own separate organization, the Association of Hungarians in Southern Poland. Most of them live in mixed marriages. Since 1999, the Adorján Divéky Hungarian Weekend School has been functioning in Warsaw. Hungarian language is taught in the Mickiewicz High School in Krakow, and Hungarian literature at the Jagiellonian University. In the Universities of Warsaw and Poznan there is a Chair of Hungarian Philology. The Hungarian community commemorates Hungarian national holidays, lays wreaths at the Hungarian memorials in Warsaw, and keeps contact with Hungary. – B: 1454, 1827, T: 7103.→Lajos I, King (Louis the Great); Báthory, Prince István; Hedvig, Saint; Polish-Hungarian Personal Union.

Polányi, John Charles (Berlin, 1929 - ) – Chemist and physicist. He was born into a Jewish-Hungarian family. He became a Nobel Prize Laureate in Chemistry in 1986, shared, “for contributions concerning the dynamics of chemical elementary processes”. When Hitler came into power in 1933, the family moved from Germany to England, where Polányi continued his education. His university training was at the University of Manchester, where he obtained his B.Sc. in 1949, and his Ph.D. in 1952. From 1952 to 1954 he was a post-doctoral fellow at the National Research Council Laboratories in Ottawa, Canada and, from 1954 to 1956, he was Research Associate at Princeton University. In 1956 he joined the academic staff of the University of Toronto, where he has been a professor since 1962. Since 1982, Polányi has been a member of the Science Advisory Board at the Max Planck Institute for Quantum Optics, Germany. He is also a founding member of the Royal Society of Canada, where he has been a Fellow since 1966; he became a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in 1971, and has been a Member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences since 1976, as well as a member of the Pontifical Academy of Rome (1986). He is the recipient of Honorary Doctorates from a number of Universities (Waterloo, 1970; Harvard, 1982; Queen’s, 1992, etc.). He has also been awarded medals and prizes from numerous learned societies, such as the Centenary Medal of the British Chemical Society (1965), the Wolf Prize in Chemistry (shared, 1982), and the Royal Medal of the Royal Society of London (1989). He is a Companion of the Order of Canada (1979). He is the author of many scientific papers, as well articles on scientific policy, on the control of armaments, and on the impact of science on society; he co-edited the work entitled The Dangers of Nuclear War (1979). – B: 1196, 1031, T: 7456.→Polányi, Michael; Polányi, Károly.

Polányi, Károly (Karl, Charles) (Vienna, 25 October 1886 - Pickering, Ont., Canada, 23 April 1964) – Economist and sociologist. He was the descendant of a Jewish family, a relative of John Charles and Michael Polányi. In 1908 he earned a Doctorate in Political Science and Law from the University of Budapest. He was the first President of the Galilei Circle, an organization of bourgeois radical young intellectuals, between 1908 and 1919. Because of the role he played in the Democratic Revolution in the fall of 1918, he had to emigrate to Austria. His study, Socialist Accountancy, appeared in 1922. He was foreign Editor for Der Österreichische Volkswirt, and lecturer at the People’s College in Vienna. He became a correspondent for the Viennese Hungarian News (Bécsi Magyar Újság). In 1933 he moved to England. From 1940 to 1942 Polányi was a lecturer of tutorial classes, run by the Women's Emergency Accommodation Centre – WEAC under the auspices of the Universities of Oxford and London. With his wife, Ilona Duczynska, he took part in the political activity of the democratic émigrés. After World War II, he settled in Canada. Between 1947 and 1953 he was a lecturer at the Faculty of Economics at Columbia University (New York), where he ran courses in his latter years. His works on sociology and economics appeared mainly in English. His works in Hungarian appeared in New Horizon (Új Látóhatár) and Literary News (Irodalmi Újság). With Ilona Duczynska he edited an English language Literary Anthology. His works include Christianity and the Social Revolution, co-editor (1935); Origins of Our Time (1945);

The Great Transformation (1957); The Archaic Society and the Economic View (Az archaikus társadalom és a gazdasági szemlélet) (1976), and Fascism, Democracy, Industrial Society (Fasizmus, demokrácia, ipari társadalom) (1986). – B: 0893, 1257, 1672, T: 4342, 7456.→Polányi, Michael; Polányi, John Charles.

Polányi, Michael (Mihály) (Budapest, 11 March 1891 - Northampton, MA, USA, 22 February 1976) – Chemist, philosopher, theologian. He was the fourth child of Michael and Cecilia Pollacsek, secular Jews from Ungvár (then in Hungary, now Ushhorod in Ukraine) and Vilnius in Lithuania, respectively. His father's family were entrepreneurs, while his mother's father was the chief rabbi of Vilnius. The family moved to Budapest and Magyarized their surname to Polányi. His father built much of the Hungarian railway system, but lost most of his fortune in 1899, when bad weather caused a railway building project to go over budget. He died in 1905. His was the father of Nobel Prize Laureate John Polányi, and elder brother of Karl Polányi, the political economist. He received his education in Physics, Chemistry and Medicine in Budapest. As a physician, he participated in World War I, was wounded and during his recuperating years he wrote a doctoral dissertation in Physical Chemistry (1917). In 1920 he moved to Germany, and began working at the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute, Berlin. It was during this period that he befriended Jenő (Eugen) Wigner and became an internationally recognized chemist. After the National Socialists came to power in Germany in 1933, he moved to England and was Professor of Physical Chemistry at the University of Manchester, where he later also taught Social Studies (1948-1958). During his work carried out in Berlin, he developed a close relationship with Albert Einstein and with the representatives of the just evolving field of Quantum Mechanics. Polányi was the first to employ Quantum Mechanics in chemistry. He was well known for his studies on thermodynamics, especially in chemical kinetics and transition-state theory, and he was experienced in X-ray analysis of fibers and crystals. In 1948 Polányi turned to the study of Philosophy and Theology. For the most part, he rejected the one-sided, neo-positivist Popper concepts, and emphasized instead the presence of a verbally not easily communicable, more personal “tacit knowledge”. In his later period, besides Scientific Philosophy, he turned to the study of Theology, which served as a background for his Scientific Philosophy concept. His manuscript collection is held in the Polányi Archives in the USA. Although he considered himself to be a Hungarian thinker, lexicons and other publications refer to him as an English philosopher, having spent many years in England. His significant works include Atomic Reactions (London, 1932); Science, Faith and Society (Chicago, London, 1946); Personal Knowledge, Toward a Post-Critical Philosophy (Chicago, London, 1958), and The Tacit Dimension (Garden City, NY, 1966). However, he was not awarded the Nobel Prize for his advancements in chemistry. – B: 1028, 1031, T: 7617, 7456.→Wigner, Jenő; Polányi, John; Polányi, Károly.

Polcz, Alaine (Kolozsár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 7 October 1922 - Budapest, 21 September, 2007) – Psychologist and writer. She graduated from a high school in Kolozsvár. During World War II, she was wounded and became clinically dead. This experience was decisive to her entire life. She read Psychology at the University of Budapest, and graduated in 1949. She obtained her Ph.D. in 1957. She conducted art-therapy with adults with mental disorders, and later she dealt with play-diagnostics at an institute for mentally handicapped children, where she developed a play-test. She produced psychological films as well. Alaine Polcz worked as psychologist at the palliative care section of No. 2 Childrens' Clinic, Budapest. She played an important part in the foundation of the Hungarian Hospice Movement and was President of that organization. She was a world-renowned thanatologist. Her works include Puppet-play and Psychology (Bábjáték és pszichológia) (1966); The School of Death (A halál iskolája) (1989); Do I Die too? Death and the Child (Meghalok én is?, A halál és a gyermek) (1993), and Woman on the Front. A Chapter out of my Life (Asszony a fronton. Egy fejezet életemből) (1995). She received the Book of the Year Award (1991), the Tibor Déry Award (1992) and the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2001). – B: 1257, 0878, 1031, T: 7103.

Poldini, Ede (Edward) (Pest, 13 June 1869 - Vevey, Switzerland, 28 June 1957) – Composer and piano virtuoso. He gained his qualification from the National Conservatories of Pest and in Vienna. In 1885, Ferenc (Franz) Liszt accepted him as his student. From 1908 he lived in Switzerland. He received a prize for his work, Wakening (Ébresztő), and became known by it. As a composer, he was most successful with his pieces for the stage. His fairy plays with singing, such as The Sleeping Beauty, Cinderella, Iron-nosed Witch; his operas: Vagabond and the Princess (Csavargó és királyleány), Silk-net (Selyemháló), Rogue (Himfy), and his ballet Northern Light – all appeared on the stages of Budapest. His most popular work is the comic opera: Carnival Wedding-feast (Farsangi lakodalom) (1924). He composed other pieces of music for orchestra (originally for piano), such as the Poupee Valsante (The Dancing Puppet), Arlequinades, Morceaux pittoresques, Épisodes à Marionettes la cour, Images, Moments musicaux. He was a Late Romantic composer; he renewed the traditions of piano literature in an independent manner with his sensitive sense of color and also with healthy new melodies. They gained popularity in England and in the United States. – B: 1197, 1445, 0883, 1031, T: 7684, 7456.

Polgár, Judit (Judith) (Budapest, 23 July 1976 - ) – Chess player. She was born into a Jewish family, many members of which perished in the National Socialist times. She is a female international Grand Master, twice Olympic Games Champion in chess, (1988, 1990 team). In 1988 she was World Champion among the 12-year-old boys; she was ranked first on the world list for women. She was a winner, or placed high at several international tournaments for men, and received the Oscar Award in 1989. She was World Champion again at a men's tournament in 1991. She is a Hungarian Chess Grandmaster. – B: 1031, 1020, T: 7675.

Polgár, László (Ladislav) (Somogyszentpál, 1 January 1947 - Zürich, 19 September 2010) – Singer (Bass). His training was obtained at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as a student of Éva Kurucz and Mrs. Ferenc (Francis) Révhegyi. He also attended master-classes with Hans Hotter in Vienna. He had his debut in 1971 in the role of Count Ceprano in Verdi's Rigoletto. In 1972 he gained a scholarship from the Vienna Opera House, and from 1973 he was its solo singer. At first he sang comprimario (supporting) roles, but soon became the leading bass singer of the Opera House of Vienna. He was regular guest artist in the Opera Houses of the world: at the Viennese Staatsoper, also at Brussels, Hamburg, Salzburg, Munich, Antwerp, Brussels, Amsterdam, Lausanne, Paris, London, Milano, Tokyo, Tel Aviv and Buenos Aires. He was a member of the Opera House in Zürich. László Polgár worked with conductors such as Claudio Abbado, Pierre Boulez, Christoph von Dohnányi, and Sir George Solti. He was an outstanding oratorio and Lieder singer with an international reputation. He was a professor at the Ferenc Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. His major roles included Leporello in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Sarastro in Mozart's The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Phillip II in Verdi's Don Carlos, Guardian in Verdi's The Force of Destiny (La Forza del Destino, A végzet hatalma); King Marke in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde; Gurnemanz in Wagner's Parsifal, and Duke Bluebeard in Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú heceg vára). He participated in the production of numerous records. He won awards at many international Voice Competitions, winning first prizes at the Dvořák (1971), the Schumann (1974), and the Erkel (1975) Competitions, as well as in Ostende (1977), at the ones sponsored by Hungarian Radio (Budapest, 1977), and Luciano Pavarotti (Philadelphia, 1981) Competitions respectively. He was awarded the title of Merited Artist (1987), the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1986), and the Kossuth Prize (1990). – B: 1445, 1735, T: 7456, 7103.→Dohnányi, von Christoph; Solti, Sir George.

Polgár, Tibor (Budapest, 11 March 1907 - 26 August, Toronto 1993) – Composer, conductor, pianist. He pursued his music studies at the Music Conservatory, Budapest, and then in the Department of Compositions and Piano at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest under the direction of Zoltán Kodály and Imre Keéri-Szántó. Between 1925 and 1950 he worked in various assignments: as a correspondent for the Hungarian Radio, then as its outside consultant for another ten years. In the 1930s he also worked as the Conductor of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. Between 1958 and 1961 he was Music Director of the Petőfi- and Jókai Theaters (Petőfi és Jókai Színházak), Budapest. In 1961 he emigrated to the West and finally settled in Toronto. After leaving Hungary he led the Philharmonia Hungarica in Germany (1962-1964) and the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra (1965-1966). He was an instructor in the University of Toronto Opera Division (1966-1975), and a coach for the Canada Opera Company. He taught Orchestration at York University in 1976-1977. Polgár retired in the late 1970s, but remained an active composer. His work as a composer embraces the whole area of serious and light music. He composed for feature and documentary films, including In Praise of Older Women, and appeared briefly in it as a pianist. He often employed Hungarian idioms in his compositions. His works include Florentine Hat (Florentin kalap) (1948); The Wily Widow (A furfangos özvegy) (1948); The Suitors (A kérők) (1955), and in his later years he composed the one-act opera The Glove (1973), performed close to four hundred times; the Concerto Romantico, and The Four Seasons. The title of one of his last compositions is Notes on Hungary. His much-performed compositions for wind instruments received first prize among composers of several countries. He twice received the Ferenc Erkel Prize and an award from the American Harp Society in 1992. – B: 0893, 1445, 1786, T: 7456, 7103.→Kodály, Zoltán.

Polish-Hungarian Personal Union – When the Polish King Casimir III died on 5 November 1370, the male line of the ruling Piast family died out. According to the Treaty of Succession of 1339, the Polish Diet invited Lajos I, (Louis the Great, 1342-1382), the King of Hungary, to occupy the Polish throne. He was crowned on 17 November 1370 in the Cathedral of Krakow. On 10 September 1382, King Lajos I died. On 15 October 1382, his younger daughter, Hedwig, under the name Jadwiga, was crowned Queen of Poland. With her coronation, the Polish-Hungarian Personal Union ended. However, István Báthori (Báthory) (1576-1586), Reigning Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), was elected King of Poland (1576-1586) after the Jagello House died out. He was buried in Krakow. – B: 1230, T: 7665.→Lajos I, King; Hedvig, Saint; Poland, Hungarians in.

Political Parties in Hungary (Major Parties) – The development of political parties has been relatively stable since 1990. In other Central and Eastern European countries, there have been radical changes in political parties, with a number of parties disappearing and others suddenly rising to prominence, amidst many splits and joining. In Hungary, however, most of the parties that are in Parliament now were there already in 1990. The reason for this is the relative mildness of the Communist dictatorship and the reform efforts at the end of the 1980s, which meant that opposition parties had already established themselves in 1988. This does not mean there have not been changes. As a development typical for Eastern Europe, the platform movement (Hungarian Democratic Forum – Magyar Demokratikus Fórum – MDF), which gained spectacular successes at the first elections, has fallen back just as spectacularly. Similarly, other parties have suddenly risen to prominence or fallen into obscurity. These parties are as follows:

Alliance of Free Democrats (Szabad Demokraták Szövetsége – SZDSZ) has its origins in the democratic opposition of the 1980s, and was founded in November 1988, as an opposition party to the Communist regime, dominated by a hard-core of Budapest intellectuals. It has been troubled by internal struggles. SZDSZ now defines itself as a social-liberal people's party. Support is found especially among the middle classes, liberal intellectuals and entrepreneurs. In the 1994 election the SZDSZ formed a coalition with the Hungarian Socialist Party (MSZP), the successor of the Communist MSZMP, and ruled until 1998. The SZDSZ suffered heavy losses in the 1998 elections, after which the entire leadership stepped down, but many have returned in other positions, demonstrating the lack of a new generation in the SZDSZ. Former chairman, Gábor Kuncze, led the parliamentary faction. Soon, he again became the leader of the party in 2002, in coalition with the MSZP, to govern the country. In 2008 he abdicated as faction-leader. The party popularity was around the parliamentary threshold of 5 percent. In the 2010 election the Party fell out of the Parliament and ceased to exist.

Christian Democratic People's Party (Keresztény Demokrata Néppárt – KDNP) – Founded by ecclesiastical leaders between 1943 and 1944, it was stamped illegal well after the end of World War II, due to the growing Soviet influence. When a fraction of the party, under the leadership of István (Stephen) Barankovics dropped the "Christian" from the name, it became the Democratic People's Party (Demokrata Néppárt – DPN) and was legitimized. At the 1947 election, it won 62 seats in Parliament, and became the strongest opposition as an anti-Communist organization. Since the party did not want to participate in the show trial against Cardinal Mindszenty in 1949, the Party leaders, in order to avoid arrest by the Communist Secret Police, left the country and the Party ceased to function. However, with the political changes, the party was refounded under the name of Christian Democratic People's Party in 1989. It was part of the Parliament until 1988 and, since that time, it has been associated with the Fidesz Hungarian Civic Union Party as a fraction. The Party has had 23 representatives since the 2006 election. At the 2010 election the Fidesz-KDNP candidates won enough seats to achieve a two-thirds majority required to modify major laws and the country's constitution. The Party's leader is Zsolt Semjén.

Democratic Coalition Party (Demokratikus Koalíció Párt – DKP) – It was founded on 22 October 2011, in Budapest. The Party took over the Democratic Party, which was founded just a few months earlier; renamed it, changed its bylaws and its leadership. The new Party characterizes itself as a western-type civil-left-centrist Party. Its ideology is not yet known. The membership comprises personal and political supporters of Ferenc (Francis) Gyurcsány. The Party has begun as a platform of the Hungarian Socialist Party (Magyar Szocialista Párt – MSZP) with the presidency of Gyurcsány on 22 October 2010. Its aim was the inner transformation of the MSZP. Since it did not succeed, the relation between the mother party and its platform deteriorated to the point that the breaking-off was unavoidable. The formation of the new Party was announced by F. Gyurcsány at the first year anniversary of the platform. It was founded with ten MSZP members of Parliament, headed by F. Gyurcsány, the former prime minister. The aim is the defeat of the Orbán Government and the creation of the 4th Republic in Hungary. – B: 1704, 1031, T: 7301.

Fidesz Hungarian Civic Union Party (Fidesz Magyar Polgári Szövetség – MPSZ) so-called since 17 May 2003 (before that, it was The Alliance of Young Democrats – Hungarian Citizen Party – MPP), was originally a liberal party founded in March 1988 by university students and young intellectuals. Its original attraction lay in the youthful, libertarian attitude of opposition, first to the Communists and later, toward the conservatism and nationalism of the Independent Smallholders' Party (Független Kisgazdapárt, FKgP). Viktor Orbán succeeded in transforming Fidesz into a mainstream conservative party, a change, which can be seen from the adding of the name “citizens’ party” to the original Fidesz of 1995. From its liberal beginnings, the party has now taken up conservative, national and Christian themes, and has criticized the economic reform policies of the MSZP government as “too harsh”. Change has been criticized by some of the original supporters of Fidesz, who feel that Orbán has conceded too much in order to gain power. Some members have left to join the SZDSZ; nevertheless, in the 1998 elections, Fidesz gained a massive victory. After the elections, Orbán chose to form a coalition with the FKgP, a traditional opponent of the many libertarian supporters of Fidesz. Fidesz-MPP barely lost the 2002 and the 2006 elections when they were in opposition. At the 2010 election the Fidesz-KDNP candidates won enough seats to achieve a two-thirds majority required to modify major laws and the country's constitution. Viktor Orbán could lead his second government.

Hungarian Democratic Forum (Magyar Demokrata Fórum, MDF) was founded as a platform movement in 1987 in opposition to the Kádár regime. Originally a nationalist movement advocating a Hungarian “third way”, it later adopted more traditional conservative and Christian democratic views. It found support among diverse social groups. As a general focus of opposition to Communism, it won a major election victory in 1990. Before the 1994 elections, the MDF – with 164 seats – led the government coalition. The party lost heavily in 1994, due to the economic recession and the adverse social effects of reform. After the death of the first democratically elected post cold war Prime Minister, József (Joseph) Antall, Lajos (Louis) Für, and subsequently Sándor (Alexander) Lezsák became party leaders. The latter proposed a nationalistic program. The leader of the moderate wing in the MDF, Ivan Szabó, lost the leadership elections and left with 15 other MPs to form the Hungarian Democratic People's Party in 1996. The MDF has not been able to make the transformation from platform movement to political party, dropping to 17 seats in the 1998 elections, despite a coalition agreement with Fidesz. On the party lists, the MDF did not even make 5%. In the 2002 and 2006 elections, the party remained in Parliament under the leadership of Ibolya (Violet) Dávid. The Party got fragmented and could not enter Parliament after the 2010 election, it dissolved itself.

Hungarian Socialist Party (Magyar Szocialista Párt, MSZP), successor of the Hungarian Socialist Worker Party (Magyar Szocialista Munkás Párt, MSZMP), a Communist Party, ruled Hungary from 1956 until 1989. In Hungary, at the end of 1988, the multi-party system became a realistic political possibility. The governing Communist Party recognized the opposition organizing itself into the Opposition Round Table, and was prepared to negotiate over the legal framework of peaceful transition. At a party congress in October 1989, the Communists agreed to give up their monopoly on power, paving the way for free elections in March 1990. The party's name was changed from the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party to simply the Hungarian Socialist Party, and a new program advocating social democracy and a free market economy was adopted. This was not enough to shake off the stigma of four decades of autocratic rule; however, the 1990's vote was won by the centrist Hungarian Democratic Forum (MDF), which advocated a gradual transition toward capitalism. As Gorbachev looked on, Hungary changed political systems with scarcely a murmur and the last Soviet troops left Hungary in June 1991. However, MSZP won the 1994 election and in coalition with SZDSZ, Prime Minister Gyula (Julius) Horn governed the country till 1998, when they lost to the Fidesz-MPP-FKgP coalition. The MSZP-SZDSZ coalition returned to power in the 2002 election, under the leadership of László (Leslie) Kovács, and Péter Medgyessy became Prime Minister, who resigned in 2006. The Party repeated its victory in the 2006 election with István (Stephen) Hiller as its President. From 2004, the Prime Minister was Ferenc (Francis) Gyurcsány, and also Party leader from 2007, who resigned in March 2009 and was succeeded by Gordon Bajnai as Prime Minister. The Party lost the 2010 election and became opposition. On 22 October 2011, 10 members of the parliament left the MSZMP and with the leadership of the former prime minister Ferenc (Francis) Gyurcsány formed the Democratic Coalition Party.

Independent Smallholder's Party (Független Kisgazda Párt – FKgP) was founded in 1930 and acquired a majority of seats in the 1945 elections. Under Communist one-party system the FKgP withered away and finally ceased to exist, and was re-established only in November 1988. The FKgP was a coalition partner in the MDF Government, but lost in 1994, due to internal conflicts, when it split into five feuding factions. It is a populist, nationalist party, though after 1996, the party has gravitated more toward the center. In economic terms, the party is faithful to its supporters' interests: mainly small property owners, peasants and the rural middle class. The FKgP competed with Fidesz to establish itself as the main opposition party, and increased its seats from 26 to 48 in the 1998, elections. In Government, it held the agricultural, defense, environment and PHARE ministries. Despite its nationalist rhetoric, the FkgP distances itself from the extremist MIÉP. While in government, FKgP split into two feuding factions, and performed badly in the 2002 elections, as well as in 2006.

Movement for a Better Hungary, The (Jobbik magyarorszáért Mozgalom – Jobbik) a radical rightist Party. Its precursor was the Rightist Youth Community (Jobbik) made up mostly of university students, which developed into a Political Party in 2003. The Party became the mainstream of the rightist radicals beside the weakening MIÉP. The Jobbik leader is Gábor (Gabriel) Vona. The new Party's goal is: the "completion of the system-change, and creation of a more just society". According to its self-definition: it is a "Party with value-principle, conservative, radical in methods, national-Christian, and would like to serve the whole society". They regard MSZP and SZDSZ as their opposition, and also the Fidesz with its liberal roots. In 2007 they founded the Hungarian Guard (Magyar Gárda) organization, which would be the backbone of the future National Guard (Nemzetőrség). At present, the members of the Guard participate in charitable works, self-defense and the preservation of order. The formation of the Guard was accompanied by political disputes, and finally, it was banned. However, a New Guard movement was formed. In coalition with the MIÉP, they lost the 2006 election, after which they separated. In the meantime the Jobbik, after a forceful campaign significantly strengthened and was able send three representatives to the European Parliament in 2009, and the general election in April 2010 resulted an outstanding 17 %, that is 47 seats in the Parliament for Jobbik, which success was again repeated and at the municipal elections in October of 2010.

Party of Hungarian Truth and Life (Magyar Igazság és Élet Pártja – MIEP), was established in 1993, after former dissident István (Stephen) Csurka was expelled from the MDF for his radical nationalism. MIEP is a nationalist party, and demands the return of Hungarian territories lost in the Versailles-Trianon (1920) and Paris (1947) peace dictates. MIEP has announced its support of the Government, to the embarrassment of the latter. Amidst high hopes in the 2002 election, MIEP did not even win 5% of the votes and lost all of their seats in Parliament. Its defeat was repeated in the 2006 election. The Party entered in coalition with the Jobbik (Rightist) Movement before the 2006 election but could not enter Parliament. After the election fiasco they separated.

Politics Can Be Different (Lehet Más a Politika – LMP) – A green liberal political party, founded in 2009. Its beginning goes back to 2008, when a social movement was formed with the purpose of reforming Hungarian politics. Their aims are environmental protection, sustainable development and the fight against corruption. LMP emphasized the pointlessness of the current partisan division between the left and rightwing forces, and its principle is deliberative democracy. The party gained 16 seats at the Parliament in the 2010 parliamentary elections, and won 54 seats at the local elections in local city councils of 3 October 2010, with at least one representative in most of the district councils of the capital, and 3 seats in the central council of Budapest, as well as in a few other towns around the country. The leadership of the Party includes András (Andreas) Schiffer, Benedek (Benedict) Jávor and Tímea Szabó. LMP received the official endorsement of the European Green Party.

Social Union Party (Szociális Unió – SZU) – A new, leftist oriented political party, born on 3 October 2010 on the initiative of Katalin (Catharine) Szili. Among the preliminaries of the new party are the faulty politics of the Hungarian Socialist Party (Magyar Szocialista Párt – MSZP), its opposition of the dual citizenship of Hungarian nationality living in the neighboring countries since the Trianon-Versailles peace dictate (1920), and scattered around the world; the MSZP's disastrous neo-liberal economic policy; and the so called lie-speech at Ószöd by the president of the MSZP (2006). These contributed to the dramatic loss of the MSZP at the 2010 election. The majority of socialist party members were deeply disappointed and they searched for a new party adhering to socialist values. According to Szili there is a need for parties which are conservative in values, socialist in social-policy, guard both European and national values, stands by sustainable development and is antiglobalist. The new party fights for the realization of its program. – B: 1021, T: 7103.

Workers' Party (Munkáspárt – MP), a Communist Party with little influence. After the reform, the Communists renamed the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party the Hungarian Socialist Party. In 1989 a minority of old hard-line Communists split off to form a new party under the old name MSZMP. This was duly changed into the present name. In the subsequent parliamentary elections, it closely missed achieving the 5% threshold. Its leader is Gyula (Julius) Türmer. – B: 1019, 1031, T: 1019, 7103.→

Political System Change in Hungary in 1989-1990.

Political System Change in Hungary in 1989-1990 – In Central Europe, momentous political and social changes took place during 1989 and 1990. The States in this region successfully shook off their Communist dictatorships, amongst them Hungary. The Communist dictatorship in Hungary began in 1945 when, at the end of World War II, the armies of the Soviet Union occupied Hungary and in their presence, in 1947 with an underhand, corrupt election they introduced a Communist dictatorship, led by Mátyás (Matthias) Rákosi and his associates. The newly established “People’s Republic” became transformed into a Soviet-style system. Its hard-line dictatorship led to the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, which was defeated by the military might of the Soviet Union. After the reprisals that followed, from 1963, the Kádár Government, after making significant concessions, developed the so-called “Soft” or “Gulash Communism”. During the period between 1968 and 1972, the country’s economic life went through some reforms and with the aid of loans obtained from western banks it achieved a noticeable improvement in the living standards of the population. However, this resulted in a national debt of 22,000 million dollars by the end of the 1980s. From 1985 the new Soviet leader, Gorbachev, by introducing the new systems of perestroika and glasnost, tried to reform the Soviet economy and social conditions. In Central Europe, including Hungary, this resulted in an ever-increasing political opposition, demanding the creation of a multi-party democratic system.

The most far-reaching movement for political change occurred on 11-12 March 1989, when the Hungarian Democratic Forum (Magyar Demokrata Fórum – MDF), held a national meeting; then the so-called Opposition Round-table was formed on 22 March, and the National Round-table negotiations began on 13 June. As early as 16 June, the state re-burial of Imre Nagy and his martyr associates took place; on 6 July, János Kádár died, and on the same day the official exoneration by the court also took place. On 11 July, the US President, George Bush Sr., visited Budapest and also met the leaders of the opposition movements. On 10 September, the Austrian-Hungarian borders were opened for East-German citizens, enabling them to escape to the West. This created a gap in the Soviet “Iron Curtain”. On 18 September, the closing document of the National Round-table Conference appeared – an agreement, however, which was not signed either by the Alliance of Free Democrats (Szabad Demokraták Szövetsége – SZDSZ), or the Fidesz (Fiatal Demokraták Szövetsége). During the days from 6 to 10 October, the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party (Magyar Szocialista Munkáspárt – MSZMP), which had been operating till that time, was liquidated and its successor, the Hungarian Socialist Party (Magyar Szocialista Párt – MSZP) was created; on 23 October, on the anniversary of the outbreak of the 1956 Revolution, the name “Republic” (replacing “People’s Republic”) was declared; on 9 November the “Berlin Wall” fell.

However, on 26 November, the notorious referendum of 4-Yes votes took place: the first distortion of the political change, the removal of the right of citizens to elect a head of state, instead entrusting it to the Parliament, where it became the object of negotiations among the parties. This distortion was strengthened by the establishment of the Opposition Round-table, the essence of which was not to keep the opposition tightly together, but to achieve an equal-partnership by clinging to the larger organization in opposition, the Alliance of Free Democrats. Already at that stage, they had in mind a governmental role in a coalition desirable to them. This actually did happen in 1994 at the time of their collaboration in government with the Hungarian Socialist Party and from then on, the Alliance of Free Democrats, the strongest opposition body, became decisive in the development of the policy of the Hungarian Socialist Party, the Communist successor party, along the lines of the western ultra-liberal policies and interests.

The Opposition Round-table was soon superseded by a larger group, called “National”, for whom the particular role was allotted to prevent the Hungarian Democratic Forum from establishing the new democratic Hungarian social arrangements without the legislative assembly, urged by the Hungarian Democratic Forum, but to be determined by a considerably narrower circle, without legitimacy. In this manner, the bargaining began over the head of the nation, paving the way for the allotment of positions of power.

The democratic change in the political system found itself on the wrong course in this chaotic bargaining process. With the exception of the government by the FIDESZ between 1998 and 2002, the Hungarian Socialist Party and the Alliance of Free Democrats became the ruling coalition, during which period, as a result of mismanaged government, the nation fell into an economic and political crisis, increasing the national debt fourfold, further aggravated by the global economic downturn. After two decades, the ending of the distorted and stumbled democratic change became imperative. – B: 1967, 7103; T: 7456.→Rákosi, Mátyás, Kádár, János; Nagy, Imre; Political Parties in Hungary.

Political System Change in Hungary in 1989-1990, Developments after the – Soon after the political system change in Central Europe, the Hungarian people also experienced a huge social metamorphosis. Instead of the expected rise in living standards there came even more poverty; instead of democracy, Hungary received a manipulated power system and, instead of the much-desired new ethical order, a new period of moral chaos arrived. As a result, the larger part of the country’s population, after a few milder years, had to suffer from a general disillusionment, economic difficulties and uncertainty of existence. Perhaps the fast, haphazard and not transparently carried out privatization process, started under the government of József (Joseph) Antall, was the main cause and this continued under every subsequent government. Applying the neo-liberal economic policy, the state-owned common property had to be transferred to private hands, to foreign or local investors, on the basis of the slogan that the state was a bad manager. The result of this was an ever-increasing polarization of the Hungarian community. Beside the classes of the well-situated, newly-rich entrepreneurs, the politically well-positioned administrators and the army, there were the masses of the barely existing intellectuals, the starving unemployed and the impoverished retirees. At the same time, the entire system of welfare organizations disappeared. It was expected that the new Government, led by the former Communist diplomat Gyula (Julius) Horn as Prime Minister (1994-1998), would bring stability and more social sensitivity toward the dispossessed and the poor. But Horn relentlessly continued the privatization, which amounted to selling-out the country’s property and carrying out economic curtailments, with the introduction of the so-called “Manifold Parcel”. Not surprisingly, he lost the following election and the FIDESZ (Hungarian Civic Union) was able to form a coalition government under Viktor Orbán. Although the economy of the country was making headway and the national debt was cut back, Orbán’s Government had to face constant and fierce attack from the Left, now in Opposition to such an extent, that it lost the 2002 elections. Once again the Left-Liberal coalition (Hungarian Socialist Party (MSZP) with the Alliance of Free Democrats (SZDSZ) assumed government, led by the former Communist Minister of Finance, Péter Medgyessy, who, it was revealed, had been a secret agent. In 2004, in quiet collusion, he was succeeded by Ferenc (Francis) Gyurcsány, a former leader of the Communist Youth Alliance (KISZ). In 2006, Gyurcsány won the election with great promises, which were never fulfilled. He wanted to carry out an ill-considered, far-fetched modernization policy in the fields of economy, health, education etc., in all of which he failed and the country, which became a member of the EU in 2004 when it was in the forefront in economic growth in Central-Eastern Europe, soon became its last state on the list. The national debt grew fourfold to about 80,000 million US dollars; economic growth stalled and the privatization of the remaining part of the national wealth continued. Taxes increased proportionately, and also unemployment, impoverishment and social-community tensions. In addition to all this the global financial crisis engulfed Hungary. Eventually, on 21 March 2009, Gyurcsány had to resign as the President of the Hungarian Socialist Party (MSZP) and shortly afterwards also as Prime Minister. Instead of resorting to early elections, Gordon Bajnai, the specialist of finances of the former Government, became the new crisis-managing Prime Minister from 14 April 2009.

The 20 years of the post-Communist era did not bring the expected solution, improvements and success. Already during the rule of the Hungarian Democratic Federation (Magyar Demokrata Fórum - MDF), the ideological disillusionment and social impoverishment were growing, rendering the Government ever more unpopular, leading to its election defeat in 1994. This defeat ruined not only the future of the MDF, but destabilized and undermined the traditional value system it represented. The erosion, tension, unemployment, poverty, hopelessness and the disillusionment with politics all increased even more. To all these aspects was added the national debt, the raising of foreign loans, and the Global financial crisis. The country reached the threshold of total collapse. Behind all these is the false policy that “the capital can regulate itself”. This did not take place. What did occur was that, as a result of privatization, the new owners, including those from abroad, gained maximum profits, which were not re-invested, but were taken out of the country, which was simply regarded by the West as its market; its cheap mass-produced export goods could be sold there, thus ruining the remaining fraction of the economy still in Hungarian hands.

At present Hungary is in serious economic, political and moral crisis and tries to find a way out after the 2010 elections. – B: 1971, 7103, T: 7456.→Antall, József; Horn, Gyula; Orbán, Viktor; Medgyessy, Péter; Gyurcsány, Ferenc.

Political System Changes in Hungary and the Hungarians of the West – The collapse of the Communist order during 1989 and 1990 and the coming into power of a “national-minded” government created a euphoric mood not only in Hungary, but also in Hungarian circles living in the West. Then every émigré group imagined “their own political school of thought appearing on the horizon” and every group felt that their own past activity decisively contributed to the downfall of Communism, because of which they could rightfully expect due recognition from the newly upcoming national government, independently from their political affiliation; mainly expecting moral recognition and possibility expecting to take part in the rebuilding of the nation and the country. They also expected, understandably, to be Hungarians and their Hungarian citizenship to be recognized officially by an act of Parliament and carried out just as promptly as that, which denationalized them. What did occur after the changes were merely the presentation of a few decorations and the bestowal of a few nominal promotions, but the recognition did not come. This adverse beginning drove a wedge between the new Government and the Hungarians in the West after the first few months. As this wedge continued to grow, it tended to create an increasingly wide gulf, separating those in power in the old country, on the one hand, and those among the émigrés, who were still deeply concerned about Hungary and its inhabitants, on the other. Those living in the West met with a certain coolness and distance on the part of virtually all the successive Hungarian Governments. There was no uniform attitude and policy regarding the several million Hungarians within the Carpathian Basin, who were forced to live under the hostile governments of the successor states (Romania, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Carpatho-Ukraine), since Trianon (1920) and Paris (1947) peace dictates, apart from the maintenance of some cultural relations, but without the appreciation and solution of their serious problems. The Government of the Hungarian Democratic Forum (MDF), transformed the World Federation of Hungarians (Magyarok Világszövetsége – MVSZ) into a quarantine (enforced isolation) in 1992, to become a suitable place for the representatives of five million Hungarians outside Hungary to debate, protest and lament the lack of their due recognition. In 2000, the Fidesz led Parliament took away all financial support from the MVSZ, which resulted that some of the western members of the MVSZ left it and 14 of them formed the Western European Hungarian National Organization Association (Bund Ungarischer Landesverbände in West Europe – Nyugat-Európai Országos Magyar Szervezettek Szövetsége – NYEOMSZSZ). On 17 November 2011 the Fidesz-KDNP majority Parliament founded the Hungarian Diaspora Council (Magyar Diaszpóra Tanács), which is serving as a forum for the organizations of Hungarians scattered around the world, and also creates representatives of the diaspora Hungarians. The Diaspora Council will be in close co-operation with the Hungarian Standing Conference (Magyar Állandó Értekezlet – MÁÉRT). – B: 1926, 7103, T: 7456. → World Federation of Hungarians; Teleki, Count Pál; Csoóri, Sándor; Patrubány, Miklós; Hungarian Diaspora Council.

Politzer, Ádám (Alberti, Hungary, 1 October 1835 - Vienna, 20 August 1920) – Physician of Hungarian descent, otologist. In 1854 he obtained a Doctorate in Medicine from the University of Vienna, and was Professor there. In 1861, he became an honorary lecturer of Otology; in 1870 Associate Professor. In 1873 he founded the first Otological Clinic in Vienna. In 1896 he became a full Professor of Otology at the University of Vienna. He carried out fundamental research in the field of the pathology of ear-related illnesses like adhesive inflammation, inner-ear-suppurations, etc. The otological diagnosis was advanced by the otoscopic description of the eardrum, and the elaboration of the tuning-fork examination. The use of a ball, introduced by him, rendered the inflation of the tuba auditiva possible and also the draining of the effusions of the tympanum. He developed the surgery of the inner ear as well. He described the pharyngotympanic bag, named after him. Other associated eponyms: Politzer's ear perforator; Politzer's knife; Politzer's luminous cone; Politzer's method; Politzer's operation; Politzer's otoscope; Politzer's speculum and Politzer's test. He was a noted medical historian too, and founder and first Editor of the journal Archiv für Ohrenheilkunde (1889). His works include Lehrbuch der Ohrenheilkunde (1878), Geschichte der Ohrenheilkunde (1907-1913) and Anatomie und Histologie des menschlichen Gehörorgans (1889). He is the founder of modern otology. – B: 1730, 1781, 1031, 1160, T: 7456.

Pollack, Mihály (Michael) (Vienna, Austria, 30 August 1773 - Pest, 5 January 1855) –

Architect. He studied at the Academy in Vienna. During 1793 and 1794 he was in Milan, Italy, studying the Classicist forms of Lombardy. Later, in 1798, he settled in Pest. His first important work was to finish building the Lutheran Church at Deák Square in Pest. Then he worked on the renovation of the Cathedral of Pécs. He was the chief architect of the National Theater of Pest. In 1808, a Committee for Improvement was established and he became a member, and had an important role in the major architectural changes in the city. Between 1810 and 1830, he designed many great buildings and mansions for Pest. He was a famous master of the Hungarian Classicist style. His designing art is well shown on famous buildings, like the Pesti Vigadó (ballroom and concert hall), and the Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy. He designed country mansions and country houses. His most famous creation is the National Museum, Budapest, which is a masterpiece of the European Classicist style. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7663.

Pollák, Antal (Anthony) (Szentés, 29 March 1865 - Budapest, 30 March 1943) – Inventor. He graduated from the Commerce and Industry Academy, Graz, Austria. He returned to Hungary, settled in Szentés, and was involved in the corn-trade. Later, he conducted research into television and express telegraph. He moved to Budapest, continued his experiments, and came forward with his invention called ‘Teleautograf’. Then in 1885, he introduced high-speed telegraphy, which had been invented jointly with József (Joseph) Virág. Its capacity was 70 thousand words per hour. The invention was received favorably but it was forgotten because its great capacity could not be used up. The School of Electronics in Szentés was named after him in 1973. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7103.

Pöltenberg, Ernő (Ernest) (Poeltenberg) (Vienna, 1813 - Arad, now in Romania, 6 October 1849) – General, martyr. He was born into a well-to-do family; his father was a lawyer. He entered into military service in the Imperial Army in 1830. During his 18 years’ service, he became Captain. He was posted to Hungary in the spring of 1848, and became a supporter of the Hungarian War of Independence (1848-1849). He fought against the army of Jelacic, the Croatian ban, but he did not agree to the idea of crossing the Austro-Hungarian border with the army. Due to his position, doubt surrounded him for a while. He excelled himself in the Battle of Kápolna on 26-27 February 1849. He was the Commander of the 7th Army Corps, and was promoted first to Major, then Colonel and finally General. He participated in the Battle of Komárom, on 2-11 July, then in the Battle of Vác on 15-17 July. As a confidant of General Artúr Görgey, he mediated in the negotiations of the surrender to the Russian Army. He was captured by the Austrians and sentenced to execution by hanging. In his last moments he said: “This is a nice delegation to send to God to represent the cause of Hungarians”. – B: 1105, 1031, T: 7103. → Arad, Martyrs of; Görgey, Artúr; Aulich, Lajos; Damjanich, János; Dessewffy, Arisztid; Kiss, Ernő; Knézich, Károly; Lahner, György; Lázár, Vilmos; Leningen, Count Károly; Nagy-Sándor, József; Schweidel, József; Török, Ignác; Vécsey, Count Károly; Haynau, Baron Julius Freiherr von; Ferenc József (Francis Joseph), Emperor and King; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Pólya, György (George) (Budapest, 13 December 1887 - Palo Alto, California, 7 September 1985) – Mathematician, mathematical philosopher. He was born into a Jewish family. His father’s former name was Pollak, and he converted to the Catholic faith. Initially he read Law, then Latin and Literature, and finally took Mathematics and Physics. He was the tutor of the son of a baron, who lacked problem-solving skills. Polya constructed a problem-solving method for his student that would work for others as well. He completed his studies in Budapest, Göttingen and Paris. He was invited to teach at the Polytechnic of Zürich (1914-1940), where he was Professor of Mathematics until 1940. In the same year he moved to the USA with his wife because of their concern about Nazism in Germany. He taught at Brown University as a visiting professor for two years; then accepted an invitation from the University of Stanford, where his friend Gábor Szegő taught, and he stayed there until his retirement in 1953. Besides his outstanding results in the field of mathematical analysis, he worked on a great variety of mathematical topics, including series, number theory, combinatorics and probability. He was one of the most significant mathematical philosophers, who carried out pioneering philosophical and psychological studies in the field of mathematical heurism. His work, How to Solve It (1945) caused a sensation (reprinted in 1971), and was translated into 17 languages; in it he identifies and analyses such components of mathematical heurism, as analogy, induction, and solving of auxiliary problems. He pointed out, that a mathematical discovery is not some irrational enlightenment, or the function of an idea, which in its inception is not identifiable, but something, which can be analyzed. His most important works include, How to Solve It: Mathematics and Plausible Reasoning. vols. i,ii, (1954) and Mathematical Discovery. On Understanding, Learning and Teaching Problem Solving, vols. i,ii, (1962, 1965). In it Polya established four basic principles. First, understand the problem; second, devise a plan; third, carry out the plan; fourth, examine the solution obtained. Furthermore, Pólya applied his mathematical heuristic results to the teaching of mathematics. Polya has become known as the father of problem solving. These texts form the basis for modern thinking in the teaching of mathematics and, by the passing of time they have not become obsolete at all. His last work is: The Art of Metaphysical Thinking (A metafizikai gondolkodás művészete) (1988). In 1976 the George Polya Award was established, and the Polya Prize too, in 1969. – B: 1028, 1031, 1068, 1672, T: 7456, 7103.

Pólya, Tibor (Szolnok, 25 April 1886 - Szolnok, 29 November 1937) – Painter and graphic artist. He studied in Budapest, Szolnok and Paris. As a member of the Art Colony of Kecskemét from 1912 to 1919, he came under the influence of Aba-Novák. Aside from landscapes and figurative compositions, he also did caricatures and designed book covers and posters. He held yearly exhibitions in the Ernst Museum, Budapest, between 1917 and 1924. He traveled to the USA in 1925 and 1928 and published an album covering the journey of the delegation there for the unveiling of the statue of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth. The Fészek Club in Budapest housed the exhibition of his collective works in 1929. From the thirties, he lived in and led the Art Colony of Szolnok. He also illustrated the books of several noted Hungarian writers including Gyula Krúdy, Frigyes Karinthy, etc. His works are preserved in the Hungarian National Gallery. Among his paintings are Flowers and Fruits (Virágok és gyümölcsök); Boulevard in Sunshine (Napfényes boulevard); Village in Winter (Falu télen); Marketplace in Szolnok (Szolnoki piactér), and Bohóc (Clown). His paintings are characterized by impressionism, vivid colors, people and marked Hungarian style. A minor plane the Polya (1998 WJ) was named after him. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7677.→Aba-Novák, Vilmos; Krúdy, Gyula; Karinthy, Frigyes; Kossuth, Lajos.

Polyák, Imre (Emeric) (Kecskemét, 16 April 1932 - ? 15 November 2010) – Wrestler.

He was Hungarian Champion 12 times between 1952 and 1964. He was a silver medalist at the Summer Olympic Games in Helsinki in 1952, at Melbourne in 1956, and at Rome in 1960, and a gold medalist in Tokyo (1964). He became three times World Champion (1955, 1956, 1960), and twice silver medalist (1961, 1963). From 1965 he was coach of the team of Dózsa Újpest; a leader of its Wrestling Department and finally its Counselor. He also worked for the Hungarian National Wrestling Team. He was inducted into the Wrestling Hall of Fame and made Sportsman of the Nation. – B: 1656, 1031, T: 7103.

Polner, Zoltán (Szeged, 24 January 1934 - ) – Poet, journalist. He obtained a Degree in Hungarian Literature from the University of Szeged in 1955. He taught in Pitvaros and Csanádpalota. For a while, he was Assistant Manager for the Theater of Szeged; then he taught again from 1959 in Ferencszállás, and from 1962 in Kiszombor. From 1965 he was a contributor to the Congrád County Newspaper (Csongrád Megyei Hírlap), later became its columnist. In 1966 he obtained a Ph.D. and retired in 1993. His main interest is collecting folk-prayers, and ancient beliefs in County Csongrád. His poetry shows the influence of folk-poetry. From his ethnographic works seven films and two radio-plays were made. He also contributed to the Open-Air Performances of Szeged. Among his works are On the Golden Branch of the Golden Tree (Arany fának arany ágán) (1981); Shadow of Silence (A csend árnyéka), poems (1988); Mud-man (Sárember) (1989), and The Son of Man on the Golgotha (Ember Fia a Golgotán), archaic folk-prayers from the Szeged area (1998). He is a recipient the Creator Prize of Szeged (1971), the For the Socialist Culture Award (1979), and the Gyula Juhász Prize (1989). – B: 1257, 0878, T: 7103.

Polónyi, István (Stefan) (Gyula, 6 July 1930 - ) – Engineer, architect. His higher studies were at the Budapest Polytechnic (1948-1952), where he obtained his diploma. Between 1952 and 1956 he was an assistant professor at the Polytechnic of Budapest. Concurrently, he worked as a designer for the State Planning Department (Iparterv). In 1956 he escaped from Hungary and settled in Cologne, Germany, where he worked as staff-member at the Peter Bauwens Bauunternehmung GmbH Company. He opened his own consulting firm, first in Cologne, then in West Berlin. His firm soon became well-known in West-Germany; he designed numerous projects and he became one of the leading structural designers in Western Europe. In 1965, at the invitation of the Polytechnic of Berlin, he accepted a professorship there, and later became Dean. (1965-1973). From 1973 to 1995 he was professor at the new Dortmund University, where he founded the Faculty of Architecture, and was its Dean (1983-1987). He wrote 200 publications and five books including Architektur und Tragwerk; Beton Atlas: Entwerfen mit Stahlbeton im Hochbau, along with others, and he co-authored and edited numerous books. Among his works are the Athletic Hall of Dortmund; Holland Dance Theater of the Hague, and the Museum of Arts of Bonn. He is an Honorary Doctor of the University of Kassel, the Polytechnic of Budapest, and the Polytechnic of Berlin. He is a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (2007), and a recipient of a number of awards, including the Prize of European Town Construction (1977, 1978, 1987), and the Prize of Architecture of the University of Paris (1993). – B: 0874, T: 7103.

Pomegranate as Decoration – An element of the Hungarian folk art brought from the Orient. It is a general ornament with a round, oval or drop-shaped seed, and a lace, or flower petal-type top. Many have a checkered middle section copying a crest motive. It is called “Golden apple” or the “Apple of the Prince” in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). There was a golden pomegranate on top of the Khazar ruler’s private coach. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Pomogáts, Béla (Budapest, 22 October 1934 - ) – Historian of literature. He studied Literature at the University of Budapest (1953-1958). He participated in the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, and was interned from 1959 to 1960; he was a teacher from 1961 to 1965; from 1965 he was an international contributor for the Institute of Hungarian Literature of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; he was Head of the 20th Century Department. From 1992 he worked at various important posts, including scientific counselor. Between 1994 and 1997, he was a representative of the General Assembly, and a member of the Hungarian Romanian Mixed Committee. After 1990 he was Editor-in-Chief for the periodicals Literatura, Vigilia; Our Language and Culture (Nyelvünk és Kultúránk); Reality (Valóság), and Minority Research (Kisebbségkutatás). Since 1996 he has been a member of the Editorial Committee of the daily Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). From 1992 he was President of the Mother Tongue Conference (Anyanyelvi Konferencia). From 1993, he was the spokesman for the Democratic Charters, a member of the Executive of the Writers’ Union (Írószövetség) of Hungary; and from 1995 its President. Since 1994, he has been the spokesman for the 1956 Memorial Society (1956 Emlékbizottság). He was the last President of the Illyés Foundation. He received a literary doctorate in 1995. Some of his works are Memories and Magic (Emlék és varázslat) (1982); Small Mirror. Hungarian Literary Profiles (Kistükör. Magyar irodalomtörténeti arcképek) (1985, 1986); Hungarian Literature of the West after 1945 (A nyugati Magyar irodalom 1945 után), with M. Bárdy and L. Rónay (1986); Poetry and Popularism (Költészet és népiesség) (1987); Hungarian Reader from Transylvania (Erdélyi Magyar olvasóköny) editor (1989); Politics and Poetry (Politika és poétika) (1996); Blood of Falling Leaves (Hulló levelek vére) short stories (1956,1996); The Other Hungary (Másik Magyarország) (1997), and In Defense of Literature (Az irodalom védelmében) (1998). He wrote literary portraits of Aladár Kuncz, Tibor Déry, Miklós Radnóti and Zoltán Jékely. He is a recipient among others, of the Literary Prize of the Art Foundation (1986), the Academy Prize (1990), the Attila József Prize (1991), the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1994), the Nagy Imre Memorial Plaque (1996), For the Minorities (1996) and the István Bocskai Prize (1998). – B: 0874, 1257, T: 7684.→Kuncz, Aladár; Jékely, Zoltán; Radnóti, Miklós; Déry Tibor.

Pongrátz, Gergely (Gregory) (Szamosújvár, now Gherla, Transylvania, in Romania, 18 February, 1932 - Kiskunmajsa, 18 May, 2005) – One of the leaders of the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight in 1956. After World War II, the family moved to Hungary. He was conscripted into the Army and went through Communist indoctrination, which he rejected, together with the national-minded youths. He obtained a Degree in Agricultural Engineering and he worked on a collective farm. Having heard the news of the demonstration in Budapest, on 23 October 1956, he went to Budapest, and joined a group of young resistance fighters at the Corvin Cinema. Soon he emerged as their natural leader, along with his brother. This resistance group had a pair of Hungarian tanks, and they held their position against the first Soviet attack, and also against the second one, and then again, after 4 November, when the Soviets returned in strength. In the vicinity of Pongrátz’ Freedom Fighters was the Killian Barracks, led by Colonel Pál Maléter. He was sent to suppress the rebellion but, on making contact with the insurgents, he decided to support them, although he did not order the men under his leadership to fight alongside the Freedom Fighters. Those who did so, voluntarily joined the Revolutionaries. Maléter later became Minister of Defense in the revolutionary Government of Imre (Emeric) Nagy. The Soviets invited him to negotiate their withdrawal but it was a trick. They captured him and eventually he was executed in 1958 along with Imre Nagy and others. When the Pongrátz Group had to give up their position, they left behind a dozen destroyed Soviet tanks. 200,000 Hungarians fled to the West. Gregory Pongrátz fled to Austria with others who intended to return in the spring, with the slogan: M.U.K. meaning: Márciusban Újra Kezdjük (We will start anew in March). Finally, Pongrátz emigrated to the U.S.A, and remained there until the collapse of the Communist System in Hungary. In 1991 he returned to Hungary. In Kiskunmajsa, he founded a Museum to record the events of 1956, and a chapel to commemorate the Revolution's fallen heroes. He wrote a book on the Revolution entitled: Corvin Circle (Corvin köz) (Chicago, 1982, Budapest, 1989, 1992). He became President of the World Federation of Hungarians in 1956 later, Vice-President of the National Society of Political Prisoners (Politikai Foglyok Országos Szövetsége – POFOSZ). He created and led the Kids of Pest Foundation of 1956 (1956-os Pesti Srác Alapítvány). He also ran a summer camp to tell young Hungarians about the heroic time in Hungary's 20th-century history. During a demonstration in Budapest, he was injured. In 1993, he participated in the foundation of the Jobbik Movement a political movement for a better Hungary. He is remembered as one of the emblematic figures of the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956.– B: 1031, T: 7103.→Freedom Fight of 1956; Maleter, Pál; Nagy, Imre.

Pongrátz, József (Joseph) (Ete, 4 June 1885 - Pápa, 6 November 1963) – Minister of the Reformed Church, theologian, writer. He attended High School in Pápa (1902), and then studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Pápa (1906). He was on scholarship in Scotland and in the USA, then Bishop's Secretary in Komárom from 1908. He was Professor of New Testament Studies at the Reformed Theological Academy, Pápa (1915-1951). He earned his Doctoral Degree in Theology at Debrecen. He was involved in library works from 1902. From 1917, he was Director of the Library of the Reformed College of Pápa, and later, of the Church District Library, Pápa until the end of his life. He organized the Papensia Collection. Pongrátz was publisher of the journal Student World (Diákvilág), Pápa, and Editor for the Transdanubian Protestant Journal (Dunántúli Protestáns Lapok). His writing appeared in the Theological Review (Teológiai Szemle), and in the Reformed Journal (Reformátusok Lapja), as well. His works include Epistle to the Ephesians (Az efezusi levél) (1911); The Epistle of Paul to the Galatians (Pál apostol levele a Galatákhöz) (1913); Commentary on the Gospel of John (János evangéliumának magyarázata) (1914); Hungarian Students in England (Magyar diákok Angliában) (1914), and Introduction to the New Testament (Újszövetségi bevezetés). He was one of the renowned theologians of the Reformed Church in the first half of 20th century. – B: 0932, T: 7103.

Ponori Thewrewk, Aurél (1) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 13 February 1842 - Geneva, 2 September 1912) – Anthropologist and physician. He was a descendant of the Thewrewk family of Ponor in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Vienna in 1866. From 1867 to 1869 he was a demonstrator in the Physiology Department of the Medical School of the University of Pest. From 1869 he was Professor of Physiology at the Medical-Surgical College of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and between 1869 and 1872 Professor of Physiology there. When this College became incorporated into the University of Kolozsvár, he continued as a professor from 1872 to 1881. For a while, during 1880, he carried out research in P. Broca's Institute in Paris. He studied the anthropological material at the Paris World Fair in 1878, and this made him resolve to devote his life to the anthropological study of Hungarians. Between 1881 and 1912 he was professor in the newly established Anthropology Department within the Faculty of Arts of Budapest University, and Director of the Institute of Anthropology there. Ponori Thewrewk was a keen follower of Darwinism and, together with Géza Entz, translated into Hungarian Charles Darwin's famous work entitled On the Origin of the Species. At his own expense he launched the Anthropological Fascicules (Anthropológiai Füzetek) in 1882; in its first and only issue he published 16 studies of his own. The center of his research was the anthropological nature of the Magyars at the time of their entry into the Carpathian Basin (A.D. 896), and he also studied the exhumed skeletons of historic individuals on whom he performed anthropological measurements: Reigning Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II, Count Imre Thököly, and King Béla III; their identities were thereby confirmed. He was well known for the construction of an instrument called a Craniometer for measuring aspects of the human skull. The Anthropological Museum, which he established at the University of Budapest, became one of the most famous in Europe. In his study series, Über den Yezoer Ainoschädel (1888-1900), he demonstrated his craniometric methods with practical examples. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1892). As an anthropologist, he became world-famous. His other works include Über den Bau der Nervenfasern (1872); Über ein Universal-kraniometer (1888); Grundzüge einer systematischen Kraniometrie (1890), and Report on the Physical Remains of King Béla III and his Queen (Jelentés III-ik Béla király és neje testereklyéiről) (1894). – B: 0883, 1068, 1730, T: 7660, 7456.→Ponori Thewrewk, Aurél (2); Craniometer; Lentz, Géza; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Thököly, Count Imre; Béla III, King.

Ponori Thewrewk, Aurél (2) (Budapest, 2 May 1921 - ) – Astronomer. He came from an intellectual family. His higher studies were at the University of Budapest, where he obtained a B.Sc. Degree in Education (1939-1944). From 1943 to 1948 he worked as an honorary junior clerk at the Institute of Astronomy of the University. Between 1947 and 1951 he was a teacher at a technical school. From 1951 to 1961 he was a research engineer at the Geophysical Measuring Equipment Works (Geofizikai Mérőműszerek Gyára), Budapest. He worked as Editor for the Táncsics Publishing House (Táncsics könyvkiadó) (1961-1975), Budapest. From 1963 to 1975 he was Deputy Director of the Urania Observatory, and between 1975 and 1981 he was its Director. In 1981 he retired, but he lectured on History of Astronomy at the University of Budapest from 1983 to 1988, and from 1994 to 1997. Between 1989 and 2000 he was President of the Hungarian Astronomical Society. His field of research is History of Astronomy and Chronology of Astronomy. His works include ca. 200 articles and books, such as Biblical Wonders (Bibliai csodák) (1965); Modern Astronomical World View, vols. i,ii,iii (Modern csillagászati világkép, I,II,III), co-author (1969, 1972, 1975); History of Astronomy (Csillagászatörténet), Stars in the Bible (Csillagok a Bibliában) (1993). and Divina Astronomia... (2001). He was awarded the György Kulin Memorial Medal (2002) – B: 1306, 1031, T: 7103.→Ponori Thewrewk, Aurél (1); Kulin, György; Astronomy in Hungary.

Poór, Imre (Emeric) (Dunaföldvár, 13 October 1823 - Budapest, 20 August 1897) – Physician and dermatologist. At first, he became a Piarist monk and teacher. During the 1848-1849 War of Independence against Habsburg rule, he joined the Hungarian national army as a “Honvéd” (defender of the motherland), and he saw the war through. After the war, he left the Piarist Order. In 1855 he obtained a Medical Degree from the University of Pest. From 1857 he was a demonstrator in the Medical Clinic of Pest; from 1857 to 1859 co-Editor for the journal Medical Weekly (Orvosi Hetilap) and, in 1859 he became an honorary lecturer in Dermatology. He organized the Dermatological Division of the Rókus Hospital, Budapest, also becoming its Chief Physician. In 1860 he founded the journal, Medical Therapy (Gyógyászat). He was a notable dermatologist, Editor for a technical dictionary, and the organizer of the movement to safeguard the interests of the medical profession. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1864). His works include Addenda to the Medical Practicability of Nature (Adatok a természet orvosi célszerűségéhez) (1865) and The Natural System of Skin Diseases (A bőrbetegségek természetes rendszere) (1869). – B: 1730, 0883, 0907, T: 7456.

Popper, Péter (Budapest, 19 November 1933 - Budapest, 16 April 2010) – Psychologist and writer. He studied Philosophy, Logic and Psychology at the University of Budapest (1952-1957), and worked as a child psychologist at various clinics. He became a professor at the Medical School of the University of Szeged (1984-1992). He was a guest professor of the Bar-Ilan University, Israel from 1992 to 1994. Then he was a counselor of the Prime Minister and, from 1994 to 1996 he taught at the University, the Academy of Dramatic Art, and at the Rabbi Training School in Budapest. Between 1974 and 1990 he was Editor-in-Chief of the Psychological Review (Pszichológiai Szemle), and participated in many psychology-related committees. He authored 26 books, some of them are: Formation of the Criminal Personality Disturbance (A kriminális személyiségzavar kialakulása) (1970); Book of the Inner Ways (A belső utak könyve) (1981); Trainig der Gefühle (1989); Physicians of the Future (A jövő orvosai), editor (1990); Is it Painful to Die? (Fájdalmas meghalni?) (1999); Some Important Questions on the Psychology of Religion (A valláspszichológa néhány fontos kérdéséről) (2001) and Pelony or the Testament of Pilate (Peloni avagy Pilátus testamentuma), novel (1997). He is one the leading psychologists in Hungary. – B: 0874, 0878, T: 7103.

Pór, Bertalan (Bartholomew) (Bábaszék, now Babiná, Slovakia, 4 November 1880 - Budapest, 29 August 1964) – Painter. He studied under the direction of László (Ladislav) Gyulay at the School of Industrial Design, and went to Munich for a year. He received the Harkányi Prize in 1901 for his self-portrait. He studied in Paris at the Julian Academy from 1901 to 1903, and became a popular portraitist. Returning home after his studies in Italy, he became a member of the group of “The Eight”, founded in 1910, and exhibited continuously at the Art Gallery of Budapest (Műcsarnok). His work can be categorized as formalistic. In 1911 he painted an 11-meter-long fresco on the facade of the Folk Opera building and worked with mosaics. After the collapse of the Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919, he moved to Czechoslovakia, and made a living by painting portraits, landscapes and animals. Pór was in the Soviet Union from 1936 to 1938, then in Paris, where the Germans arrested him in 1941. After regaining his freedom, he supported the anti-German effort with his posters. In 1948 he returned to Budapest and taught at the Academy of Fine Arts. His paintings include Sermon on the Mount (Hegyi beszéd) (1911); Bull (Bika) (1948); Self-portrait (Önarckép) (1902, 1953), and Family (Család) (1909). He made posters, such as Proletariat of the World, Unite! (Világproletárjai egyesüljete!) (1919). He also illustrated books, and had several exhibitions, including Berlin (1913), Vienna (1914), UNESCO (1946) and Paris (1955). Portugal, Hungarians in – Most of the Hungarian emigrés settled in Portugal during, or following World War II. Their number was estimated to be between 80 to 100 families. Previously almost all of them were connected in some way to former Hungarian Regent Miklós Horthy (1920-1944) and his family, who, after the war, were living in Estoril, Portugal. Elek Újpeéry, the last Hungarian Royal chargé d'affaires, worked and lived there. At the beginning of the 1930s, an engineer Andor Buda was to build up the Portuguese chemical industry. The main organizer of meetings and social functions was Baron Frigyes (Frederick) Villani. The periodical entitled Hungarian Clerical Unity (Magyar Papi Egység) put the number of Hungarians in Portugal at 125 in its journal's 18/1961 edition. In 1969 the Hungarian Office of Statistics in Budapest did not mention Hungarians in Portugal. – B: 1020, T: 3240.→Horthy, Miklós.

Pósa, Lajos (Louis) (Nemesradnót, now Radnovce Slovakia, 9 April 1850 - Budapest, 9 July 1914) – Poet, writer and journalist. He attended High School in Rimaszombat (now Rimavská Sobota, Slovakia), and Sárospatak. He acquired a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest. He was a teacher in 1875 and 1876, then a contributor to the journals, Mad Miska (Bolond Miska); the Inspector (Ellenőr); the National Journal (Nemzeti Hírlap), and the Szeged Diary (Szegedi Napló). He was Editor of My Newspaper (Én Újságom), a popular youth magazine from 1889. His selected writings are Poems (Költemények) (1878); 140 Songs (140 Dal) (1887); Soaring Song (Száll az ének) (1899, 1904, 1908); Works of Lajos Pósa vols. i-v (Pósa Lajos munkái I-V) (1905-1907); Children's Poems of Lajos Pósa (Pósa Lajos gyermekversei) (1914); Patriotic Poems (Hazafias versek) (1926), and The Tulip Chest (A tulipántos láda), edited by. Zs. Vida (1981). Many of his poems were set to music by Pista Dankó, Géza Lányi and Béla Bartók. – B: 0877, 0883, 1257, T: 7103.→Dankó, Pista, Lányi, Viktor Géza; Bartók, Béla.

Pósta, Béla (Kecskemét, 22 August 1862 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 16 April 1919) – Archeologist and expert in heraldry. First, he read Law at the University of Budapest and later studied Arts there. In 1885 he was employed by the Hungarian National Museum. In 1897 he took part in the Asiatic expedition of Count Jenő (Eugene) Zichy. From 1899 he was Professor of Archeology at the University of Kolozsvár, and was in charge of the Medal Cabinet and Antiquary Department of the Transylvanian (Erdélyi) Museum. In course of his study trips, he traveled throughout Europe and participated in several archeological congresses. He was the author of numerous heraldic, numismatic and archeological articles. He launched and edited the journal, Papers from the Medal and Archeological Collection of the Transylvania Museum (Dolgozatok az Erdélyi Múzeum Érem és Régiségtárából). His works include Numismatic Proofs for the History of Hungary (Érmészeti bizonyítékok Magyarország történetéhez) (1886), and Archeological Studies in Russia (Régészeti tanulmányok orosz földön) (1905). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Zichy, Count Jenő.

Pósta, Sándor (Alexander) (Pánd, 25 November 1888 - Budapest, 4 November 1952) – Fencer, dentist. He was a student of Santelli Italo, later László (Ladislás) Gerentsér. In the 1924 Olympic Games he was individual Olympic Champion in sword-fencing, where he was a member of the 2nd placement sword-fencing team, as well as 3rd placement rapier team. As a member of the Athletic Football Club (MAFC) of Budapest Polytechnic, he was a 5-times selected rapier-swordsman, and a 4.times selected swordsman. Apart from his work as a dentist, he was engaged in writing for sports newspapers and drawing sports-caricatures. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Postage Stamp – When, on 1 July 1850, the Austrian (Habsburg) Postal Law was extended to the area of the historic Kingdom of Hungary, to acknowledge and prove that the sending of letters and newspapers had been “post-paid”, the use of the so-called “letter-mark”, i.e. stamp, was introduced and the age of stamps began worldwide. From that day onward every Post Office started delivering money and parcels as well. From 1859 the new express delivery came into operation. At that time, a German-Austrian-Hungarian Postal Union was formed, which introduced uniform handling and uniform postal rates and tariffs. – B: 1230, 0899, T: 7456.

Poszler, György (George) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 12 June 1931 - ) – Esthete, literary historian. He attended the Piarist High School in Kolozsvár and in 1945, moved to Budapest, where he completed his studies, graduating in 1949. He studied History at the University of Budapest, and acquired a B.A. Degree in Education in 1953. He taught in the countryside for eleven years: at Mosonmagyaróvár and Szombathely. From 1964 to 1968 he was Department Head at the Public Education Institution (Népművelési Intézet) and between 1968 and 1972, was Deputy Department Head at the Ministry of Culture (Művelődésügyi Minisztérium). In 1972 he became Lecturer in Esthetics at the University of Budapest and concurrently at the Academy of Dramatic Art. In both institutes, he became a professor in 1983, and taught and researched Esthetics, Literary Theory and Literary History at the Academy. From 1982 to 1987 he was Deputy Rector at the University. He wrote a great number of articles and studies and more than a dozen books, among them The Beginning of Antal Szerb's Career (Szerb Antal pályakezése) (1965); The Crossroads of the Novel... (A regény választójai...) textbook (1981); Principles, Ideas, Nostalgias (Eszmék eszmények, nosztalgiák) (1989); Encounters, Essays (Találkozások, esszék) (1992), and Light-signs, Essays (Fényjelek, esszék) (1995). He is member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding in 1990, ordinary in 1995). He is the recipient of a number of awards, including the János Apáczai Csere Prize (1992), the Life Achievement Prize of the Soros Foundation (1996), the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1997), and the Széchenyi Prize (1998). – B: 1257, 0878, 1774, T: 7103.

Póthe, István (Stephen) (Alsónyárasd, now Dolni Náražd, Slovakia, 27 June 1947 - ) – Actor. He completed the Agricultural Technical High School of Dunaszerdahely (now Dunajská Streda, Slovakia) (1962-1966). From 1966 to 1969 he worked in factories in Nagymegyér (now Vel'ký Meder, Slovakia), while attending classes at the School of Arts of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). From 1969 to 2007 he was an actor in the Hungarian Regional Theater (Magyar Területi Színház), and in its successor, the Jókai Theater of Komárom (Komáromi Jókai Színház), Rév-Komárom (now Komárno, Slovakia) and, from 1976 to 1980, and 1981 to 1986 he was President of that theater. His main roles include Jenő Baradlay in Mór Jókai-Koppány' Sons of the Stone Hearted Man (A kőszivű ember fiai) (1975); Rodrigo in W. Shakespeare's Othello (1975), and Etienne in E. M. Labiche's An Italian Straw Hat (Un Chapeau de paille d'Italie, Szalmakalap) (1990). From 1973 on, he had regular radio-play roles in the Hungarian broadcast of Radio Pozsony. His film roles include Baker (Pék) in T. Rényi's At the Beginning of Time (Idők kezdetén); Refugee (Menekült) in Medved's Catacombs (Katakombák). He was Editor for his Literary Broadcast entitled: Not everything that shines is Humour (Nem minden humor, ami fénylik) (1986). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Potsdam Conference – The Conference between the leaders of the three Allied Powers:

Sir Winston Churchill, Clement Attlee, Prime Minister of England, the American President, Harry S. Truman, and Soviet leader Joseph V Stalin, held from 17 July to 2 August 1945, in the hunting lodge of Cecilienhof in Potsdam, near Berlin. The decisions made at the Conference included the demilitarization of Germany, the punishment of war criminals, the liquidation of German military industries, the dissolution of German monopolies, the extent of war indemnities, the delineation of the western borders of Poland, the re-settlement of the German population of Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary, and the cession of the city of Königsberg and its surrounding areas to the Soviet Union. The Conference rejected the Czechoslovakian demand for the deportation of Hungarians from Czechoslovakia. To carry out its decisions, including the preparation of the Peace Treaties with Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria, Finland and Romania, the Conference set up the Allied Control Commission and the Council of Foreign Ministers. The Potsdam Agreement reached at the conference was signed by President Truman of the United States, Prime Minister Attlee of England, and Stalin, the President of the Soviet Council of Ministers.

The deportation of some 3 million Germans, mainly from the Sudetenland of Czechoslovakia, was accompanied by grave cruelties. In Hungary and Poland it was done in a rather orderly manner. In total, about 14 million Germans were forcibly resettled from other Eastern European countries into German territories. The Hungarian government's Order No. 12,330/1945, dated 29 December 1945, set the stage for the removal of 136,000 ethnic Germans from Hungary. Slovakia expelled some 100,000 Hungarians, and sent 60,000 to forced labor in Czech territory. The bulk of Hungarian population in Czechoslovakia was designated as "collective war criminals" and stripped from properties and basic human rights by the inhuman "Benes Decrees" in 1945. – B: 1230, 1153, 1020, T: 7665. → Benes Decrees; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Pottery – Between 1015 and 1031, Gerencsér-puszta (the Plain of Gerencsér) was donated by King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038) to the Greek Nuns of Veszprém Valley, which was known by the surrounding villages as a community of potters. Many objects were found attesting to pottery, partly from the graves and partly from the settlements: pot-shaped ceramics found in graves, kettles and shards of cauldrons made of clay. Hungarian pottery flourished between the 17th and 19th centuries with the establishment of guilds. The potters' productivity and social interests in the agricultural towns and cities were protected by guilds. Among the earliest potter guilds, the one in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) was founded in 1512; in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), in 1569; in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) in 1574, and almost at the same time in Dés (now Dej, in Romania). In Transdanubia (Dunántúl), and on the Great Plain (Nagyalföld) the guilds could be founded only after the Turkish rule (1699 on). The statistics of 1890 show that 7000 potters made annually 30-40 million pieces of crockery. At that time there were several thousand settlements where potters plied their trade and there were villages where almost all the people were potters. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 7680.

Pozsgay, Imre (Emeric) (Kóny, 26 November 1933 -) – Politician. After graduating from the Lenin Institute in Budapest with a Degree in English, he started his political career at the Bács-Kiskun County Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Worker's Party (MSZMP). He was posted to Budapest and started working as a deputy administrative officer for the Central Committee of the Party in 1970. In 1975 he was promoted to Deputy Minister and then, in 1976, to Minister of Culture. In 1980 he became Minister of Education. Pozsgay held this office for only two years, mostly because of disagreements with János (John) Kádár, the Party Leader, and György Aczél, the Party's Chief Ideologist. Between 1982 and 1988 he worked as the Chairman of the Patriotic People's Front (Hazafias Népfront), an umbrella formation representing organizations and institutions not formally affiliated with the MSZMP. It was his radical report, Turning Point and Reform, which started the debate that led to political changes in 1989. He was a key player in Hungary's path to democracy. After Kádár was removed from his office in 1988, Pozsgay's career accelerated, and he was appointed Minister of State. In this capacity he oversaw the political and legal work that, by the spring of 1990, led to the political transformation of Hungary from a Communist model 'people's democracy' to a Western-style parliamentary democracy. After the MSZMP reconstituted itself into the Hungarian Socialist Party (Magyar Szocialista Párt – MSZP) in October 1989, he became its Deputy President. However, he soon left the MSZP and, in 1991, formed the National Democratic Alliance (Nemzeti Demokratikus Szövetség), which he headed until it was dissolved in 1996. Pozsgay was also a Member of Parliament between 1983 and 1994. In 1995 and 1996, he was the President of the Movement for Hungarian Unity (Magyar Egységért Mozgalom). Between 1996 and 2000 he was a Presidium Member of the World Federation of Hungarians (Magyarok Világszövetsége), and Rector of the St László Academy (1995-2000). Since 1991 he has been Professor of Political Science at the University of Debrecen. He is the author of many articles and books, among them the periodicals Socialist Society and Humanism, and was Deputy Editor-in-Chief for the Society Review (Társadalmi Szemle) (1975-1976). His other works include Socialist Society and Humanism (Szocialista Társadalom és Humanizmus) (1978); Democracy and Culture (Demokrácia és Kultúra) (1980); Questions of October (Októberi kérdések) (1988); After One Year, Before Election (Egy év után, választás előtt) (1988), and Political Career in the Party-State and in the System-Change (Politikus pálya a pártállamban és a rendszer váltásban) (1998). – B: 1110, 1014, 1061, 0873, T: 7103. → Patriotic People's Front; Kádár, János; Aczél, György.

Pozsony (German: Pressburg; Slovakian: Bratislava) – Capital of Northern Hungary or Upland (Felvidék) of Historic Hungary of the Carpathian Basin, now capital of the newly established state of Slovakia (1993). It is situated at the southern foot of the Little Carpathian Range, on the left bank of the Danube, 130-200 m above sea level. The history of the town started in the 9th century, when it was the stronghold of the Moravians. During the time of the ingress of the Magyars into the Carpathian Basin, it fell to the Magyars in 892, and it was in the area of this town that the Magyar forces defeated the Bavarians in 907. Emperor Henry III besieged it in vain. In 1291, King András III gave the town autonomy. After the Hungarian defeat at Mohács in 1526 by the Turks, Pozsony came under Habsburg domination as part of Royal Hungary. The Holy Crown was kept in the Castle of Pozsony between 1552 and 1784. It became the Capital of the Royal part of Hungary as the coronation town between 1563 and 1830, while the central part of Hungary was under Ottoman Turkish occupation, and Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) was an independent Hungarian principality. The first Hungarian daily paper Magyar News (Magyar Hírmondó) appeared in Pozsony in 1780. The Treaty of Pozsony was signed with Emperor Napoleon I on 26 December 1805. The castle and part of the town were burned down in 1811. The New Laws of 1848 were sanctioned here by Emperor and King Ferdinand V on 11 April 1848. Until 1919, it was a royal free borough. Pozsony is an industrial, commercial, political and cultural center. It has manufacturers of machinery, chemicals, electrical equipment and textiles. It has petroleum refineries as well and it is a leading Danube port. It is the meeting point of three ethnic groups: Hungarian, Austrian-German and Slovak. Its population was 65,867 in 1901 (33,202 German, 20,102 Magyars and 10,715 Slovaks); 142,520 in 1930; 381,000 in 1981, and 428,672 in 2001 (391,762 Slovaks, 16,451 Magyars, 7,972 Czechs, 1200 Germans, 461 Ruthenians, 452 Ukrainians and 417 Gypsies). On the Castle Hill (Várhegy), at 85m are the ruins of the castle, built in its present form during the reign of Empress Maria Theresa. East of it stretches the Old Town, originally bounded by a wall (only some remnants of it still exists), from where the suburbs radiate in all directions. The Old Town is very rich in distinguished buildings of Romanesque, Gothic, Renaissance, Baroque and Neo-Classical styles. The many notable buildings include the Town Hall, consisting of three parts - its oldest part has been in existence ever since 1288; the middle part with a Gothic tower dating from 1387, and the Apponyi family's Rococo palace, added to it in 1867; the building is now the archive and a museum for Pozsony. The municipal Mayor's office complex has been housed in the Primate's Renaissance palace since 1903. In front of the old town hall is the Renaissance Roland Fountain of 1572. The reform diets of 1753 were held in the Parliament Building. Cardinal Péter Pázmány (1570-1637) had a palace built for the Jesuits in 1626, which later became the Academy of Jurisprudence and, in 1914, it was taken over by the Erzsébet (Elizabeth) University of Pozsony, established in 1914. In 1923, the University was transferred from Pozsony to Pécs, after the 1920 Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon. Its buildings in Pozsony became the home of the Slovakian University. It was in the Royal Residence of the 15th century, reconstructed in the 18th century, that the 9-year-old Ferenc (Franz) Liszt gave a recital in 1820. The building of the Royal Hungarian Mint was originally the University, established by King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490). The crypt of Cardinal Esterházy's mausoleum holds the mortal remains of Cardinal Péter Pázmány and other church and lay dignitaries. The churches of Pozsony include the Gothic St. Martin Church of the 13th century, which acted as the Hungarian coronation cathedral between 1563 and 1830; the Holy Trinity Church (1672-1728), the Capuchins Church (1708-1718), and the Elizabeth Nuns Church (in existence since 1420, rebuilt in 1744,). Pozsony became increasingly Hungarian ethnically during the Hungarian era; but this trend was reversed when it came under Czechoslovak rule in 1920. By the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon of 1920 the town was ceded to the newly created state of Czechoslovakia; in 1939 to the independent Slovakia, and again to Slovakia in 1993. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1647, 1789, 1799, 1816, 7456; T: 7456.→Pozsony, Battle of; Pozsony, Szent Márton Cathedral; Pozsony Yearbooks; Liszt, Ferenc.

Pozsony, Battle of (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia since 1920) – The decisive Battle of Pozsony was fought between Louis the Child (Gyermek Lajos) (893-911), the last true Carolingian ruler, the King of East Francia (Germany), and Reigning Prince Árpád, ruler of the Magyars, on 3-7 July 907. Louis's aim was to destroy the Magyars (decretum...Ugros eliminanda esse). This was written even on the battle flags of a huge army assembled and led against Hungary. According to the chronicles, the united Bavarian and Frankish army lost 35,000 men, among them the commanding General Ditmar, two bishops, three abbots, ten counts, most of the navy and supplies. Three sons of Prince Árpád also fell in the battle; even Árpád was wounded and died after the battle. However, their sacrifice was not in vain because, for a hundred years the German army did not even attempt to enter Hungarian territory. Neither Slavs nor Germans forgot this gigantic battle. If Ditmar had prevailed, the Slavs of the North and the South could have been united, or the territory of Hungary could have been part of the German empire. – B: 1285, 1031, T: 7103.→Pozsony; Pozsony, Szent Márton Cathedral; Pozsony Yearbooks; Zolta.

Pozsony Codex (from 1520) (Pozsony now Bratislava, Slovakia) – The only Codex of Hungary extant in the form of a copy. The original, ever since its copy was made in 1837, was lost without a trace. This copy could only be regarded approximately accurate and it is held in the manuscript archive of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest. According to some, the book is a duodecimo paper codex, while others regard it as octavo on basis of the facsimiles. The Codex was written by three hands. Among the writers, only the first writer's name is known: he called himself Scribe Michael. The date of his writing (1520) is noted in two places. The Codex contains prayers and some Gospel verses used for the main feasts. It appears to be a compilation from a number of sources and its content largely agrees with that of the Gyöngyös and Thewrewk Codices. It was prepared for nuns. The original belonged to the library of the Franciscan monastery of Pozsony (Pressburg, now Bratislava, Slovakia). – B: 0942, T: 7456.→Codex Literature.

Pozsony, Ferenc (Francis) (Zabola, now Zabăla, Romania, 16 April 1955 - ) – Ethnographer. He studied Hungarian Linguistics and Literature at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), completing his courses in 1981. He obtained a Ph.D. in Philology in 1997. He was a high school teacher in Kézdivásárhely (now Targu Secuesc, Romania), from 1981 to 1990. From 1990 he worked as lecturer; from 1998 as a reader in Hungarian Language and Culture at the University of Kolozsvár. His works include On the Shores of Dream-water. Hungarian Folk Ballads from the Black-Ügy River Area (Álomvíz partján. Fekete-ügyvidéki magyar népballadák) (1984) and On the Shores of the River Seret. Moldvan Csángó Folk Poetry (Szeret vize partján. Moldvai csángómagyar népköltészet) (1995). He has been an honorary member of the Hungarian Ethnographical Society since 1998. He was awarded the János Jankó Prize (1989). – B: 1036, T: 7456.→Pragmatic Sanction; Károly III, King; Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen.

Pozsony, Szent Márton Cathedral (St.Martin) (Now Bratislava, Slovakia) – This Gothic church is the most significant work of art in Pozsony. Originally there was another church in the same place, where the cathedral now stands. It was the St Savior Church, which was built in 1221, and destroyed during the war between the Hungarians and the Czech King Ottokar II (c. 1233 - 26 August 1278). The new church was erected in early 1300. It was designed as a three-aisled Gothic basilica. All three aisles have the same height. The tower was used as a watchtower as well, because the church building was situated beside the trench. It had cannons and was used as a fortress until 1557. Later, the church walls and the tower lost their significance as a fortress, and the church received a new sanctuary, a chapel on the side, and a front hall. Because the construction lasted for two centuries, it shows some Renaissance style as well. Sculptor György Rafael Dommer created many of the Baroque-style statues for the church. He worked in the city for ten years. One of the masterpieces of the church is the statue of St Márton (St. Martin), which is made of lead and represents the saint in a hussar outfit, on horseback.

It dates from 1734-1735. Originally, the statue was at the main altar, but the Czechs removed it in 1919. The church received its present-day form in 1895.

The Neo-Gothic tower is 85 m high and, at the top, there is a 300-kg golden crown to commemorate the fact, that between 1563 and 1830, Hungarian Kings and Queens were crowned in the church. The names of 11 kings and 8 queens are displayed on a marble wall on the left side of the sanctuary. During the Turkish occupation, Pozsony was the capital city of Hungary. There is a bronze baptismal font from 1403, and a holy water container from 1517. The relic of St Martin of Tours is above the main altar in a silver coffin. In the undercroft there are burial places of bishops, the Pálffy and the Pázmány families, and Count István Illésházi, who was a founding member of the Hungarian Academy of Science, as well as Cardinals: Ágost Keresztély, György Lippay, Imre Losy and Péter Pázmány. There are the sarcophagi of Count Miklós Pálffy, who was a military commander during the Turkish War, and his son, Count János Pálffy, Palatine of Hungary. – B: 1144, 1020, T: 7663.→Pozsony; Pozsony, Battle of; Pozsony Yearbooks; Pázmány, Péter; Illésházy, Count István (1,2); Pálffy, Count János.

Pozsony Yearbooks (Annales Posonienses, Pozsonyi Évkönyvek) – The fourth part of the Pray Codex contains the oldest annals, the Pozsony Yearbooks. This is the oldest Hungarian historical work, which records the events between 997 and 1203. – B: 1230, 1153, T: 7659.→Pray Codex; Codex Literature.

Prágay, János (John) (? – Cuba, 1851) – Hungarian Honvéd military officer, and a rebel officer in Cuba. After the completion of his studies, he worked as an officer of the Court Chancellery of Vienna. In 1849, during the Revolution and War of Independence, he went to Tokaj to join General György (George) Klapka's camp, and stayed with him right to the capitulation of Komárom, as his adjutant with the rank of lieutenant colonel. After the fall of the War of Independence, he emigrated and, late in 1849, sailed from London to the USA, and settled in New York, where he was engaged as a writer in English. Here he became acquainted with the Venezuelan-borne Cuban revolutionary General Narcise Lopez, who lived in exile in New York. Prágay followed General Lopez to Cuba, but their little troop suffered defeat against the Spaniards. After cruel torturing, Lopez was executed. Seeing this, the wounded Prágay shot himself. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Klapka, György; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Pragmatic Sanction (Pragmatica Sanctio of Emperor Charles VI, King Károly III, 1711-1740) – Edict, issued by the last German male member of the House of Habsburg regulating the succession to his hereditary lands. It was read on 19 April 1713 before the ministers and councilors, but was temporarily kept secret. The Law ordained that all the Austrian hereditary lands should always remain united, and that in the absence of male descendants they should pass to the daughters that might be born to the Emperor; and not until their descendants died out should the right of succession revert to the daughters of his brother, Emperor Joseph I (1705-1711), and to their male and female descendants. The Pragmatic Sanction was accepted by the estates of the Austrian lands in 1720; then, in the course of time, it was also recognized and guaranteed by the Powers of Europe, so that, after the death of Charles VI, his daughter, Maria Theresa could succeed. – B & T: 1173.→Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen.

Pray Codex – Manuscripts from the mid 12th to early 13th centuries on 172 folios of parchment. It was found by the priest and librarian György (George) Pray, at the University Library of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia), at the end of 18th century. The manuscript bears the name of György (George) Pray (1723-1801). The Codex contains the Funeral Oration and Prayer (Halotti beszéd és ima), the first known continuous prose text in Hungarian. The 32-line funeral oration is a free Hungarian translation of the Latin sermon found in the volume. The Prayer is faithful to the Latin text. The Codex contains, among others, a missal, an Easter mystery play, songs with musical notations, synodic laws from the time of King Kálmán (Coloman, 1095-1116), and the oldest Hungarian annals known as the Pozsony Yearbook. The latter lists the Hungarian Kings up to 1210. A tinted ink drawing of the Passion makes this relic more valuable. – B: 1796, T: 7103.→Funeral Oration and Prayer; Pray, György; Pozsony Yearbook; Codex Literature.

Pray, György S.J. (George) (praji) (Érsekújvár, now Nové Zámky, Slovakia, 11 June 1723 - Pest, 23 September 1801) – Abbot Canon, historian. He entered the Jesuit Order in 1740 and studied at the Order's College in Vienna. In 1742 he studied Philosophy in Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). Following this he was a teacher in various towns. After his ordination into the priesthood in 1754, he taught at the Teresianum in Vienna, then in the towns of Győr, Nagyszombat and, finally, in Buda. In 1773, when the Order was suppressed, he became a Parish Priest in the Diocese of Esztergom. This was when Queen Maria Theresa (1740-1780) appointed him as Historian of Hungary. In 1777, he became the librarian of the University Library, which was transferred from Nagyszombat to Budapest.

He conducted a broad range of activities in the science of History. He was the first who, for scientific purposes, examined the archives of the Treasury, which until then, had been kept behind closed doors. While immersed in researching the older period of Hungarian history, he was the first to draw attention to one of the oldest of Hungarian linguistic records, the Funeral Oration and Prayer (Halotti beszéd és könyörgés). His main work is the *Annales Hunnorum, Avarorum et Hungarorum...*In it, he promoted the Hun-Avar-Hungarian continuity theory, applying systematic methodology. It is a synthesis of Hungarian History and preceding events from the Huns to 1564, which was published in Vienna in 1761. Representing the first professional summary of Hungarian history, his work entitled: Annales regum Hungariae I-IV, was also published in Vienna between 1763 and 1770. In the Codex, later named after him, he was the first to publish a section of the Funeral Oration and the Margit Legend. His manuscripts are kept in the University Library of Budapest. – B: 0883, 1257, 1153, T: 7659.→Pray Codex; Mária Terézia,

Prazsmár Fortified Church (now Prejmer, Romania) – This architectural rarity is the largest fortified church in Transylvania. Standing on the main square of Prazsmár, the building of the church dates back to the 13th century and it was fortified in the 15th century. The east-facing church was built in a Gothic style and it has an almost circular ground plan. The fortifications included a moat with a drawbridge and complete double walls, a large bastion incorporating the gate and a system of corridors under the bastion. At the middle of the underground corridor a grated iron door provided added protection. The outer wall was destroyed; only the foundation remained, but the inner 12 m high wall is still standing. The moat and the drawbridge disappeared during the centuries. In the 19th century, a corridor, decorated with columns was built, leading to the church. A total of 275 chambers were constructed against the protected face of the inner wall to provide shelter for the villagers during sieges. These are still in good condition. During the renovation of the fortress church in 1960-1970, architectural relics of different ages were unearthed. – B: 1337, 1020, T: 7663.

Pre-Border Land (gyepűelve) – After 896, when the Magyar settlement of the Carpathian Basin was completed, an uninhabited and impassable zone was established along the western border, inside the legal limit, for defensive purposes. That was called the gyepű (marchland). The line was drawn from Moson through Kapuvár and Sárvár, up to Vasvár. The western limit of the gyepű, which was fortified and crossing was permitted only at designated points, was the actual border of the country. Certain clans or tribes were settled nearby to maintain and defend the gyepű. Those were the tribes, which had recently joined the Magyars, like the Khabars, Pechenegs and Szeklers. That border zone was patrolled and the entrance gates were securely guarded by the gate guards. The border guards used their own weapons and sustained themselves without pay, but they received all the privileges of the other free guards delegated by the king.

This line of defense, during the 12th century, was slowly moved to the west. In the gyepű region, some forts were erected. In front of the gyepű on the other side of the limit was also an uninhabited strip of land, the so called gyepűelve. This way, Hungary in the middle ages had a double-guarded border. In the 11th century, right behind the gyepű, a chain of earthen fortifications was erected with forts like Csákány, a Benedictine cloister, founded in 1157, which was transformed into a permanent fortification by King Béla III (1172-1196). Right after the Mongol invasion (1241-1242), a chain of stone forts became the backbone of Hungary's western defense system. The border guards continued their duty after that transformation, but their significance diminished with time. The gyepű system existed until the 14th century, when King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437), entrusted border defense to oligarch families. – B: 1134, 1231, 1798, T: 3233. → Gyepű; Borderland; Kabars; Pechenegs; Szekers.

Pre-Hungarians – Early Magyars, a large ethnic group, also called the “late Avars”. They moved into the Carpathian Basin between 670 and 680, as an early group of the Magyars (Hungarians) – a working hypothesis put forward by archeologist Gyula (Julius) László. On the basis of their belt-decorations, they are also called the griffin-tendril people. After their appearance in the Basin, the Avar settlements spread as far as the Little Hungarian Plain and the Vienna Basin in the west and Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in the east. The group appears to be of Asian origin, from the cis-Ural area, NW of the Aral Sea, speaking a now-extinct Turkic language. It is possible that one of their groups – the griffin-wearing Székelys (Szeklers), Várkonyis, and Tárkányis – came from the Maeotis (now Sea of Azov) region west of the Caspian Sea. It was there that they joined the tendril-wearing Onogurs and together they entered the Carpathian Basin, forming the late phase of the Avar rule. While they still abided in the Maeotis area, according to an ancient legend (in the Hungarian Chronicle or Gesta Hungarorum), their ancestral heroes Hunor and Magor (Magyar) had their abduction adventure with the two daughters of the Alan prince Dula, tracing the origin of the Magyars and Huns to the union of these two pairs. The last reference to an Avar Khagan by a contemporary Byzantine source is dated 677, marking the end of the hundred-year rule of the Avar Khanate in the Carpathian Basin and ushering in the age of the “Late Avars” (Early Magyars). The Avar presence in the Carpathian Basin lasted for more than three hundred years – B: 1230, 1068, 1647, T: 7456. → Avars; László, Gyula, Griffin-Tendril Group;

Pre-Scythians – Early Scythians, possibly of eastern origin, lived on the northern slopes of the Caucasus Mountains including the Kuban River flats and the adjoining Steppes of southern (European) Russia. They are considered to have consisted of a basic ethnic layer of Mongolian tribes, gradually mixed over the centuries with a superimposed series of Indo-Germanic tribes; who called themselves Skolots. They spoke an Indo-Iranian language, but had no system of writing. They were nomadic conquerors and skilled horsemen. In their early history, their economy was based on animal husbandry; they formed a variety of settlement types, without living in permanent houses, with characteristic burial habits and steppe art (famous for their goldsmith work), all unknown by the neighboring peoples in Europe and the cis-Ural area. Pressed by the westward drive of the Iranians in the 8th century BC (when they were attacked by the Huns, who were defeated by the Chinese), the Scythians or Scyths moved into southern Russia, leaving behind the Sakas. The Scyths, in turn, attacked the Cimmerians. In 516 BC Darius I., marched against the Scythians, but could not defeat them and ended with a humiliating Persian defeat. The Scythians survived the attack by Alexander the Great about 325 BC. In their early history, they did not reach the Carpathian Basin, only the outer, eastern foothills. At the end of their history, the Sarmatians drove the defeated Scythian remnants to the Danube delta and the Crimea. In the later phases of their history, from about 600 BC, they did move into, and settled on the Great Hungarian Plain and in Transylvania, and persisted there until the appearance of the Celts, with famous Scythian sites, containing richly decorated gold stags, excavated at Tápiószentmárton and Zöldhalompusztá. Recent excavations in the Altai Mountains, especially at the Pazyryk site, suggest that their origins could have been in western Siberia, before they migrated west into southern Russia in the early first millennium BC. Other archeologists insist that Pre-Scythians moved from south to north since Scythian tombs were found from Persia to Pazyryk, which is in the lower Siberian region, and from Ukraine to Hungary. At one stage in their history they could have reached the borders of China. – B: 1068, 1230, 1582, 1789, 1647, 1800, T: 3240, 7456.→Scythians; Huns, Pre-Hungarians; Pazyryk Scythian Graves, Russia.

Preis, Hugó (Ruma, now in Croatia, 21 September 1860 - Budapest, 5 July 1940) – Physician, bacteriologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1885. During 1890 and 1891 he carried out research in German, French and Belgian institutes. From 1885 to 1901 he worked in the Institute of Pathological Anatomy and Forensic Medicine at the University of Budapest. Between 1891 and 1906 he was Head of the Bacteriological Laboratory of the Veterinary College, where he was a professor from 1894 to 1895. Then, from 1895 to 1931, he worked at the University of Budapest, where he was Professor of Bacteriology, and from 1914 to 1931 also Professor of General Pathology and Therapy. He was the founder of Bacteriology in Hungary. On the authority of the Minister of Agriculture, he set up the Bacteriological Stations. During World War I, he was in charge of the production of vaccines against cholera and typhoid and later, also of diphtheria. He was the discoverer of the P-Nocard-bacterium, causing tuberculosis in sheep, similar to the pseudo-tuberculosis of rodents. His research was aimed at the infectious diseases of cattle and pigs, the investigation of bacteriophages and the connections caused by the disparate behavior of anthrax bacteria. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1912, ordinary 1923). He earned international recognition with his research work. His works include Bacteriology (1899);

On the Bubonic Plague (A pestisről) (1900); Die Bakteriophagie vornehmlich auf Grund eigener Untersuchungen (1925); Infection and Immunity (Infekció és immunitás) (1936), and Outline of General Pathology, (Az általános kórtan vázлата), co-author with I. Went and K. Sántha (1939). – B: 1068, 1160, 1730, 1780, T: 7456.

Press in Hungary – Serial publications, especially daily newspapers developed relatively late in Hungary, compared with Western European countries, since Hungarian feudal society was less interested in the events of distant countries. The first Hungarian newspapers were, in fact, prepared mainly for foreign readership to provide information about the country. The Mercurius Hungaricus of the Rákóczi War of Independence (1703-1711) also mainly strove to inform other countries; the Nova Posoniensia (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia), published by Mátyás (Matthew) Bél in 1721 and, after him, a few other papers endeavored to further the education of the young. Newspapers published for a wider readership at first appeared in German. The Hungarian Newspaper (Magyar Hírmondó), published in Pozsony in 1780, was the first newspaper in the Hungarian language. The Hungarian papers of the late 18th and early 19th century (Magyar Kurir; Hadi és más Nevezetes Történetek; Hazai és Külföldi Tudósítások, etc.) despite the limitations of Habsburg censorship, endeavored to give voice to political opinions and supported the burgeoning literary and language movements. These aspirations brought about the first Hungarian language periodicals, such as the Magyar Museum, Orpheus, Urania, etc. The reform efforts, beginning in the 1820s, required a press with more definite political viewpoints. Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi used the paper Present Age (Jelenkor) (1832), and its supplement Conversing (Társalkodó). For spreading his reform plans. Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, earlier on, could only publish his impressive papers in manuscript and duplicated form: Parliamentary Reports (Országgyűlési Tudósítások) and Municipal Records, 1836-1837 (Törvényhatósági Tudósítások, 1836-1837). Then, in 1841, the newspaper Pest Journal (Pesti Hírlap) was launched. In its editorials, Lajos Kossuth gave direction to the political struggle. It was during this period that the first important scientific journals appeared, such as the Scientific Collection (Tudományos Gyűjtemény); Physician's Magazine (Orvosi Tár), and Scientific Magazine (Tudománytár), as well as literary journals (Kritikai Lapok, Athenaeum and Figyelmező) and the so-called fashion magazines (Regélő, Pesti Divatlap, and Életképek). One objective of the political aspirations of the Reform Age was to attain freedom of the press.

Actually, the 1848-1849 War of Independence against the Habsburg rule began with the people of Pest rising on March 15th, 1848, declaring a free press. For the duration of the war the censorship-free press proved to be very helpful, such as Március Tizenötödike (March 15th); Workers' Paper (Munkások Újsága) and Gazette (Közlöny). During the years of oppression after the collapse of the war in the fight against Austrian absolutism, the papers Pest Diary (Pesti Napló); Hungarian Press (Magyar Sajtó) and Fatherland (Hon) played an important role.

After the Compromise of 1867, in the developing bourgeois press, many new papers and journals appeared. At the same time, numerous important scientific journals were started: Centuries (Századok); Hungarian Language (Magyar Nyelv); Budapest Review (Budapesti Szemle), and Hungarian Book Review (Magyar Könyvszemle). In the early 1900s, newspaper trusts were formed (the papers of the Légrády Brothers, Evening Papers, etc.). It was a significant event, when the paper of the progressive literary movements, West (Nyugat), was launched. During the First World War, censorship allowed only articles supporting the war effort. The more important newspapers in the inter-war years were the National Paper (Nemzeti Újság); New Generation (Új Nemzedék); Hungary (Magyarország); Independence (Függetlenség); New Hungarians (Új Magyarok); Pest Diary (Pesti Napló); Evening Messenger (Esti Kurir); World (Világ), and later on, the Hungarian Newspaper (Magyar Hírlap).

During the first years after World War II, there were still many bourgeois papers in existence, but, after 1948, with special press censorship introduced by the Communist regime, only those directed and inspected by the Hungarian Communist Party could exist, among which the leading role was played by the official paper of the party, Free People (Szabad Nép). After the defeat of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, the ruling Party's official paper People's Freedom (Népszabadság) came out, in addition to the Voice of the People (Népszava), the Party's central paper. In the 1980s, with the political opposition to the regime, illegal, clandestine papers, the Samisdats, became increasingly popular.

After the political system change, from 1989 on, many papers appeared again with bourgeois tendencies, beside some old papers. Upon the withdrawal of the Soviet Forces from Hungary, the press censorship ceased. In 1991 there were 36 dailies and 81 other papers and magazines. Among them, the old People's Freedom (Népszabadság); Hungarian Forum (Magyar Fórum); Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet); Hungarian Newspaper (Magyar Hírlap), and political, religious, as well as literary papers and periodicals, including the Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom); 168 Hours (168 óra); Weekly Response (Heti Válasz); the New Man (Új Ember); Reformed (Presbyterians') Paper (Reformátusok Lapja); Evangelical (Lutheran) Life (Evangélikus Élet); Vigilia; Confessio, and, in increasing numbers, electronic portals. Hungarians living in foreign states in the Carpathian Basin since the Peace Dictates of 1920 and 1947, also have their Hungarian newspapers and magazines, such as: Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) (Serbia); Krónika (Romania), and New Word (Új Szó) (Slovakia), to mention only a few. – B: 1051, 1343, 7103, T: 7456, 7617. → Bél, Mátyás; Kossuth, Lajos.

Press of the Hungarian Emigrés – The first Hungarian language paper of the Kossuth emigration was The Hungarian Exiles' Paper (A Magyar Száműzöttek Lapja). Since World War I, about 10,000 papers were founded abroad, of which about 2500 still existed in the late 1980s. About half of them were published regularly, the rest either occasionally or not systematically. Their types: weekly, monthly or bi-monthly. About 60-65% of them are published in printed form, published mainly by Hungarian Cultural Centers; the rest are on microfiches issued by Churches and other societies. Some are available on Internet websites. The number of copies is relatively small. Even the largest newspapers do not publish more than 15,000 copies. Their importance is quite significant in keeping alive 'national identity'. Their information is open and comprehensive. On Hungarian subjects, more than 15 Hungarian emigré publishers regularly review books. Most of the publishers' main business is newspapers and periodicals. Besides them, there are many smaller, occasional publishers, partly cooperating with the permanent ones or foreign publishers. The number of annually published books is about 240,000 volumes. Hungarian emigrants comprise approximately 90% of the purchasers of these books. In 1986, the total number of books dealing with Hungarian emigrant subjects reached 40-50 million volumes. Emigrés published 6 million volumes. With the passing years, this figure is declining with regard to Hungarian books, but increasing in English books with Hungarian subject matters. The Corvinus Library-Hungarian History (electronic) is active in this respect (www.corvinuslibrary.com website). – B: 1020, 7103, T: 7680.→Magyaródy, Szabolcs.

Presser, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 27 May 1948 - ) – Musician, composer and singer. He completed his music studies at the Béla Bartók Special School of Music. He became a member and leader of the Omega, later, the Locomotive GT ensembles. Since 1978 he has been Music Director of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház). He composed several hundred songs, wrote music for films and incidental music for the stage. His records appeared in Hungary and abroad. His stage works include Imaginary Report on an American Pop-festival (Képzelt riport egy amerikai popfesztiválról) (1973); Good Evening Summer, Good Evening Love (Jó estét nyár, jó estét szerelem) (1977); The Rehearsal (A próba) ballet (1982); Attic (Padlás) (1989), and St. István Boulevard 14 (Szent István Körút 14) (1998). He also produced a number of albums such as the Electromagnetic (1982); Only Songs (Csak dalok) (1994), and Angels and Men (Angyalok és emberek) (2000). In 1993 he was appointed, along with Judit Halász, “good-service” ambassador of UNICEF. Presser is an outstanding representative of Hungarian light-music. He is a recipient of the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1977), the Artist of Merit Award (1990), the Jenő Huszka Prize (1996), the Kossuth Prize (2003), and the Prima Primissima Award (2004). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.→Halász, Judit.

Preysz, Móric (Maurice) (Sopron, 23 July 1829 - Budapest, 24 March 1877) – Chemist. He studied chemistry at the University of Pest in 1844 and at the Polytechnic of Vienna in 1845. He worked in Vienna in 1853 as a demonstrator in chemistry under Professor Schrötter. In 1855 he was a chemistry teacher at the Real-High School of Pest. In 1861 he proved that the after-fermentation of wine may be prevented, if it is warmed in a closed vessel to 70- 80 C° and then hermetically sealed. His results were demonstrated at the general assembly of the Winegrowers’ Society of Hegyalja in 1862. By doing this, he anticipated Pasteur by four years, who in 1865 similarly demonstrated this procedure now known as “pasteurization”. He took active part in the introduction of gaslighting and the improvement of gas quality as a result of his investigations. By means of the results of his investigations on water-analysis and water supply begun in 1861, it was possible to build the water mains of Pest in 1868. He was Corresponding Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1863). His works include On the Prevention of After-fermentation of the Wine from Tokaj (Hegyalja) (A tokaji bor utóerjedésének meggátlásáról) (1865), and On the Important Content of Well-Waters of Pest (A pesti kútvizek lényeges tartalmáról), co-authored with László Aujeszky (1865). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Unbudding.

Prielle, Kornélia (Cornelia) (Priel, Antónia) (Máramarossziget, now Sighetu Marmăției, Romania, 1 June 1826 - Budapest, 25 February 1906) – Actress. She first appeared on stage in István (Stephen) Tóth’s company at Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania). Thereafter, she was contracted to Dávid Kilényi, and with him she traveled in the towns of Transylvania. The famous Ede (Edward) Szigligeti took notice of her at Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania), and had her contracted to the National Theater, Pest, for one season. This was followed by years of stage appearances in the countryside. During 1845-1846 she appeared in Debrecen (it was here that the great lyric poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi proposed to her); in 1846 in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); in 1847 in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), Székesfehérvár and Nagyszeben. In 1848-1849 she played on the stages of the Transylvanian towns, directed by Miklós (Nicholas) Feleky. In 1852 she played at Eperjes (now Presov, Slovakia), Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) and Miskolc, while in 1853 she appeared in Székesfehérvár and Győr with the ensemble of Endre (Andrew) Latabár. From 1856 she was a member of the Company of Ferenc (Francis) Gyulay, Lajos (Louis) Hegedüs, Mihály (Michael) Havi and Gyula (Julius) Miklósy. On 25 April 1859 Kornélia Prielle was again contracted to the National Theater, whose valued and celebrated member she remained until the end of her life, though she still played at Nagykanizsa in the summer of 1860, and at Pécs in the winter. In 1881 she was the first to be given the rank of “life” member. In the course of her six-and-a-half decade career as an actress, she had the opportunity to meet the greats of the pioneer actors. She was an excellent interpreter of middle-class drawing room scenes. Her roles included Lizi in E. Szigligeti’s Jew; Cordelia in Shakespeare’s King Lear; Melinda in J. Katona’s Bánk bán; Margaret Gauthier in Dumas’ The Lady of the Camellias (Dame aux camellias); Queen Anne in E. Scribe’s The Glass of Water (Verre d'eau; Egy pohár víz); Elmira in Molière’s Tartuffe; Elizabeth in J. Szigeti’s Rank and Mode (Rang és mód), and Modest Countess in G. Csiky’s The Grandma (A nagymama). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Szigligeti, Ede; Petőfi, Sándor; Latabár, Endre.

Priests’ Lament (Papok siralma, Margarita pedibus calcatur...) (1308 ?) – A dirge in Latin by an unknown author from the lower ranks of the clergy. He criticized the succession debate; the papacy’s unwarrantable interference in the affairs of Hungary; the luxurious life-style of the prelates of the Church, and the declining respect for science. He offered prayers for the reformation of the clergy and the Church. – B: 1257, T: 7103.

Prince – (1) In Hungary during the reign of the Árpád-dynasty (9th century to 1301), a portion of the realm, mostly a third of the country, called *ducatu*s (Principality or Dukedom), was given over to a prince to reign with royal authority. The title of “prince” was given to the king’s first son, his younger brother, or to a close male relative. (2) In the 17th century, the Habsburg rulers introduced their own system in this regard. With estate donations, the title of “prince” was given to the Esterházy family in 1687; in the 18th century, to the Batthányi and Grassalkovich families. The Primate of Esztergom also had the title of prince from 1715. All those princes were simultaneously princes of the Holy Roman Empire. After the abolishment of the Holy Roman Empire, from 1806 on, the princes of Hungary became princes of Austria. The title of prince was awarded, for the first time in independent Hungary, to Count Tasziló Festetich in 1911. – B: 1153, 1231, T: 3233.

Printing Shops (Early) in Hungary – We know of the products of two early printing establishments in Hungary.

(1) The Hess print shop in Buda, whose owner and master printer, András Hess, at the invitation of László (Ladislav) Karai, Vice Chancellor and Provost of Buda, moved from Rome to Hungary in 1472 during the reign of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490). Hess published his first book, the Buda Chronicle, with the support of László Karai, on the eve of Pentecost, on 5 June 1473. The matrices (printer’s types), used in Buda, he brought with him from the Laurer-Press of the St Eusebius Monastery in Rome, where he earlier served as a printer. The paper used for the Buda Chronicle is of Hungarian manufacture; its watermark is to be found only on paper used in Codices and documents originating in Hungary between 1467 and 1477. The typesetters of Hess were Hungarians, who correctly used contemporary Hungarian abbreviations seldom found in foreign texts, such as ppe co (perpetuus comes), the title of a Hungarian dignitary. Besides experienced printers, he also had to employ an editor and proofreader, familiar with Hungarian history. This person was not only a scholar, but a poet as well. There would have remained a gap at the end of one of the central printing blocks – considered an esthetic flaw at the time – had he not filled it with a funeral ode in hexameters, in memory of King Károly Robert (1307-1342).

There is another familiar publication of András Hess from Buda, and that is a booklet of 20 quarto leaves, containing the works of two classical Greek authors, Xenophon and Basilius, in Latin translation.

(2) The latest findings of research librarians indicate that there was another printing establishment active in Hungary between 1477 and 1780, probably in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). Its first product was a short liturgical text, a Confessionale. As neither the name of the owner of the print shop, nor its location are indicated in any of the three publications, he came to be known as the “mysterious printer of the Confessionale”, after his first significant publication. The author of this book is Antonius Florentinus, Archbishop of Florence. The colophon only gives the publication year, 1477. There are only four extant copies, all originating in early Hungarian monasteries. The Pozsony print shop’s third publication is a Biography of St Jerome by Lauvidius, printed on the same Hungarian paper as the others, displaying the watermark of a scale. The fourth publication is a unique Letter of indulgence written by Canon János Han, dated 11 May 1480, now in the Pozsony City Library which, according to the hand notation, was for the benefit of a woman named “Agnes de Posenio”. János Han was Canon of the St Márton (Martin) Cathedral of Pozsony. – B: 1020, 1091, T: 7617.

Prinz, Gyula (Julius) (Rábamolnári, now Püspökmolnári, 11 January 1882 - Budapest, 31 December 1975) – Geologist, geographer, folklorist. On the advice of Baron Loránd (Roland) Eötvös, the renowned physicist, he registered at the University of Budapest, where he studied Geology, and completed his studies at Breslau, Germany (now Wrocław, Poland) (1902-1904). He earned a PhD in 1904. In 1906-1907 he participated in the second Central Asian expedition of György (George) Almásy and mapped the Tien-Shan Mountain range. He named one of its peaks Lóczy, after his former Professor; and he named another peak Cholnoky, an eminent geographer. He repeated this journey alone in 1906-1907 and again in 1909, conducting further research in the Tien-Shan and parts of Inner Asia. His scientific achievement has been highly regarded. He wrote about his experiences in a book. In 1908 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) of geology at the University of Budapest. On a study trip, he went to Iceland (1914) and Scotland (1917), but this was interrupted by World War I. He was a professor of geography at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava) (1918-1919); the University of Pécs (1923-1941); the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1940-1944); the University of Szeged (1945-1957), and was Dean of the University of Szeged in 1948 and 1949, and Assistant Dean from 1949 to 1950. He retired in 1957. From 1920 he was Vice-President, then President of the Hungarian Geographic Society (Magyar Földrajzi Társaság). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1935 to 1949, when he was not recognized for political reasons, but he was rehabilitated in 1989. His works include a Travelogue from a Central Asian Journey (Úti jegyzetek Közép-Ázsiából) in Geographical Gazette (1906, 1907, 1908); My travels in Central Asia (Utazásaim Belsőáziában) (1910); Folkloristic Observations in Tien-

Shan (Néprajzi megfigyelések a Tien-Sánban) (1908); *Die Vergleitscherung der nördlichen Teiles des zentralen Tien-Schan Gebirges, (Mitt. d. k. u. k. Geogr. Ges. f. Together with Jenő (Eugene) Cholnoky and Count Pál (Paul) Teleki he wrote the geographical volumes Hungarian soil – Hungarian race, vols. i,ii,iii (Magyar föld – magyar faj I,II, III), 1936-1938) in the Hungarológia – Series of the University Press. He was a recipient of the Kitaibel Memorial Medal (1939), the Lajos Lóczy Medal (1939). There is a memorial plaque at his birthplace at Püspökmolnári and there is also a Prinz Prize. – B: 1031, 1068, 1105, 1122, 7456, T: 7103, 7456.→Eötvös, Baron Loránd; Almásy, György; Lóczy, Lajos; Cholnoky, Jenő; Teleki, Count Pál.

Priskos Rhetor (Latin: Priscus; Greek: rhetor: orator, advocate, diplomat) (5th century A.D.) – Greek historian and diplomat. He was a member of a Byzantine diplomatic delegation led by Maximinos to Attila, King of the Huns, in 448 or 449. In his historical work, he wrote about this mission. He reported on the lifestyle and habits of the Huns, particularly about those of their leaders. In his valued but fragmented work he precisely described one of Attila's residences, somewhere on the Great Plain of today's Hungary. The town was surrounded by wooden fences and towers. The banquet was served on rich gold and silver wares, but Attila ate and drank moderately from wooden plate and cup. Priskos Rhetor reported about a secret Byzantine plot to assassinate Attila, which came to nothing because it was revealed. There is a charming novel about this visit by Géza Gárdonyi: The Invisible Man (A láthatatlan ember). – B: 0942, 1160, 1384, +00, T: 7103.→Attila; Ildico; Gárdonyi, Géza.

Prohászka, Lajos (Louis) (Brassó now Braşov, Romania, 2 March 1897 - Budapest, 16 June 1963) – Philosopher, educator. He completed his studies in the Faculty of Arts at the University of Budapest, and in German Universities. From 1923 he worked as a librarian in the National Széchényi Library, Budapest; from 1928 in the University Library. He became an honorary lecturer in 1929 at the University of Pécs; in 1930 at the University of Budapest; then, from 1935 to 1948 full Professor of Education at the University of Budapest. Between 1931 and 1940 he was Editor for the journal Athenaeum. In 1934 he published a monumental cultural-philosophical work entitled: The Wanderer and the Exile (A vándor és a bujdosó), in which he attempted to define the spiritual characteristics of the Hungarians, and also tried to justify, with the history of ideas, the German-Hungarian common fate. It caused a great deal of debate, even with the leading historian Gyula (Julius) Szekfű who, with his circle of scholars, attacked him on a wide front. During World War II, as President of the Hungarian Educational Society, he raised his voice against the fascist and militaristic education of the youth. His works include Life as Action and Work (Az élet, mint tett és mű) (1926); The Soul and the Absolute (A lélek és az abszolútum) (1930); Spirit of the Age and the Responsibility of Education of the Youth (A korszellem és a nevelői felelősség) (1943), and History and Culture (Történet és kultúra) (1946). – B: 1068, 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Szekfű, Gyula.

Prohászka, Ottokár (Nyitra, now Nitra, Slovakia, 10 October 1858 - Budapest, 2 April 1927) – Roman Catholic Bishop, theologian, writer and orator. His high school studies took place in Losonc (now Lucenec, Slovakia), Nyitra, Kalocsa and Esztergom, and he studied Theology in Rome. He was ordained in 1881, and taught in a Lyceum in Esztergom; from 1888 he was a teacher at the seminary there. In 1904 he became a professor at the Theological Department of the University of Budapest. In 1906 he was consecrated Bishop of Székesfehérvár. From 1903 he was one of the leaders of the Christian Socialist Movement. During World War I, in 1916, he was the first to propose that the peasant soldiers returning from the front should be provided with land. He also headed the movement to establish orphanages for war orphans and this is how, among others, the “Ottokár Orphanage” of Pomáz (North of Budapest) came into being. From 1920 to 1922 he was a Member of the Parliament, but he did not accept the Prime-Ministership, offered to him. However, he became President of the National Christian Uniting Party (Keresztény Nemzeti Egyesülés Párt). He was the leading figure in the religious revival of the Hungarian middle class with his conferences, his religious exercises and his orations. In his books, he strived to lift their spiritual life. His fearless thoughts, acquainted with the needs of the times, his new, individual, idiosyncratic language, his poetic nature, warm personality, captivating appearance and voice lent irresistible force to his orations. In his books, he was the psychologist and specialist, the excellent observer of individual spiritual needs and social deficiencies. He fought against the excesses of materialistic capitalism, as much as against the danger of atheistic Marxism. His social thinking and Christian humanism attracted the youth of the country. He was accused of nationalism, chauvinism and anti-Semitism, but he was the spirited advocate of social equalization, and the much-needed agrarian reform. In his theology, elements of neo-Thomism and those of Bergson’s irrationalism can be found. His works in 25 volumes were published by Antal (Anthony) Schütz. His personal life was characterized by modesty and lack of need. It was while delivering a sermon from the pulpit of the University Church of Budapest, that he suffered a stroke and died. Prohászka was a leading figure of the early 20th Century Roman Catholicism of Hungary, as well as its spiritual life. His writings include God and World (Isten és világ) (1891); Triumphant Worldview (Diadalmas Világnézet) (1903); Modern Catholicism. Culture and Revolution (Modern katolicizmus. Kultúra és forradalom) (1918), as well as Soliloquia; Culture and Terror; Meditations; Dominus Jesus; Bread of Life, and Earth and Heaven. His works were also translated into German. Sándor (Alexander) Sík, in his book Gárdonyi, Prohászka, Ady, treats him as one of the reformers of the poetic aspect of the Hungarian language. The Prohászka Breviary was collated by Frigyes (Frederick) Brisits. – B: 0942, 1068, 1257, 1285, T: 7456, 7103. → Schütz, Antal; Sík, Sándor.

Próhle, Károly Jr. (Charles) (Sopron, 22 February 1911 - Budapest, 10 May, 2005) – Lutheran theologian. He completed his secondary school in his place of birth (1921-1929). He studied Theology at Sopron and in the Lutheran Theological Faculty of the University of Pécs (1929-1933). Then he did his post-graduate studies in Rabbinic and Talmudic Literature and New Testament subjects at the University of Tübingen, Germany (1933-1934). In 1934-1935 he attended the University of Königsberg, Germany, (now Kaliningrad, Russian Federation) where, through Professors Schniewind and Iwand, he came in close contact with the youth wing of the anti-Nazi German Confessing Church. He was ordained in 1935, and worked as Assistant Pastor in the congregations of Kéty, Sopron and Szentgotthárd. In 1937 and 1938 he studied at the University of Halle, Germany. Between 1939 and 1951 he was Pastor in Sopronbánfalva, and lecturer of German language at the Lutheran Theological Faculty, Sopron (1941-1950). He earned a doctoral degree in Theology in 1965. First, he was an assistant professor, then a full professor at the Lutheran Theological Academy, Budapest, from 1950 to his retirement in 1988. He taught Practical, Systematic Theology and New Testament Studies. He served as Dean of the Theological Academy, (1963-1964 and 1967-1969). After his retirement, he continued lecturing in History of Philosophy and History of Religions. He made two lecture tours in the USA: in 1967 and in 1969. He was a member of the Theological Committee of the Lutheran World Federation (1957-1970); President of the New Testament Translation Committee of the Hungarian Bible Council (1965-1975); General Secretary of the Ecumenical Churches in Hungary (1972-1982); Editor-in-Chief for the Pastor (Lelkipásztor) (1967-1973), and of the Theological Review (Theológiai Szemle) (1973-1982); a member of the Editorial Board of the periodical Diakónia (1979-1993); Study-Director of the Lutheran Church (1982-1988), and President of the Lutheran Society of Theological Science (1986). From 1990 he lectured Liturgics at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music. From 1995 he was a presidium-member of the Hungarian Philosophical Society. He wrote many articles, studies and books in Hungarian and German, including The Truth of the Gospel – Christian Dogmatics and Ethics (Az evangélium igazsága – keresztyén hit és erkölcsstan) (1958, 1990); Introduction to the New Testament (Újszövetségi bevezetés) (1959, 1979); Church Service Book (Ágenda) with L. Benczúr, L. Várady (1963); Gospel of Luke (Lukács evangéliuma) commentary (1956, 1991); Hoffnung ohne Illusion (Hope without Illusion) (1970); Unsere Sendung in der Welt... (Our Mission in the World...) (1970), and Hidden Words of Jesus (Jézus rejtett szavai) (1990). – B: 1050, T: 7103.

Pröhle, Károly Sr. (Charles) (Rábabogyoszló, 17 March 1875 - Sopron, 11 December 1962) – Lutheran theologian. His theological studies were completed in Sopron, Greifswald and Tübingen, Germany. In 1918 he obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Budapest. Following his work as an assistant pastor, teacher of religion and later, as a pastor from 1907, he became a professor at the Lutheran Theological Academy in Sopron. He was Professor of Theology in the Department of Theology, established there in 1923, and four times Dean. He participated in international organizations, such as the Luther Akademie in Sonderhausen, World Conference on Faith and Order, Lutherischer Weltkonvent, which he kept up until his retirement. His works include The Augsburg Confession (Az Ágostai Hitvallás) (1930); The Task of Theology in the Present Age (A teológia feladata a jelenkorban) (1933); Luther and the Reformation (Luther és a reformáció) (1940); Humanity, Hungarians and Christianity (Emberség, Magyarság, Kereszténység) (1941); Crisis in Our Theological Culture (Hittudományi kultúránk válsága) (1944), and The World of Faith (A hit világa) (1948). The Theological Faculty of the University of Leipzig awarded him an honorary doctorate. – B: 1050, T: 7456.

Prónay, Pál (Paul) (Romhány, 2 November 1874 - ?, 1944 or 1945) – Hussar military officer. He completed his studies at the Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy of Budapest. In World War I, he fought in the Jászkun Hussar Regiment. In 1916 he was seriously wounded and was discharged as a captain. After the proclamation of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (21 March - 1 August 1919), he moved to Szeged and, during the Soviet Republic, in June 1919 he formed a task-force from demobilized officers and non-commissioned officers, who, after the collapse of the Soviet Republic, took retaliatory action, including summary executions against Communist leaders. As a Hussar lieutenant colonel he was one of the leaders of the Western Hungarian struggles to retain the Órvidék (now Burgenland, Austria) and not to allow Austria to keep them permanently. He organized the so-called Lajta Banate, but this movement had to be stopped for external political reasons and he was forced into retirement in 1921. From then on, he criticized the government from the extreme right and participated in the right-wing actions (e.g. the Vannay putch). During the rule of the Arrow-Cross Government, he started to organize another detachment. He disappeared in the last months of World War II. His notes, written for the Arrow-Cross men in 1942-1943, were found in Czechoslovakia and published in 1963. – 1068, 0883, T: 7456.→ Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Council (Soviet) Republic in Hungary; Lajta-Banate; Zadravec, István O.M.F.

Prosz, János (John) (Budapest, 6 February 1892 - Budapest, 5 July 1968) – Chemist. His higher studies were at the University of Budapest, where he read Chemistry, Physics and Mathematics and obtained a Ph.D. in 1913. Having worked for a year at the Institute of Chemistry of the University, he went with a scholarship to the Nernst and Planck Institute of the University of Berlin. During World War I, he was in the army and in service on the Front. In 1919 he worked as Assistant Professor at the No. III Chemical Institute and, from 1924 he taught at the Academy of Mining and Forestry, Sopron. From 1934 he was a professor at the Budapest Polytechnic, where he worked in various capacities until his retirement in 1964. Then he was active in the Society of Hungarian Chemists; he helped in the creation of the Hungarian Chemistry Museum, and organized the training of chemists. His research field included the electrokinetic phenomena and the production of silicon. He was a pioneer in polarographic research. He worked out a number of patents. He was interested in science history as well. His works included Physical Chemistry Exercises (Fizikai kémiai gyakorlatok), with T. Erdey-Grúz (1926); General and Inorganic Chemistry (Általános szervetlen kémia) with others (1954); and Introduction to Polarography (Bevezetés a polarográfiába) with K. Györbíró (1959). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1956), and a recipient of the Kossuth Prize in 1953. – B: 1160, 1122, T: 7103.→ Erdey-Grúz, Tibor.

Protestant School Dramas – One of the early varieties of Hungarian drama. Protestant school-theater began in Hungary in the 16th century, using plays with a humanist slant in the national language. In the 17th century, in an effort to counterbalance the then enforced Germanization, these were in Latin. The noted Hungarian teacher, Ámos János Comenius' model drama series in Latin, entitled Schola Ludus, which dramatized virtually the whole syllabus of Reformed College of Sárospatak, had a great effect on Calvinistic theater.

From the 1660s, the Calvinist and Unitarian schools also produced some historical and biblical plays in Hungarian. Zsigmond Miskolczi's drama: Cyrus, written in 1698, survived in manuscript form, and Ferenc (Francis) Pápai Páriz' biblical drama in print form from the Nagyenyed school's program. Around the turn of the 18th century, the Latin dramas of the Evangelical schools drew their themes from current political events, albeit in style they followed the Jesuit dramas.

In the second half of the 18th century, the Calvinists at Sárospatak, Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia), Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, Romania), Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania) and other schools put on satirical comedies in Hungarian; they mainly parodied ancient mythology; but they also produced plays addressing current socially critical issues. – B: 1150, T: 7659. → Comenius, Ámos János; Pápai-Páriz, Ferenc.

Proverbs of Hungary – The Hungarian language is rich in proverbs. Their origin goes back to ancient times; and every era, including the present one, added something new to them.

Gáspár (Gasper) Heltai, in his Chronicle, published in 1575, wrote that Pál (Paul) Kinizsi, a popular hero at the end of the 15th century, encouraged his soldiers with the saying: Addig hántsd a hársat amíg hámlik (Peel the lime tree as long as it can be peeled). This is the first recorded proverb in Hungarian. It is still in use in certain places in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Now we say: Addig üsd a vasat, amíg meleg (Strike the iron while it is hot). A handful of proverbs from the 16th century are still in use, such as: Sok lúd disznót győz (Many geese overcome a pig); Nem akarásnak nyögés a vége (The end of reluctance is moaning); Olcsó húsnak híg a leve (Cheap meat yields watery soup); Krisztus koporsóját sem őrizték ingyen (Even Christ's coffin was not guarded for nothing); Minden zsák megtalálja a maga foltját (Every sack will get its patch or rather: every Jack will get his Jill). Some of them still exist in certain regions; others are forgotten, such as: Úgy illik mint bot a tegezbe (It fits like a stick in the quiver); Korán meglátszik mely tejből lesz jó túró (It is quickly apparent which milk yields good cheese, that is: the behavior of a child predicts its adult characteristics). Here are some new proverbs, originating from the Communist past of the country: Ez van, ezt kell szeretni (This is all there is – you have to like it); Ez nem az én asztalom (This is not my desk, i.e. it is not my business); Eszi, nem eszi nem kap mást (Eat it or not, you will get nothing else); Fogjuk meg és vigyétek (Let's pick it up and you carry it); Ha nem csinállok semmit abból nem lesz baj (If I do nothing, no harm will follow); Kicsire nem nézünk, a nagy meg nem számít (We don't care about little things – the big ones don't matter); Vagy megszokik vagy megszökik (Either get accustomed to it or run for it); Anyian vannak mint az oroszok (There are as many of them as there are Russians) etc.

As for origin, the Hungarian proverb can be divided into the following groups:

1) Hungarian proverbs, not present in other languages, such as:

Kicsi a bors de erős (Little but strong is the pepper corn); Jobb ma egy veréb mint holnap egy túzok (Better a sparrow today than a bustard tomorrow, or: Egy madár a kézben több mint kettő a bokorban (A bird in a hand is worth two in the bush); Messze van mint Makó Jeruzsálemtől (It is far away as Makó is from Jerusalem); Fából vaskarika (From wood into an iron-ring – that is: nonsense).

2) Proverbs from Greek-Latin classics, or from the Bible, or from the Medieval Latin, such as: Egy fecske nem csinál nyarat (One swallow does not make a summer) (Aristotle); Suszter maradj a kaptafánál (Let the cobbler stay with his last) (Plini Sr); Aki szelet vet, vihart arat (He who sows the wind, shall reap the whirlwind) (Hosea, Old Testament); Nem mind arany ami fénylik (All that glitters is not gold) (Medieval Latin).

3) Proverbs borrowed from other languages: From German: Aki mer az nyer (Who dares – wins); Várja, hogy a sült galamb a szájába repüljön (He expects a roasted pigeon to fly into his mouth); Iszik mint a kefekötő (He drinks like a brush-maker, or rather: drinks like a fish); Nem sokat hoz a konyhára (It doesn't bring much to the kitchen).

There are proverbs from the surrounding Slav languages: For example: Néma gyerekeknek anyja sem érti a szavát (Even the mother can not understand her dumb child); Kutyából nem lesz szalonna (From dog one can not make bacon)

Turkish relations have the following: Az előtt nyilat nehéz visszahozni (It is difficult to retrieve a shot arrow); Eső után köpönyeg (Coat after rain); A kutya ugat, a karaván halad (The dog barks, the caravan proceeds).

Taken from English, for example: Az idő pénz (Time is money); Az én házam az én váram (My house is my castle); Látszik a fény az alagút végén (Light can be seen at the end of the tunnel);

The first Hungarian proverb collection is the work of János Baranyai Decsi Timor, entitled: Adagiorum Graeco-latino-hungaricorum chiliades quinque, and it was published in 1598, in Bártfa. It contains 900 proverbs, most of them in usage today. Notable proverb collections are from: Péter, Kiss Viczián, 1713; Mór Ballagi, 1850; János Erdélyi, 1851, 1862; Andor Sirisaka, 1890; Ede Margalits, 1898; Gábor O. Nagy, 1966; Gabriella Veő, (Transylvanian collection), 1989, 1999; and Zoltán Újváry, 2001. Gyula Paczolay published 1000 Hungarian proverbs with Estonian, Finnish and German translations in 2000. Gábor O. Nagy's work: Mi fán terem? (Which Tree Yields It?) provides an explanation of the meaning of proverbs, 1979. Gyula Paczolay's book: European Proverbs with Equivalents in Arabic, Persian, Sanskrit, Chinese and Japanese points out the European relationship of 106 Hungarian proverbs. – B: 7683, T: 7103. → Heltai, Gáspár.

Provinces – Historical Hungary in the age of the kings originating from various royal houses was not a fully unified state. It also had feudal sovereignty over numerous vassal states, up to the time of Ulászló II (Wladislas, 1490-1516) – who even took on the title: king of Tótország (a term which at this period could either pertain to a Slavic region south of Hungary, or to the core of present day Slovakia). The kings of Hungary claimed the royal title to Bulgaria, Dalmatia, Galacia (Halich), Croatia, Cumenia, Lodomeria, Rama (Bosnia) and Serbia. Of these provinces, Croatia, Dalmatia and Cumenia were more closely associated with the Hungarian Crown, while Bulgaria, Galicia, Lodomeria, Rama and Serbia were in looser feudal relationships. The Hungarian Kingdom at that period was surrounded by numerous provinces, and the sovereignty over them increased or decreased in direct relationship with the increase or decrease of the power of the Hungarian Crown. The largest extent of the Hungarian Kingdom was achieved by King Lajos I (Louis the Great) (1342-1382), who added the Polish crown to his titles and possessions. After the death of King Lajos I, these provinces began to separate. On his accession, King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1443-1490), controlled no provinces outside Hungary, until he conquered the attached provinces of Bohemia, which included Luzica (a territory between the Elbe and Oder rivers), Moravia and Silesia, as well as Lower Austria and a considerable part of the Austrian provinces. Though after his death the Bohemian provinces remained with Hungary, since Ulászló II and Lajos II (Louis) (1516-1526) were also kings of Bohemia, it was not clear to which of the countries the

Psalmus Hungaricus - An oratorical work of international reputation for tenor solo, orchestra and mixed choir by Zoltán Kodály. The Psalmus was commissioned to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the unification of Buda and Pest, and Óbuda, and was first performed in Budapest at the Philharmonic concert on the 19th November 1923. It is based on the paraphrase of Psalm 55 by the 16th century poet, preacher and translator, Mihály (Michael) Vég of Kecskemét (Kecskeméti Vég Mihály). – B: 1197, T: 7684.→Kodály, Zoltán; Kecskeméti Vég, Mihály.

Pseudo Nobility – In the County Fogaras, Transylvanian (Erdély, now in Romania), this was the status of some settlers and the defense militia of the palisade of the fort. They enjoyed the status of the semi-nobility. They were duty-bound to serve as defenders of Fort Fogaras (now Fagaras) and, in exchange, they obtained some privileges of the nobility. Their rights were carefully circumscribed and were less numerous than the rights of the nobility. They were subjected to the authority of the district judges, the jurors, the fort-commander, and ultimately to the supreme commander of the Fogaras military district. – B: 1078, T: 3233.

Psota, Irén (Irene) (Budapest, 28 March 1929 - ) – Actress, singer. From her childhood, she wanted to become an actress. Early in her career, she appeared under the name of Irén Dávid. She completed her studies and training at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1952. She was a member of Madách Theater (Madách Színház) (1952-1980, later, of the Folk Theater (Népszínház) (1980-1982) and of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest (1982-1989); then, since 1989, she has again been a member of the Madách Theater. She is a multi-faceted actress with a deep voice; her scope in acting is quite wide. She depicts with as great a force the tragic heroines as she does the tormented womanly figures, or the extremely grotesque stage characters. She is also at home in the world of musical theater; her singing and dancing ability is quite impressive. She sings chansons and appears on stage in cabarets. Her roles include Polly in Brecht-Weill's Beggar's Opera (Koldusopera); Joan in Shaw's Saint Joan; Dolly in Shaw's Hello Dolly; Queen Margaret in Shakespeare's Richard III; Gertrud in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Aase in Ibsen's Peer Gynt; Mrs. Alving in Ibsen's Ghosts; Hanna in Schiller's Mária Stuart; Mrs. Pearce in Shaw's Pygmalion; Gertrudis in Katona's Bánk bán; Mum in F. Molnár's The Guardsman (A testőr), and Mrs. Orbán in Örkény's Cat's Play (Macskajáték). She acted in a number of film, TV and radio roles. There are more than 50 feature films to her credit, including St. Peter's Umbrella (Szent Péter esernyője), (1958); Be Good Unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig) (1960); The Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő) (1971); Peer Gynt (1977); Deliver Us from Evil (Szabadíts meg a gonosztól) (1979); The Five Cops (At öt zsaru) (2008), and Psota 80 (2009). She was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1959, 1962), the Kossuth Prize (1966, 2007), the titles of Artist of Merit (1976) and Outstanding Artist (1982), the Erzsébet Prize (1992), the Middle-Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1995), she is Life Member of the Society of Immortals (1996), She was named Actress of the Nation (2000), the Pro Urbe Budapest Prize (2003), and the Prima Prize (2009). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.

P. Szabó, György→Pápai Szabó, György.

Puerperal Septicemia – An infectious disease, caused by Staphylococcus or Streptococcus bacteria, particularly resulting from vaginal examination, performed with unclean hands. This disease was very common in maternity rooms after childbirth or abortion and was almost always lethal. Ignác (Ignatius) Semmelweis recognized this in 1847 and he introduced new medical procedures (meticulous washing of hands in lime water before vaginal examination) to prevent this disease. Present day puerperal septicemia is very rare and it occurs only in neglected childbirths or criminal abortions. Since the usage of antibiotics, the number of cases that end in death is very low. – B: 1138, 1068, 7456, T: 7660, 7456. → Semmelweis, Ignác.

Puhl, Antal (Anthony) (Dunabogdány, 30 October 1950 –) – Architect. His higher studies were completed in the Department of Public Building Design of the Faculty of Architecture of Budapest Polytechnic between 1970 and 1975. From 1979 to 1981 he did further studies in the Master Program of the Hungarian Architects' Association, where his teachers were Miklós (Nicholas) Hofer, Ferenc (Francis) Török and József (Joseph) Finta. In the years 1977-1987, he was demonstrator, then assistant lecturer in the Department of Public Building Design of Budapest Polytechnic. From 1987 to 1992 he worked in the studio of József Finta in the firm; and in 1991-1992 he worked in his own studio, also called Lakóterv. In 1992 he had his own office at Szentendre, an artist colony north of Budapest. He worked on a scholarship at the University of Delft, Holland from 1979 to 1988, and was also on scholarship in Singapore in 1994. He is a member of the Hungarian Architects' Association, and of the Hungarian Chamber of Architects. The years he spent in Holland proved to be decisive for him. The ideas of the Dutch structuralism architecture affected him not in terms of form, but in its essence. He took part in more than 50 national competitions successfully. His works include Enchanted Castle (Elvarázsolt Kastély) (with Ferenc Török (1987, Budapest); Commercial and Credit Bank, with Anikó Havas (1992 Budapest, Oktogon); Offices of Zwack Unicum Co. with Ferenc Szekér, Krisztina Torday (1993, Budapest); the Building on Andrassy Boulevard of the CIB Bank, and a number of family houses. His one-man shows include the House of Culture (1993, Prague); Oaktree Gallery (1994, Budapest), and the building of the University of Debrecen (1996). His collective show is the Exhibition of Young Architects in the Hungarian National Gallery (1981, Budapest). His awards are the Diploma Prize (1975), and the Ybl Prize (1993). – B: 1654, T: 7456.

Puli – a medium-sized Hungarian shepherd dog, with long hair; its height is about 40-50 cm at the shoulder level. The male weighs 13-15 kg, while the female, called "szuka" is around 10-13 kg. The Puli has a fine bone and lean muscle structure, covered by a long, felt and ribbon-like, or naturally braided thick coat that sometimes touches the ground. It comes in black, gray, white, fallow or masked colors, while its skin is always dark gray. It has a black nose, dark eyes; it is lop-eared and curly-tailed. It is a brave and very intelligent dog with a quick understanding, a lively temperament and abundant energy. Its breeding has become international and selective only since the beginning of the 20th century. Since then the Pulis have not really been used for shepherding; instead they are used to guard private houses. – B: 0151, 1020, T: 3240. → Hungarian domestic animals; Herding dogs; Sheepdog, Hungarian; Komondor; Mudi, Pumi; Kuvasz.

Pulitzer, József (Joseph) (Makó, 10 April 1847 - Charleston, SC. USA, 29 October 1911) – American newspaper publisher. He was born into a Hungarian Jewish family. His father was a grain merchant. He was educated in private schools in Budapest. In 1864 he emigrated penniless from Hungary to the United States. The Austrian and the French army had rejected him on account of his weak eyesight; but in America, he served in the Cavalry until the end of the Civil War. Then he went west and worked as a waiter, buried cholera victims of 1866, and finally worked as a reporter, first in St. Louis on the German Westliche Post, where he proved to be a talented reporter. In 1871 he acquired a part ownership of that paper. In the 1860s, he participated in politics and studied Law. In 1869 he was elected to the Missouri Legislature and, in 1874, he was admitted to the Bar in Washington, DC, where he worked as a Correspondent for the New York Sun. The purchase of the New York World in 1883 made him wealthy. In 1885, he was elected to Congress from New York, but resigned after a few months. In 1887 he founded the Evening World in New York. In 1886 he paid tribute to Mihály (Michael) Munkácsy, when the renowned painter visited the USA, and greeted him with Hungarian lines in his newspapers. In the same year, he contributed to the erection of the Statue of Liberty. At the age of forty, he was struck blind, but he still continued to run his press empire. In 1907 he suffered from a serious nervous disease and, for this reason he continually traveled on his “Liberty” luxury yacht. He died on his yacht in the port of Charleston. At the time of his death, the daily circulation of his newspapers was 700,000. In the 1890s, he had a circulation war with William Randolph Hearst. Through his will, he established the Columbia University School of Journalism, and the annual Pulitzer Prizes for literature, drama, music, and journalism. In this, he followed the example of Alfred B. Nobel (1833-1896), who established the Nobel Foundation with its awards. The Pulitzer Prizes are awarded annually at Columbia University, New York City. – B: 1078, 1153, T: 7103. → Munkácsy, Mihály

Pulszky, Ferenc (Francis) (Eperjes, now Prešov, Slovakia, 17 September 1814 - Budapest, 9 September 1897) – Politician, writer, archeologist and art historian. Pulszky studied in Miskolc, then in Eperjes. In 1832 he completed his studies in Law and became an articling student at a law firm. From 1833 he traveled, and stayed in Italy and Western Europe for longer periods. As an articling student he took part in the youth movements during the 1832- 1836 Diet, and in 1836 he again traveled throughout Western Europe. In 1839 and 1840 he was the representative of County Sáros. In the 1840s, he wrote articles for the Pester Daily (Pesti Hírlap), and for the Allgemeine Zeitung of Augsburg. He became a member of the Reformist Opposition. In 1848 he worked beside Lajos (Louis) Kossuth as Undersecretary of State for Finances, then in the Hungarian External Affairs Ministry in Vienna, also as an Undersecretary of State. He went to England, where he carried out successful activity for the press and unsuccessful diplomatic work in the interests of Hungary. Remaining an émigré, he accompanied Kossuth on his trip to the USA, and, in 1860, as Kossuth's representative, he went to Turin. However, after he didn't succeed in obtaining the military support of Cavour, Napoleon III, or Garibaldi, he resigned from his commission and settled in Florence. Because of his extremely vacillating views, urging direct military attack or diplomatic compromise, he fell out with Kossuth. In 1866 he returned to Hungary and adopted Ferenc (Francis) Deák's policies (Deák was the chief architect of the 1867 Compromise with the Habsburgs). At first at Szentés, then at Szécsény, he was elected as Member of Parliament with a Deák-party program. He was active in the cultural fields: he was President of the Society of Fine Arts and the Archeological Society, and took part in the negotiations for purchasing the works of the Esterházy Picture Gallery, and also in the organization of the exhibition of the works of industrial arts in Vienna, which was to form the basis of the Museum of Industrial Arts to be established in Budapest. Between 1869 and 1894 he was Director of the Hungarian National Museum, which he developed to European standards, and President of the Society of Industrial Arts. From 1847 on, he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society, and also one of the founders of the Petőfi Society. In 1873 he became the Chairman of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; in 1895 he became its Vice Chairman; he was a corresponding member of the Academy from 1838 an ordinary member in 1840, and an honorary member in 1841. He maintained an extensive literary and political activity: wrote works in the literary field, in history, philosophy and, above all, in the history of art and archeology. His works include Jacobites in Hungary, vols i, ii (Jakobinusok Magyarországon) (1851, 1861-1862); White, Red, Black, vols. i-iii (London, 1853), and My Life and Times, vols i-iv (Életem és korom, I-IV) (1882-1884). A Street in Budapest bears his name. – B: 1068, 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Kossuth, Lajos; Deák, Ferenc; Compromise of 1867.

Pulvári, Károly (Charles) (Pulvermacher) (Karlový Vary, Czech Republic, 19 July 1907 - Alexandria City, Virginia, USA, 1999) – Electrical engineer. His higher education was completed at the Budapest Polytechnic, where he obtained a diploma in 1929. In his first position, he was an engineer in the Telephone Factory of Budapest from 1929 to 1933. Then, between 1933 and 1935, he was a technical adviser at the Budapest Radio. From 1935 until 1949 he was technical Director at the Hungarian Film Studios and (partly concurrently) Director of the Pulvári Electrophysical Laboratories from 1943 to 1949. One of his inventions was an acoustic ignition device, employed in the Hungarian-designed and developed Lidérc air-to-air anti-aircraft rocket missile; some 50 of them were used as surface-to-surface rockets toward the end of World War II. He designed the telephone time-check service in 1948. He decided to settle in the USA in 1949. He became a professor at the Catholic University of Washington, DC, USA in 1953. He had some 70 patented inventions. One of his important writings is entitled: Memory Matrix using Ferro-electric Condensers as Bistable Elements. J.ACM 2(3): 169-185 (1955). He was President of the Washington Group, Association of American Hungarians and also a member of New York Academy of Science. Since then, there has been no data about him. – B: 0969, 1037, T: 7456.

Pumi – A terrier-type Hungarian shepherd dog. In the 18th and 19th century, the Puli was cross-bred with French and German shepherd dogs, with the purpose of guarding the newly-arrived merino herds. Its breeding became intentional only at the beginning of the 20th century, when the new breed, the Pumi, was separated from the Puli and used as a guard dog. The Pumi is medium sized with a lean muscle structure, a high belly and neck, while its back is low and slanted. Its tail is high and curly. It comes in many colors, mostly in gray, but it never has mixed or patchy colors. Its hair is medium long, sometimes in braids or curls. Although it has pointed ears, they curl down at the tip. Its lanky figure is in line with its highly-strung temperament. It is always actively busy. The Pumi is an intelligent dog with a quick understanding and its own "opinion". It requires little upkeep and nourishment. – B: 1020, T: 3240.→Hungarian Domestic Animals; Herding Dogs; Sheepdog, Hungarian; Komondor; Mudi; Puli; Kuvasz.

Pungor, Ernő (Ernest) (Vasszécsény, 30 October 1923 - Budapest 14 June 2007) – Chemist. He completed his High School studies at Veszprém in 1943, and studied Chemistry at the University of Budapest (1948), where he earned a Doctorate in Natural Sciences in 1949, then a Doctorate in Chemistry in 1956. He was a lecturer, then an Assistant Professor and Adjunct Professor of Inorganic and Analytic Chemistry in the Department of Chemistry at the University of Budapest (1948-1962); a professor at the University of Veszprém (1962-1970); a professor at the Budapest Polytechnic (1970-1990); Dean of the Chemistry Faculty there (1972-1981); Minister without Portfolio (1990 -1994), and Chief Director of the Zoltán Bay Applied Research Foundation from 1994. Concurrently he was a board member or president of many scientific and civilian societies and associations. Among others: President of the World Association of Hungarian Engineers and Architects from 1997; a member of the Advisory Board of the Anti-Chemical Weapon Committee of the United Nations from 1988; Co-President of the Pro Patria Association from 1999. Ernő Pungor was a member of editorial boards, such as: Chemical News (Kémiai Közlemények) (1964-1990); Hungarian Chemist Review (Magyar Kémiai Folyóirat) (1987-1990), and the Hungarian Scientific Instrument Review from 1977. His main fields of research were: analytical chemistry, ion-selective electrodes, electro analytics, oscillometry, flame photometry and atom adsorption, adsorption indicators and voltametry. Among his major works are: Flame Photometry Theory (1962); Oscillometry and Conductometry (1963); A Practical Guide to Instrumental Analysis (1994); For the Development of Hungary (Magyarország fejlődéséért) (1996); Theory of Ion Selective Electrodes (Az ionszelektív elektródok elmélete) (1998), and My Years and My Researches (Éveim, kutatásaim) (2000). Ernő Pungor was a corresponding member, then ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1967, 1976). He was an honorary doctor of the University of Veszprém; Babes-Bolyai University, University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); the University of Bucharest; Lomonosov University of Moscow, and the Technical University of Vienna. He was a member of many international institutes, such as the European Academy of Sciences, The Royal Society of Chemistry and the Academy of Sciences of India. He was a recipient of 37 prestigious awards, among them the Robert Boyle Gold Medal, the Great German Service Cross, and the French Legion of Honor. – B: 0873, T: 7103.

Pungur, Gyula (Julius) (Erdő-Szengyel, now Sângeru de Pădure, Romania, 24 May 1843 - Zelenika Dalmatia, 1 May 1909) – Zoologist, teacher, Minister of the Reformed Church and writer. He studied at the Reformed Colleges of Marosvásárhely (now Targu-Mureș, Romania), and Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania). He continued his studies at the University of Hessen-Marburg, Germany. He was on a study trip to France and Southern Germany in 1866 and 1867. In 1867 he was a private tutor for the Ugron family in Mezőzáhony. Here, he met the eminent natural scientist Otto Herman (1835-1914), who turned his interest to zoology. From 1870 to 1877 he served as Parish Minister in Szilágynagyfalú (now Nuşfalău, Romania). In 1878 he was a teacher at the Junior High School of Zilah (now Zalău, Romania). In 1877 he became an appointed teacher to the Senior High School of Zilah. From 1896 he worked at the Ornithological Center, Budapest, with Otto Herman. He was a prolific writer. Some 26 short novels, one play and zoological articles of his were published in newspapers in Budapest, and in the country. He sometimes wrote under pen names Sirius and Tamás Bölöni. His major works include Natural History of the Cricket Varieties of Hungary (A magyarországi tücsökfélék természetrajza) (1891); Animal Kingdom of the Hungarian Empire (A magyar birodalom állatvilága) (1900), and Vocabulary of Latin/Hungarian Animal Names (Orthoptera, Latin/Magyar állatnevek szótára), unfinished manuscript. Some of his works appeared in German, French and Latin. – B: 0907, 0942, 0883, T: 7103.

Pungur, József (Joseph) (Dunabogdány, 18 December 1931 - ) – Minister of the Reformed Church in Hungary, and the Presbyterian Church in Canada, theologian, missionary, writer, church musician and organist. He completed his secondary studies at the János Arany Reformed High School of Nagykovács (1942-1950). He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest (1950-1955). He was Assistant Minister in Budafok (1955-1956), Kecskemét (1956-1959), Calvin Square Church, Budapest (1959-1962) and Óbuda (1962-1963). He was Secretary of the Ecumenical Council of Hungarian Churches (1963-1966); Officer of the Foreign Relations Department of the General Synod Office (1966-1976), and Parish Minister in the Baross Square Church, Budapest (1971-1976). He studied Theology at the New College of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland in 1975, and obtained a Doctoral Degree in Systematic Theology from the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest, in 1976. He was a professor at the St. Paul's United Theological College, Limuru, Kenya between 1976 and 1983. By invitation, he was a board member of the Theological Education Fund of the World Council of Churches from 1971 to 1978, where he worked in the Africa Committee, chaired by Desmond Tutu; and he was a board member of the Committee on Church and Industry of the World Council of Churches from 1972 to 1976. In 1983, at the invitation of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, he moved to Canada. For this, he was stripped of all diplomas and degrees by his Mother Church in 1983, but fully rehabilitated in 1991. He became Parish Minister in the Calvin Hungarian Presbyterian Church, Edmonton, Alberta (1983-1992). Concurrently, he was first a lecturer at the Department of Religious Studies of the University of Alberta, and then became Adjunct Professor (1984-1993). Joseph Pungur was a guest lecturer at the University of Leeds, UK; the University of Urbana-Champaign, IL; the University of Washington, WA, and the University of Hawaii, USA. He was Moderator of the Presbytery of Edmonton-Lakeland, and Parish Minister of the Calvin Hungarian Presbyterian Church, Calgary, Alberta (1993-2001). Since 2005, he has been a substitute minister in the Calvin Hungarian Presbyterian Church, Edmonton. He was Vice-President of the Canadian National Council of World Federation of Hungarians from 1994; Vice-President of the Protective Body of the World Federation of Hungarians, Budapest in 2001, and from 2004 to 2008, he was President of the Western Region (Trans-Carpathian Region) of the World Federation of Hungarians. He was choirmaster of several congregational choirs, among them the Calvin Choir, Budapest (1961-1968). As Church Musician, he was student of Zoltán Gárdonyi, Kálmán (Coloman) Csomasz Tóth, and privat student of Ferenc (Francis) Ottó, Lajos (Louis) Ákom and László (Ladislav) Lajtha in organ, composition and choir leadership. He received an organist-cantor diploma from the Reformed College of Debrecen (1963). As organist, he gave recitals in Europe, Africa, USA and Canada. Some of his 250 articles and essays appeared in church papers and periodicals in Hungarian and English. His Dogmatics entitled Theology Interpreted, vols. i,ii, (1987, 1993) are used as textbooks. His other books are Sunrise (Naptámadat) sermons (1991); Renewal (Megújulás) sermons (1993); Being Maintained (Megtartatás) sermons (1994); An Eastern European Liberation Theology, editor, (1994); Fruit-bearing (Gyümölcs termés) sermons (1997); The Theology of National Minorities (A nemzeti kisebbségek teológiája), editor (1999), in English (2000), and Sacramental and Occasional Sermons (Ágenda és alkalmi beszédek) (2001). Since 2004, he has been Editor for the Hungarian World Encyclopedia, vols. i,ii,iii; its first volume was published by the World Federation of Hungarians, Budapest (2008). He is Chaplain of the St. John of Jerusalem Hospitaler Order, and a recipient of the Small Cross of the Order of Merit of Republic of Hungary (1999), and the Gold Medal of the World Federation of Hungarians (2008). – B: 0916, T: 7103.→Pungur, Gyula; Ákom, Lajos; Gárdonyi, Zoltán, Lajtha, László; Csomasz Tóth, Kálmán; Ottó, Ferenc; Kálmán, Lajos.

Puskás, Ferenc (Francis) (Purczeld, nicknames: Öcsi, Higany, Sváb, Szárguldó Őrnagy, Pancho, Cañoncito Pum) (Budapest, 1 April 1927 - Budapest, 17 November 2006) – Soccer player and Olympic champion. He was born into a Swabian family, lived in Kispest, a suburb of Budapest, and started playing soccer at an early age. At 15, he already played in a team. As a member of the Hungarian National Team, he entered the soccer-field at the age of 18 years. He was the Captain of the famous Golden Team (Aranycsapa), in the early 1950s, which defeated the unbeatable English National Team by scoring 6:3 on 25 November 1953 at Wembley Stadium. He won a Silver Medal at the World Soccer Championships in 1954, and a Gold Medal at the Helsinki Olympic Games in 1952. He was a member of the World and the European representative team. He left for Spain in 1956. He was a member of the Real Madrid and the Royal Club teams, and brought the Greek Panathinaikos team into the forefront as their trainer. He returned to Hungary in 1988, became an official at the Hungarian Soccer Association, then the Associate Captain of the Representative Team. Between 1943 and 1966, he scored 528 championship goals. His body was buried in the St Stephen Basilica, Budapest. He was a recipient of the Silver Olympic Award (1997); became a member of the FIFA Hall of Fame (1998); was the Honorary Ambassador of Hungarian Sport (1999), the Best Sportsman of the Century (2001), and he was made the Sportsman of the Nation. He is considered one of the best soccer scorer players of the 20th century. The rebuilt People's Stadium (Népstadion), Budapest, and a square at Zalasabará, where his bust was erected, are named after him, and there is a Puskás Academy at Felcsút. In 2009, the FIFA created a Puskás Prize. – B: 1031, 1105, 1656, T: 7675.→Golden Team, The; Bozsik, József; Budai, László; Buzánszky, Jenő; Czibor, Zoltán; Grosics, Gyula; Hidegkúti, Nándor; Kocsis, Sándor; Lantos, Mihály; Lóránt, Gyula; Zakariás, József; Match of the Century.

Puskás, Tivadar (Pest, 17 September 1844 - Budapest, 16 March 1893) – Inventor. He was born into a Transylvanian (Erdély, now in Romania) noble family. His higher studies were at the Theresianum in Vienna. He first studied Law, and later Engineering, but was not able to finish his studies for family reasons. In 1885-1886 he was a private tutor for the Festetics Princely family. In 1886 he moved to London and worked for the Waring Brothers and Eckerly Railway Construction Co. In the early 1870s, he opened a Travel Agency in Vienna to serve the World Fair there in 1873. This was the first such agency in Central Europe. In 1874 he traveled to the USA and opened a gold mine in Colorado. He also worked on his idea for a telegraph exchange when A.G. Bell invented the telephone. He met T. A. Edison and mentioned him the idea of a telephone exchange, and it became a reality in 1877 in Boston. For four years Puskás was Bell's fellow worker and representative in Europe. In 1887 he introduced the multiplex switchboard, which was a new step in the development of telephone exchanges. He established the first telephone exchange in Paris in 1879 and, in Pest, his brother Ferenc started it in 1881, and Tivadar took it over in 1883. His other important invention was the "Telephone News Service", by transmitting news over the telephone network, which earned him world fame. This was introduced in Pest, which announced news and "broadcast" programs and it is regarded as the forerunner of the radio. In 1890, he patented a method for a procedure for carrying out controlled explosions, which was the forerunner of the modern millisecond method of operation. In 1957 the Telecommunication Science Society established the Tivadar Puskás Prize. A school in Transylvania and a technical school in Budapest bear his name. – B: 0883, 1068, 1138, 1031, 1803, T: 7103.

Püski Publishers (Kiadó) – A Publishing Company, launched under the direction of Sándor (Alexander) Püski, with the co-operation of his family in New York in 1975. Following the example of the earlier Hungarian Life Publishing Company (Magyar Élet Könyvkiadó), he planned and included a wide circle of authors for publishing purposes and, in this way, he enabled the publication of works by authors living in the West, as well as authors in Hungary in the Carpathian Basin, and Hungarian authors in minority conditions, living in the former territories of Historic Hungary, whose works could not appear in published form for political reasons. It was in this way, that the works of many authors were published, such as Sándor (Alexander) Csoóri, István (Stephen) Csurka, Miklós (Nicholas) Duray, Lajos (Louis) Für, György (George) Konrád, Péter (Peter) Püspöki Nagy and András (Andrew) Sütő. Püski's authors living in the West included Gyula (Julius) Borbándi, György (George) Faludy, Gyula (Julius) Gombos, Klára (Clara) Györgyey, Mihály (Michael) Hőgye, Dezső (Desider) Monoszlóy, Károly (Charles) Nagy, János (John) Ölvedi, Zoltán Sztáray, László (Ladislav) Vatai and Lajos (Louis) Zilahy. The Publishing Company, and earlier the Püski Bookshop in New York annually organized literary and scientific lectures, projection of films and art exhibitions and, in this way from 1971 on, over thirty authors, lecturers and artists living in Hungary, and in minority status in adjoining areas in the Carpathian Basin, were able to appear on these occasions. They also conducted lecturing and performing tours. At the end of 1988, the Publishers were able to join the book publishing business in Hungary. At first they formed a partnership with the Eötvös Publisher and later, since 1989, they have been independently publishing literary, scientific and political works. – B: 1672, T: 7456. → Püski, Sándor; Vörösváry-Weller Publishing Company; Most of the writers in the article have their own entry.

Püski, Sándor (Alexander) (Békés, 4 February 1911 - Budapest, 2 August, 2009) – Book publisher, bookseller. He attended high school in Békés, and obtained a Doctorate in Law from the University of Budapest in 1935, and concurrently worked duplicating, publishing and selling lecture notes in law. In 1938 he opened his bookshop, and in 1939 founded the Hungarian Life Book Publishing Company (Magyar Élet Könyvkiadó), mainly dealing with works of popular writers. He was the organizer of the Szárszó Conferences in 1942-1943. In 1950, the Communist Government nationalized his publishing firm, which thenceforth became a ceramics business. In 1962 he was arrested on false political accusations and imprisoned till 1963. In 1970 he emigrated to the USA and opened a bookstore in New York. In 1975 Sándor Püski renewed his publishing activities under the name of Püski Publishers and published many works banned in Hungary under Communist rule. Toward the end of 1988 he returned to Hungary and established a publishing house and a bookstore in Budapest; he also became an honorary member of the editorial board of the weekly, Credit (Hitel); also a member of the patronage of this paper since January 1990. His main work is: Addenda to the Book of Szárszó, 1943 (Pótlás a Szárszó 1943 c. könyvhöz) (published in New York in 1984). Together with his wife, Ilona Zoltán, he was awarded the Gábor Bethlen Prize in 1990. – B: 0874, 0877, 0878, 1672, T: 7456, 7103. → Püski Publishers.

Pusztaszer Constitution (Szer Constitution) – For a long time, there have been arguments about how to interpret the writings of the early 13th century chronicler Anonymus, which first mention the locality name of Szer, and at the same time described the events that took place there: "... At that place the Leader and his nobles put in order the legal conventions and the laws of the country, so it would be defined how the people would serve the Leader and his high officials and how justice would be determined in connection with any crime..." Anonymus' writing originated around 1200. (Some historians assume that Anonymus' real name was Paulus Hungarus, a monk, who lived after 1180). Although, for a long time it was questionable whether a nice legend was born about the completion of the Magyars' settlement, or whether actual events were described by the "Unnamed" chronicler. Some researchers in recent times feel that the Chronicle of Anonymus could be historically verified with respect to the information base regarding location and time. Accordingly, the settling of the Magyars in the Carpathian Basin, which he described, took place between 888 and 895. This opinion would place the Nyitra and Borona military campaign in alliance with Amulf, in 892, which is supported by the yearbooks of St Gallen.

Other researchers believe that Anonymus recorded actual events heard from the minstrels, but the dates he designated differ from newer researchers. The return of the "Hungaruses" in 667 and Árpád's reclaim of the homeland in 888 had already been mixed up in his time. Namely, the chieftain Ond conquered the last Bulgarian-Avar-Slovak Prince, Zalán. Tribal leader Ond was the predecessor of the Baán-Kalán clan, which owned Szer (Pusztaszer) and vicinity. Conducting a szer (a meeting) was an Ongur custom; Árpád's clan established a tábor (a camp), and the Khabars gathered in a szem. The Pusztaszer gathering, assembled to write the Constitution, possibly took place after 677. On 5 July 1896, the members of the Hungarian National Assembly went to Pusztaszer, where "1000 years ago the Hungarian nation with Khagan (Reigning-Prince) Árpád took into szer the first Constitution of Hungary." On the same day, the Árpád memorial was dedicated. On 4 August 1902, the Pusztaszer Árpád Association was established; the region's residents held a ceremony at the Árpád Memorial, and planted lime trees in memory of the Seven Tribal Leaders.

On 15 March 1945, after the ceremony held at the Memorial, the redistribution of land was started at Pusztaszer. In memory of this event, a land redistribution memorial was dedicated south of the Árpád memorial.

During the archeological excavations, which started in 1971, the archeological artifacts found there are of the same significance as the written texts of Anonymus. It is most likely that lawmaking of such great importance was undertaken not only verbally, but it was also recorded in writing. However, such written documents were never found, which is understandable, since documents recorded with runic writing of that time were destroyed in all possible means after the adoption of Christianity, because they were deemed to represent pagan traditions. The artifacts of the archeological excavations, however, definitely support the written texts of the chronicler, Anonymus. – B: 0942, 1138, 0883, 1020, T: 7644.→Anonymus; Szalán.

Putnoky, Gyula (Julius) (Körmöcbánya, now Kremnica in Slovakia, 14 November 1901 - Budapest, 17 October 1985) – Physician, pathologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1925, and from then on, he worked in the Pathological Anatomy Section of St. László (Ladislav) Hospital of the University. From 1929 to 1935 he worked at the Pathological Anatomy and Histology Institute of the University of Szeged and, from 1935 he worked in the Pathological Anatomy Division No. 2 of the Medical School of University of Budapest. On a scholarship, he continued his studies in Germany (1936) and England (1938). From 1942 to 1945 (when the northern part of Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the 2nd Vienna Award) he was Director of the Pathological Anatomy Institute of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj Napoca, again in Romania), and from 1946 to 1953 similarly at Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureş, again in Romania), where he was also a professor and Dean of the Pathological Anatomy Department from 1953 to 1962. From 1962 he was professor and Head of the Department of Clinical Diagnostics. He dealt primarily with serology connected with tumor immunity; later, he investigated the pathological histology of the myocardium, mycoderm and struma. He proved experimentally the effect of Salmonella causing suppuration; he introduced tissue culture, and he was the first to show the importance of bacteriological investigations, using material from dissections. His works include Indication of Laboratory Investigations and their Evaluation (with A. Fischer) (Laboratóriumi vizsgálatok indikációja és értékelése) (1961). A Few Problems of Experimentally Produced Tumor Illnesses. Few Problems of the Relationship of the Tumor, the System and the Outside World (A kísérletes daganatos betegség néhány problémája. A daganat, szervezet és külvilág viszonyának néhány kérdése) (1963). – B: 1730, 1160, T: 7456.

Rab, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (József Rohoska) (Sárospatak, 14 May 1901 - Dreux, France, 4 January 1963) – Writer and newspaper reporter. He completed his legal studies at the Law School of the University of Budapest. He became a newspaper reporter, and worked at the newspapers World (Világ) and Evening (Est) in Budapest. In 1939 he became the writer of Editorials, as well as the political columns of the state paper, Pest. He wrote novels, short stories and reports. Between 1923 and 1944 he published nine books. Due to his anti-Nazi attitude, members of the Arrow Cross Party arrested him. After World War II, because of accusations regarding his earlier attitude, he was prohibited from writing for the papers. Between 1949 and 1956 he was a surveyor at the construction of the Eastern Main Channel (Keleti főcsatorna). In 1958 Rab did not return from his trip to France. He became a cultural associate of the Voice of America (America Hangja) radio station. His novels, written in Hungarian, also appeared in French translation. He published in the Literary Journal (Irodalmi Újság). He did not participate in the Hungarian literary groups in the West. His works belong to the love-psychology cycle. They include Society of Diana (Diana társadalma) novel (Budapest) (1939); Belvedere, novel (1940); Night Butterfly (Éjjeli lepke) novel (1944); Voyage dans le bleu, written in Paris in 1959; in German: Keiner Kehrt, zurück (Einsiedeln-Zürich-Köln) (1960), and in English: Journey into the Blue (New York 1960, London 1960); in Dutch: Niemand keert terug (Amsterdam-Antwerp 1961); Un jour a Budapest, written in Paris in 1960; in English: A Room in Budapest (London) (1962), and Sabaria, written in London in 1963. – B: 1672, 0883, T: 7684.

Rab, Zsuzsa (Susanna) (Pápa, 3 July 1926 - Budapest, 5 March 1998) – Poet and translator of literary works. She studied at the Reformed Girls' College of Pápa, where her father was the headmaster. It was in this College that her first poems were published in the local Pápa News (Pápai Hírlap), as well as in the College Papers. She was still in high school when her first volume of poems saw the light of day, entitled Toward Light (Fény felé) (1943). The atmosphere of a country town, the mentality of a town of learning, combined later with her experience in translating literary works, left their mark on her art. In the Faculty of Arts at the University of Budapest, she majored in Russian, receiving her Arts Degree in 1949. From then onward, she became an interpreter of Russian literature and folk-poetry, leaving behind two hundred literary translations. Apart from Russian literature, she translated from the folk-poetry of Russian ethnic groups, like Bashkir, Georgian, Estonian and, similarly, on the basis of the Russian translations, she rendered Andersen's fairy-tales into Hungarian. Between 1971 and 1978 she worked as a contributor to the literary journal Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom). Her ten volumes of work include Adorned White Swan (Ékes fehér hattyú) Russian folk poetry (1962); Stone and Bird (Kő és madár) (1980), and Our Watchtowers (Őrtornyaink) (1996). She received a number of distinctions, such as: the Attila József Prize twice (1963, 1973), the Pro Urbe Prize (1981), and the Friendship Medal from Russia (1996). – B: 0878, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Rábai Miklós (Nicholas) (Békéscsaba 18 April 1921 - Budapest 18 August 1974) – Choreographer. He was a High School teacher of Chemistry and Natural Science in Békéscsaba. He formed his first amateur acting group with students of his school, the Balassa Group. His group won first prize at a cultural competition in 1948 in Gyula. From 1949 he worked as a teacher at the College of Physical Education, and at the Department of Folk Dances, leading the dance group of the Hungarian Student and College Organization's Federation, the later Alliance of Working Youth (Dolgozó Ifjúság Szövetsége – DISZ) Central Ensemble. He became the choreographic and artistic manager of the State Folk Ensemble (Állami Népi Együttes), formed in 1951. At the debut of the Ensemble's Wedding Dance from Ecsér (Ecseri lakodalmás), he summarized his previous experiences. The so-called trio-genre took place in this representation for the first time, as a stage experiment (Kállai-duett); it was a combination of song, music and dance within the same performance. Later, between the folk-inspired dance performances, folk song and instrumental folk music were introduced. Between 1958 and 1961, through fairy-tales and historic tales, ballads, and dance-dramas, he created a new form, the folk ballet, (T. Vujicsics' Kádár Kata, S. Szokolay's Jóka's Devil, and the three-act tale, Kisbojtár (Little Herdsman) (1956). From 1960 he tried to formulate modern, revolutionary themes in the language of the folk dance, e.g. E. Petrovics' Dawning (Hajnalodik). His last significant choreography: Roads (Utak), approached symphonic dance-compositions in its style of structure. Rábai became Director of the State Folk Ensemble in 1971. Under his leadership, the Ensemble presented seven concert programs, the majority with his choreography. The Ensemble performed on five continents and in over 30 countries. Numerous films have been made of his choreographies (Ecseri lakodalmás; Este a fonóban; Üveges tánc; Pontozó). One episode of the film, The Girl Who Was Danced Into Life (Életbe táncoltatott lány), directed by Tamás Banovich, was also created by him. The Hungarian Television recorded the Kisbojtár, and also recorded a portrait-film, One Hour with Miklós Rábai (Egy óra Rábai Miklóssal) (1971). Several of his choreographies were published, complete with kinetograms in the Little Library of Folk Dancers (Néptáncosok Kiskönyvtára) series. He was the President of the Hungarian Dance-artist's Union till the end of his life. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1952), the Merited Artist title (1967) and the SZOT Prize (1973) and was referred to as "artist emeritus" (1967). – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7679.

Rabonbán (chief) – The name was preserved in the Szekler Chronicle of Csík of dubious origin, based mostly on tradition. According to it, the Rabonbán was elected by the People's Assembly that authorized its resolutions. On behalf of the people, he offered sacrifices, led the army in the case of war, and ruled the people in peaceful times. The name originally meant the one who can write and read runic writings (rovóbán). In the early days, when Christianity was not yet firmly established, followers of the old faith grasped every opportunity for its revival. The most significant uprising took place in 1061, at the time of the succession of King Béla I (1060-1063), when Vata's son, Jánus' call to arms spread to the Szeklers. King Béla I defeated the rebel forces at Székesfehérvár, then struck at the Transylvanians and, upon defeating them, abolished all offices reminiscent of the old religion, substituted it with the appointment of a Szekler Count, or High Steward. However, judging by its poor literary style and anachronisms, the Szekler Chronicle of Csík (Székely [Csíki] Krónika) is held to be of spurious origin by most historians, apparently compiled in 1533, in Latin. But most considered it to be a 1795 forgery by an obscure historian, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Sándor. – B: 0942, 1346, T:

Racka sheep, Hungarian variety (racka juh) (Ovis aries strepsiceros hortobágyiensis) – A member of the sheep family with coarse, mixed wool hair, an especially useful scrub sheep for its milk, bred in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), in the Carpathian Mountains, and on the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagy Alföld). The Racka sheep was already known in 4000 B.C. in Mesopotamia. The Hungarian breed arrived in Hungary either through Asia Minor, through Southeastern Europe and the Balkans, or at the time of the Magyar Settlement, or during the Turkish occupation. It played an important role in the economic life of Hungary in the 18th century and its meat was much sought after at the markets of the western countries. There are several sub-groups of Racka sheep known beyond the Carpathian Mountains:

(1) The Moldavian, of which the female sheep weighs 40 kg, and the ram is 60-70 kg. Two color varieties exist: the white and the reddish-black – the latter can turn a deeper red when exposed to sunshine – and upon maturity turn white or iron gray.

(2) The Hungarian Gyimes (Djimesh) and the Alpine (curkan, tsoorkan); however, it may or may not have elongated spiraling horns. The Racka sheep of Gyimes (in Transylvania, now in Romania) is different from the Hungarian type of sheep. The Gyimes sheep is more acclimatized to the harsh weather conditions, and is the largest among the species of sheep.

(3) The Racka of Hortobágy (part of the Great Hungarian Plain) is a long, isolated sub-group, indigenous to Hungary. Each gender has long horns, extending upwards in a V-shaped spiral. The sheep's movement is light and harmonious. Its hair is long and tufted, consisting of a rough top layer and a featherweight undercoat. The peasant's long frieze cape, the szűr mantle, and felted blankets are made of its wool; the shepherds wear jackets made of its skin inside out. Its milk production is 50-80 liters per year and the meat is lean. It is extremely hardy, can withstand rain and snow and does well in the outdoors without overhead protection. Around the 18th century, during a Hortobágy market day, 50,000 - 60,000 sheep exchanged owners. Their current stock is approximately 4,000. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7684.→Livestock keeping; Szűr Mantle.

Rácz, Aladár (Jászapáti, 28 February 1886 - Budapest, 28 March 1958) – Cimbalom virtuoso. The cimbalom is a hammered dulcimer, composed of a large, trapezoidal box with metal strings stretched across its top. The cimbalom is played by striking two beaters against the strings.

By the age of eight, he was already playing in Gypsy bands from Jászberény and Budapest; he was also a member of the 36th Laci Rácz Band. He developed his technical skills into virtuosity in Gypsy bands, playing in Budapest's coffee houses. From 1910 he played in the Hungarian Gypsy bands of Paris; and from 1914 in Switzerland. His dazzling improvisational ability and sense of rhythm caught the attention of Ernst Ansermet and Igor Stravinsky, both of whom encouraged him to perfect his art and direct his attention to serious music. Stravinsky learned cimbalom playing from him and also wrote compositions for that instrument. Leaving light music orchestras behind, he remedied the shortcomings of his theoretical knowledge with unparalleled diligence. In 1926 he successfully performed his first solo cimbalom concert in Lausanne, Switzerland, and traveled all over Europe on his concert tour. He lived in France between 1927 and 1935, and then returned to Hungary. In 1937 he was a professor at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede) and, from 1938 until his death he was a professor at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt of Music, Budapest, where he educated numerous outstanding students.

Rácz perfected cimbalom playing to an artistic level, and through his efforts the cimbalom became a concert instrument. Zoltán Kodály used it in his Singspiel, Háry János. Its popularity was partly due to his new style of playing: loosely moving the arm and wrist, and partly due to a new style of cimbalom hammers he had developed. It was mainly music composed for harpsichord by the Baroque and pre-classical masters, which he performed with the accompaniment of his wife, Yvonne Barblau. He built up the classical repertory of the instrument, introducing music with piano accompaniment. His works include transcripts to cimbalom with piano accompaniment of Bach, Bonporti, Couperin, Daquin, Lully, Rameau, Scarlatti, and others. He also included Hungarian, Romanian and Serbian dances, rhapsodies and fantasies. His works are still to be published. – B: 1197, 0883, 0886, T: 7684. → Kodály, Zoltán.

Rácz, István (Stephen) (Töketerebes, now Trebišov, Slovakia, 10 July 1908 - Budapest, 13 December 1998) – Photographer, teacher and translator of literary works. He attended High School in Sárospatak, then was a student at the Eötvös College, University of Budapest and received his teacher's certificate from there. He taught Italian at the Markó Street High School, Budapest. Because he participated in the organization of Communist youth groups, he was sentenced to 14 months in prison, a sentence, which was extended to 2 years. Later, he emigrated to Czechoslovakia and worked as journalist and translator. Before Germany's occupation of Czechoslovakia, he emigrated to Finland and worked as photo reporter for journals, where his reputation grew steadily. After World War II he returned to Hungary and became involved in the "People's High School Movement", and taught at the school of Vis, then at the Music School of Tarhos (Békéstarhos). After that he worked at the Publishing Chief Management (Kiadói Főigazgatóság), Budapest. At the end of 1956 he returned to Finland with his wife and resumed photography. His main theme was famous pieces of the history of art. He traveled extensively worldwide and took photographs of museums' treasures and private collections. His works include The Treasure of Nagyszentmiklós (Nagyszetmiklósi kincs) (1977); Finno-Ugric Folk Art (Finnugor népművészet) (1978) and In the Court of Henry VIII (VIII Henrik udvarában) (1984). He wrote and illustrated the "Dreiklang Books" series. In them appeared the works of Michelangelo, Rembrandt, and other famous artists. In the "Unbekannte Gott" (The Unknown God), he published photographs of the "gods" of five continents. He was also involved in taking photographs of the art of Peru, Tibet and Africa. In his book Seven Brothers (Hét testvér), he translated and illustrated the Finn folk epic, Kalevala. His memoirs appeared in the book Beside Still Waters (Csendes vizek mellett) (1998). He gained worldwide recognition. He was buried in Sárospatak. – B: 0920, 1257, T: 7103. → Nagyszentmiklós Gold Treasure.

Rácz, János (John) (Hosszúszeg, 31 March 1907 - Banga, The Philippines, 5 February 1977) – Roman-Catholic priest and missionary. He graduated in Theology in Mödling, Austria, and was ordained into priesthood in 1930. In the year of 1944, under German occupation, he was Chaplain in Törökbálint and also for the nuns of Zsámbék, hiding refugees, disguised as priests or nuns, saving many. He became a legendary personage. He left the country in 1947 and attended 600 disabled children for thirty years in Banga, The Philippines. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7679.

Rácz Lajos (1) (Louis) (Endrőd, 7 October 1900 - Gyoma, 8 February 1983) – Farmer and politician for the Smallholders' Party. His parents, former servants who emigrated to America, later returned to Hungary, and farmed on the seven acres of land that they had purchased. He was a soldier in World War I. Afterwards he farmed his parents' property. In 1935, in a unique action, he and his fellow farmers occupied István Huszár's 1704 English-acre property in Póhalom, which was divided and purchased by sixty-three people in 1938 with the help of state loans. The 1920s witnessed Rácz's involvement in local leftist politics, and his connections to the Social Democratic and Kossuth parties. In 1934 he joined Endre Bajcsy-Zsilinszky's Radical National party, and in 1936 the Small Shareholders' Party. By 1941 Rácz was a part of the national leadership for the latter party. On 20 March 1944 he was arrested by the gendarmerie and interned in Nagykanizsa. He was freed at the end of August. From 21 December 1944 Rácz was a member of the Provisional Governing Parliament, and he occupied a place on the Governing Committee of the Independent Smallholders' Party from 20 August 1945. By 4 November 1946 he was a representative for Parliament, and was named to the National Property Allocation Committee on 16 May 1946. Rácz earned a position on the Smallholders' Cabinet on 7 September 1946, belonging to its left wing. By February 1947 he was one of four potential replacements for the Head Secretary of the Party, Béla Kovács. From 17 April 1948 he was the Party's second leader. On 1 February 1949 he relinquished his seat and positions in the Party and moved home to engage in agriculture. In 1951 he offered his lands to the State. From 1953 he was an employee of the Soil Improvement Firm, and it was from there that he retired in 1968. Although he did not take part in the events of 1956, Rácz was imprisoned for several weeks. From 1968 to 1972 he was a member of the Patriotic People's Front Committee (Népfront). His chief work was Fate of the Peasant, 1945-1947 (Parasztors, 1945-1947) (in Történelmi Szemle – Historical Review, 1982. No.2). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7688. → Bajcsy-Zsilinszky, Endre; Kovács, Béla; Patriotic People's Front.

Rácz, Lajos (2) (Louis) (Budapest, 1 July 1952 - ) – Wrestler, Greco-Roman style. From 1972 to 1986 he was a competitor of the Honvéd Szondi Sports Association of Székesfehérvár. From 1974 to 1984 he was continuously the Hungarian champion in the 52 kg weight-category, and from 1972 to 1984 he was a member of the selected pool. He was sixth at the European Championships in Katowice in 1972; fourth at the World Championships in Katowice in 1974; fifth in Minsk in 1975; fifth at the Summer Olympic Games in Montreal in 1976; fourth at the European Championships in Leningrad; fourth also at the World Championships in Göteborg and fifth at the World Championships in Mexico. He was World Champion in San Diego in 1979 and placed second at the Moscow Summer Olympic Games of 1980. He was European Champion in Budapest in 1983. In 1978 he obtained a diploma from the Budapest School of Physical Education and, in 1983 a diploma for special Trainer. In 1985 he took over the position of his mentor, István (Stephen) Tombor at the Szondi Sports Association. Since 1987 he has been a trainer, and since 1987 a head trainer. From 1988 - 1990 he was trainer of the Junior and, later, the Adult Greco-Roman selected team. – B: 1989, T: 7456.

RÁCZ, SÁMUEL (Pest, 30 March 1744 - Pest, 24 February 1807) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree in Vienna in 1773, then, he worked as a court physician at Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania). From 1783 to 1807 he was Professor of Biology in the Medical Faculty of Pest University. In the surgical courses he also gave lectures in Hungarian and he urged and initiated the publication of Hungarian language medical textbooks. His works include The Textbook of General Knowledge of Human Life (Az emberi élet általános ismeretét tanító könyv) (1772) and Medical Practice (Orvosi praxis) (1801). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

RÁCZ, SÁNDOR (Alexander) (Hódmezővásárhely, 17 March 1933 - ) – Toolmaker and politician. He was raised by his grandmother at Izsák. From 1946 he studied at Father Gyula (Julius) Solymár's improvised private High School for orphans in Budafok and, at the same time, he learned the trade of cabinetmaking. He was conscripted into the army (1953-1955). On 29 October 1956 he was elected to the Workers' Council, when he worked at the Standard Machine Factory. During the 1956 Revolution, he was elected President of the Workers' Council of the Beloiannis Factory and, on 16 November, he became President of the Central Workers' Council of Greater Budapest (Nagybudapesti Központi Munkástanács). The Council announced a 48-hour strike to demand the release of Imre (Emeric) Nagy, the detained Prime Minister. In November and December, he frequently negotiated with the Government and the Soviet military leaders. During the second workers' strike (11-14 December), he demanded the release of the President of the new Workers' Council and protested against the killing of 131 persons in Salgótarján during a protest. János (John) Kádár summoned him to the Parliament on 11 December and had him arrested. On 17 March 1957, Sándor RÁCZ was sentenced to life imprisonment, but was freed in 1963 by amnesty and, after that, he worked at the Telecommunication Co-operative (Híradástechnikai Szövetkezet) until his retirement in 1987. He was under Secret Police surveillance. On 23 October 1972 he almost became the victim of a murder-attempt, under the guise of a road-accident. He suffered serious spinal injuries but survived. He was the speaker at countless underground resistance meetings, where he lectured on the 1956 Revolution and the crimes of Communism. From 1987 he was allowed to visit countries abroad. Among other dignitaries, he had an audience with President George Bush Sr. In 1990, at the time of change of the political system, he was nominated by the Alliance of October People's Party for the Presidency of Hungary. In 1993 he joined the Independent Smallholders' Party. In the mid 1990s, he visited Hungarian communities in the West and made a speech at the reburial of Imre Nagy and his associates. He took part in the preparations for the establishment of the Council for Historical Justice (Történelmi Igazságtétel Bizottság). In 2003 he became Honorary President of the World Federation of Hungarians. In 2005 his book appeared, entitled Burning Intention (Parázsló Szándék). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Freedom Fight of 1956; Kádár, János; Nagy, Imre.

RÁCZ, VILMOS (William) (Budapest, 31 May 1889 - Christchurch, New Zealand, 18 July 1976) – Newspaper reporter and editor. He obtained a Law Degree from the Law School of the University of Budapest. He was an outstanding sportsman, as an athlete and a fencer. He did military service during World War I. After the demobilization, he became a newspaper reporter. From 1921 to 1924 he worked for the Sports News, (Sporthírlap); from 1924 to 1930 for the National Sport (Nemzeti Sport); from 1928 to 1943 he worked at the Financial News (Pénzügyi Hírlap). Between 1938 and 1944 he worked as Editor and Publisher of the periodical Theatre News (Színházi Magazine). He was considered an expert in affairs of honor and duels. His Duel Codex (Párbajkódex) appeared in 1927 and 1938. At the end of 1955, he emigrated to New Zealand. His main work was Stabbing Excluded (Szúrás kizárva), memoirs (Munich, 1975). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Radar Astronomy – A method of scientific research, used for measuring distances between celestial bodies. The method is also suitable for their mapping, owing to the penetration of clouds by the radar radiation. This method was used for the mapping of the surface of the planet Venus. Dr. Zoltán Bay and his associates at the research laboratory of the United Incandescent Works (Egyesült Izzó Művek), Budapest, conducted the first radar astronomy experiments in 1946, when they observed radio waves rebounding from the moon. – B: 1153, 1031, T: 7674. → Bay, Zoltán Lajos.

Ráday, Count Gedeon (Ludány, 1 October 1713 - Pécel, 6 August 1792) – Writer, literary editor and landowner. Ráday was the son of Pál Ráday, a renowned Kuruc diplomat. After three years' residence in German territories, Ráday studied at the University in Frankfurt an der Oder, beginning in 1732. He returned to Hungary after the death of his father in 1733. Apart from overseeing his estates, he dedicated his life to national cultural causes. Ráday corresponded with a large circle of writers and supported the publication of literary works and journals. He expanded the family library that his father had established and, in fact, became the second founder of the Pécel Collection, which became renowned. The Collection is now in the Ráday Library of the Reformed Church in Budapest. Ráday was the first to write poetry patterned on rhymed metered verse, following German patterns (the Ráday poetic model). Ráday reworked songs about Miklós Zrínyi's famous siege of Szigetvár into prose, thereby drawing attention to the significance of works that had gradually been forgotten. In 1764, Ráday participated in the Hungarian Diet as a representative for the County of Pest. During a stay in Sárospatak in 1772, he became acquainted with Ferenc Kazinczy, who spent much time with him during his residence as a law student in Pest in 1782-1783. Much of Ráday's life work was preserved in manuscript form; however, it was destroyed after his death. The manuscripts that remained were collected and published with the help of János Váczy, along with his biographical introduction. This volume was entitled The Collected Works of Count Gedeon Ráday (Gróf Ráday Gedeon összes művei) (1892). Other books dealing with Count Ráday's life included one by Margit Vas: The Life and Works of Gedeon Ráday (Ráday Gedeon élete és munkássága) (1932), and by Endre (Andrew) Zsindely: Gedeon Ráday's Life and Works (Ráday Gedeon élete és munkássága) (1955). – B: 0883, 0931, T: 7688. → Ráday, Pál; Zrínyi, Miklós; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Highwaymen, Times of.

Ráday, Count Pál (1) (Paul) (Losonc, now Lučenec, Slovakia, 2 July 1677 - Pécel, 20 May 1733) – Kuruc diplomat and high-ranking chancellery official. In November of 1703

Ráday joined the side of Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II in the uprising. Before doing so, he was a secretary in Transylvania, and later Director of the Transylvanian Chancellery. In 1707 he attained the rank of Vice-Chancellor for Transylvania, and was an auditor for the Noble Compania, an organization representing the Kuruc fighters. By 1709 Ráday headed the Kuruc War Chancellery, all the while serving as one of Rákóczi's closest and most trusted officials. His responsibilities mostly involved the direction of diplomatic business. He became the most famous publicist for the Kuruc cause. It was he, who composed manifestos and pamphlets to inform a foreign readership of Kuruc intentions. These included Manifestum (1704); Explosio (1706) and Responsio (1706). Ráday edited the Kuruc Newspaper, which was named Mercurius Veridicus. It was his responsibility to compose the text of national proposals and decisions, and he had the task of writing the Kuruc Soldiers' Book of Law (A kuruc hadsereg katonai törvénykönyve). In addition to all of these tasks, Ráday also performed diplomatic service, in 1704 to the Polish, Swedish and Prussian kings; in 1705 to the Swedish and Polish kings and, in 1709 again, to the Swedish king in Bender. (On this diplomatic mission, he also wrote a journal, documenting his experience). At the 1707, the Warsaw discussions for an alliance between Czar Peter I and the Principality of Transylvania, Ráday had complete diplomatic license for negotiation. At the 1704 peace discussions with the Emperor in Selmeç, and the 1708 talks in Nagyszombat, Ráday was Ferenc Rákóczi II's personal representative. In 1711, after the Peace of Szatmár, Ráday was given a personal amnesty and allowed to return from Galicia. During the Diets of 1712-1715, 1711-1723 and 1728-1729, Ráday represented the County of Nógrád. Aside from this work in the Diets, Ráday was no longer very politically active. At the National Assemblies, he was most forceful in promoting the interests of the Protestant Church in Hungary. Ráday was the first Chief Caretaker of the Reformed Church. He wrote more than one religious work, including his Obeisance of the Soul (A Lelki Hódolás), a prayer book (1715), which appeared in many editions over the course of the century. This Magnate was the one who laid the foundation for the famous Ráday library in Pécel. Ráday's works were collected and published as The Writings of Pál Ráday (Ráday Pál iratai, Volumes I-II, 1955-1961). A High School in Pécel bears his name. – B: 0883, 0931, T: 7688.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Recrudescunt...; Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Kuruc; Kuruc Age; Kuruc Army.

Ráday, Count Pál (2) (Paul), (Pécel, East of Budapest, 31 March 1768 - Pest, 22 June 1827) – Patron of the arts and theater director. In 1788, in the theater hall of his mansion in Pécel, he had Mozart's Die Entführung aus dem Serail (Il Seraglio) performed, only 6 years after Mozart composed it. In 1790, Kazinczy asked him to organize a social gathering at the time of the Hungarian Diet at Buda, but it did not materialize. However, late in 1790, he took upon himself to head the first professional Hungarian Society, organized by László (Ladislás) Kelemen, and in July to August 1792 again gave his support to this Society. In 1807 he tried in vain to get the directorship of the German theaters of Pest-Buda; but in 1815 he obtained the tenancy rights. He restored the dilapidated theater in Buda and, until 1818, directed the theatrical life of the two towns on either side of the Danube, later to become Budapest. Operatic and dramatic works were on his program, especially the works of Lessing, Goethe, Schiller, Bäuërle and Kotzebue. He and Markus Szentiványi sat at the head of the 12-member theatrical board, organized in 1818. – B: 1445, T: 7456. → Kármán, József.

Ráday Gradual – A Reformed liturgical songbook, originating around the turn of the 17th century. In contrast to other graduals, this handwritten work is in small quarto form, painstakingly presented and with precise musical notation. – B: 1197, T: 7659.

Ráday, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 4 September 1905 - Budapest, 12 March 1983) – Actor. He studied at the Acting School of Kálmán Rózsahegyi; following that he went to Székesfehérvár and started his career in 1923. He signed a contract with the Repertory Theater (Kamara Színház), Budapest, and he played leading roles. Between 1926 and 1929 he acted in several film roles at the UFA studio, Berlin. After returning home, he was first a member of the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház) then, in 1930 he became a member of the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), Budapest. Later he played for several years in the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház), and occasionally played in guest roles in other theaters as well. Between the two World Wars, he often played lovers' roles. During the 30s Ráday won great popularity with his acting as a “genteel” young man. Due to the anti-Jewish laws, he could rarely appear on stage prior to and during the war years. In 1945 and 1946 he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), then, for about ten years, he played in various theaters in the Capital. In 1957 he was given a contract by the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház) and remained its member. This is where he finally found himself in character roles. He was a versatile actor, with a sense for the grotesque satire, also with a somewhat emotional sense of humor, but with an attractive style. He also worked as Theater Manager. His most famous roles were the Bridegroom in Hunyady's Nights in July (Júliusi éjszakák); Peter in Eiseman's One Kiss and Nothing Else (Egy csók és más semmi); Florent in Cocteau's The Holy Terrors (Les Enfants terribles – Szent szörnyetegek), Linyaev in Ostrovsky's Wolves and Lambs (Farkasok és bárányok) and Zalai in Kállai's Tightrope Walking (Kötéltánc). He had some 9 German silent movies to his credit, such as Am Rande der Welt (At the Edge of the World) (1926); Die Czardasfürstin (The Csárdás Princess) (1927), and Der Weg durch die Nacht (Road Through the Night) (1929). There are more than 35 feature films to his credit including The Clever Mom (Az okos mama) (1935); Spider Web (Pókháló) (1936); Sweet Revenge (Édes bosszú) (1937); With Full Steam (Teljes gőzzel) (1951); Dollardad (Dollárpapa) (1956); Is Everybody Innocent? (Mindenki ártatlan?) (1961); Light Behind the Shutter (Fény a redőny mögött) (1965); Walls (Falak) (1967), and Vera Angi (1979). Among his more than 35 TV films are Only for Men (Csak férfiaknak) (1960); Grandma (Nagymama) (1964); Dark Room (Sötétkamra) (1973); Halfpenny (Fél penny) (1975); Call in the Witness Next (Szólítsák be a tanút) (1978), and the Black Emperor 1-2 (A fekete császár 1-2) (1983). He was honored with the title of Artist of Merit (1959), the Outstanding Artist title (1969), and he received the Kazinczy Prize in 1967. – B: 0871, 0883, 1445, 1031, T: 7684.

Ráday Library – The foundation of the Ráday Collection is the private library of the aristocratic Ráday family of the 18th century, namely that of Count Pál (Paul) Ráday (1677-1733). The library embraces all branches of learning, especially literature about Protestant Theology and the French Enlightenment, some 6,500 works in 14,000 volumes, among them 46 incunabula. Some examples of rare items in this collection are the so-called Rákóczi Bible of 1640, the Chronicles of Thuróczy (Thuróczy Krónika), illustrated with colored woodcuts: and also the prayer book of Pál Ráday, entitled A Lelki Hódolás (Obeisance of the Soul) (1715). Today, the Library has 150,000 volumes, mostly Protestant Theology. It is the library of the Danubian Reformed Church District (Budapest, 1092, Ráday u. 28). The Bible Museum is located in the same building.

The Library of the Károli Reformed University (Károli Református Egyetem, KRE), Budapest, was established in an associate form in the summer of 1999. The members of the association are the Library of the Ráday Collection of the Reformed Church District of Dunamellék, the Library of the Faculty of Humanities of KRE, the Library of the Faculty of Law and State Science of KRE, the Library of the Teacher Training College of KRE, the Török Pál Library of the Faculty of Divinity of KRE, and the Library of the Law Faculty at Kecskemét.

The modern collection of the Ráday Library consists of specialized reference books on theology and the humanities. The development of the libraries started at the foundation of the University Faculties. The aims of the libraries are to provide material for educational and research purposes. Altogether, the libraries contain 2,000,000 library units and, since 1997, the cataloguing system is the Automatic Corvina System.. – B: 0877, 1876, T: 7103.

Radics Béla (1) (Miskolc, 7 July 1867 - Budapest 21 February 1930) – Leader of a Gipsy band and composer. His performances delighted Erich Kleiber and Claude Debussy. They often performed abroad: in Monte-Carlo, Paris, London, but most often and for the longest periods in Baden-Baden. In 1927, at the jubilee of his 40 years as bandleader, his native town elected him a citizen of honor. He was one of the successors of the double-bass Gipsy musician era. As a composer, he had a variety of interests, including the composition of Hungarian songs like: I Stop at the Cross-roads (Megállok a keresztutnál), waltzes, and Titania, songs of grief, marches and polkas. – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7679.

Radics, Béla (2) (Budapest, 6 February 1946 - Budapest, 18 October 1982) – Rock musician, guitarist, singer and composer. He is one of the most renowned Hungarian rock musicians. His fans regard him as the Hungarian Jimmy Hendrix. His guitar playing and composing talent are legendary. He is regarded as the Hungarian Guitar King. He called himself “Captain of Erbé”. He played in the Sanko, the Atlantis and the Pannónia Ensembles. In 1968 he established the first Hungarian progressive and blues-playing Ensemble, the Sakk-Matt (Checkmate). He acquainted the younger generations of Hungarians with the rhythm and blues music. In Hungary, in the 1960s and 1970s, the Ensemble fell out of favor with the Communist policy of culture and faced suppression. Later, Radics played in the Tűzkerék (Firewheel) Ensemble. In 1972 the Taurus EX-T: 27 75 82, the first Hungarian super-group, was founded with Béla Radics (Guitar, singer), Győző (Victor) Breinner (drums), Lajos (Louis) Som (Bass-guitar), and Ferenc (Francis) (Fecó) Balázs (Blaise) (keyboard, singer). The Ensemble was very successful, but they were not allowed to make recordings and the “dangerous” group was dissolved in 1973. It had a devastating effect on Radics, who did not play the guitar for a year and a half. In 1975, Radics re-established the Tűzkerék Ensemble. With his music and life-style, he enjoyed the freedom that usually was not tolerated in a dictatorial political system. Radics died prematurely at the age of 36. There is a Radics Club and a statue of him erected in Budapest. – B: 1820, T: 7103.

Radics, Géza (Bodrog-Bü, County Somogy, 1932 - ) – Researcher of the Hungarians. His father farmed on a 100-acre estate, of which 40 acres were his own. During the Communist regime his father was declared to be a kulak, i.e. a rich farmer. He was persecuted and his property was confiscated. The son suffered much the same fate as his father and the doors of education were closed to him. In 1949 he went to Budapest, where he trained as a locksmith and found employment in a factory. He served as a conscript in the army. He took an active part in the 1956 Revolution. After the Soviets crushed the Revolution, he became one of the voices of resistance. On 22 November he fled Hungary and arrived in the United States in the same year. In America, he became an auto mechanic, and returned to school to master the English language. He served in the US army and spent two years in Germany. After that, he married and established a family. He was always interested in the ancient history of Hungary, and under the influence of Ida Bobula and Victor Padányi, he started his own historical research in the late 1970s. He started writing for newspapers, periodicals, and authored books on various historical subjects. His study in English appeared on his website under the title: Origin and Concise History of the Hungarians. His other works include Our Origin and Our Ancient Home (Eredetünk és Őshazánk) (1992); Our National Symbols (Nemzeti jelképeink); We and the Carpathian Basin (Mi és a Kárpát Medence); Hungarian Future - in Hungarian Past (Magyar Multban – Magyar Jövő), and Readings From Our Past (Olvasmányok Multunkból). He also published short videos. – B: 1935, T: 7690.→Bobula, Ida; Padányi, Victor.

Radio Free Europe (Szabad Európa Rádió) – Funded by the US Congress that provides news, information, and analysis to countries in Eastern Europe, Central Asia, and the Middle East, “where the free flow of information is either banned by government authorities or not fully developed”. Founded as an anti-communist propaganda source during the Cold War, RFE was headquartered at the Englisch Garten in Munich, Germany, from 1949 to 1995, when it moved to Prague in the Czech Republic. European operations have been reduced since the end of the Cold War. The service maintains 20 local bureaus in countries throughout their broadcast region, as well as a corporate office in Washington D.C. Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty broadcasts in 28 languages to 21 countries. The goal of the RFE was to upkeep the idea of freedom in the peoples of the Soviet Bloc, which lived under Communist dictatorship, oppression and exploitation. RFE was also known for its balloon operation (1951-1956), which involved dropping anti-Communist leaflets from balloons, which floated over the Iron Curtain into Eastern Europe. The nature of the leaflets varied, and included messages of support and encouragement to citizens suffering under communist oppression, satirical criticisms of communist regimes and leaders, information about dissident movements and human rights campaigns, and messages expressing the solidarity of the American people with the residents of Eastern European nations. RFE played a critical role during the Cold War era in Eastern Europe. Its audience increased substantially following the failed Berlin riots of 1953. Its Hungarian service's coverage of Poland's Poznań riot in 1956 served as an inspiration for the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1956, by giving its Hungarian listeners false hopes of Western military assistance. Inflammatory broadcasts by émigrés may have caused Soviet leaders to doubt Hungarian leader Imre (Emeric) Nagy's managerial skills, fear the power vacuum in Hungary, and conclude that a second military invasion was necessary. RFE's broadcasts may also have precipitated the Soviet crackdown on Hungary on 4 November 1956. However, the inflammatory broadcasts of Radio Free Europe strengthened the expectations of the Freedom Fighters, as well as the people of Hungary that Western military help is imminent and forthcoming – but Hungary was tragically left alone. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Freedom Fight of 1956; Nagy, Imre.

Radio Hungary, siege of – After the general disappointment in Imre Nagy's speech on Kossuth Square, the uproar that was caused by Ernő Gerő's speech delivered over Radio Hungary excited the demonstrators of Budapest on 23 October 1956. A section of the demonstrating crowd in their indignation marched to the building of Radio Hungary, situated on Sándor Bródy Street, in order to broadcast their demands in sixteen points. However, they were received by armed units of the AVH (State Security Office – Államvédelmi Hatóság – ÁVH). Since they were unable to disperse the surging crowd that was growing by leaps and bounds, either with tear-gas or watercannons, the leadership at the Radio Station placed at the service of the leaders of the demonstrators a recording van, so that they could broadcast their sixteen points. Soon it became clear that this was a mere deception, since not one part of the delivered matter was broadcast. So, by using the recording van, the demonstrators smashed the door of the building, whereupon the radio leadership was ready to hear a deputation; but the members of this group were apparently arrested inside. The feelings in the assembled crowd began to run increasingly high. The soldiers of the communication regiment, with fixed bayonets, attempted to push the crowd as far as the Museum-Ring Boulevard. However, at this moment, two armored cars as reinforcements broke through the cordon by mistake and, following in their tracks, the crowd again surged to the main entrance of the Radio Building. It was then, that the soldiers started to shoot into the air, which was interpreted by the AVH state security soldiers inside the building as an attack, and they in turn opened fire on the crowd. One soldier died and two demonstrators were wounded. In an ambulance vehicle, the AVH tried to smuggle some ammunition and weapons into the building, but the demonstrators detected it and prevented the action. From among the troops, more and more soldiers changed over to the demonstrators' side, or handed over their weapons to them, tearing off the red stars from their caps. Among the demonstrators, a number of factory workers also handed out weapons, which they had obtained from the weapon-depots, torn open in the meantime. Two hours after the chance incident, the firing flared up again and this marked the beginning of the armed uprising of the people of Budapest. By dawn, the people in revolt occupied the building of Radio Hungary, though, by then, the studios were rendered unusable, because the Party leadership had had them disconnected from the radio broadcaster and a temporary studio was set up at Party Headquarters. – B: 1031, 1823, T: 7456.→State Security Police; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Radnai Béla (1) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 23 May 1873 - Budapest 21 November 1923) – Sculptor. After finishing his studies at the High School for Industrial Art, he attended the Art School of Alajos Strobl for a year. Between the years of 1895 and 1903 he worked for the eminent sculptor János (John) Fadrusz. He drew caricatures over a period of many years for the Kakas Márton comic magazine. He was Professor of Sculpture at the School of Fine Arts, and participated in ornamenting the Hungarian Parliament Building and the Palace of Buda. He also created numerous monuments (Pázmány, Budapest; Petőfi, Pozsony; Lenau, Csatád, etc.). Besides portraits, he also sculpted funeral monuments and thematic compositions, especially representing children (Baby is learning to walk, Anthem etc). The Hungarian National Gallery holds twelve of his sculptures. – B: 0883, 1877, T: 7679. → Strobl, Alajos; Fadrusz, János; Páczay, Pál.

Radnai, Béla (2) (Cegléd, 8 November 1891 - Budapest. 1 November 1962) – Stenography expert, esthete, patron of arts. In 1909, he acquired a shorthand teacher degree, from the University of Budapest, he obtained a High School Teacher Degree and a Ph.D. in 1918. Between 1922 and 1961, he was principal of his stenographer school. He was acting, and later President of the National Federation of the Hungarian Stenographers (Magyar Gyorsírók Országos Szövetsége). He was editor of the Stenographic Review (Gyorsírási Szemle) in 1911, and from 1923 to 1944, editor for the periodical Stenographic Science (Gyorsírástudomány). He initiated and carried through the reform of Hungarian shorthand writing. His textbooks include Textbook of the Simple Shorthand (Az egyszerű gyorsírás tankönyve) (1912); The Theory of Stenography (A gyorsírás elmélete) (1914); Textbook of the United Hungarian Stenography (Az egységes magyar gyorsírás tankönyve) (1927, 928, 1931), and The Literature of the United Hungarian Stenography (1934). He and his friends, the so-called Gresham Coffee House Circle (Gresham Kávéházi Asztaltársaság), collected, above all, outstanding pictures, drawings and sculptures of contemporary artists. There is a memorial plaque on the wall of the house at no. 5 University Square, District V of Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031 T: 7103. → Fabó, Henrik.

Radnai György (George) (Szurdokpüspöki, 7 August 1920 - Budapest 4 April 1977) – Opera singer (baritone). After graduating from high school he worked in a textile factory as a pay-roll clerk and acted as an amateur player. In 1941 he joined the army, became a prisoner of war, and returned in 1947. Then he learned singing under the direction of Géza László at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest. He won second prize at the Geneva International Singing Competition in 1947. He graduated in 1948 and was contracted by the Opera House in Budapest, where he remained till the end of his life. His first role was Tonio in Leoncavallo's Pagliacci (Bajazzo). His repertoire contained over 40 leading roles. Radnai's name was mainly associated with Italian music, especially with Verdi's works. He often performed in foreign countries (Austria, Romania, Canada and Turkey), making several albums. At concerts, or on Hungarian Radio, he often sang arias from operettas, chansons and songs. His main roles included title role in Verdi's Rigoletto; Amonasro in Verdi's Aïda; Iago In Verdi's Othello; Scarpia in Puccini's Tosca; Porgy in Gershwin's Porgy and Bess; Hans Sachs in Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (A Nürnbergi Mesterdalnokok); title role in Verdi's Falstaff, Tiborc in Erkel's Bánk bán; title role in Donizetti's Don Pasquale; title role in Kodály's Háry János; title role in Berg's Wozzeck; actor-king in Szokolay's Hamlet; Papageno in Mozart's The Magic Flute (A Varázusfuvola,) and Figaro in Rossini's The Barber of Seville (A szevillai borbély). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1975), the Merited Artist title (1965) and the Outstanding Artist title (1972). He was one of the outstanding artists of his age. – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7679.

Radnai Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 1 January 1892 - Budapest 4 November 1935) – Composer, Director of the Opera House, Budapest. He studied composition at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, under the direction of János (John) Koessler, later with Viktor Herzfeld, and continued his studies in Munich with Felix Mott. From 1912 he was a teacher at the Fodor Music High School in Budapest. From 1919 till his nomination as Director of the Opera House, he taught Music Theory at the Academy of Music. The Opera House was in a critical condition when he took over its management in 1925, and he remained its director to the end of his life. His directorship was a glorious period in the history of the Budapest Opera House. Radnai put on stage Pelléas et Mélisande of Debussy (1926) and Falstaff by Verdi (1927), and supported the new Hungarian works of Zoltán Kodály's Háry János in 1926, and Székelýfonó in 1932. Before 1924, he worked as a music critic for the journal Szózat, later for the National Newspaper (Nemzeti Újság). His works for orchestra include Suite symphonique (1912); Fairytales (Mese); Symphonic Poem (1915); Orban the Brave (Orbán vitéz), a symphonic poem (1919); Symphony of the Hungarians (Magyarok szimfóniája) (1921); Five Poems (Öt vers) (1924), and Rhapsody (Rapszodia) (1926). His stage works were: Birthday of the Infanta (Az infánsnő születésnapja) dance (1918); The One-time Lovers (Az egyszeri szerelmesek), comic opera (1926), also chamber music, piano works and songs. His written works include Handbook of Theoretical and Applied Modulation (A moduláció elméleti és gyakorlati kézikönyve) (Budapest, 1918) and Harmony (Összhangzattan) (1924). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7679. → Koessler, János.

Radnót, Magda (Madelaine) (Vicsápapáti, now Vycapy Opatovce, Slovakia, 17 October 1911 - Budapest, 3 February 1989) – Physician, ophthalmologist. She obtained her Medical Degree at the University of Pécs in 1935, and became an eye specialist in 1937. From 1936 to 1940 she carried out further studies on scholarship in various universities of Hungary. In 1939 and 1940 she was an eye specialist in the State Ophthalmic Hospital; between 1940 and 1946 she was a demonstrator in the Eye Clinic of Budapest; from 1946 to 1950 she was an assistant lecturer and, from 1946, an honorary lecturer. She received her Master's Degree in Medicine (candidate) in 1952. From 1951 until her retirement in 1982 she was Professor of Ophthalmology and Departmental Head at the University of Budapest. Magda Radnót was the founder of the National Ophthalmic Academy in 1979. She was mainly engaged in research on ophthalmic pathology, glaucoma, and the endocrinological aspects of ophthalmology. She was editor of the journal Ophthalmology (Szemészet) from 1950 to 1989. She was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1961, ordinary 1976). Her works include Die pathologische Histologie der Tränen-drüse (1939); Atlas of Eye Diseases, vols. i, ii (A szembetegségek atlasza, I-II) (1963), which also appeared in several other languages; and The Basic Outlines of Ophthalmology (A szemészet alapvonalai) (1971, 1978). She received the State Prize in 1965. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Radnóti, Aladár (Budapest, 13 June 1913 - Frankfurt am Main, 8 December 1972) – Archeologist and historian of antiquity. He completed his studies at the University of Budapest and, in 1938 he obtained his Ph.D. on the topic of Roman Bronze Vessels of Pannonia (A pannoniai római bronzedények). Returning from his study trip to Rome, he worked at the University between 1936 and 1938. Then, from 1938 until 1957, he was Section Head at the Hungarian National Museum. He used aerial photos of archeological sites. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, Radnóti left Hungary in 1957 and settled in Regensburg, Bavaria, where he conducted research work on the historic monuments of Regensburg, working as archeologist for the Bavarian Board of Trustees of Historic Monuments, and carrying out excavations of Iron-age and Roman-age materials. From 1959 he was contributor to the Augsburg Museum, where he mainly explored church structures. From 1962 he took part in teaching the auxiliary science of antiquity at the University of Frankfurt. His works include Die römischen Bronzgefäße von Pannonien (Roman Bronze Vessels of Pannonia) (1938), and The Distribution of Troops in Pannonia Inferior during the 2nd Century AD (in: Acta Archaeologica Hungarica, 1951). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456

Radnóti, Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 5 May 1909 - Abda, near Győr, between 6 and 10 November 1944) – Poet and literary translator. Radnóti lost his mother at birth and his father at the age of twelve. From 1919 he studied at the Trade School on Markó Street, Budapest, and then went on to the Commercial School on Izabella Street in 1923. He completed his studies in 1927 and, with the 1929 High School graduation certificate he enrolled at the University of Szeged in 1930. He chose to pursue studies to become a teacher of Hungarian and French languages under the tutelage of Sándor (Alexander) Sík. In the same year, his first independent volume of verse was published under the title Pagan Greeting (Pogány köszöntő). Radnóti spent the summer of 1931 in Paris. After his return to Hungary, he participated in the College of Artistic Youths of Szeged, a progressive youth movement of the University. This organization published Radnóti's The Wind Convalescences in Szeged (Szegeden lábadozó szél) in 1933. In 1934, under the name of Miklós Radnóczi, he received his Doctorate in Humanities with a dissertation on The Artistic Development of Margit Kaffka (Kaffka Margit művészi fejlődése). One year later, Radnóti earned a Degree in Education. On 11 August 1935, he married Fanni Gyarmati. It was at this time that his books of verse appeared: New Moon (Újhold) (1935), Go On, Condemned One! (Járkálj csak, halálraitélt!) (1936), and Precipitous Path (Meredek út) (1938). Between 5 September and 18 December 1940, Radnóti had to do forced labor in Northern Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). On 1 July 1942, Radnóti was recalled for labor duty in Transylvania, and then in Budapest. He was released from this obligation when a friend pulled some strings for him in 1943. This reprieve lasted until 20 May 1944, when he was called in to do forced labor for a third time. He did forced labor in Vác, then in Bor in Serbia at the end of May. During the September retreat of the Hungarian forces, Radnóti had to march west and, on the way, he was shot in the back of the head and killed in the vicinity of Abda. Radnóti's body, along with his final poems, was discovered in a mass grave in Abda. He began his poetic career with socialist overtones; but the dominant fascist climate, and his premonition of a violent death, brought out a more pure and strengthening tone in his poetry. In fact, it was during the war years that he became a poet of world standard. He portrayed movingly the fate of a person fearing for his life and driven to extremes. Radnóti carried out a good deal of translation of literary works, including The Selected Poems of Apollinaire (Apollinaire válogatott versei) (1940) and La Fontaine: Selected Stories (La Fontaine: Válogatott mesék) (1942). Radnóti's own writings included Overcast Sky (Tajtékos ég), a book of his final poems (1946), published posthumously; His Complete Poems and Translations (Összes versei és műfordításai) (1959), and Journal (Napló) (1989). In 1938, Radnóti was awarded the Baumgarten Prize. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.→Sík, Sándor; Kaffka, Margit; Vienna Award II.

In 1922, at the Greco-Roman Wrestling Championship held in Stockholm, he received second place. Between 1913 and 1922 he obtained seven Hungarian championship titles, and numerous outstanding international results were linked to his name; he also won at the “Little Olympics” of Göteborg in 1923. He developed several holds that became used worldwide. He was one of the pioneers of modern wrestling, even internationally. He played a significant role in the preparation and foundation of the International Council and the development of its by-laws. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Radványi, Géza (Grosschmid) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 26 September 1907 - Budapest, 26 November 1986) – Film director, scriptwriter and younger brother of Sándor (Alexander) Márai. While he was a high school student in Kassa, he published his first short story, The Executioner (A hóhér) in the journal Kassai Napló (Diary of Kassa). From 1926 to 1928 he worked as a journalist in Paris, Geneva and Madrid, mainly commissioned by news agencies. He became associated with the film trade in Paris, when he worked for the Selznick film agency. From 1933 he was an assistant director, scriptwriter and cutter in German and French film studios. In 1937 he married Mária Tasnády Fekete, a leading character of his later films. After France was occupied by German forces he operated in Budapest and created the films Europe Does not Answer (Európa nem válaszol); Closed Session (Zárt tárgyalás); A Woman Looks Back (Egy asszony visszanéz), and The Talking Robe (A beszélő köntös). Early in the 1940s, Radványi wrote a script from the novel The Washed-away Village (Az elsodort falu) by Dezső Szabó, but its direction did not materialize. From 1946 to 1948, he taught at the Academy of Dramatic Art. The direction of the film Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában), an outstanding post-war work, had great success both in Hungary and abroad. After 1947 he continued his creative work in Italy, where he entered into a contract. In 1952 and 1953, he worked in France and, from 1954 in Munich, where he worked as a teacher at the College of Cinematic Art. He first visited Hungary again in 1977. During 1979 and 1980, he was shooting the film Circus Maximus. A documentary film about him by László (Leslie) Révész appeared in 1977, and a TV documentary by Ádám Born in 1980. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1948. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Szabó, Dezső; Márai, Sándor; Tasnády Fekete, Mária.

Rády, József (Joseph) (Szekszárd, 22 September 1884 - Balatonkenese, 11 October 1957) – Fencer and Hussar officer. At the 1928 Summer Olympic Games in Amsterdam, he was a champion; and at the 1924 Paris Summer Olympic Games, his saber team had already won second place. At the Amsterdam Olympics of 1928 his rapier team received fifth place. In the European Championships, he was one of the contestants on the champion rapier team at Liège in 1930, and one of the competitors on the rapier team that was placed second in Vienna in 1931. He placed fourth in one-man saber-fencing in Budapest in 1926 and fifth in Oostende in 1925. He obtained a group championship medal in the colors of the Hungarian Athletic Club (MAC) in saber fencing in 1926; in individual rapier-fencing in 1927 and 1929; in group-championships in saber-fencing in 1922, 1925, 1926, 1928 and rapier-championships in 1925, 1926, 1927 and 1928. Rády was one of the best fencers of the 1920s, who proved outstanding in all three categories; he played a pioneering role in the introduction of épée-fencing. After retiring from active sport, he was for years one of the leaders of the Hungarian Fencing Council. In the Hussar military field, he attained the rank of colonel. – B: 0883, 1031; T: 7456.

Ragged Guard (Rongyosgárda) – The western Őrvidék (now Burgenland, Austria) part of Historic Hungary was to be annexed to Austria, according to the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920). However, Hungary protested against this. Discussions with the Austrian delegates led to no result. Earlier on, a military detachment, the so-called Ragged Guard, consisting of demobilized officers, was organized after World War I by Pál (Paul) Prónay. Its aim was to punish the culprits of atrocities committed during the short-lived Council (Soviet) Republic of 1919. When the terms of the Dictated Peace became known, Prónay reorganized the Ragged Guard. Those who joined the Guard were civilians, peasants from the Great Plain, university students, discharged military officers, the soldiers of the Szekler Division, and even some 300 Bosnian-Albanians. Iván Héjjas was another important leader besides Prónay. The youth of the nation flocked to them. In addition to the insurgents, there was the battalion stationed at Sopron, which was at the command of the Entente Committee supervising the evacuation and transfer of the area. When Austrian military units tried to seize the area by force, faced with the resistance of the Ragged Guard, they retreated. Prónay announced the formation of an independent Lajta Banate at Felsőőr (now Oberwart, Austria). Finally, a plebiscite (the only one allowed in the Carpathian Basin) was to decide upon where Sopron and environs should belong. The plebiscite favored Hungary. In 1938, prior to the First Vienna Award, the Ragged Guard was again reorganized. Early in October, about a thousand “ragged” volunteers infiltrated the Czechoslovakian frontier, in order to exert pressure on the Czechoslovakian government and on international public opinion. With guerilla tactics the guards caused general alarm, then proceeded northward and moved across into friendly Poland. When the First Vienna Award of 2 November 1938 returned the southern part of Transcarpathia to Hungary, with Munkács (now Mukacheve, Ukraine), the attack against Munkács by Czech military forces, supported by tanks on 6 January 1939, was repelled by the Ragged Guard, assisted by the local population and the police. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Lenin Boys of Hungary; Lajtha Banat; Prónay, Pál; Gömbös Gyula; Sopron; Civitas fidelissima; Kozma, Miklós.

Raics, István (Stephen) (Baja, 25 May 1912 - Budapest, 3 October 1986) – Poet, writer, pianist, music critic, translator of literary works. He studied piano with Jenő (Eugene) Kerntler, Béla Bartók, Ditta Pásztor and György (George) Kósa, and composition with Ervin Major (all privately). Concurrently, he studied Law for a year and took a Medical Science course and Psychology for two years at the University of Budapest. He appeared as a concert pianist and accompanist a number of times with Mária Basilides and Erzsébet Török. From 1939 he worked as a populist writer, critic and musical writer. From 1940 to 1946 he was a music reviewer and also took on editorial work at the journal People of the East (Kelet Népe). From 1942 Raics was a member of the Anti-Fascist Historical Commemorative Committee; from late 1944 he pursued illegal activity. In 1946, he was appointed drama critic of the Hungarian Film Company. He was a youth educator throughout his career. From 1939 until his death, he was an external consultant for the Hungarian Radio. From 1960 to 1961 he worked as editor of the journal Hungarian Music (Magyar Zene); then, until 1970, he was critic for Musical Observer of Hungarian Television. From 1963 he was a regular writer for the journal Score (Muzsika); and from 1970 a member of the editorial board of the journal Music-Note (Kóta). He translated the lyrics of a number of operas into Hungarian, e.g. Britten's Peter Grimes, Mussorgsky's Sorochinsky Fair, and oratorios: Honegger's King David, Debussy's The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian, Stravinsky's Oedipus Rex, etc. He also wrote stage plays, poems and lyrics for choral works. He was awarded the Attila József Prize (1952) and the SZOT Prize (1982). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Basilides Mária; Török, Erzsébet; Bartók, Béla.

From 1924 he was a demonstrator at the Veterinary College; in 1925 he was an associate professor there. He carried out research mainly on kinesiology and founded the journal Hungarian Dog Breeder (Magyar kutyatenyésztő) (1933). He was President of the annual dog-shows from 1924 on. His main work was: The Hungarian Dogs (A magyar kutyák) (1924). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rajcsányi, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 16 February 1907 - Budapest, 5 September 1992) – Saber-fencer and sports leader. At the beginning of his sporting career in 1930, he obtained a Degree in Mechanical Engineering from the Budapest Polytechnic. He had been a fencer in the Wesselényi Fencers' Club from 1927, in the Hungarian Athletic Club (MAC) from 1935, in the Barátság (Friendship) Sports Club from 1945, in Vasas from 1947 and in the Budapest Petőfi Sports Club from 1951. He took part as much in saber fencing as in foil fencing, but he achieved substantial results in saber fencing. From 1934 to 1953 he competed in the Hungarian National Team. He took part in three Summer Olympic Games: in 1936 in Berlin, in 1948 in London and in 1952 in Helsinki, and in all three he was a member of the Hungarian team that won the Olympic championship. During the war years from 1939 to 1943 he was editor of the paper Illustrated Sport (Képes Sport). He became President of the Hungarian Fencing Association in 1956 for one year. The Hungarian Athletic Club was dissolved for political reasons after World War II but, in 1988, it was reinstated and Rajcsányi became its president. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Rajczy, Imre (Emeric) (Rasztovich) (Szombathely, 8 November 1911 - Buenos Aires, 31 March 1978) – Saber-fencer and foil-fencer. He was fencer of the Budapest University Athletic Club (BEAC) from 1929 to 1940. He took part in competitions, both in saber fencing and in foil fencing, but his international successes were reached in saber fencing. Between 1933 and 1939 he was a member of the Hungarian select saber-fencing team. In the 1936 Berlin Summer Olympic Games, he received an Olympic champion title as a member of the Hungarian team. A little earlier, he had obtained a degree in political science at the University of Budapest in 1935. He acted as Senior Secretary of the Hungarian National Students' Association and, from 1935, also Editor and publisher of the paper University and Youth (Egyetem és Ifjúság). From 1941 he worked as Secretary of the National Center of the Sport Associations of Hungarian Universities and Colleges while, from 1943, he was an assistant secretary at the Ministry of Culture and Religion, later becoming a ministerial secretary. From 1945 until his death, he lived in Argentina. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Rajczy, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest, 1 July 1914 - Montreal, Canada, 22 May 1957) – Actor. After years in the military, he studied acting. On completing the Academy of Dramatic Art, he became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) Budapest, in 1938. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he left Hungary and emigrated to Canada. His stage roles include Caliban in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar); Claudius in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Argan in Molière's The Hypochondriac, or The Imaginary Invalid (Le Malade Imaginaire, Képzelt beteg); Bánk bán and Petur bán in Katona's Bánk bán; Balga in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde, and Robespierre in Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája). He studied History of Music and Theology at the University of Innsbruck (1920 - 1926). He taught at the St Imre High School until 1945. Between 1932 and 1935 he studied music composition with Zoltán Kodály at the Academy of Music, Budapest. From 1945 to 1950, he was Prior at Pásztó, and a lecturer in folkmusic at the University of Budapest, until he was dismissed in 1950. From 1950 he worked at the Folk Music Department of the Ethnographical Museum. Rajeczky was Deputy-Director of the Folk-music Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1960 to 1967, and its temporary Director until his retirement. He was a member of the International Folk Music Council. From 1940 he led important research into medieval Hungarian music history, Gregorian music and Hungarian folk music; he edited the work Hungarian Music History and published numerous articles in periodicals of musicology and ethnography. He was an outstanding scholar of medieval Hungarian music. A selection of his works includes: The two Maria Hymns of the Pray Codex (1941); History and Gregorian Research (Népdaltörténet és gregorián kutatás) (1943); Folk Music Research (1943-1944); Shepherd Masses of Gyöngyös (A gyöngyösi pásztormisék) (1955); Melodiarum Hungariae Medii Aevi I. Hymni et sequentiae (Bp. 1956); Csángó Folkmusic vol. i, with Péter Pál Domokos (1956; II 1961); Medieval Polyphony in Hungary (Mittelalterliche Mehrstimmigkeit in Ungarn) (1966, in Hungarian 1968); Collection of Hungarian Folk-music vol. v. Dirges (A Magyar Népzene Tára V. Siratók), ed., (1966); Gregorian Chant, Folk-hymn, Folksong (Gregorián, népének, népdal) (1969); Gregorian Chant and Folk Singing (Gregorianik und Volksgesang) (1973); Music of the Early Renaissance in Hungary (A kora reneszánsz zenéje Magyarországon) (1981); Written Notes of Musical Memories (Ancient books and manuscripts) (Budapest, 1974), and Music History of Hungary vol. i., (Magyarország zenetörténete I. Középkor) (1988). He received the Erkel Prize (1978) and the Kossuth Prize (posthumous, 1990). – B: 0881, 0886, 0878, 1257, T: 7103. → Pray Codex; Music of the Hungarians.

Rajháthy, Tibor (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia 27 March 1920 - Victoria, BC, Canada, 1994) – Researcher of plant improvement. He received his secondary education in Szekszárd and obtained a Degree at the Agricultural Faculty of the Royal Hungarian Technical and Agrarian Science University. Concurrently, he conducted scientific research at the Institute of Plant Hereditary Sciences between 1940 and 1943. He served in the army in World War II, became a prisoner of war in the Soviet Union, was released in 1947. He became an assistant professor at the Agrarian Science University, where he lectured on theories of heredity and on plant improvement. He played an important role in the establishment of the Martonvásárhely Agricultural Research Institute, where he was Deputy Director between 1950 and 1956, and managed the genetics division.

After the defeat of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, Rajháthy emigrated to Canada and settled in Ottawa, where he was employed as a research worker in an institute affiliated with the Ministry of Agriculture. He organized and led two sample-gathering expeditions for the practical use of gene materials of wheat species growing in the wild and other utilizable indigenous plants found in the countries around the Atlantic Ocean and in the Near East. In 1976 he was appointed Director of the Ottawa Research Station, a position he held until his retirement in 1984. He discovered evolutionary and genetic affinity between barley and oat species and developed cytogenetic methods of enhancing genetic crossings from wild-species. He published three books on wheat and plant genetics, three chapters of books and more than a hundred scientific and technical papers relating to plant breeding, genetics and cytology. He attended international conferences and he was a guest lecturer in universities in Canada and the United States. The first generally accepted new oat variety, Tibor, was named after him in 1984. He was named a Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1980. He received the Distinguished Service Oat Improvement Award from the American Oat Workers Conference, 1982, and was an Honorary Life Member of the Association of Hungarian Plant Breeders. The University of Horticulture and Food Industry of Budapest conferred an honorary doctorate upon him in 1990. – B: 4342, 1020, T: 7675.

Rajk, László (Ladislav) (Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania, 8 March 1909 - Budapest 15 October 1949) – Politician. From 1929 he studied Hungarian and French at the Department of Philosophy of the University of Budapest. In 1930 he joined the illegal Communist Movement. In 1931 he became a member of the Laborers' Communist Party, and was arrested in that year and the following year. Since he could not continue his studies, from 1933 he worked as construction laborer. As leader of the Communist faction of the Hungarian Construction Laborers' National Union, he was one of the organizers and leaders of the Great Strike of 1935. In 1936, based on the decision of the Party, he left for Prague. From there, he left for Spain in 1937, and fought against fascism as the political Commissar of the Hungarian Battalion of the International Brigades. He was seriously wounded twice. Rajk also took part in the fights in which the International Brigades covered the retreat of the Republican armies and civilians toward the French border. After the defeat of the Spanish Republic, he was interned in 1939 in France. On the decision of the Party, he returned to Hungary in 1941, and was arrested and imprisoned in 1941. He was freed in September 1944 and became Secretary of the Central Committee of the Party, one of the leaders of the Hungarian Front. He was one of the main organizers of the resistance movement. In 1944, the Arrow Cross Party arrested him, was taken to Sopronkőhida and later to Germany; he returned to Hungary on 13 May 1945. After 1945, he became a member of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Communist Party, the Political Bureau and the Secretariat, and deputy in the National Assembly. Between May and November 1945 he was Secretary of the Budapest Party Committee; from November 1945 to 1st of March 1946 First-Secretary; from 20 March 1946 to 5 August 1948 Minister of Internal Affairs and until 20 May 1949 Minister of Foreign Affairs. On 30 May 1949 he was arrested based on false accusations, sentenced to death, and executed. In 1955 he was rehabilitated. On 6 October 1956, he was re-buried with full ceremony in the Cemetery of Kerepes. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7679. → Rajk Trial.

Rajk Trial (by the People's Court) – Part of Stalin's attempts to “unmask” and discredit Josip Broz Tito, the Yugoslav Communist leader, in the eyes of the Communist world because he refused to be subservient to Stalin, and to liquidate domestic party opposition. Similar show trials were held in several satellite countries, namely Slánsky in Czechoslovakia; Kostov in Bulgaria, while in Albania Koci Dzodze fell victim to Stalin's megalomania.

Though the security services had already arrested László (Leslie) Rajk, the ex-Minister of the Interior in May 1949, the Central Committee of the Hungarian Workers Party (the Communist Party) only announced the discovery of a “Trotskyite spy-conspiracy” on 16 June 1949, announcing at the same time expulsion from the Party: László Rajk, Tibor Szőnyi, Pál (Paul) Justus, and 17 of their associates for being the “spies of alien imperialist states”.

The judicial proceedings that followed were remarkable for their atmosphere of surrealism. All the accused were idealist or career Communists, who - only recently - had been high officials of state. And the investigators, the lawyers and judges were also among the favorites of the Communist Party, who - at that time - did not and could not foresee that soon they would follow their victims into the same prisons or torture chambers, where many of them would die without given a formal verdict. The investigation was overseen by Feodor Blelkin, the Soviet MVD Lieutenant-General responsible for South-Eastern Europe.

At the trial the accused admitted to committing all the acts they were accused of, confessing to an array of absurd and impossible crimes. Contrary to later practice, no physical torture or chemical agents were used to obtain these confessions, but an appeal to their Communist loyalty to do their best in the interest of the movement. They were told that their sentencing would only be for public show and that they would be freed secretly. In addition, they were well fed and were given ample supplies of coffee, tea, cakes, fruit and cigarettes. They were prepared for the trial in a club atmosphere, with several major rehearsals before the public trial. János (John) Kádár, the Communist Dictator of Hungary after 1956, took on the task of persuading László Rajk to cooperate.

The People's Court announced its decision on 24 September 1949. For crimes against the people, spying, treason, for furthering the war designs of the imperialist powers, and for participating in a conspiracy aiming at overthrowing the People's Democracy, the court sentenced László Rajk, Tibor Szőnyi and András (Andrew) Szalai to death. Lázár Brankov and Pál Justus received life imprisonment, and Milan Ogenyovics 9 year imprisonment. The case of György (George) Pálffy and Béla Korondy was transferred to a military tribunal, which sentenced them to death. The sentences were carried out immediately. Others were given lengthy prison sentences and many of them died in prison. While the victims of the Rajk trial were innocent in this case, ironically they were punished for actual crimes they had committed against the Hungarian nation while they were serving the Communist state in their various official positions.

The Rajk trial was eagerly orchestrated by Mátyás (Matthew) Rákosi, the Hungarian Communist Party leader, who, incidentally, was not favored by Stalin. László Rajk was not part of the foursome (Mátyás Rákosi, Ernő (Ernest) Gerő, Mihály (Michael) Farkas, and József (Joseph) Révai) who returned to Hungary from the Soviet Union after World War II and, as an idealistic Communist, he was a hindrance to Rákosi's desire for total control of the Communist Party. Rajk and his associates were “Western Communists”

(having spent their years of exile in the West) and, as a faction within the Party, they could be rivals to Rákosi's group. Thus, their liquidation well served Moscow's overall aim of totally isolating the Soviet sphere of influence from the West. However, Rákosi and his close associates, in their eagerness to please Stalin and simultaneously advance their hegemony within the Party, overlooked the fact that the psychological effects of the show trial could be catastrophic for the Hungarian Communists.

On 27 March 1956, during a district meeting of Party activists, Mátyás Rákosi announced that the trial of Rajk and his companions was based on "provocation". In the early days of October, Mihály Farkas, the infamous Communist Minister of Defense, was arrested and László Rajk and his fellow accused were rehabilitated posthumously.

On 6 October 1956, in the Kerepes Cemetery in Budapest, with the participation of tens of thousands of people, László Rajk, György (George) Pálffy, Tibor Szőnyi and András (Andrew) Szalai were re-buried with a somber ceremony, followed soon by the re-burial of the other illegally executed victims. The appearance of two hundred thousand people was not so much a demonstration of respect for those who were executed, as a demonstration against the oppressive Communist system and a harbinger of the momentous events soon to come. – B: 1230, 1590, 1821, T: 7665.→Rajk, László; Rákosi, Mátyás; Kádár, János; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Rajka, Ödön (Edmund) (Bonyhád, 21 July 1890 - Budapest, 19 January 1972) – Physician and dermatologist. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1912 and became a research student there. From 1914 to 1918 he was a medical officer in the First World War. From 1918 to 1947 he was a dermatologist at the Apponyi Polyclinic; from 1922 its Head Physician, and physician of the Teleia Outpatients' Department. From 1947 to 1962 he was the senior physician at the Metropolitan István Hospital and, from 1962 to 1966 he was Deputy Director there. In 1946 Rajka became an instructor and, from 1949 to 1951, he was titular associate professor in the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest. He was occupied mainly with allergic diseases and the role of microbes played in skin diseases. He developed several therapeutic methods. He was editor of the journal Dermatology (Bőrgyógyászat) and a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1949). In his honor, the Hungarian Dermatological Society established the Ödön Rajka memorial medal. His works include Allergieerscheinungen der Haut (with J. Lerner, 1927), and Skin and Venereal Diseases (Bőr- és nemibetegségek)(with L. Szodoray, 1952). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rajkai, Pál (Rauch) (Paul) (Féltorony, now Halbturm, Burgenland, Austria, 11 February. 1905 - Budapest, 23 September 1987) – Miller, engineer and inventor. He learned his trade and worked as a miller's assistant and a foreman in a number of mills between 1922 and 1926. In 1927 he acquired a diploma from the Deutsche Müllerschule Dippoldiswalde. From 1928, he was the chief-miller at the newly formed National Wheat and Flour Experimental Station (Országos Gabona- és Lisztkísérleti Állomás). From 1948 he was its Chief Officer and, from 1959 until his retirement in 1962, he was Department Chair of the Research Institute of the Mill Industry. His inventions include a lab-mill (laboratóriumi malom), with I. Tibor (1930), a device for measuring grain-hardness (búzakeményiségmérő), with I. Tibor (1935), and a grain-slicing machine (búzaszeletelő) gép) (1955). He received the Kossuth Prize in 1956. – B: 0883, 1160, 1822, T: 7456.→Grain Slicing Machine.

Rajnai, Gábor (Gabriel) (Joánovics) (Arad, 11 May 1885 - Budapest, 10 July 1961) – Actor. After completing his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, he was contracted with the National Theater of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) by Jenő Janovics in 1906, a year later to the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház) and finally, in 1908, to the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In 1918 he also appeared at the Faszor Cabaret. Between 1922 and 1935 he played at the Comedy Theater and, from 1935 he became a life member of the National Theater. From 1946 he was often ill and went into retirement. He made a brief return in 1947 and 1948. He acted in films since 1915. As a masculine and handsome character actor he could play a wide range of parts and even perform as an acrobat. His roles include: Henry Higgins in G.B. Shaw's Pygmalion; Evans in E. O'Neill's Strange Interlude (Különös közjáték); Péter Kádár in S. Márai's Adventure (Kaland); Antal in F. Molnár's One, Two, Three (Egy, kettő, három), and Ó Péter in G. Gárdonyi's The Story of Ida (Ida regénye). He acted in some 10 silent films such as: Typhoon (Tájfún) (1917); The Golden Man (Az aranyember) (1919); Ave Caesar! (1919), and The Laughing Woman (A kacagó asszony) (1930). There are more than 75 feature films to his credit including Harvest (Aratás) (Austrian, 1936); Tale from Pest (Pesti mese) (1937); Queen Elizabeth (Erzsébet királyné) (1941); Deadly Kiss (Halálos csók) (1942); Hot Fields (Forró mezők) (1948); Erkel (1952); Spring in Budapest (Budapesti tavasz) (1955), and Crazy April (Bolond Április) (1957). He received the Merited Artist title in 1955. – B: 1427, 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Rájnis, József S.J. (Joseph) (Reinisch) (Kőszeg, 4 June 1741 - Keszthely, 23 September 1812) – Poet, and from 1757 on, a member of the Jesuit Order. Rájnis studied in Vienna and later in Leoben, Austria. It was in the latter place that he began to compose Hungarian verses according to Greek versification patterns. In 1761 he worked in Esztergom as a teacher. The year 1771 saw him ordained as a Jesuit in Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). With the dissolution of the Jesuit Order in 1773, he became a priest in Győr. From 1773 to 1783 Rájnis taught theology; but afterwards restricted himself to pastoral duties, as a result of illness. In 1802 he retired. From 1809 he was the supervisor of studies at the Georgikon in Keszthely. Along with Miklós Révai and Dávid Baróti Szabó, he was a part of a group called the Classical Triad. Rájnis engaged in frequent heated debates with Mátyás Rát, Dávid Baróti Szabó and János Batsányi about classical versification patterns and on translation questions. It was in the course of these debates that the question of the standardization of the Hungarian language first arose, which made their work an immediate precursor to the language renewal movement. Rájnis' poetic accomplishments were not particularly successful. His poems were published in Elemér Császár's Classical Poets (Deákos költők) (1914). Rájnis' main literary accomplishments were Guide To Hungarian Helicon (A Magyar Helikonra vezérlő kalauz) (1781); Hungarian Virgil, vol. i, Eclogues (Magyar Virgilius I, Eklogák) (1789), and Hungarian Virgil, vol. ii (Magyar Virgilius II) (1814). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.→Révai, Miklós; Baróti Szabó, Dávid; Batsányi, János; Rát, Mátyás; Kazinczy, Ferenc.

Rajniss, Ferenc (Francis) Bártfa, now Bardejov, Slovakia, 24 July 1893 - Budapest, 12 March 1946) – Journalist and politician. He completed his higher studies at the Teachers College of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). In World War I, he became a prisoner of war in Russia. He returned home in 1922 and worked as secretary for the National Social Insurance Institute (Országos Társadalombiztosítási Intézet – OTI); in 1923 he became its Deputy Director. In 1935 Rajniss was elected Member of Parliament, representing Dombóvár; in he 1939 represented the Hungarian Life Party (Magyar Élet Pártja – MÉP), but crossed over to the Hungarian Renewal Party (Magyar Megújulás Pártja). He became editor for the paper New Hungarians (Új Magyarország), and later, during World War II, Editor for the illustrated magazine Hungarian Courier (Magyar Futár). From 16 October 1944 he was Minister of Education and Religion in the right-wing Szálasi Government. After the War, when Hungary was under Soviet military occupation, the Communist People's Court sentenced him to death as a “war criminal” and he was executed. – B: 1984, 1031, T: 7456. → Szálasi, Ferenc.

Rajz, János (John) (Budapest, 13 February 1907 - Budapest, 20 July 1981) – Actor. He was the descendant of a family of actors. He appeared on stage for the first time in Debrecen in 1924. From 1925 to 1927 he played in Szeged; in 1927 and 1928, in Debrecen; in 1928 and 1929 in several country towns, then, in 1929 and 1930 he was at the King Theater (Király Színház), Budapest. In 1930 and 1931 he worked in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia); from 1931 to 1933 in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). Between 1933 and 1939 he was at the National Theater of Miskolc, and from 1939 to 1940 in Kassa (when it was returned to Hungary by the First Vienna Award); in 1940 and 1941 he was in Pécs; from 1941 to 1943 in Debrecen; in 1943 and 1944 in Szabadka (now Subotica, when Hungary re-took the Bácska area, after Yugoslavia disintegrated in the German-Yugoslav war). In 1944 and 1945 he was in Debrecen again and, from 1945 to 1951, at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged. In 1951 and 1952 he was on the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad) in Budapest and, in 1952 he was contracted with the National Theater, Budapest, from where he retired in 1976. Rajz started his career as a comic dancer, mainly in operettas and, for a few years, also appeared as an acrobat. Later on, in the National Theater, he excelled as a character actor. He possessed a short physique, a characteristic voice, simple acting devices, excellent characterization ability, and a dry sense of humor. His stage roles included Second-Lieutenant Petrovics in I. Kálmán's The Circus Princess (Cirkuszhercegnő); George in Steinbeck's Of Mice and Men (Egerek és emberek); Scapin in Molière's Les Fourberies de Scapin, adapted into an English play under the title Scapino (Scapin furgangjai); Harpagon in Molière's The Miser (A fősvény); Balga in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Corvino in Ben Jonson's Volpone; Scribe in L. Németh's Galilei; Murderer I in Shakespeare's Macbeth, and Reverend in G.B. Shaw's Mrs. Warren's Profession (Warrenné mestersége). There are more than 70 feature and TV films to his credit, including Swan Song (Hattyúdal) (1963); Thousand Years (Ezer év) (TV, 1964); Death of the Doctor (Az orvos halála) (1963); The Talking Robe (A beszélő köntös) (1964); The Last Judgement (Az utolsó ítélet) (TV, 1970); The Black City (A fekete város) (TV, 1971), and A Kid on a White Horse (Egy srác fehér lovon) (1973). He also appeared on radio. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1958), Mari Jászai Prize (1957); and the titles of Artist of Merit (1965) and Outstanding Artist (1973). – B: 1445, 1427, T: 7456.

Rákóczi Emigration - After eight years of fighting (1703-1711), the Kuruc soldiers of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1676-1735) dispersed all over the world. Prince Rákóczi - who refused to accept the offered amnesty - went to Poland after the Peace of Szatmár (1711) with many of his close followers. The Prince supported them on his lands as long as he could, then chose France as the location of his voluntary exile. On 13 February 1713 he was received by the French King. Under the name "Count of Sáros" he lived at Versailles as the king's guest until the Peace of Utrecht. After the Peace of Rastadt (which failed to deal with the question of Hungary), he went into seclusion at Grosbois in the cloister of the Cistercian monks.

After the death of Louis XIV in 1717, the Prince left France and, with forty of his followers, he settled in Adrianopolis (now Edirne) in Turkey. His retinue, with the arrival of more Hungarians, later increased to 1000. On 16 July 1719, the Turkish Court removed them to Yenikoy in Asia Minor. The defeat of the Turks in the Two-Year War ended the last hope for Hungarian freedom. However, since Sultan Achmed III had a great respect for Rákóczi, he treated him and his retinue as his guests. On 16 April 1720, he re-settled them in Rodosto (now Tekirdag) on the shores of the Sea of Marmara, providing a whole street for their accommodation.

Ferenc Rákóczi II spent 18 years in Turkey. He died at the age of 59, and was buried beside his mother, Ilona Zrinyi, and his stepfather, Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly, in the Saint Benoit Church in the Galata district of Istanbul. Many of his loyal companions, mostly nameless Kuruc soldiers, rest in the cemetery of Rodosto.

In 1736 Prince József (Joseph) Rákóczi, Rákóczi's younger son, arrived in Rodosto to take over the leadership of the Kuruc emigration. He tried unsuccessfully to re-awaken the idea of the insurrection, inspired and led by his father. He died in 1738.

Kelemen Mikes (1690-1761) was twenty-seven when - as the secretary and chamberlain of Ferenc Rákóczi - he wrote his first letter from Turkey, and began his last letter aged 69, Christmas Eve of 1758, 23 years after the death of the Prince.

For over 150 years, the Turkish State provided the maintenance of the graves of the Hungarian exiles, until the Viennese Court could no longer resist the requests of the Hungarian nation to allow the return of the remains of Ferenc Rákóczi and his exiled companions. On 24 October 1906, the King signed the bill, Article XX, 1906, authorizing their homecoming. Kálmán (Coloman) Thaly engaged the historian Vilmos (William) Fraknói, to search for and identify the remains of the Prince and his closest companions. The passage of the funeral caskets from the border crossing at Orsova, through Budapest to Kassa, was a national occasion. As the train transporting the caskets passed through the country, the simple people of the land showed their respect for their national hero by lining up spontaneously with their heads bared in the cool fall night. Rákóczi and his closest associates were accorded their final resting place in the crypt of the Szent Erzsébet (Saint Elizabeth) Church of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), while the remains of Imre Thököly were placed in the Thököly Mauzoleum of the new Lutheran church of Késmark (now Kežmarok, Slovakia). – B: 1230, 1031, T: 7665.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Rákóczi Insurrection; Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Mikes, Kelemen; Thaly, Kálmán; Kuruc, Labanc.

Rákóczi I, Count Ferenc (Gyulafehérvár, now Alba Iulia, Romania, 24 February 1645 - Zboro, now Zborov in Slovakia, 8 July 1676) – Reigning Prince of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), son of Prince György Rákóczi II and Zsófia Báthory. He was elected by the Diet in 1652 but, after the death of his father, he lost his throne and moved to his estates in Hungary where, under his mother’s influence, he abandoned his Protestant faith and converted to Catholicism. In 1666 he married Ilona Zrinyi and joined the unsuccessful “Wesselényi Conspiracy”. He was the military leader of the uprising and called to arms the nobility of Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). After the capture of Péter Zrinyi, one of the leaders of the uprising, he laid down his arms and pleaded for mercy, which he received for a ransom of 300,000 forints and later, in 1644, he was raised to the rank of Count. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7658. → Wesselényi Conspiracy; Wesslényi, Count Ferenc; Zrinyi, Countess Ilona; Zrinyi, Count Peter.

Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc (Borsi, 27 March 1676 - Rodostó, now Tekirdag, Turkey, 8 April 1735) – Prince of Transylvania, Reigning Prince of the United Estates of Hungary, leader of the insurrectionist army of independence against the Habsburgs, Hungarian Count, Prince of the Holy Roman Empire, who used only his title of Count in exile in France, never his princely title. He was the son of Ferenc Rákóczi I, and Ilona Zrinyi. His ancestors were well-known commanders in the battles against the Turks and the Germans; his mother was the daughter of the martyred Count Péter Zrinyi, and the niece of Count Miklós Zrinyi, the poet and general; on the paternal side, his ancestors were of the famous Rákóczi and Báthory lineage. At the end of the 17th century, his mother’s second husband, Count Imre Thököly, led a freedom fight against Austrian oppression. When Thököly suffered defeat, his wife continued to defend the fortress of Munkács for three years against the Austrian troops. Rákóczi fought at his mother’s side in the fortress, between 1685 and 1688, until its surrender. The Viennese court sent the twelve-year old boy to the Jesuit Cloister at Neuhaus in southern Bohemia for his education, in order to alienate him from his own Hungarian nation. It was hoped that the young prince would embrace religion and become a monk; but in 1692, the young man rejected the guardianship. He lived in Vienna, later in Italy, married Countess Charlotte Amalie of Hessen-Rheinfels-Wanfried in 1694, and settled in Hungary. Despite his weak Hungarian language skills, he was elected hereditary governor of County Sáros, at the age of 18.

Oil painting

While the young Rákóczi had seen the oppression of the serfs, his ancestral ties were not strong enough to overcome the influence of his German training and therefore, in 1697, he declined the leadership of the uprising army and departed to Vienna.

However, his ties with Hungary remained strong and he was affected by the many unsuccessful attempts at gaining freedom. Count Miklós Bercsényi’s efforts especially impressed him and he decided to take action. He commenced the organization of the nobility of Hungary's eastern counties and, in 1700, sought assistance from the French King Louis XIV. However, the betrayal by the French envoy, Longueval, resulted in his imprisonment in Wiener Neustadt, Austria. The efforts of his wife and Captain Gottfried Lehmann of Prussian descent enabled him to escape on 7 November 1701 to Poland.

On 6 May 1703, near the Hungarian border at Brezna, Poland, Rákóczi issued the Proclamation of Brezna, in which he offered freedom to all, who would take up arms by his side against the foreign oppressors. Under the protection of the Blessed Virgin Mary, serfs, city-dwellers, the titled and lesser nobility, Hungarians, Ruthenians and Slovaks joined the Rákóczi Freedom Fight. All fought united under the Rákóczi banner in battles led by Rákóczi himself. He was elected Prince of Transylvania on 8 July 1704. The Diet of Szécsény elected him Commander-in-Chief of the associated states of Hungary. He conducted extensive diplomatic activities.

He did not impose taxes on the impoverished nation but used his considerable wealth and the revenue from the mines to sponsor the expenses of the long warfare. He sought foreign aid, but received only verbal encouragement, little financial backing, and no soldiers. The Freedom Fight could not break the foreign isolation. He commenced peace negotiations with the Viennese court in 1704 and 1706, but to no avail. When he left Hungary for a diplomatic mission in Russia on 22 February 1711, in his absence and without his knowledge, Count Sándor Károlyi signed the Szatmár Peace Agreement that he never acknowledged. After this, for a while, he lived in Poland and, from 1713 in France. In 1715 he retired to a cloister. In 1717, at the invitation of the Turkish Sultan, he and his entourage moved to Turkey, hoping that the Austrian-Turkish war would provide an opportunity to resume the Freedom Fight. After 1818, the Turkish government assigned them to Rodosto (now Tekirdag) as their new dwelling place, where he lived for the rest of his life. When he passed away at the age of sixty, an aged but wise man, his body was embalmed and buried alongside his mother in Istanbul Cathedral, while his heart was transported to the Cloister of Grisbois, France. In 1906, the Nation brought his remains back to Hungary and, after the state funeral, his final resting place was in the Cathedral of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia).

Rákóczi wanted to establish a national state with a central government, a standing army and prosperous trade with its neighbors. However, the jealousy of some members of the nobility reduced his constitutional powers. His upbringing, education and political acumen were far superior to that of the noblemen of his era. He was unable to protect the serfs from the harsh rule of the landowners and consequently the serfs lost faith in the movement and slowly returned to their lands. – B: 0883, 1288, 1020, 1031, T: 7658.→Thököly, Count Imre, Zrinyi, Contess Ilona; Rákóczi I, Count Ferenc; Bercsényi, Count Miklós; Rákóczi Insurrection; Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Recrudescunt...; Szatmár, Peace of; Rodosto.

Rákóczi I, Prince György (George) (Szerencs, 8 June 1593 - Gyulafehérvár, now Alba Iulia, Romania, 11 October 1648) – Prince of Transylvania between 1630 and 1648, son of Prince Zsigmond Rákóczi and Anna Gerendi. He was Captain of Ónod and later, in 1615, Governor of County Borsod. He was General of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) in the wars with Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen, and later corps-commander. He was considered to be the wealthiest aristocrat of the Reformed faith in Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now in Slovakia). He was elected Reigning Prince of Transylvania by the Diet of Segesvár, recaptured the crown lands occupied by private landowners, broke down the power of the landowners, confiscated their lands, added some to the Rákóczi estates, and ruled with an iron fist. He aligned with Sweden and France in the Thirty Years War against Ferdinand III to protect the freedom of religion and constitutional rights. The Turkish Sultan forced an end to his war efforts, and the resulting Peace of Linz in 1644 returned the seven Tisza counties to him on 16 September 1645. His wife was Zsuzsanna (Susanna) Lorántffy, the great patron of the Reformed Churches and the College of Sárospatak. In his reign, Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) was able to develop in peaceful times. He was a devout Protestant of the Reformed Church and, with his wife he donated much of his fortune to the Church and used it for the improvement of education. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7658.→Rákóczi, Prince György II; Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna; Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Reformed College of Sárospatak.

Rákóczi II, Prince György (George) (Sárospatak, 30 January 1621 - Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 16 July 1660) – Reigning Prince of Transylvania between 1641 and 1660. Son of György (George) Rákóczi I, and Zsuzsanna (Susanna) Lorántffy, Captain General of Várad, Governor of the County of Bihar. He was elected Reigning Prince on 3 February 1642, during the lifetime of his father. He fought against Ferdinand III, was Governor of Transylvania, and ascended the throne on 11 October 1648. Ever since his youth Prince Rákóczi coveted the crown of Poland, and in 1648, he entered into an alliance with Bogdan Chmielnicki, hetman of the Cossacks. He placed Moldavia and Wallachia under his feudal tenure, aligned with the Swedes to attack and capture the Polish King John II Casimir Vasa, and occupied Warsaw. Abandoned by Sweden, he was defeated by Poland near the River Vistula, forced into a humiliating peace arrangement and was later captured by the Tartars. He escaped and returned to Hungary with his ragged band. Rákóczi was forced to step down as Reigning Prince by the estates and he was replaced by Ferenc (Francis) Rhédey as Reigning Prince of Transylvania. Rákóczi regained the throne but couldn't obtain the backing of the Turks. The Estates elected Ákos Barcsai, whom Rákóczi defeated. He died of head injuries sustained in a battle against the Turkish Pasa of Buda at Szászfenés on 22 May 1660. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7658.→Rákóczi, Prince György I; Czeglédi, István.

Rákóczi Marching Song (Rákóczi Induló) – A Hungarian marching song, whose origin is obscure and whose author is unknown. It was developed from motives of the old Rákóczi Song and the tárogató (horn) signals of the camps of Rákóczi's insurrectionists. As for its melody – as indicated by Zoltán Kodály and Bencze (Benedict) Szabolcsi – it belongs to the extensive folk music traditions, the roots of which go back to the 17th century.

Its author is said to have been János (John) Bihari, who performed it as early as 1809, and played it often in the 1820s. Some say it originated from the notated Rákóczi Song; according to others, Miklós (Nicholas) Scholl, who was concertmaster to the Esterházy Regiment, wrote down the music of János (John) Bihari and orchestrated it in 1816. It is certain that it was publicly played in Pest in 1817 and in Kolozsvár in 1822. On 9 December 1838, also on 4 and 12 January 1840, Ferenc (Franz) Liszt played it in a fantasy form with stirring results. Hector Berlioz heard it in Pest and included the music in his composition La Damnation de Faust, and played it with great success at his first Hungarian concert on 15 February 1846. Pianist Vladimir Horowitz composed a variation on the Rákóczi March with elements of both the Liszt and Berlioz versions. Liszt wrote it down – repeatedly – in several versions, of which the best known is the 15th Hungarian Rhapsody; several of its motives were used by Liszt in his “Coronation Mass”, prepared in 1867, although at the end of the 1850s – during the Bach Era – its performance was prohibited. Today it is one of the most popular Hungarian marching songs. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 7684.→Kodály, Zoltán, Szabolcsi, Bence, Bihari, János; Liszt, Ferenc; Bach Era.

Rakonitz, Jenő (Eugene) (Budapest, 28 March 1899 - Budapest, 21 June 1963) – Physician. He studied Medicine at the universities of Budapest, Florence and Pécs, and it was at the latter that he obtained his Medical Degree in 1924. During the years 1925 to 1929 he was a demonstrator in the Neurological and Mental Clinic of the University of Budapest. In 1946 he became an honorary lecturer. From 1948 he was Chief Physician of the Szabolcs Street Hospital, Director of its Neurological Clinic, and a full professor. His research activity was mainly in the field of the pathology of the vegetative nervous system; he was the first to describe the clinical appearance of heredodegenerative biballism. His main work was: Die Eigenerkrankung des Corpus Luysii. Der erste heredodegenerative Biballismus-Fall (The Natural Disease of the Corpus Luysii. The first hereditary-degenerative Biballismus-Case), in: Zeitschrift für Neurologie und Psychologie (1933). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rákosi, Jenő (Eugene) (Kremsner) (Acsád, 12 November 1842 - Budapest, 8 February 1929) – Theater manager, director, writer and publicist. In 1867, on completing his studies in Law, he became a contributor to the paper Pest Diary (Pesti Napló) with articles supporting the policies of Ferenc Deák. He founded the newspaper entitled Reform in 1869, and edited it until 1875; then, as a correspondent, returned to the Pesti Napló, and became the first manager of the Folk Theater (Népszínház) (1875-1881); he also Magyarized his name to Rákosi. His first literary success was achieved with his comedy “Aesopus”, performed at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) in 1867. In 1869 he became a member of the Kisfaludy Society. In 1881, he and József Csukási established the Budapest Herald (Budapesti Hirlap), of which he was the Editor-in-Chief from 1891. From 1925 Rákosi was the founder and president of the journalists’ and newspapermen’s circle, called Home (Otthon). In the 1890s, he established the Fashion Magazine (Divat Újság), promoting the policies of Count Albert Apponyi; and the tabloid, Evening Paper (Esti Újság). In 1896 he acquired nobility; in 1902 he became a member of the Upper House of Parliament. After the First World War, he was one of the front line champions of the Revisionist Movement, and was a member of many literary societies. In 1892 Rákosi became a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and an ordinary member in 1909. As a novelist, he was a student of the great Mór (Maurice) Jókai. As a director, he worked with great dramatic feeling and imagination. Apart from the classical and national dramas performed at the National Theater, he began to promote folk-plays, musicals and the developing Hungarian operettas. In 1881, he resumed journalism, took over the management of the paper Budapest Daily and, until 1925, he wrote in it a whole series of influential articles about the 30-million Hungarians, also against radicalism, and regarding the need to modify the 1920 Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon. Rákosi's stage works include The Magic of the Holy Crown (A Szent Korona Varázsa) (1867); The School of Love (A szerelem iskolája) (1874); Beautiful Helen (Szép Ilonka) (1881); The Greatest Fool (A legnagyobb bolond) (1882), and Madelaine (1884). His Shakespeare translations include As You Like It (Ahogy tetszik); Timon of Athens (Athéni Timon); Cymbeline; Hamlet; Henry VIII; Much Ado About Nothing (Sok hűhó semmiért); Comedy of Errors (Tévedések Játéka), and The Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár). He also translated works by Sullivan, Planquette and Aeschylus. His collected works were published in 1912. – B: 1068, 1257, 1445, T: 7659, 7456.→Rákosi, Viktor; Jókai, Mór; Apponyi, Count Albert; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Rákosi, Mátyás (Matthias) (Rosenfeld) (Ada, now in Serbia, 9 March 1892 - Gorkij, USSR, 5 February 1971) – Politician and First Secretary of the Hungarian Communist Party, later Hungarian Worker's Party. After graduating from the Keleti (Eastern) Academy, he worked as a clerk. Between 1912 and 1914 he studied and worked in Germany and Britain. He served in the army during World War I. He was a prisoner of war in Russia, where he became involved in the revolutionary organization of the Hungarian POWs. He returned home in May 1918, joined the Communists in November, becoming a territorial secretary. He was arrested on 20 February 1919 with the leaders of the Communist Party. During the period of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, he was Vice-Commissar of Commerce from 21 March to 3 April, and Commissar of Social Production from 3 April to 24 June. Rákosi took part in the Red Army's war against Czech intervention, and was National Commander of the Red Guard from 20 to 31 July. After the abolition of the Republic of the Soviets, he moved to Austria on 1 August 1919, where he was interned and later expelled. From 1920 he was a collaborator and Secretary of the Executive Committee of the Communist International (Komintern) in the USSR (1921). At the second congress of the Komintern (Moscow, 23 July - 7 August 1920), he presented the experiences of the Hungarian Soviet Republic. In the second half of 1924 he was sent to Hungary for illegal party activities. At the first congress of the Hungarian Communist Party (HCP, Magyar Kommunista Párt – MKP) in Vienna, (18- 25 August 1925), Rákosi was elected a member of the Central Committee. He was arrested in September 1925 in Hungary. As a result of national, then international protests, he was tried by a Peace Court and was sentenced to eight and a half years' imprisonment on 4 August 1926. After completion of the sentence, on 24 April 1934, he was not freed, but was tried again in January 1935 for his activity during the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic. His life was spared by the international protest movements, and he was sentenced to life imprisonment on 8 February 1936. On the initiative of the Soviet Government, he was handed over to Soviet authorities on 31 October 1940, in exchange for the Hungarian revolutionary flags captured by the Czarist troops in 1849. From 1941 to 1944 he was the leader of the Hungarian Communist refugees from the USSR. He coordinated the anti-fascist propaganda among the Hungarian POWs, as the editor of the Kossuth Radio in the Soviet Union. Rákosi returned to Hungary in January 1945, and became First-Secretary of the Hungarian Communist Party. He was a member of the National Council from 2 November to 7 December 1945; Deputy-Prime Minister and Minister of the State from 15 November 1945 to 5 September 1949; he was Minister of the State from 1 to 4 February 1946, and Deputy-Prime-Minister, carrying out the duties of the Prime Minister from 13 to 31 May 1947. After the unification of the Hungarian Communist Party with the Hungarian Social Democratic Party on 13 June 1948, Rákosi was made First-Secretary of the Hungarian Workers' Party (Magyar Dolgozók Pártja – MDP); from June 1945, he was the Party's First Secretary. He was Vice-President of the Ministerial Council from 5 September 1949 to 14 August 1952, and President of the Ministerial Council from 14 Aug 1952 to 4 July 1953. In the period of struggle for the victory of the people's democratic revolution, setting up the dictatorship of the proletariat and starting the Socialist edification, he was the Party's popular leader. Once the proletariat seized power, he created his own personality cult, and committed serious political errors. Catastrophic damage was done by his sectarian political trend, his dogmatic positions in ideology, voluntarism in economic policies, and the alteration of the bond between the Party and the masses. Rákosi bears a major responsibility for the illegal trials, the so-called mock-trials, which he initiated. Many became their victims innocently (high clerics such as Cardinal József Mindszenty, Bishop József Grósz, Lutheran Bishop Lajos Ordass, and even the fighters of the workers' movement, László Rajk and many others). The mistakes committed in the process of building Socialism were judged by the Central Committee of the Party at the meeting of 27 and 28 June 1953. By referring to the fight against the right-deviation, he attempted to reinstate the dogmatic policy in March 1955. Because he obstructed the investigation of the illegal trials, pursued in sustaining the justice of his wrong decisions, and because he obstructed the elimination of the consequences of the sectarian-dogmatic policy, in its meeting of 1-2 July 1956, the Central Committee discharged him from the position of First Secretary and excluded him from the Polit-Bureau. From July 1956 to the end of his life, Rákosi lived in the Soviet Union. After the Hungarian Revolution of 1956 was suppressed, his rights as a party member were withdrawn. In the meeting of 14-16 August 1956, the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party (Magyar Szocialist Munkáspárt – MSZMP), excluded him from the Party based on the full consideration of his activities and conduct. Rákosi wanted to create a Communist Hungary with an iron fist. During his 3.5 years of rule, he prosecuted 1.5 million people in a country of 9.5 million. He spent the rest of his life in writing his memoirs, attempting to explain his failed policy. After his death he was cremated and his urn was secretly buried in the Farkasrét cemetery, Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7679.→Red Terror in Hungary; Freedom Fight of 1956; Kádár, János.

Rákosi, Szidi (Kremsner) (Ötvös, 28 May 1852 - Budapest, 20 October 1935) – Actress, theatrical educator; sister of Jenő (Eugene) Rákosi. In 1867 she began her career at the Folk Theater (Népszínház) of Buda. She completed her studies at the School of Dramatic Art in 1870. From 1870 to 1872 she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest; from 1877 to 1885 she was on the stage of the Folk Theater (Népszínház), Budapest, managed by her brother, Jenő Rákosi; and from 1885 to 1934 she was again a member of the National Theater where, in 1909, she was made a life member, and in 1928 an honorary member. She also appeared in private theaters: in 1917 at the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház) and, in 1920, at the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház). Early on she played leading lady and naive roles, but her forte became roles in comedies. From 1892 she founded and managed a School of Dramatic Art, in which she trained generations of actors. Her roles include Beliza in Molière's The Learned

Ladies (Les Femmes savants – Az okos nők); Countess Szerémy in G. Csiky's The Grandmother (A nagymama); Beatrix in F. Molnár's The Swan (A hattyú); Tóni mama in K. Csathó's The New Relative (Az új rokon); Grálné in F. Herczeg's Golden Calf (Aranyborjú); Julis in Ibsen's Hedda Gabler, and Pásztorné in L. Zilahy's The General (A tábornok). She also had feature film roles, including The Lover (A szerető) (1918); Barbarians (Barbárok) (1919), and Captured Bird (Rabmadár) (1919). Besides being an outstanding actress, she trained a number of excellent actors in her School of Dramatic Art. – B: 1445, 1427, T: 7456.→Rákosi, Jenő; Rákosi Viktor.

Rákosi, Viktor (pen-names: Puszpáng, Vasálarc, mainly Sipulusz) (Ukk, 20 September 1860 - Budapest, 15 September 1923) – Writer and journalist. Brother of Jenő (Eugen) Rákosi and Szidi Rákosi. He spent his childhood in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) and attended school in Budapest. During his student years, he established a literary society and wrote dramas. Abandoning his law studies, he took up journalism; in 1879 he worked in the editorial office of the Nemzeti Hírlap (National Herald), later, at the Pest Herald (Pesti Hírlap), and from 1881 until his death, he was on the permanent editorial staff of the Budapesti Hírlap (Budapest Herald). From 1894 he established and edited the humor magazine Mike the Rooster (Kakas Márton). At first he used the pseudonyms Puszpáng and Vasálarc, and wrote short stories and feuilletons under the pseudonym Sipulusz. As a narrator, Rákosi drew his topics first and foremost from the War of Liberation of 1848-1849, such as Crumbling Tombstones (Korhadat fakeresztek) (1899); later, also from the events of the First World War. His most powerful work was the novel dealing with the fate of Hungarian villages in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) entitled The Silenced Bells (Elnémult harangok) (1903), which was adapted to a play by Dezső (Desider) Malonyai, and later in form of a film. As Member of Parliament, in his speeches he grappled with the serious nationality problem. He wrote a volume of short stories on World War I: New Tombstones (Új fakeresztek), and a novel on the former Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now in Slovakia) of the post-Trianon Treaty, entitled Hungarian Iliad (Magyar Iliász) (1922). As a writer for the youth Rákosi was among the best, as shown by works like: Story of a Raft (Egy tutaj története); Heroic Boys (Hős fiúk), and The Students of Vienna (A bécsi diákok). His collected works were published in 20 volumes. His stage works include Fairy of the Air (A levegő tündére); March 15th; Lion Cubs (Oroszlánkölyök), and Son of Rákóczi (Rákóczi fia). His writings were translated into the Finnish, French, Dutch, Polish, German, Italian, Russian, Portuguese, Romanian, Spanish, Serbian and Slovakian. He traveled extensively, covering the whole of Europe; represented Hungary with General István Türr at the 1888 International Congress in Venice. Literary societies invited him to become their member; in 1901 he was elected Member of Parliament on the party slate of those upholding the principles of 1848. Rákosi's name became renowned through his patriotic novels, stories and comic sketches; many people regarded him as the "Hungarian Mark Twain". – B: 0883, 1068, 1445, 1257, T: 7659, 7456.→Rákosi, Jenő; Rákosi, Szidi.

Ránki, György (1) (George) (Budapest 4 August 1930 - Budapest 19 February 1988) – Historian. Before completing his high school studies, he was deported by the Nazis to a concentration camp during World War II. He graduated from high school in 1949 and continued his studies at the Department of Economics of the University of Budapest from 1949 to 1951, and 1953. Later he became research assistant at the Institute of Historical Studies of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; from 1957 he was research associate; from 1960 a science secretary and head of department of the section on contemporary historical research; from 1962 he was Vice-President of the Academy of Sciences and President from 1986 until his death. In 1964 he was appointed professor at the University in Debrecen. In 1981 he was given the Chair of the Hungarian Studies at the University of Bloomington. At first he studied the economic history of 20th century Hungary, including industrial history. Later he turned to 19th and 20th century Eastern-European history, the European periphery in general, and finally the whole European economic history. His second research area was the political history of Hungary in the 20th century, its international range, covering the relations between the smaller states and the great powers. The third research area was the history of World War II. He was a member of the International Committee of Historical Studies from 1967 until his death; in 1985 he became its first vice-president. He was a member of the scientific council of the Institut für Europäische Geschichte of Mainz. He was redactor, later editor-in-chief of the periodical Hungarian Science (Magyar Tudomány), and a member of the editorial committee of the Danubian Historical Studies. His works include A Hundred Years of Hungarian Economy (A Magyar gazdaság száz éve) (1972); The History of World War II (A második világháború története) (1973); Economy and Society (Gazdaság és társadalom) (1974); 19 March 1944 - The German Occupation of Hungary (1944 március 19 - Magyarország német megszállása), 2-nd revised edition (1978); Handbuch der Europäischen Wirtschafts- und Sozialgeschichte. (Stuttgart, 1980); Hitler's Sixty-Eight Negotiations 1939-1944 (Hitler hatvannyolc tárgyalása 1939-1944) (1983), and Hungarian History – World History (1984). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1976, ordináry 1982), and a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1961). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7679.

Ránki, György (2) (George) (Budapest, 30 October 1907 - Budapest, 22 May 1992) – Composer. His studies in music were completed at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in the Faculty of Composition, as a student of Zoltán Kodály, between 1926 and 1930. Already from 1919 he was engaged in music composition and studies in folk music in the Ethnographic Museum. From 1948 to 1949 he lived in Paris and London. When he returned to Hungary, he became a free-lance composer. Besides choral and orchestral works, songs, chamber music pieces and folk music adaptations, he also composed three operas, five ballets, a children's opera, eight musical comedies, twenty stage musical accompaniments and more than fifty music scores for films. Ránki's works include King Pomádé's New Attire (Pomádé király új ruhája) opera (1953-1972); The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) operatic version (1970); Sir Pázmán (Pázmán lovag) ballet (1956); 1514, ballet (1961); Circus (Cirkusz) ballet (1965); Magic Drink (Varázsital) ballet (1975); Quo vadis (1979), and Musician Peter (Muzsikus Péter), a children's opera (1962). He composed a number of pieces for film, including Fire (Tűz) (1948); Shower (Zápor) (1960), and The Pendragon Legend (A Pendragon legenda) (1974). Ránki was a well-known composer of his age. He was also a recording artist. He was the recipient of a number of prizes including the Kossuth Prize (1954), the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1952, 1957), the titles of Artist of Merit (1967) and Outstanding Artist (1988), and also the Béla Bartók – Ditta Pásztor Prize (1987). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Ranódy László (Ladislav) (Zombor, now Sombor, Serbia, 14 September 1919 - Budapest, 14 October 1983) – Film director. He graduated from high school in Budapest and attended the University of Budapest from 1938. In the meantime, he was assistant-director and decor-designer of the Independent Stage Theater. From 1941 he was a trainee at the Hunnia Film Studio as assistant and scriptwriter. He completed his studies in 1942 at the Faculty of Law in the University of Pécs, with a dissertation on Management and Hungarian Film. From 1943 he was Director at the Hunnia Film Studio. In collaboration with István (Stephan) Szóts, he wrote a script based on the novel of Ferenc (Francis) Móra: Song from the Wheatfields (Ének a búzamezőkről), and the play of József (Joseph) Darvas: The Abyss (Szakadék), banned by the censors. After 1945 he directed the Film Department of the National Peasant's Party and, in 1956, the Film Department of the Petőfi Party. After 1948 he was Manager of the National Film Production Company, later the director of the MAFILM - Magyar Film. Between 1948 and 1954 Ranódy was professor at the Theater and Film Acting College. In 1965 and 1966 he was the director of the Film Company's actor-training studio; from 1963 to 1980 was the elected President of the Film Actors' and Film Industry's Employees Syndicate. His films received international acknowledgement. His awarded films are: Lark (Pacsirta) (Cannes, 1963); Pansy (Árvácska) (Karlovy Vary); Those With the Star (Csillagosok), banned for political reason (1950); The Sea Has Risen (Föltámadott a tenger), with Kálmán (Coloman) Nádasdy and Mihály (Michael) Szemes (1953); Love Traveling on Coach (Hintón járó szerelem) (1954); Abyss (Szakadék) (1956); Be Good Unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig) (1960); The Golden Kite (Aranysárkány) (1966), and A Six-Acre Rose Garden (Hatholdas rózsakert) (1970, TV-film, then cinema film). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1956), the title of Merited Artist (1969) and Outstanding Artist (1977). – B: 0883, 1504, T: 7679.→Szóts, István, Darvas, József, Móra, Ferenc.

Ransanus Codex – Petrus Ransanus' work, entitled Epithoma rerum Hungarorum (The Synopsis of the History of the Hungarians) is counted among the relics of King Ulászló II (Wladislas, 1490-1516) and, although it is one of the certified Corvina, it was never in the library of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490). The author was the Bishop of Sicily, who spent two years at the court of the Hungarian King as Ambassador to the King of Naples, where he wrote his book on the history of Hungary.

On the title page of the Codex, a miniature depicts King Mátyás I and Queen Beatrix on thrones, adorned in purple as they listen to Ransanus standing in front of them in episcopal vestments. The work was completed in 1490 after the death of the King. Two years later, Ransanus also died, and then one of his relatives, a Dominican monk of Palermo, painted over the coat of arms of Mátyás and Beatrix on the title page and substituted it with the coat of arms of King Ulászló II and Archbishop Tamás (Thomas) Bakócz. At the same time, he wrote a prologue to the book in which he dedicated the work to Tamás Bakócz. Respecting the persons involved, it is worth noting that, after the death of King Mátyás, Tamás Bakócz secretly performed the marriage of Beatrix to King Ulászló. Clearly, the Archbishop deliberately carried out the formal deceit while officiating at the marriage; and so, at the request of Ulászló II, Rome annulled the marriage in 1501. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7659.→Codex Literature; Matthias I, King; Ulászló II, King; Bakócz, Tamás.

Ranschburg, Jenő (Eugene) (Budapest, 19 December, 1935 – Budapest, 10 March 2011) – Psychologist. He graduated from the Imre Madách High School in Budapest, and completed his studies in 1961 at the Teacher Training Institute for Handicapped Children in Budapest. From 1964, he studied Psychology at the University of Budapest. He worked as a teacher for handicapped children in Velence (western Hungary), later in Budapest (1961-1963). From 1963 to 1965, he worked as a science associate at the Psychological Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in Budapest. Between 1967 and 1977, he was first an adjunct professor, and later professor at the Psychology Department of the University of Budapest. From 1977 to 1997, he was Departmental Head at the Institute of Psychology of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Between 2002 and 2011, he taught at the Academy of Szolnok. From 2007 to 2011, as Professor Emeritus, he taught at the Charles Robert (Robert Károly) Academy at Gyöngyös as well. He was General Secretary of the Hungarian Psychological Society (1975-1985); a member of the Hungarian Psychology Society; President and Honorary President of the National Child Protection League (1992-1996). His works include The Family Circle (A családi kör) (1977); Becoming Parents (Szülők lesznek) (1979); Love, Morals and Autonomy (Szeretet, erkölcs, autonómia) (1984, 1993), Fear, Rage and Aggression (Félelem, harag, agresszió) (2004); Searching for Each Other (Egymást keresik) (2007), and The Book for Parents (Szülők könyve) (2009). Other books of his are: Destiny, Fate and Free Will (Végzet, sors, szabad akarat) (Masters 2004); The Family: Battlefield and Isle of Peace (A család: harcmező és békeziget) (Masters, 2007), and The Secret of Our Future: the Child... (Jövőnk titka: a gyermek...) (Symposion, 2009). Jenő Ranschburg was an outstanding representative of child and family psychology. His awards include the Pro Scola Urbis Prize (2002), the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2005), the Free Man of Budapest (2006), the Prima Primiissima Prize (2006), and My Homeland Prize (2009). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Ranschburg, Pál (Paul) (Győr, 3 January 1870 - Budapest, 12 January 1945, during the siege of Budapest) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1896 – the millennial year – after which he practiced in the Neurological-Mental Clinic. In 1899 he founded the first Psycho-physical Laboratory in Hungary (which became the State Psycho-physical Laboratory in 1902). In 1909 he became an honorary lecturer. From 1915 he was the head physician and neurologist of the Apponyi Polyclinic; in 1918 became titular associate professor. In 1928 he founded the Hungarian Psychological Society, and was its President from 1928 to 1931, later its Honorary President. He investigated the mechanism and biological aspects of human mental development; his research on childhood psychology is significant – he was the author of the work Infantile Mind (A gyermeki elme). He described the inhibiting formula, which determines the mechanism of mental errors. He constructed an instrument for the examination of memory (Ranschburg-mnemometer). His works included The Human Intellect, vols. i, ii (Az emberi elme, I-II) (1923), The Regularity Force of Human Errors (Az emberi tévedések törvényszerűségei) (1939). – B: 1068, 1730, T: 7456.

Rapaics, Raymund (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Transylvania, Romania, 15 February 1885 - Budapest, 19 March 1954) – Botanist and biologist. He studied at the University of Budapest and the University of Breslau (Wrocław). In 1906 and 1907 he was a demonstrator in the Department of General Botany of the University of Budapest. He received his Ph.D. in 1907. Between 1907 and 1911 he was a demonstrator at the Agricultural Colleges of Kassa (now Kosice, Slovakia) and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). From 1911 to 1919 he taught botany at the Agricultural College of Pallag (a suburb of Debrecen). Because of the “progressive” mentality and leftist attitude he exhibited during the rule of the Hungarian (Soviet) Council Republic (21 March - 1 August 1919), he was removed from his position; in 1920 he had to go into retirement. He became a private official; from 1926 to 1929 he was employed in the Geological Institute, Budasprest. From 1929 to 1945 he was a librarian of the Natural Scientific Society, Budapest, and after 1945 one of its committee members. Rapaics' scientific activities ranged from botanical geography and taxonomy to coenology (the first to popularize it in Hungary). He made considerable educational and scientific efforts, wrote a great number of articles and published several books in the field of botany and biology. Until his death, he was engaged in a thorough study of the history of cultured plants and biology in Hungary. Most valuable is the graphic work he wrote on the ancient plant life of the Great Hungarian Plain, which refutes the earlier puszta-concept, though he ascribes too much importance to cultural factors. His works include Plant Geography of Hungary (Magyarország növényföldrajza) (1910); Plant-geographic Characteristics of the Great Plain (Az Alföld növényföldrajzi jelleme) (1918); The Community of Plants (A növények társadalma) (1925), and the History of Hungarian Biology (A magyar biológia története) (1953). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456

Rapaport, Dezső Dávid (Desiderius) (Munkács, now Mukacheve, Carpathian-Ukraine, 30 September 1911 - Stockbridge, MA., USA, 14 December 1960) – Psychologist. He obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Budapest in 1938. He was Head of the Faculty of Psychology of the New York Menninger Clinic between 1940 and 1942, and Chairman of the Research Committee and Manager of the Foundation between 1942 and 1948. He was a research professor of the Austen Riggs Center in Stockbridge from 1948 until his retirement. Rapaport attempted to fuse psychology and psychoanalysis during the term of his scientific engagement. He investigated the memory-influencing effects of emotions, i.e. he pondered the problems of the cognitive process in the light of psychoanalysis and experimental psychology. He played an important role in the advancement of the personality investigative method in Europe in the United States of America. – B: 0883, T: 7675.

Rápolthy, Lajos (Louis) (Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania, 15 March 1880 - Budapest, 25 October 1954) – Sculptor and numismatist. He studied at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest, and participated in the master class of the famous sculptor, Alajos (Aloysius) Stróbl. He prepared mainly portrait sculptures, which he exhibited in the Art Gallery of Budapest from 1912 on. For a few years, he taught at the Ankara Art School, Turkey; he made a statue of Mustafa Kemal. He was the creator of several artistic medals and plaques. His works include Bust of Michelangelo in Carrara, the Pietà of the Szombathely Cathedral, the relief of József Ürményi in Szeged, and The Boy Pouring Water (Vízöntő fiú) in the apartment block on Cegléd Avenue in Budapest. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Stróbl, Alajos.

Ráskai, Lea (15-16th century) – Dominican nun, transcriber, Codex copyist. She lived in the Convent on the Island of Hares in the Danube between Buda and Pest, now Margaret Island (Margit Sziget). She was well educated, versed in Latin, she knew her age and culture. She was probably a librarian in the Convent (1510-1527); and between 1510 and 1522 she manually copied five Codices: the Life of St. Margaret (Szent Margit élete) (1510); The Book of Proverbs (Példák könyve) (1510); Cornides Codex (1514-1519); Dominican Codex (1517) and the Croatian Codex (Horvát kódex) (1522). She wrote her name in the Cornides Codex, so that it can be established which Codex was copied by her. Besides the main religious themes, her notes illuminate the life of the Convent, and the peasant war of Dózsa in 1514. A Street in Budapest bears her name. – B: 0883, 0942, 1257, T: 7103.→Dózsa, György; Cornides Codex; Codex Litearture.

Rásonyi, László (Ladislav) (Liptószentmiklós, now Liptovsky Mikulas, Slovakia, 22 January 1899 - Budapest, 4 May 1984) – Linguist and Turkologist. He was educated at Kőrösbánya (now Baia de Criş, Transylvania, Romania) and Mezőtúr. He studied at the University of Budapest, obtaining his Ph.D. in Arts, majoring in Turkology, under Gyula (Julius) Németh; studied Hungarian linguistics under Zoltán Gombocz, and Hungarian history under Dávid Angyal; he also received a Degree in Education. From 1920 to 1922 he taught working students in an evening course at Újpest; then, from 1922 to 1935, he worked in the Library of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, where he became Head Librarian in 1935. When President Kemal Atatürk of Turkey decided to create a new Chair of Hungarology in the recently established University of Ankara, Rásonyi was invited to fill the chair in 1935. He in turn invited Béla Bartók to Turkey to carry out folk-song collecting. In 1940, when Northern Transylvania (Erdély) was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award, he was appointed to the Chair of Turkic Linguistics and History of the Turkic peoples at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he established an Institute of Turkology. In the postwar years, he developed the Library of Eastern Studies, a new section within the Library of the Academy of Sciences in Budapest, where he worked until his retirement in 1962. Then, for a second time, he was in a position to fill the chair of Hungarology in Ankara, where he worked from 1962 until 1971, when he returned to Hungary, aged 72, to become a committee member of the Kőrösi Csoma Society and renewed his friendship with Professor József Blaskovics, living in retirement in Prague. Rásonyi produced the first comprehensive synthesis of the history of all the Turkic peoples, and he analyzed the medieval Cumanian language. Rásonyi provided a new explanation for the ethnic group-name Székely (Szekler, i.e. Transylvanian Hungarian). He proved the Turkic origin of some two dozens Hungarian words (in addition to hundreds of others already proven). He showed conclusively that, in Transylvania in early medieval times, there existed a Turkic ethnic group, the bulaks or blaks, who preceded the Magyars there, and preceded by centuries the Vlach (Romanian) immigrants into Transylvania. The blacus (plural Blaci) of Anonymus could not have referred to the vlachs (Romanians), but to this Turkic people in Central Transylvania who, according to Rásonyi, were of Western Turkic-Karluk origin. His more than one hundred published works include The Caucasian Ancestral Home of Hungarians. The Land of Gyeretyán (A Magyarország Kaukázusi őshazája. Gyeretyán országa) (1942); The History of the Blaks or Bulaks. An Ancient Turkic Ethnic Group in Transylvania (in Magyar Múlt - Hungarian Past, 11 (2): 71-94, 1982); Turkish Grammar (Török nyelvtan) (1960); Bridges on the Danube. Old Turkic Peoples at the Danube (Hidak a Dunánál. A régi török népek a Dunánál) (1981), and Anomasticon Turcium (1986). – B: 0883, 7456, T: 7456.→Blaskovics, József; Vienna Award II.

Rát, Mátyás (Matthias) (Győr, 13 April 1749 - Győr, 5 February 1810) – Lutheran pastor and journalist. He pursued his studies in Győr, Modor, Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and at the Evangelical (Lutheran) Lyceum of Sopron. Later he traveled throughout Hungary and Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Between 1773 and 1778 he went abroad on a study tour, staying in Göttingen, Kassel, Nürnberg, Erlangen, Regensburg. He finally settled in Pozsony in 1779, where he established the first Hungarian-language newspaper, A Magyar Hírmondó (The Hungarian Courier) and, between 1780 and 1782, he edited, and more or less wrote it in its entirety. From 1789 until his death he was a pastor in Győr. A few of his prayer books appeared in print. He compiled a Latin-German-Hungarian dictionary, but was not able to publish it due to a lack of subscribers. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7659.→Rájnics, József.

Rátai, Dániel (Budapest, 1985 - ) – Inventor. His secondary studies were at the János Neumann School of Computer-Engineering, Budapest. He invented a device, named Leonar 3Do, which enables an ordinary personal computer to create a three-dimensional virtual picture. In 2005 he participated at the High School Science Fair of International Science and Engineering Fair (ISEF), at San José, California. His invention won four Grand Prix and two other Prizes. His invention can be useful in the field of Art, Engineering, Education, Medicine, and even computer games. He founded the 3D for All Kft. – B: 1993, T: 7103.→Neumann, von John.

Ráth, György (George) (Szeged, 6 May 1828 - Budapest, 7 July 1905) – Historical and legal writer, and collector of books and antiques. He was the elder brother of Mór (Maurice) Ráth. György Ráth studied Law and, in 1848, he worked in the Ministry of Finance as an assistant writer. He volunteered to fight in the 1848-1849 War of Independence. From 1860 Ráth was the presidential secretary to Justice György (George) Apponyi. Later he became a judge for the Royal Curia of Pest, and then the head of its Committee. Ráth was instrumental in promoting the cause of Hungarian fine arts and handicrafts. Between 1881 and 1896, he was Director of the Arts and Crafts Museum, to be named its Chief Director within a few years. From 1896 Ráth held a position in the Upper House of Parliament. He bequeathed his collection of valuable old Hungarian volumes to the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His widow left his antiques to the State, and these were brought together to form the György Ráth Museum, which was a component part of the Arts and Crafts Museum. The contents of this Museum were divided among other museums of Budapest in 1949, according to their contents. Ráth was the editor of the Book of Arts and Crafts, vols. i-ii (Az iparművészet könyve I-II) (1902-1905), and wrote its chapter pertaining to medallions. Apart from this work, he published pocket books on legal matters, on the history of the Hungarian Reformation, and on old Hungarian book artistry. His main works were Kossuth's Parliamentary Life, vols. i-ii (Kossuth parlamenti élete, I-II) (1850), and Life of the Hungarian National Guard and Hussars in Anecdotes (Honvéd- és huszárélet anekdotákban) (1850). Both of these writings were published under the pseudonym Rathkay. The National Judicial Conference (Az országbírói értekezéslet) (1861) was published under his own name. – B: 0883, 1257; T: 7688.→Ráth, Mór.

Ráth, Károly (Charles) (Buda, 20 February 1821 - Budapest, 30 July 1897) – Lawyer and mayor. After completing his legal studies he became a clerk at the Court of Appeal in 1841. He took part in the War of Independence; later, he opened an attorney's office. In 1860 he became a Member of the Council of the Lord Chief Justice. In 1867 he was Member of Parliament for the Józsefváros District of Pest. In 1871 he became Vice-President of the Royal Court of Appeals and a Member of the Upper House of Parliament. When the two parts of the Hungarian Capital, Buda and Pest were united, he became the first Mayor of Budapest in 1873. – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Rómer, Flóris; Ráth, Mór.

Ráth Mór (Maurice) (Szeged, 29 June 1829 - Budapest, 5 February 1903) – Bookseller and publisher; brother of György (George) Ráth. Mór Ráth studied at the Viennese Polytechnic and, in 1846, became an employee at the Geibel Bookseller in Pest. In 1849 he joined General Arthur Görgey's army. After the defeat of the Hungarian forces at Világos, Ráth at first returned to his former workplace, and later went to work for booksellers abroad. In 1857 he was able to open a bookstore in Pest, which went on to become a meeting place for leading political and cultural figures in the 1860s. Sidestepping the official censorship, he used fictitious titles to distribute Széchenyi's Blick and the works of Mihály Horváth. Ráth published the works of many notable Hungarian writers, including Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty, József (Joseph) Eötvös, János (John) Arany and Mihály (Michael) Tompa, a six-volume collection of the works of Shakespeare, and a decorative edition of the Nibelungenlied in Károly Szász's translation. Mór Ráth died after becoming insane. His main work was: A Pictorial Compilation of the Publications of Mór Ráth in Honor of the Millennium (Ráth Mór kiadásainak a millenium alkalmával közrebocsátott képes jegyzéke) (1896). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.→Ráth, György; Széchenyi, Count István; Horváth, Mihály; Vörösmarty, Mihály; Eötvös, Baron József; Arany, János; Tompa, Mihály.

Ráth-Végh István (until 1909 Ráth) (Budapest 23 November 1870 - Budapest 18 December 1959) – Jurist and historian of culture. He obtained his Ph.D. in Law from the University of Budapest and followed a career as a judge. From 1913 he was a judge of the Juvenile Court. From 1921 to 1934 he was active as a lawyer and was a permanent collaborator of the Urania Science Theater, established for the popularization of science. He collaborated with Károly (Charles) Grecsák in editing the Codex Hungaricus and the Judgment collections. He was a collaborator of the Journal of Jurisprudence (Jogtudományi Közlöny). In the last decades of his life, his activity was concentrated on writing. He also wrote novels, but more relevant are the popular satirical-humoristic treaties of cultural history. His works have been very popular. His works include Hungarian Curiosities (Magyar kuriózumok) (1934); The Cultural History of Human Stupidity (Az emberi butaság kultúrtörténete) (1938); The Romantic Biography of Marriage (A házasság regényes életrajza); Two Millennia's Superstitions (Két évezred babonái) (1955); Scuttlebutts and Historic Lies (Mendemondák és történelmi hazugságok) (1957); Royal Idol (Fejedelmi bálvány) (1957); The Comedy of Money (A pénz komédiája) (1957); Black Chronicle (Fekete krónika) (1958); The Comedy of the Book (A könyv komédiája) (1959); Human Stupidity (Az emberi butaság) (1961); Power and Money (Hatalom és pénz) (1964), and Colorful Histories (Tarka históriák) (1964). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7679.→Károly Grecsák.

Ráthonyi, Ákos Jr. (Budapest, 26 March 1908 - Munich, 1969) – Film director. He was married to actress Klári (Clare) Tolnay. He started his career at British International Pictures as an actor and assistant director. In 1929 he participated in the production of films for Fox and Paramount; later on, in Paris, he was assistant director to Sándor (Alexander) Korda. In 1933 he returned to the USA and, in 1935, he returned to Hungary. Generally, he directed lighthearted film comedies. Ráthonyi founded the Objective Film Production and Lending Company. Films directed by him include Pig in a Poke (Zsákbamaczka) (1932); Respecting the Exception (Tisztelet a kivételnek) (1936); The Lady is a Little Crotchety (A hölgy egy kissé bogaras) (1938); The Woman Always Succeeds (A nőnek mindig sikerül) (1939); Sarajevo (1940); Gold Watch (Aranyóra) (1945); The Sender is Unknown (A feladó ismeretlen) (1949); Mrs. Warren's Trade (Warrenné mestersége) (1959); On the Road to Sin (A bűn útján) (1965); Second-Hand Virgin (Szűz másodkézből) (1966), and Take off Your Clothes, Babe! (Vetkőzz le, baba!) (1968); the last five were filmed in the German Federal Republic. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Tolnay, Klári; Korda, Sir Sándor.

Rátkai, Márton (Martin) (Budapest, 18 November 1881 - Budapest, 18 September 1951) – Actor. He completed the School of Dramatic Art in 1903. He began his career in the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház) in Budapest, but was soon contracted to the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc. From 1905 to 1920 he was a member of László Beöthy's theaters. He appeared in the Buda Theaterette (Budai Szinkör); in 1915 and 1916 in the Télikert (Winter-garden); in 1920 in the Scale Theater (Skála Színház); in 1921 and 1922 he played in the USA. In the 1920s and early 1930s he played in the King Theater (Király Színház); for some years in the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) and, in the 1930s in various other theaters in Budapest. In 1929 he was a guest artist at the Theater an der Wien in Vienna. From 1941 he did not get a contract because of his Jewish origin; but from 1945 to 1951, under Soviet Communist occupation, he was again working as an actor of the National Theater. He was invited as a guest artist at the Merry Varieté (1945), the Artist (1945-1946), the Peace, the Inner City and the Comic Theaters of Budapest (1946). Rátkai taught theatrical profession at the Academy of Dramatic Art from 1948 to 1954. With his considerable knowledge of dancing, acrobatic movements, caricaturing and character-mimicking ability he became an ideal comic dancer, bringing him success in comic and tragi-comic roles of a number of classical dramas. His roles included The Fool in Shakespeare's King Lear; Zhupan in I. Kálmán's Countess Marica (Marica grófnő); Orgon in Molière's Tartuffe; Sartorius in G.B. Shaw's Widowers' Houses (Szerelmi házasság); Mayor in Gogol's The Inspector (A revizor), and Metternich in Rostand's The Eaglet (A safiók). His feature film roles included St Peter's Umbrella (Szent Péter esernyője) (1917); Harrison and Barrison (1917); The Wonder Doctor (A csodadoktor) (1926); Piri Knows Everything (Piri mindent tud) (1932); Auntie Iza (Iza néni) (1933); Purple Acacia (Lila ákác); Cornflower (Búzavirág); Borrowed Castle (Kölcsönként kastély) (1937); Gül baba (1940), and The Siege of Beszterce (Beszterce ostroma) (1948). He acted in a number of in feature films including Judit Simon (silent, 1915); White Rose (silent, 1919); Piri Knows All (Piri mindent tud) (1932); Saint Peter's Umbrella (Szent Péter Esernyője) (1935); Gül Baba (1940), and the Siege of Beszterce (Beszterce ostroma) (1948). He was awarded with the Kossuth Prize (1949), the Merited Artist title (1950), and the Outstanding Artist title (1951). – B: 1445, 0883, 0871, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.

Ratkó, Anna (Mrs. Károly Bíró) (Párkányánána, now Sturovo, Slovakia, 19 August 1903 - Budapest, 20 July 1981) – Politician and union leader. From 1916 she was employed at the Budapest Weapons and Machinery Factory (Fegyver és Gépgyár); from 1921 in the Domestic Textile Factory (Hazai Fésűsfonó) and, from 1929, in the Weiss Manfréd Works (Weiss Manfréd Művek) in Csepel. Beginning in 1927 Ratkó became involved in the Social Democratic Party in Pesterzsébet, and in the Textile Workers' Union. Her involvement in planning a strike in 1929 resulted in her arrest. From 1942 she was a member of the Hungarian Communist Party. Between 1945 and 1949 Ratkó was the Chief Secretary of the Union of Textile Workers, and Editor-in-Chief of the paper, Textile Worker (Textilmunkás), a newsletter for those employed in the industry. In the same years, she became a part of the Governing Committee, and later Vice-President of the National Committee of Hungarian Trade Unions (Szakszervezetek Országos Tanácsa – SZOT). From 11 June 1949 to 16 December 1950 Ratkó was Minister for People's Welfare (Népjóléti miniszter) and, from 16 December 1950 to 18 April 1953, she was Minister of Health. She issued the No. 8100-2/1953 Ministerial Order, which practically prohibited abortion – known as “Ratkó law.” Between 1953 and 1956 she was the secretary for SZOT. Ratkó retired in 1957, but continued on as President of the Textile Workers' Union. From 1975 until her death, she was honorary life president of this union. Ratkó held high-ranking positions in the Hungarian Communist Party from 1945 on, and she was a Member of Parliament from 1945 until 1956. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7688.

Ratkó, József (Joseph) (Budapest, 9 August 1936 - Nagykálló, 13 September 1989) – Poet. He began his schooling in Pesterzsébet, a suburb of Budapest; then continued his studies outside the Capital. Ratkó worked in state administration, in wine cellars, and was an assistant at the Institute of Architectural Science. He was a student at Szeged University, and specialized in Hungarian and Italian languages. From 1955 on, journals and magazines published his poems, including The Plain (Alföld); New Writing (Új Írás); Our Days (Napjaink); Tisza Region (Tiszatáj); Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom); Contemporary (Kortárs), and The People of Szabolcs and Szatmár (Szabolcs Szatmár Népe). Ratkó's first book of poems, Without Fear (Félelem nélkül) was published along with his autobiography in 1966. He worked in Nyíregyháza as a journalist, and later as the Director of the Gyula Krúdy District Library in Nagykálló. The anthology of poems, The Song Remains (Az ének megmarad) belongs to his poetic legacy. His work for the stage, a poetic drama, Help the King! (Segítsd a királyt!) was performed in 1985 at the Zsigmond Móricz Theatre in Nyíregyháza. Ratkó's works include Unarmed (Fegyvertelenül) poems (1968); My Illegal Dead Ones (Törvénytelen halottaim) poems (1975); Children's Things (Gyerekkholmi) poems for children (1980), and From Under the Stone (A kő alól) poems (1987). Ratkó received many distinctions. He was awarded the Attila József Prize (1969), the Lőrinc Szabó Prize (1971), the SZOT Prize (1975), the Mihály Váci Award (1979) and the Ernő Szép Prize (1985). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688. → Krúdy, Gyula.

Ratkóczy, Nándor (Pécs, 9 May 1891 - Budapest, 27 May 1977) – Physician, radiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1914. During 1914-1916 he was a research student in Radiology in No. 1 Clinic of Internal Medicine. From 1916 to 1922 he was a demonstrator in No. 2 Central Radiological Institute of the University; from 1922, a senior radiologist in No. 2 Clinic of Internal Medicine; in 1922 he became an honorary lecturer; in 1932 titular associate professor and, from 1942 to 1962, full Professor of Radiology at the University of Budapest. From 1956 to 1972 he was Director of the National Radiological and Radiation-Physical Institute. He was an honorary member of a number of societies abroad and, from 1953, President of the Hungarian Radiologist Society. He conducted research on the functional radiological examination of the stomach and the duodenum, radiological diagnostics and on radiation therapy. He recognized the swelling nature of lymphogranulomatosis and developed the so-called Ratkóczy protective-sitting position, which secures protection from radiation from the toes to halfway up to the chest. In Hungary, he was the first to lodge a recommendation for radiation protection (1928). His works include Radiological Diagnostics in Internal Medicine (Belgyógyászati röntgendiagnosztika) (1925) and Radiology (Radiológia) (1959). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rátonyi, Róbert (Budapest, 18 February 1923 - Budapest, 8 October 1992) – Actor. He studied acting in Kálmán Rózsahegyi's School of Dramatic Art, then studied violin-teaching at the Academy of Music. In the meantime, he appeared in revue and variety theaters. Between 1945 and 1971 he played at the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), but also appeared in other theaters of Budapest. From 1971 until his death (as life member) he was a member of the Thalia and Arizona Theaters, and played as a guest artist in other theaters. He was a multi-faceted artist, who became popular as a comic dancer in operettas, but he was also outstanding in dramatic character roles. He appeared in puppet shows and cabaret programs; he was the children's favorite as well. He wrote articles in daily papers and weeklies and published several books. He was also popular abroad, e.g. in America and the Soviet Union. Rátonyi's roles included Biondello in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (A makrancos hölgy); Fedotyik in Chekhov's Three Sisters (A három nővér); Brissard in F. Lehár's Count of Luxemburg (Luxemburg grófja); Bóni in I. Kálmán's Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő); French King in P. Kacsóh's John the Brave (János vitéz); Rudi in M. Eisemann's 77 Bastion Promenade (Bátyasétány 77), and Doolittle in Lerner-Loewe's My Fair Lady. He performed unforgettable roles in operettas, such as Countess Maritza (Marica gófnő); Ball in the Savoy (Bál a Szavoyban), and Maya. He also stage-managed: I. Kálmán's Gypsy Princess; F. Molnár's Doctor, Sir (Doktor úr); L.Lajtai's The Old Summer (A régi nyár), and K. Komjáthy's Wedding at Ipafa (Ipafai lakodalom). He wrote a drama entitled Miss Arizona (1981). There are more than 20 feature and TV films to his credit, including Playing with Love (Játék a szerelemmel) (1957); The Naked Diplomat (Meztelen diplomata) (1963); Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő) (TV, 1963); Colonel Reidl (Reidl ezredes) (1984); Hannussen (1988), and Blue Danube Waltz (Kék Duna keringő) (1992). His eleven books include The Stars of the Operetta (Az opera csillagai) (1967); Headhunting (Fejvadászat) (1967); New Year's Eve 1971 (Szilveszter 1971) (TV, 1971); Prince Bob (Bob herceg) (1973); The Great Jeweller (A nagy ékszerész) (TV, 1978); Colonel Redl (Redl ezredes) (1984); Ladies and Gentlemen (Hölgyek és urak) (TV, 1991) and the Blue Danube Waltz (Kék Duna keringő) (1992). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1956, 1961) and the titles of Merited Artist (1964), and the Outstanding Artist (1985). He was Life Member of the Operette Theater, Budapest. – B: 0871, 0883, 1105, 1445, T: 7456, 7103.→Rózsahegyi, Kálmán.

Rátz, István (Stephen) (Sátoraljaújhely, 30 July 1860 - Budapest, 28 February 1917) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1886. Thereafter, he worked at the Ophthalmological Clinic, then in the Department of Public Health of the University (1886-1889). In 1889 he became a demonstrator at the Institute of Pathological Histology; from 1890 he was an associate professor and Head of the Department of Pathological Anatomy; in 1892 he became a full Professor of Pathology and Pathological Anatomy. In 1904, at his suggestion, a fish pathology station was set up in Tihany, a peninsula in Lake Balaton. From 1915 he worked as an honorary lecturer in animal parasitology. He dealt with pathological histology and parasitology. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1903) and a member of several scientific societies abroad. He edited the journals Farmers' Annual (Gazdák Évkönyve) (1892); Proceedings in the Area of Comparative Biology and Pathology (Közlemények az összehasonlító élet-és kórtan köréből) (from 1897); Animal Hygiene (Állategészségügy), and Veterinary Paper (Állatorvosi Lapok), as well as the book series Veterinary Library (Állatorvosi Könyvtár). His works include The Cholera of Poultry (A szárnyasok kolerája) (1891); Swine-fever (A sertésvész) (1896); Inheritance and its Pathological Significance (Az öröklés és kórtani jelentősége) (1902), and New and Lesser Known Contagions (Új és kevésbé ismert metelyek) (1903). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rátz, László (Ladislas) (Sopron, 9 April 1863 - Budapest, 30 September 1930) – Mathematician, teacher. He completed his secondary education at the Lutheran High School in Sopron in 1882. He received his higher training from the University of Budapest between 1883 and 1887; for further studies, he attended the Universities of Berlin and Strasbourg. In 1890 he became a teacher at the famous Fásor (Avenue) Lutheran High School of Budapest, where he worked for 35 years; from 1909 to 1914 he was its Headmaster. Significant was his plan for a reform of the mathematical curriculum (1906), first becoming a reality after World War I (1924). Between 1894 and 1914 he was Editor of the High School Journal. He could recognize talent in his students and he did his utmost for their further development. From among them were such notables as the mathematician János (John von) Neumann, the developer of the theory of electronic computers, the Nobel laureate physicist Jenő (Eugen) Wigner, and the Nobel laureate economist János (John) Harsányi. Rátz's main work is Elements of Functions and of the Infinitesimal Calculus (A függvények és az infinitezimális számítások elemei), with Sándor (Alexander) Mikola (1914). The János Bolyai Mathematical Society annually holds the László Rátz Itinerary Meeting and, since 2000, it has also awarded annually the László Rátz Medal, as well as an Oeuvre-Medal of Master Rátz for outstanding physics teachers. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Neumann, von John; Wigner, Jenő; Harsányi, János.

Rauss, Károly (Charles) (Mernye, north of Kaposvár, 1 February 1905 - Pécs, 27 February 1976) – Physician and microbiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1929. He was a research student under Hugó Preisz from 1929 to 1931. He was an assistant lecturer from 1931 to 1939; Head of the Bacteriological Section from 1939 to 1946, and honorary lecturer in 1943. In the Medical Faculty of the University of Pécs, he was Professor of Public Hygiene from 1946 to 1951, and Director of the Microbiological Institute and professor from 1951 to 1975. Between 1964 and 1967 he was Deputy Vice-Chancellor. Earlier in his career, between 1934 and 1935, he went on a study trip in Europe. He was a member of several societies abroad. His field of research was serology, study of the structure of antigen, and preparation and examination of vaccines. It was he who determined the systematic position of the Morgan-bacillus. He was author and editor of the works: Dysentery (1955), and Medical Microbiology (with co-authors, 1960). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Ravasz, Károly (Charles) (Pécs, 13 March 1921 - ) – Newspaper reporter and politician. He obtained a Doctorate in Law at University of Pécs. In 1944 he participated in the resistance movement as a member of the civil section of the Smallholders' Party. He was arrested by the Arrow Cross authorities, but managed to escape. In 1945 he became a party representative; then in 1946, he started working at the political department of the Foreign Ministry. Thereafter, he worked in diplomatic positions in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and Prague. He was dismissed at the end of 1948; in December of that year, he escaped to Austria, in 1950 he emigrated to Australia. He was a hospital employee, and later established an independent commercial agency. His writings appeared in the papers Southern Cross (Dél Keresztje) and Independent Hungary (Független Magyarország), and also the Horizon (Látóhatár) and New Horizon (Új Látóhatár). In 1956 he became Vice-President of the international section of the Georgist Society and published in its Australian paper. In 1962 he returned to Hungary, and became an official of the Board of Trade, then the Editor of the paper Foreign Trade (Külkereskedelem). Until 1981 he worked in the area of foreign trade. Thereafter, he was a reporter, representative of foreign papers. In 1988 he participated in the reorganization of the Smallholders' Party. – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Ravasz, László (Ladislav) (Bánffyhunyard, now Huedin in Transylvania, now Romania, 29 September 1882 - Budapest, 6 August 1975) – Bishop of the Reformed Church, theologian, writer and preacher. He was educated in Bánffyhunyard and Székelyudvarhely (now Huedin and Odorheiu Secuiesc, Transylvania in Romania). He studied Theology and Philosophy concurrently at the Reformed Theological Academy and at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Transylvania, Romania), where Károly (Charles) Bóhm, the outstanding philosopher, was lecturing. From 1903 to 1905 he was an assistant minister in Kolozsvár, and secretary to the Bishop. In 1905 and 1906 he was on a scholarship at the University of Berlin and, upon returning to Hungary, he became an assistant minister in Bánffyhunyard. He obtained his doctorate from the University of Kolozsvár and was promoted to honorary lecturer at the Theological Academy in Sárospatak in 1907. Between 1907 and 1921 he was Professor of Practical Theology at the Theological Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár. Between 1914 and 1918 he edited the periodical Protestant Review (Protestáns Szemle) and, between 1915 and 1918, in partnership with Lajos (Louis) Imre and Sándor (Alexander) Makkai at Kolozsvár, published the practical theological periodical The Way (Az Út) and, between 1918 and 1921, the periodical Reformed Review (Református Szemle). In 1921 the congregation of the Calvin Square Church in Budapest called him to be their minister and, at the same time, he was elected Bishop of the Danubian Synod of the Reformed Church. In 1924 he reorganized the Hungarian Protestant Literary Society (Magyar Protestáns Irodalmi Társaság) of which he became President, and also Chief Editor of the re-started publication Protestant Review. In 1925 he became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and was its Vice-President between 1937 and 1940. Between 1927 and 1944 he was a member of the Upper House of the Parliament. In 1934, together with Gyula (Julius) Muraközy, he launched the newspaper Reformed Life (Református Élet) and, at the same time, with Jenő (Eugene) Sebestyén, Hungarian Calvinism (A Magyar Kálvinizmus).

Between the two World Wars, Ravasz became a leading figure of the Reformed Church as well as the spiritual life of Hungary. As the ministerial president of the General Synod of the Reformed Church, he worked hard to strengthen the Church spiritually and materially. He expressed full agreement with the defensive nationalism in the period of national catastrophe, caused by the dismemberment of Hungary after World War I by the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920). He did not interfere in the day-to-day politics. However, the leaders of the country often asked for his advice in important matters concerning the spiritual rebuilding of the nation. He was one of the greatest preachers who proclaimed the Word of God during a crucial period of the nation from the pulpit of the Calvin Square Church of Budapest, and over the sound waves of the Hungarian radio. Numerous studies, literary articles and sermons were published in newspapers and in periodicals. Ravasz also published his own works, such as Aesthetics of Schopenhauer (Schopenhauer esztétikája) (1907); Value-system of Károly Böhm... (Böhm Károly értékelmélete...) (1913); Book of Visions (Látások könyve) (1917); Thoughts (Gondolatok) (1922); Organ Music (Orgonazúgás) (1923); Half-way on the Road of Human Life (Az emberélet útjának felén), (1924); Home Bound (Hazafelé) (1925); In the Shadow of Death (A halál árnyékában) (1927); I Know Whom I Believed (Tudom kinek hittem) (1927); On the Summit of Tabor Mountain (Táborhegy ormán) (1928); Alpha and Omega, vols. i-ii (Alfa és Omega I-II) (1933); Faith and Obedience (Hit és engedelmesség) (1936); Let There Be Light, vols.i-ii-iii (Legyen Világosság, I-II-III) (1938); In God's Sieve vols. i-ii-iii (Isten Rostájában I-II-III) (1941); Korban, vols.i-ii (Korbán, I-II) (1943); New Testament Commentary, vols. i,ii, Selected Writings of László Ravasz 1945-1968 (Ravasz László: Válogatott írások 1945-1968), edited by Gyula Bárczay (Bern, 1988); Explanation of the New Testament (Újszövetség magyarázata I,II) (1991), and the posthumous Memories (Emlékezéseim) (1992). He made a new translation of the New Testament, which was published at Ligonier, PA in the USA, in 1971. His literary activity extended well beyond theological works. Once he wrote thus of the Hungarian language, which he knew so well: "For us, our language is a greater treasure than our land, because it is older and will live on, even when the land is no longer ours".

After World War II, in May 1948, under political pressure, Ravasz resigned from his office as Bishop, retired from the ministry on 1 March 1953, and lived in Leányfalú, near Budapest. In the meantime, he led a Homiletical Seminary for theological students at the request of Dean László (Ladislás) Pap (1950-1953). In the midst of the Hungarian Revolution of 1956, at the request of his former congregation, he returned to the ministry of the Calvin Square Church and to his position as Bishop, because both positions were vacant due to the illness of Bishop Albert Bereczky. However, after a couple of months in office, he was forced to resign again.

László Ravasz was the greatest preacher in the history of his Church. His works preserve his memory; a Street was named after him, and a memorial column was dedicated in his honor in Leányfalú, and there is László Ravasz Friendly Society in Budapest. – B: 0883, 0931, 1031, 1288, 1257, T 7682.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Bóhm, Károly; Muraközy, Gyula; Sebestyén Jenő; Pap, László.

“Raven” Gold Coin – A gold coin minted during the reign of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), which was widely circulated throughout Europe because of its high gold content. One side of the coin bore the picture of Mary, which allegedly lent it healing powers. The people in Germany referred to it as “Rabendukaten” (raven-ducats) and wore it as an amulet. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7680.

Raymann, János (John), Ádám (Eperjes, now Presov, Slovakia, 1690 - Eperjes, 23 April 1770) – Physician. He received his Medical Degree at Leiden University, Neatherlands, in 1712. From 1713 he was senior physician of Counties Eperjes and Sáros, and he also conducted natural-scientific observations. He was engaged in the study of meteorology, botany, epidemics, etc. He employed inoculation with the variola virus against smallpox. His professional papers appeared in the journals Novum Acta Imperia Naturales Curiosum, Acta Vratislaviensis, Annales Physico Medicae Vratislavienses, etc. His works included Historia medica Variolarum Eperiesini...anno 1717; Historica exposition proventuum terrae in Hungaria superiore (1718); De Rheumatismis et doloribus artuum arthriti Eperiensini in Hungaria (1720). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rear-Guard Fighting in the Mura Region – The last effort to defend Hungarian soil against the advancing Soviet forces in 1944 was conducted mostly by the “Martsa Group” led by the division commander Colonel Martsa. This group consisted of the remnants of the “Bakony” Regiment and three artillery guns of the 8th Replacement Artillery Battery. The 2,200 troops were under the command of the First German Cavalry Corps. After the failure of the German counter-attack, the last units of the troop crossed the River Mura by ferry at Valkonya on the night of 3 April. Under Russian mortar fire, the tattered German battalion also reached the village of Valkonya, where the Hungarian gunners had set up their position. After a day of heavy artillery bombardment, their ammunition exhausted, the German artillery withdrew from Hungary, leaving the Rear Guard troops to continue the resistance. A day later, they were surrounded and captured by Bulgarian Troops – allies of the Soviet Army. It is a strange coincidence of fate that, during the winter of 1943, the 9th Division, comprising of the soldiers of Zala County, were the last to leave the Don river area – three weeks after the rest of the army left – and that the “Bakony Regiment”, again consisting of the soldiers of Zala and the gunners of the 8th Replacement Battery, were the last units to fight on the soil of free Hungary. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→World War II, Hungary in.

Réber, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 21 May 1921 - Budapest, 2 November 2001) – Designer, illustrator and caricaturist. He was first and foremost a book-illustrator. Originally, he was a javelin-throwing sportsman. Early on, he lived in Madocsa, Paks and Pécs, where he attended High School and, from 1938, in Budapest. As a result of his World War II military service and years in a prisoner-of-war camp, he became acquainted with graphic art. On returning to Hungary he became a correspondent and caricaturist for the paper Free Mouth (Szabad Száj) in 1949-1950, and between 1951 and 1953 he was a designer for the cartoon film section of the Newsreel and Document Film Works. Between 1953 and 1959, he worked for the satirical weekly Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi). Between the years 1965 and 1967 he prepared three cartoon films. He was also engaged in designing posters and, from 1952, he illustrated books. His work was characterized by an accomplished style: his drawings were sketch-like, creating an area encircled by a skinny, closed line, filled with vivid colors. In his humorous graphics and illustrations, he followed the world-concept of children, or held a mirror in front of adults, or shifted the emphasis of things. Between 1961 and 2001 he held more than 10 one-man exhibitions and took part in even more collective ones, chiefly in Hungary, but also in Germany, Italy and Czechoslovakia. His works were published in a number of books, e.g.: Caricatures of László Réber (Réber László karikaturái) (1957); Hurdy-Gurdy (London, 1968); Hocus-Pocus (1962); Ganz die Eltern (Frankfurt, 1964), and Little? Grown-up? (Kicsi? Nagy?) (1975). For all his work, he received more than 20 prizes and medals. In 1967 and 1993 he received the distinction of the Mihály Munkácsy Prize, while in 1999 he became a member of the Hungarian Art Academy. – B: 1031, 1105, T: 7456.

Turkish occupation since 1541. Its liberation began with the attempted capture of Vienna by the Turks in 1683. The aim of the Turkish campaign was to take the Austrian capital, and they came very close to realizing it. This Turkish campaign failed nevertheless, and this gave a chance for Austria, with participating Hungarian and Polish troops, to recapture Buda. The Austrians, under Emperor Leopold I, tried with a force of 50,000 men to take Buda; they held it under siege for two months, but did not succeed in taking the castle fortress. However, in the summer of 1686, Prince Charles of Lothringen led a composite army of 74,000, determined to take Buda from the Turks. His own army was made up of 40,000, set up north of the castle, supplemented by 21,000 soldiers of Prince Eugen von Savoy and Prince Maximilian II, Emanuel of Bavaria on the southern side, as well as 15,000 Hungarian soldiers, largely made up of Imre (Emeric) Thököly's troops, scattered under various commands.

The castle fortress of Buda came under siege on 22 June 1686, after Pest on the eastern side of the Danube was taken first by the liberating army. At the end of June 14,000 soldiers from Brandenburg joined the army of liberation. The shelling of the castle started on 1 July, lasted for two weeks; however, an assault at the northern end proved unsuccessful. On 22 July, an ammunition-magazine exploded, and a castle building collapsed as a result, and a section of the western wall crashed down; this gap in the defense could not be exploited by the besiegers for some reason. On 24 July János (John) Fiáth, with 600 Hajdú warriors from Győr, cut through the Turkish defense; in fact, it was a Hajdú, who hoisted the Hungarian flag on the rampart of the bastion. In the meantime, János (John) Esterházy's feigned assault carried out by 2000 Hajdús, distracted the attention of the Turkish defenders. The attack was successful, though with much loss of life: 5,500 besiegers and 2,500 Turks were killed, about 25-30% of the defending force of the castle. On 27 July another assault began – with considerable success. The liberating forces broke through the first line of Turkish defense, attacking the Turks from the castle walls. On 3 August, a further assault ended in failure and the besiegers were forced to barricade themselves outside the castle walls because of an approaching Turkish relief force from the south. By 12 August, a 100,000-strong Turkish relief army reached Buda but, despite heavy fighting, only 300 Turks could get into the castle. Two days later, on 14 August, the Turkish Grand Vizier, Kara Mustafa, engaged in a battle with the besieging forces and eventually put the Turkish relief army to rout. There were two further attempts on the part of the Turks (on 20 and 29 August) to give assistance to the defenders, without any success. The besieging forces planned a general assault on 2 September, shelling the fortress from early morning and the cavalry carried out distracting-action in front of the Turkish defenders. At 3 pm, the assault began and, after desperate, protracted fighting, the battle led to complete success: the castle of Buda was taken, though with the loss of some 6000 to 7000 men. On 2 September 1686, Buda was liberated after 145 years of Turkish occupation. The news of the liberation of Buda spread quickly all over Europe; in all the larger cities people celebrated the victory of Christianity with fireworks and processions. – B: 1887, T: 7456. → Lothringen, Prinz Karl Leopold von; Savoyenor, Eugen von; Sobieski III, John; Pálffy, Count János; Thököly, Count Imre; Esztergom; Budavár, Recapture of; Marsigli, Count Luigi Ferdinando; Neoquistica Commissio.

Recrudescunt inclytæ Gentis Hungaræ vulnera (The old wounds of the glorious Hungarian nation are opened up again ...) The first lines of the famous proclamation of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1705-1711), written at his request by Count Pál (Paul) Ráday (1677-1733) on 7 June 1703, which Rákóczi sent to the Estates of Hungary, as well as to foreign powers, to reveal to them the cause of the Rákóczi insurrection. In powerful phrases, in the voice of national anger and pride, it presented the inequities of Austrian rule to the world. The main line of thought of the proclamation was the contrast between the ancient Hungarian constitution and freedoms, and the prevailing Austrian tyranny. It related how the free election of the king was forcibly replaced with the system of the Habsburg royal succession, how high offices of the land were filled with foreigners and how – ignoring the king's oath – the Viennese Government confiscated the estates of Hungarians and granted them to foreigners. The proclamation pointed out the oppressive and exploitative policies of the Court and the Habsburg government, the wasting of Hungary's national properties, and the deep economic misery of the common people, all caused by the Austrian control of Hungary. In addition to this, the laws, acknowledging freedom of religion, were also blatantly violated by Vienna. Under Habsburg rule, all laws of man and God were ignored and the country was exposed to merciless tyranny. The proclamation was very well written and, in its style and effects, a classical piece of work. B: 1078, 1825, T: 7665.→Freedom fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Ráday, Pál (1).

Réczey, Imre (Emeric) (Pest, 1848 - Budapest, 31 October 1913) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Pest in 1871, where he specialized in Surgery in 1874. From 1875 he worked in the Rókus Hospital of Pest as senior physician and surgeon and, from 1885, in the same capacity in St. István (Stephen) Hospital of Budapest. From 1876 he was an instructor, in 1884 a titular associate professor; from 1892 until his passing in 1913, he was a professor and Director of No. 1 Surgical Clinic of the University. He was editor of the journal Medical Weekly (Orvosi Hetilap) from 1886 to 1888. He was President of the Royal Medical Association of Budapest in 1894. He dealt mainly with plastic and hernia surgery. In addition to establishing the Dollinger School, he developed other Hungarian surgical schools. He published numerous articles in the journal Clinical Pamphlets (Klinikai Füzetek) and also in various German journals. He wrote most of the entries dealing with surgery in the Pallas Nagy Lexikona (Pallas Great Encyclopedia). His works include Healing of Wounds Without Drain (Sebgyógyítás drain nélkül) (1895), and Development of Surgery in More Recent Times (A sebészet újabbkori fejlődése) (1910). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Red Terror in Hungary – (1) In Hungary, the first Red (Communist) rule began on 21 March 1919, with the proclamation of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, when the Revolutionary Governing Council seized power. Most of the People's Commissars in Hungary – former POW-s in Russia – received their training in the young Soviet Union and arrived in Hungary with instructions from Moscow: Béla Kun, Vilmos (William) Böhm, Jenő (Eugen) Hamburger, József (Joseph) Haubrich, Jenő (Eugene) Fiedler, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kunfi, Jenő (Eugene) Landler, Mátyás (Matthias) Rákosi, Tibor Szamuely, and others. On 22 March 1919, they proclaimed the “proletarian dictatorship”. This meant a common ideology and armed forces with Soviet Russia, and martial law. They dissolved the Hungarian armed forces, abolished the police force and the gendarmerie, and replaced them with the Red Guard. On 30 March 1919, they sent telegrams to the Czechoslovak, Romanian and Serbian governments recognizing their territorial claims. They sabotaged the provisions of the Szekler division, who fought to defend Transylvania (Erdély) against Romanian occupation. In response to the hostile armed forces streaming into the country, they established the Red Army. To frighten the population, which resisted the countrywide forced requisitions and seizures, the Red Army Command gave Tibor Szamuely absolute power on 20 June. He then criss-crossed the country in his special train (‘the train of death’), executing by hanging members of the resisting population, in Kalocsa and in Kapuvár. Through the abuse of state power, they executed 590 Hungarian citizens in their relatively brief period of reign, without trial. With the resignation of the Revolutionary Governing Council on 1 August 1919, the first Communist rule with its Red Terror ended in Hungary after 133 days.

(2) The second Red (Communist) rule commenced in Hungary in 1948, after the fraudulent (blue-notes) election in 1947. After the so-called “year of spin” 1948, the tiny Communist party, in the presence of Soviet military forces in the country, unlawfully seized power in Hungary. During the “Rákosi period”, the illegal, brutal actions of the ÁVH (Secret State Police) were committed in the name of Red Terror. Between 1948 and 1956, some 800 persons were executed, 85,000 were imprisoned, and 25-30,000 were kept in detention centers. After the defeat of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, the “Kádár regime” gained power through Soviet military support. During its rule, special police and the “Workers’ Guard” (Munkásörség) were the instruments of Red Terror. The 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight cost some 25,000 casualties, another 20,000 were deported to the Soviet Union, 12,000 were imprisoned, and 500 were executed and, in addition, some 200,000 Hungarians emigrated to the West. After several decades, Communist rule ended in 1990 with a democratic election. – B: 1231, 1020, T: 7103.→Council (Soviet) Republic in Hungary; Bóhm, Vilmos; Kun, Béla; Lander, Jenő; Szamuely, Tibor; Rákosi, Mátyás; Kádár, János; State Security Police; Soviet Rule in Hungary.

Red, White and Green Colors – These are Hungary’s national colors. The combined use of these colors did not happen all at once. According to the Viennese Illustrated Chronicle (Bécsi Képes Krónika), the Hungarian army fought under a red banner. The Hungarian military banner was red until the time of Rákóczi’s freedom fight (1704-1711). However, red and (silver) white were the colors of the Árpád Dynasty, and the Hungarian banners had the same colors during their reign (896-1301), which is proved by the Illuminated Chronicle with a picture of a banner, showing red and white stripes. On a document dating from 1222, the red seal is hung on a red and white cord. On the armor of Louis (Lajos) the Great (1326–1382), there were also red and white colors and, later on, even under the Habsburg kings the same combination occurred many times. The red, white and green colors were first used on military banners in 1711; but these colors were repeated three times on a banner. Act XXI, § 1, 1848 ordered the red-white-green tricolor for official and domestic usage. The original meaning of the colors was as follows: red was the color of the military; white was the color of the rulers since ancient times, and green was the color of hope and plenty, secured for the people by the rulers with the help of the military. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7662, 7103.→Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Reform Age (1825-1848) – In Hungary the Reform Age in the first half of the 19th century, encouraged by some of the ideals of the French Revolution, allowed public and social life based on a feudal constitution, to become democratic for the first time. The reform aspirations of Emperor-King József (Joseph) II (1780-1790) did not meet with success, and his reform decrees were withdrawn just before his death, with the exception of the Edict of Tolerance. The more progressive section of the nobility was pressing for the much-needed modernizing measures at a series of diets, with figures like Count Miklós (Nicholas) Wesselényi, Count Lajos (Louis) Batthyány, Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey, Ferenc (Francis) Deák, and László (Ladislav) Lovassy. These reform aspirations came to a head when Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi offered his one year’s income to found the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, at the Diet of 1825, marking the beginning of the Reform Age; he also fought for economic, social and cultural reforms, while Lajos (Louis) Kossuth advocated reform in constitutional law and political institutions. A series of reforming diets followed. Independent, modern industry was established. The wearing of the national dress and the use of Hungarian music and folk dance came into vogue. The National Anthem first came into general use, together with other poems expressing patriotism, and the compulsory use of Hungarian language in high schools was enforced by law. The Diet of 1840 declared that serfs should have the right to possess property; the 1844 Diet introduced the use of the Hungarian language, instead of Latin, in the fields of legislation, jurisdiction and public service. Finally, the 1848 Diet abolished the entailment, declared freedom for the serfs, equality before the law and, in the spirit of the democratic ideas of the age, established a representative parliamentary system and responsible government, thus forming a national Hungarian constitution. The new laws were given royal assent on 11 April 1848, thereby concluding the Age of Reform. ### Reformed Church in Hungary, History of –

I. THE BEGINNING and THE SPREAD OF THE REFORMATION IN THE 16th CENTURY. – The Reformation Movement in Europe was started by Martin Luther in 1517, which reached Hungary in the early 1520s, just before 1526, the year of the catastrophic defeat by the Turks at Mohács. The occupation of more than half of the country by the invaders was interpreted by the majority of the nation as God's punishment for the corruption of the medieval church. Thus the religious and ethical condition of the nation was fertile soil in which the seeds of the Gospel could be sown, through the comforting message of the Reformers' preaching.

The effective means of spreading the Reformation in Hungary was, from the very beginning, through the preaching of God's word. Itinerant preachers explained the Scriptures in the language of the common people, i.e. in the vernacular. Soon learned theologians, trained in universities abroad, became educators of the nation. Book printing, invented in the previous century, was also put into the service of the Reformation. Thus preaching in the vernacular replaced the reading of the Mass in Latin and became a part of everyday life. The influence they had on their readers or listeners was inestimable. By the last decade of the 16th century, about 85% of the population was Protestant - some three and a half of four million people. Among the early Reformers, Mátyás (Matthias) Dévai Bíró, István (Stephen) Szegedi Kis, Mihály (Michael) Sztárai, and Imre (Emeric) Ozorai, were worthy representatives in Hungary of the grand teachers of the Western Reformation. But the most eminent of them was Péter (Peter) Méliusz Juhász, Bishop of Debrecen. The achievement of the successful preachers and learned Reformers was greatly enhanced by the patronage of Magnates ready to serve this cause. In the towns, the magistrates took a stand for Protestantism whilst the aristocratic patrons protected their chaplains on their lands, and the traveling preachers, often released from prison, found shelter and peace on a Protestant estate. The Helvetian trend of the Reformation spread rapidly, especially in Debrecen and its environs. It was in 1561 that Gál Huszár, the Reformer of Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia), brought his printing press to Debrecen. Many a confession, church regulation, and several other works written by Bishop Méliusz Juhász, were printed there.

One of the boldest enterprises of the Reformation was that lay people were also entrusted with bearing witness to, and explaining the Bible. Church life in Debrecen clearly followed the model set in Zurich. The most important feature of the divine service was the preaching of God's word in the language of the people. Bishop Méliusz Juhász also imitated the lively interest of the Helvetian Reformation in public order, social life, education, law and order, and even in the physical and spiritual welfare of the populace, and he gave a helping hand wherever he could. In ensuring a uniform church order, the Debrecen Synod of 1567, by its adoption of the Second Helvetian Confession (Második Helvét Hitvallás), became an important milestone in the life of the church bodies in the Eastern part of the country. Reformed Church Districts were formed one after another in the northern, eastern, and western regions of the country, as well as in the territories occupied by the Turks, without any conflict with the Lutherans. The Hungarian Reformed Church was greatly strengthened by the most important spiritual achievement of the period, the translation of the complete Bible into Hungarian. Gáspár Károli, Reformed minister and senior at Gönc (north-eastern Hungary), prepared this translation together with his associates, and had it printed with the aid of rich and powerful magnates at Vizsoly (near Gönc) in 1590. The Vizsoly Bible and the Psalter, the work of Albert Szenczi Molnár in 1607, are still used by Reformed congregations.→Dévai Biró, Mátyás; Szegedi Kis, István; Sztárai, Mihály; Ozorai, Imre; Huszár, Gál; Méliusz Juhász, Péter; Károli, Gáspár.

II. THE COUNTER-REFORMATION OF THE 17th CENTURY – The 17th century brought a time of severe trials and persecutions to the life of the Hungarian Reformed Church: the era of King Ferdinand II (1619-1637) of the House of Habsburg, and the Jesuit Archbishop Péter (Peter) Pázmány (1571-1637). Pázmány turned against the popular theological explanation of the Turkish catastrophe and affirmed that the whole disaster was due to the fact that the nation had turned away from the veneration of the Virgin Mary, the "Patroness of Hungary". The strategy of the Counter-Reformation in Hungary was to wage a war against "Protestant heresy", on political and literary levels simultaneously. This was most severe during the so-called "Decade of Mourning" (1671-1681). With the help of the King, Pázmány soon succeeded in re-converting to Catholicism 30 of the leading noble families in Hungary. On his suggestion, the principle of "Cuius regio, eius religio" (he who owns the estate owns the right to decide which religion is allowed there), so far unknown to Hungarian public law, was practiced against Protestants left without patrons. The aim of the Counter-Reformation was to re-convert the entire Protestant population of the country to the Catholic faith. Those pastors who resisted were summoned before an extraordinary court at Pozsony in 1673. In northern Hungary, 32 Lutheran and one Reformed minister were accused of revolting against and calumniating the Catholic Church. When a royal pardon was offered, one Protestant minister was converted and the others resigned their ministry. Encouraged by this result, Protestant ministers and schoolmasters were summoned from the entire territory of the kingdom. Those who, despite grave threats, were not willing to be converted, were imprisoned, and then driven on foot from Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) to Trieste, where they were sold as galley slaves in Naples. The whole Protestant world was moved to ransom them, and, after many difficulties, the Dutch Admiral Ruyter set them free. Although the Protestants published written repudiations of the charges brought against them, they were further exposed to a great number of violent acts: Church buildings were confiscated; the Reformed College at Sárospatak was seized, and so on. It was in such circumstances that a long-awaited event occurred: the expulsion of the Turks from Hungary (1686-1699). This was followed by a moderate wave of re-Catholicization in the 18th century. The laws enacted against Protestants caused a great number of difficulties in the lives of Reformed congregations. However, the Age of Enlightenment and tolerance slowly commenced in Europe, especially in the Protestant countries. As a result, the re-Catholicization and Counter-Reformation was somewhat mitigated.→Pázmány, Péter; Galley Slave Hungarian Preachers; Decade of Mourning.

III. THE STRUGGLES OF THE 18th CENTURY AND THE EDICT OF TOLERANCE (Tűrelmi Rendelet) – In 1781, Joseph (József) II (1780-1790), Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, issued the Edict of Tolerance (Edictum Tolerantiae), in which he regulated the public religious practice of non-Catholic believers, thereby putting an end to a hundred-year oppression. Protestants were allowed congregations to be organized in every settlement with at least 100 Protestant families. They were entitled to a pastor of their own, and were not obliged to pay for the services of a Catholic priest. They were also allowed to build churches, but with no entrances from the street and with no tower or steeple. This was not complete freedom of religion.

It could already be seen during the period of the Reformation that its Calvinist trend was and still is the “Hungarian Religion”, whilst the country's German-speaking ethnic section became members of the Lutheran Church. In the Transdanubian area, however, the Lutheran and Reformed Churches separated only in the 17th century. At that time, the constitution of the Reformed Church in Hungary was not yet built on Calvinist or Genevan foundations; rather, it mirrored the so-called consistorial type established by Luther and Melancthon. The Consistory was an elected board, but in Hungarian usage it also meant the synod, which in the 16th century, consisted only of ministerial members. The first presbytery in Hungary was organized at Pápa in 1617. János (John) Kanizsai Pálfi was a minister trained in Heidelberg, and he felt that it would be important to introduce the Presbyterian system (that is, the Calvinist type of congregation) into the Reformed church. This step proved to be a lifesaving act for the Reformed Church in the western part of the country. The exponents of the Counter-Reformation thought mainly in terms of the clergy. They were of the opinion that, if the clerics, that is, the ministers, could be eliminated from the life of a church, then the congregations could be turned by peremptory orders in whatever direction they pleased. But the elected Elders formed a “second front” to defend the life of congregations bereft of their pastors for 30 or even 70 years. They were also able to practice their devotions without a minister. In 1630, the Synod of Körmend ordered all Transdanubian (Dunántúl) congregations to elect their Church Session. In 1646, however, the Synod of Szatmárnémeti (in the Transtibiscan part of the country, now Satu Mare in Romania), guided by the anti-Puritan, anti-Presbyterian mentality of the elder Prince György Rákóczi of Transylvania, refused to establish any Presbyteries. In 1686, the Diet of Sopron relegated decisions in ecclesiastical matters to the authority of the King, whereby the legal entity of the Reformed Church was annulled.

From that time on, only lay patrons were in a position to raise their voices for the Reformed Church, and all administration was conducted by them until the Edict of Tolerance in 1791. After that, the representatives of the Church Districts were convened by the Synod of Buda, where the principle of parity was adopted; that is where both ministers and laymen would be represented in Church governments, and matters would be conducted by both ministerial and lay presidency.→Buda Synods (2).

IV. FURTHER STRUGGLES FOR RELIGIOUS FREEDOM – The accomplishment of the equality of religions was a long and strenuous process. The dominant Roman Catholic Church used all administrative means to make the lives of Protestants more difficult. Act XX of 1848 finally declared that there was no dominant religion in Hungary, and that there was equality and mutuality (reciprocity) amongst the established Roman Catholic, Reformed, Lutheran, and Unitarian denominations, whose administrative and educational expenditures were to be subsidized by the state. This Act could, however, not be enforced, because, after the Hungarian defeat in the War of Independence in 1848-1849, the Austrian authorities disposed of church authorities in Letters Patent (Pátens). The legal situation of the Protestant churches and Jewish communities became settled again only after the abrogation of these Letters Patent. During the War of Independence, the Protestant churches unequivocally supported the Revolution. The Danubian Reformed Church District called on its ministers to take part in the fighting.

The Declaration of Independence was announced by the Lutheran Lajos (Louis) Kossuth to the Members of Parliament in session in the Great Church of Debrecen on 14 April 1849. The Reformed Bishop of Debrecen welcomed the dethroning of the House of Habsburg in a pastoral letter but, in September of the same year, he was compelled by the Austrians to order the congregations of his Church District to pay homage in their divine services to Emperor Francis Joseph. In the years of retribution for the War of Independence, the Protestant churches suffered most, because the state regarded them as one of the props of the rebellion. In the struggle against the Letters Patent, the Protestant Church fought not only for her own, but also for the nation's freedom.→Patens of February; Francis Joseph (Ferenc József); October Diploma.

V. THE EMERGENCE OF THE NATIONAL CHURCH IN THE 19th CENTURY – The desire to live in a unified national church was, from the very beginning, present in the minds of the believers of the Reformed Church in Hungary, and it was only strengthened by the centuries' long struggle for survival. However, for a long time, this desire could not be realized. Finally, the Debrecen Synod, which commenced its sessions after four years of preparations, on 31 October 1881, was able to lay the foundation for the Constitution of a national church, to be further developed by subsequent national synods. The terms of the foundation were a majority system, corporate government, and parity. Central organs were also established: the Synod, consisting of 116 members and assembling every tenth year for church legislature, as well as the General Convent, with 38 members, to represent the national church between the sessions of the Synod. The historical achievement of the Debrecen Synod of 1881 was the organization of a unified Hungarian Reformed Church.

VI. THE CHURCH AROUND THE TURN OF THE 20th CENTURY – The constitutional independence of Hungary was restored by the Compromise (Ausgleich, Kiegyezés) of 1867, and the Reformed Church gradually regained her internal freedom. The religious-political basis of the age of dualism was Act LIII of 1868, which regulated the reciprocity of the established churches, and decreed that anybody who had completed his or her 18th year was free to move from one denomination to another. However, the religious life in general was becoming formalized. The social re-arrangement, due to rapid industrialization and a growing urban working class, required new forms of church life, which however, were only partially realized. The liberal trend in theology in the second half of the 19th century was unsuited for the evangelization of those people who, having lost contact with peasant communities, had migrated from villages to towns. Later, church life received a new stimulus through the Home Mission, which followed English and German models. The props of this new style of Church work were Bible classes, the pastoral care of individuals, and the institutional aid given to the outcast. The Church worked for social reconciliation and, after the outbreak of World War I in 1914, the Church's army chaplains not only comforted suffering soldiers, but helped the bereaved and the needy in the hinterland. According to the statistical data of 1910, the number of Hungarian members of the Reformed Church was 2,620,000 (an increase of more than half a million since 1870). The numbers in each of the five Church Districts were as follows: 484,000 in the Danubian; 266,000 in the Transdanubian; 462,000 in the Transylvanian; 281,000 in the Cistibiscan; and 1,130,000 in the Transtibiscan Church District. Each Church District had a Theological Academy or University Faculty. The more than two-and-a-half-million members were cared for by 2062 ministers, 454 professors and teachers, as well as 2965 primary schoolmasters.

VII. THE CHURCH IN THE CHANGES OF THE 20th CENTURY – The Treaty of Versailles-Trianon, after World War I, in 1920, painfully dismembered the country, the historic Kingdom of Hungary with its church affiliations. Hungary lost two-thirds of its historic territory and one-third of its Hungarian (Magyar) population. The Reformed Church lost 1,112 out of 2,073 congregations and from its 2,621,329 church members only 1,632,852 were left in truncated Hungary. From the lost parts of the Church, the Reformed Church in Romania with two church districts, and the Reformed Christian Church in Czechoslovakia came into existence. From its eastern part, the Reformed Church in Carpatho-Ukraine was formed after World War II, when this territory came under Soviet rule. There was also the Reformed Christian Church in Yugoslavia; from it were formed the Hungarian Reformed Christian Church in Croatia, the Hungarian Reformed Churches in the USA, Canada, and the diaspora. Thus the Reformed Church in Hungary became the mother Church of Hungarian Reformed Churches worldwide. The Church was unprepared for the shock of the tragedy of the Trianon dismemberment, further aggravated by a torrent of refugees from the successor states, and the economic troubles, which were a consequence of the lost war. The nation was unprepared to heal itself by means of the consolation and encouragement provided by the Scriptures. Moreover, the propaganda disseminated by the victorious powers fanned and fostered distrust in the allegedly liberal-minded believers. They were accused of intellectually preparing the way for Communism, and - together with the Jews and other left-wing elements - were held responsible for the ensuing events. But what was the real fate of all churches – the Hungarian churches among them - at the time of the revolutions of 1918 and 1919? In the program of the leading party of the so-called “Aster Revolution” (Őszirózsás Forradalom) in October 1918, there were a great many anti-clerical phrases, which labeled the churches as relics of feudalism. Under the 133-day rule of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, ecclesiastical schools and lands were nationalized, religious instruction was prohibited in schools, and there were many churchmen among the victims of the Red Terror. The politics of the new government were guided by the principle of “Christian Nationalism”. This policy considered political Catholicism to be its most important ally, as it inspired, revived, and represented the heroic virtues of a nation which dated back to the time of the Carpathian conquest under Khagan (Reigning Prince) Árpád (888-907), and the state founder King István I (St Stephen) (907-1038). Although the Reformed Church also enjoyed the support of the State, she could exert much less influence on the political direction of society. Yet, the history of the Hungarian Reformed Church between the two world wars cannot be identified with the nationalistic trend; however, it was opposed to the unjust peace dictate of Trianon. The internal life of the Church moved forward significantly. In 1931, a unified Reformed liturgy (Agenda) was completed. In 1934, the new Statute Book of the Church came into force. Neither the national associations of ministers and Presbyters (Elders), nor the youth organizations, were indifferent to the grave social problems. After World War I, new trends replaced liberal theology. Under the influence of Dutch Reformed theologians, so-called “Historical Calvinism” was the first to develop educational activities by producing a strong Reformed self-confidence and a sense of duty. The Calvinist heritage was also attested to by other trends: for example, by the so-called ecclesiastical Calvinism, which concentrated on congregational activity, rather than on the work done by associations. Dialectical theology, which had effected a decisive change in European theology, was not unknown either in the Reformed Church in the inter-war period. It had especially enthusiastic adherents among professors of theology and scholarship holders who had studied abroad; but their influence could only be felt in the life of the Church in the post-World War II generation. Taking into consideration the fact that the Regent of Hungary (Admiral Nicholas Horthy de Nagybánya) was a member of the Reformed Church, the Reformed Church tried to climb into the position of a “second state-church”, in order to enjoy some compensation for the many grievances and losses that had afflicted her in past centuries, even if the Hungarian Reformed Church did not support all the endeavors of Hungarian politics. Hungary was not strong enough to avert the consequences of a revisionist policy (supported widely), the enactment of anti-Semitism, and the inhuman conditions, which followed the German occupation of the country after 19 March 1944. Although the Church representatives unequivocally rejected the Third Act against the Jews in 1941, they were unable to hinder its enactment. The Church leadership tried to save what could be saved. The “Good Shepherd” organization was founded which, together with the Scottish Mission, performed effective rescue work amongst the persecuted. A good many people were saved by private and institutional actions.→

VIII. THE CHURCH AFTER WORLD WAR II – During the war years, on the initiative of intellectuals of the Reformed Church at conferences of church ministers at Balatonszárszó, a Reformed Conference Center on the shores of Lake Balaton was organized in order to find a way for Hungary after the war was over. These so-called “Szárszó Conferences” were attended by the intellectual elite of the country. After the war was over, with heavy losses of life and materials, the ruined country was soon rebuilt. The Paris Peace Treaty in 1947 took away the territories recovered by the two Vienna Awards (1938 and 1940), causing a new flood of refugees. At the beginning of the turn of the century, a revivalist movement spread among the Protestant Churches, which strengthened the Home Mission and resulted in the formation of youth organizations, among them the YMCA (Keresztyén Ifjak Egyesülete – KIE). Already during the war, but mainly after it, in the wake of intense evangelization, a religious revival occurred in the Protestant Churches, including the Reformed Church. After the rigged 1947 election, the Communist party came into power, and earnestly started the transformation of the country into a Communist state. In 1948, the state tried to regulate its relations with the churches by means of separate agreements. But Communist ideology, with its militant atheism, anti-clericalism, and its striving for hegemony, was a serious obstacle to the stabilization of these relations. Although strong emphasis was laid on the principle of “a free church in a free state”, the very dependence of the Hungarian People's Republic on the Soviet Union could not ensure this freedom for the churches. The Communist Party (later Hungarian Workers Party – Magyar Dolgozók Pártja – MDP) practiced “salami tactics”, not only against its political opponents, but also in its relations with the churches. On 16 June 1948, church schools were nationalized on the grounds that schools did not constitute an essential part of a church. After the agreement between State and Church, the Church was left with two Colleges and two Theological Academies; 16 Diaconal Institutes and other church organizations were dissolved. In state schools, religious instruction was stopped, with the argument that elective instruction was superior (because it was voluntary) to compulsory instruction. The next step was to purge the schools from the harm of education in a twofold (that is, religious and secular) ideology - so religious instruction was to be abolished entirely. In 1951 the State Office for Church Affairs (Állami Egyházügyi Hivatal – ÁEH) was created by the Communist Government to secure complete state control over the churches; it was active until the Communist system's collapse in 1989. Its officers were present everywhere: from state offices to those in towns and even villages. During the Communist period, the Reformed Church leaders, hoping for better cooperation with the Communist system, introduced two official theologies: the “Narrow Way Theology” (A keskeny út teológiája) and the “Theology of Service” (A szolgálat teológiája). The forty years of Communism, however, did not prove to be long enough to carry out this complete erosion of religion. The external as well as the internal life of the Reformed Church was marked by every decision of the Communist Party, which became, with the help of the Soviet Union, the only party in the state during the political struggles after World War II. Until the Revolution of 1956, the Church and her members, just as all citizens of the country who had not adopted the “victorious” ideology of Communism, were overtly exposed to everyday atrocities. As the Communist State, according to its own laws, could and did interfere in the lives of the churches in theory, in practice those churchmen who held posts where they had to communicate with the state met with great temptations or trials.

Many of them were even placed in their positions by the Party. This circumstance led to some alienation between the leaders and the constituency of the churches. Among all the churches, the Reformed Church was included, at first almost condemned to death, but was later compelled to live as a fellow-traveler, in the person of her leaders, as part and parcel of the reigning political system.→Paris Peace Treaty; Blue Slip Election; State Office for Church Affairs; Mindszenty, József; Grósz, József; Ordass, Lajos; Ravasz László; Bereczky Albert; Péter, János; Peace Priests.

IX. THE REVOLUTION OF 1956 AND THEREAFTER – The Revolution of 1956 tried to put an end to this era. Although its protagonists were not the churches, for a short period of time, they also could hope for freedom. After the Revolution, religious instruction in schools resumed for several months. But this heroic attempt, by which the Church had also tried to regain its lost freedom, inevitably failed. Things, however, could not go on as before. For a short period of time - about a year - there was even retaliation, and churchmen who had participated in the Revolution were also severely punished. The Protestant Church also had her martyrs; some ministers and theological students paid with their lives for their participation in the Revolution. Commemoration of them was prohibited, and their names could only be mentioned in exclusive circles. Today, a memorial tablet on the wall of the Ráday College in Budapest remembers them. Later on, the influence and the effect of political consolidation of the Kádár regime could also be felt in the lives of the churches. Communist ideology, previously unyielding and militant, began to soften somewhat. There was a tacit compromise between the government and society, and the latter gained some of the advantages of a consumer society under “Gulash-Communism”. In exchange, however, it had to give up any open criticism of the system and its ideology. In this milieu, the outward face of the Church changed in many respects. The numerical proportion of the members of the Church Districts, as it had evolved over the course of history, shifted. The great masses of the Reformed population in the eastern half of the country have diminished. The members of urban congregations continued to grow. This process was brought about by certain factors, listed in a Penitent Declaration of the Synod Council in 1946: failure in the prophetic mission of the Church; neglecting the purity of the preaching of the Word; becoming lukewarm in love; compromising with a worldly power, and so on. This repentance came in handy for the state. The repeated mention of the forfeiting of her prophetic mission deprived the Church of her moral right to raise her voice on behalf of those persecuted and cast out by the regime. From this repentance, it was concluded that criticism had to be silenced, loyalty to the established political power was declared to be the supreme virtue, and the new social order had to be considered the best one possible. From the state's point of view, it was desirable that the Church withdrew within the boundaries of her buildings; to step forward was permissible and possible only if summoned. By means of the dissolution of associations, those manifestations of church life, which were based on small communities, were declared to be undesirable. The general wellbeing of the Church was impaired by the suppression of these organizations, and she was unable to provide an opportunity for integrating all the slumbering forces in the nation. Thus the revival movement was simply declared to be illegal, instead of entering into a proper dialogue with the dignitaries of the Church. Dialogue was in fact not suited to the practice of Church government. These distorted circumstances had the logical consequence that Church members were distrustful of their leaders. The change in society as a consequence of the official state policy of the breaking up of the traditional forms of rural life also contributed considerably to the change in the image of the Church. The churches were unable to give a proper response to the challenges of their secularized surroundings. The Church left the laity to its peripheries; the general aversion to church and religion; the prejudice against those who had faith. All these contributed to the low level of church life. Generations were born and raised without any religious education; church attendance was far from being characteristic of the new socialist men. As the Communist ideology had practically no ethical teachings, the whole of Hungarian society sank below the level of European humanity, and the nation became disillusioned of an unsuccessful socialist experiment. It was a people whose national identity had been dissolved in a proletarian internationalism, was brainwashed with the phrase of being a “sinful nation” because of its participation in a lost war; a people whose faith in God was being extinguished by atheism. All this was further aggravated by the cynicism of Party politicians, who proclaimed that the socialist society was the best one possible; at least better than that of the previous generations or that of the western world. In such circumstances the Church has, theoretically, a great many things to accomplish. She has to convince people of the truth of God, to preach the word of God, to comfort the people, to comfort society's rejected people. In spite of all her weakness, the Church has always had members who had faith, who continued the tradition of the Reformers and preached the Word. Despite all the disadvantages and barriers, hundreds of thousands of faithful Church members, elders, and ministers kept the faith and passed it on as far as they could to the next generation. The Church, increasingly discovering herself, began again to provide her instruments: churches and diaconal institutions have been built. From the 1960's on, Church activities and functions have developed, the publication of theological and educational books has increased, and a new Hungarian translation of the Bible has been prepared and has prompted hitherto unseen demand. During this period, the ecumenical spirit and Church-relations strengthened significantly. → Bible in Hungarian; Bereczky, Albert; Bertha, Tibor; Ecumenical Council of Hungarian Churches.

X. THE CHURCH AFTER THE POLITICAL CHANGE – From 1989 on, political change took place across all the Eastern Bloc countries. The nations of Central and Eastern Europe, including their churches, were freed from Communist oppression and isolation. A new era dawned for the Reformed Church also in democratic Hungary on 23 October 1989, when the Republic of Hungary was announced from the Parliament Building. The State Office for Church Affairs, the oppressive organ of the state Party, has been closed. By 1990, Act IV on freedom of conscience and religion, as well as on the churches, had been passed. Paragraph 1 of this Act states: “Freedom of conscience and religion is a basic human right due to everybody, the undisturbed practice of which is guaranteed by the Hungarian Republic”. In the new democratic system the church tried to recover from its subjugated, oppressed and impoverished condition.

The Hungarian Reformed School System has been working as a network since the beginning of the 16th century. By the 1940's, 1,000 public schools with 130,000 students, 14 secondary schools with 1,500 students, 8 teacher-training institutes with 2,000 trainee teachers, 24 grammar schools, 2 trade and 2 agricultural colleges with 8,500 students, were managed by the Reformed Church. After the political changes, which followed

World War II, schools were nationalized in Hungary, and of the church schools only the Theological Academy, the Grammar School of the Debrecen Reformed College, and the Budapest Theological Academy survived.

Following the political changes in 1989, it was possible once again to recover, among other schools, two of its historic colleges at Pápa and Sárospatak, and to establish and operate new church schools. At the turn of the millennium, 460 children attended Reformed kindergartens. Almost 7,000 children studied at 33 Reformed Primary Schools under 600 teachers. There are 20 Reformed Grammar Schools, 15 of which also have student hostels. The Church was able to establish the Gáspár Károli Reformed University in Budapest – the first in the history of the Church. The University was founded on the basis of the old Budapest Reformed Theological Academy, founded in 1855 in Pest. The Károli University has three faculties: theology, arts, and teacher training. Recently lawyers have also been trained there. The Theological Academy at Debrecen is, as the Debrecen Reformed Theological University, a member of Debrecen University – a university federation. It has two major branches, the Szeged Religious Teacher Training College, and the religious education project at Hajdúböszörmény; and also a Kindergarten Teachers' College. Amongst other colleges there are the Ferenc Kölcsey Reformed Teacher Training College in Debrecen, and the Theological Academy of the Reformed College of Sárospatak. Teachers of religion are trained at the Gáspár Károli Reformed University, the Szeged branch of the Debrecen Theological Faculty, the Miskolc branch of the Sárospatak Theological Academy, and the Nagykőrös Reformed Teacher Training College. The training of pastors of the Reformed Church of Hungary takes place in Budapest, Debrecen, Pápa and Sárospatak. The training lasts for six years, of which five are spent at the Academy, in two of its historic colleges, and there are 134 schools on various levels with a total of 25,000 students.

Now the Church has 35 Diaconal Institutes, 16 conference centers/recreation homes, and runs 11 special missions, among them: Military Chaplaincy; Prison Chaplaincy; Mission for the Blind, Mission for Alcoholics; Gypsy Mission etc., and 9 cultural institutions. The circumstances of church life have experienced dramatic changes. The highest governing body of the Church is the General Synod. The Church has four church districts, (Danubian, Transdanubian, Cistibiscan and Transtibiscan), 27 deaneries, 1,200 congregations, 1,402 churches and some 1,100 active ministers.

The Church is organized according to Presbyterian principles. Instead of moderators, it has bishops elected for 6-year terms – formerly they were elected for life. Its historical reason is that the Habsburg emperors/kings acknowledged only that a Church, which had a bishop as its head, elected for a six years term. The Church carries out its mission for the benefit of all Hungarians and it keeps close contact with Hungarian Reformed Churches in the neighboring states of the Carpathian region, as well as with those in diaspora all over the world, within the framework of the Consultative Synod of the Hungarian Reformed Churches.

The Church is a member of the World Council of Churches, the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and the Conference of European Churches; it participates in the work of the Ecumenical Council of Hungarian Churches since 1943; the Church has its own publisher, the Calvin Publisher (Kálvin János Könyvkiadó), its own printing workshops; an official monthly, The Reformed Church (Református Egyház); a weekly, the Newspaper of Reformed People (Reformátusok Lapja); a periodical, the Confessio and a website, and websites of a number of congregations.– B: 0922, 0923, 7103, 1847, T: 7103, 1847.→Reformed Church in Romania; Reformed Church in Slovakia; Reformed Church in Sub-Carpathian Ukraine; Reformed Church in Yugoslavia; Reformed Hungarian Churches in Western Lands; Reformed Colleges; Károli Gáspár Reformed University.

Hungarian Reformed Churches in the Successor States – The Trianon Peace Treaty (1920), and the Paris Peace Treaty (1947) divided 2/3rd of the territory of Historic Hungary into several pieces, which were ceded to neighboring States, including 3.5 million ethnic Hungarians. In order for these Hungarians belonging to the Reformed faith to survive, they had to establish their own church bodies as follows:

Reformed Church in Croatia (Croatian Reformed [Calvinist] Christian Church) (Horvátországi Református Keresztyén [Kálvini] Egyház [HRKKE]) – With the independence of Croatia, the Reformed congregations organized their churches in 1993. However, in 1999, a split occurred which resulted in three churches: the above one, the Croatian Hungarian Reformed Christian Church (Horvátországi Magyar Református Keresztyén Egyház [HMRKE]), and the Croatian Protestant Reformed Christian Church (Horvátországi Protestáns Református Keresztyén Egyház [HPRKE]), which uses Croatian language. The Serb-Croat war decimated the once flourishing congregations and their churches remained badly damaged, such as the ones in Kórógy (Korod), Szentlászló (Laslovo) and Haraszi (Hrastin); however, most of them have since been rebuilt. The church at Bellye (Bilje) is recently under restoration. The HRKKE has around 4,000 members. The Church's bishop is the Rt. Rev. Lajos Csáti Szabó. There is a Hungarian Reformed Church at Szécsiszentlászló (now Motvarjevci) in Slovenia. – B: 0927, T: 7103.→Atrocities against Hungarians.

Reformed Church in Romania (Romániai Református Egyház) – The Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate (1920), and the Paris Peace Treaty (1947), ceded Transylvania (Erdély) and Partium (northern Transylvania) to Romania. Between 1940 and 1944, the northern part of Transylvania was again under Hungarian authority by the Second Vienna Award on 30 August 1940. The Hungarian Reformed churches in Transylvania and in the Partium had to reorganize themselves within Romania. The Church consists of two church districts: the historical Reformed Church District in Transylvania (Erdélyi Egyházkerület), and the King's Pass Area Reformed Church District (Királyhágómelléki Egyházkerület). The creation of a third Church District in the Transylvania is under consideration.

The Transylvanian Reformed Church District (Erdélyi Református Egyházkerület) was one of the five Hungarian church districts, which founded the Reformed Church in Hungary in 1567. It has 16 deaneries, about 400,000 members in 512 congregations, and 542 ministers. The Communist regime, 1948-1989, confiscated its schools, institutes and other properties. Approximately 500 buildings were nationalized and only a few were returned to the Church. However, the Church has been involved in a vigorous reconstruction and building program since the fall of the Communist regime in 1990. Some 220 new buildings were built, including 33 churches, 22 manses, 2 major conference centers, 2 health centers, 4 senior citizens homes, 2 orphanages, 1 children village, 3 youth centers, 5 kindergartens and one elementary school. 250 church buildings were renovated and 40 new congregations were organized. The District has one High School and, in addition, 5 High School classes, 6 Colleges and 4 Diaconal Institutes, 2 Diaconess training and one church-organist training schools. There are two centers for training of teachers of religion and ministers are being trained at the Reformed Theological Academy, Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca).

The King's Pass Area Reformed Church District (Királyhágómelléki Református Egyházkerület) was formed in 1921 when, after the 1920 Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate, a part of the Transbiscan Reformed Church District of Hungary was ceded to Romania. The District includes the historical Partium – a region between the Great Hungarian Plain's eastern part – Transylvania proper, and the bigger part of the Bánság region. The northern part of Partium came under Hungarian authority between 1940 and 1944. The Church District has 350,000 members in 9 deaneries, 271 congregations, 71 affiliated churches, and 174 Diasporas. The 486 congregations are being served by some 250 ministers. The Communist regime nationalized 277 schools, institutions and properties of the Church, and so far only the headquarters of the bishopric and a tenth of the buildings were returned. Since 1990, the Church managed to build some 13 new churches, 13 congregation halls and renovated 40 churches. It has some 14 social institutes and 3 high schools with some 700 students, and has two colleges as well. The Church established the Partium Christian University at Nagyvárad (now Oradea). In the Temesvár (now Timisoara) congregation, their minister, László (Ladislás) Tökés' resistance triggered the revolution, which led to the collapse of the Communist regime in Romania in 1989. The Church was the bastion of Hungarian identity and culture against the forced assimilation and organized settlement policy of the majority Romanian nation, which resulted in a dramatic decrease of Hungarian population; while in 1910 it was 32%, in 2002 it fell under 20%. – B: 0922, 0924, T: 7103.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty; Vienna Award II; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Reformed Church in Serbia (Reformed Christian Church in Yugoslavia, now in Serbia) (Jugoszláviai Református Keresztyén Egyház) – The Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate of 1920 ceded the central and western parts of southern Hungary to the Serb-Croat-Slovene Kingdom, which became Yugoslavia in 1918. The Reformed congregations had to organize themselves in 1922. The Church had 4 deaneries and some 77 congregations. In 1923 they founded an orphanage. During World War II, the Bácska region was temporarily returned to Hungary between 1941 and 1945. After the war, when the region again fell under Yugoslavian authority, the Serbian partisans massacred some 40,000 ethnic Hungarians, mostly church members. The Balkan war between 1990 and 1995 led to further losses of life. Owing to repression, discrimination and war, the Hungarian population in Voivodina (Vajdaság) alone dropped from 29% to 17%. In 1920, the Hungarian population was 550,000; this is now ca 270,000. During the last decade of the 20th century, due to the war, some 50,000 Hungarians emigrated and 35,000 found jobs in Western countries. In addition, some 200,000 Serbs settled in Voivodina, 70,000 permanently. A new situation occurred with the independent, fully Roman Catholic Croatia. The Protestant Church's congregations in Croatia had to depart. Now the Church has congregations only in the Serbia part of the former Yugoslavia. At present the Church has 55 congregations and 15 ministers. – B: 0922, 0926, T: 7103.→ Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty; Vienna Award; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Reformed Church in Slovakia (Reformed Christian Church in Slovakia) (Szlovákiai Református Keresztyén Egyház) – Until the end of World War I, the Church belonged to the Reformed Church in Hungary. The Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate (1920) ceded the northern part of Hungary (Felvidék) and its eastern part called Ruthenia (Kárpátalja) to the newlyformed Czechoslovakia. Consequently, the 449 Hungarian Reformed, 31 Slovakian Reformed and 12 bilingual congregations had to reorganize themselves in the new state. In 1923 they founded the Reformed Christian Church in Slovakia, with one General Synod and three Church Dioceses, the Danubian, the Cistibiscan and the Sub-Carpathian. The Church had 223,168 members and 225 elementary schools, but lost its Teacher Training College, and only in 1935 was the Church able to set up its own Theological Seminary, with 22 candidates for the ministry, which existed until 1938.

By the First Vienna Award on 2 November 1938 – according to a peacefully negotiated agreement – Czechoslovakia voluntarily returned to Hungary Slovakia's southern, heavily Hungarian-populated strip. With it, the majority of the Reformed Churches in Slovakia returned to the Reformed Church in Hungary, the mother Church. Only 25 congregations remained in Slovakia, of which half were Slovakian. At the end of World War II, the Church again found itself in a new situation. Czechoslovakia was re-established and its southern part was taken away from Hungary with an overwhelmingly Hungarian population. The eastern part of the country, called Sub-Carpathia, was given to the Soviet Union on 29 June 1945. With it, the Church lost one of the three dioceses. General animosity against 700,000 Hungarians and the discriminative Beneš Decrees made Hungarians collective war criminals, were outlawed, homeless and persecuted; church life became almost impossible. In 1948, after the Communist take over, all church schools, institutions and property were confiscated. Because of persecution, deportation and discrimination, the number of the ethnic Hungarians fell from 31% in 1910 to 10% in 2002. The Church originally had 307 congregations, but their number shrank to 269 in those decades. They had to train ministers at the Comenius Faculty in Prague.

A new era of freedom dawned to the Church in 1989, after the collapse of the Communist system. Another influential political event was the formation of the Slovak Republic on 1 January 1993. The Church now has some 110,000 members in 230 congregations, and 81 congregations in diaspora, organized in 9 deaneries, including 2 Slovakian ones. The Church has 236 ministers. There is a Theological Academy at Komarno (Komárom), established in 1994 with 100 students and 2 catechetical schools, one youth center, one diaconal center, 4 elementary schools, and one high school class. – B: 0822, 0925, T: 7103.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty; Vienna Award I; Beneš Decrees; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Reformed Church in Sub-Carpathian Ukraine (Kárpátaljai Református Egyház) – Sub-Carpathia, or Ruthenia, formed a part of Historic Hungary. It was awarded to the newly formed Czechoslovakia by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate in 1920. After the First Vienna Award of 1938, the territory was returned by Hungary. Soon after the end of World War II, on 29 June 1945, it came under the jurisdiction of the Soviet Union. After the dissolution of the Soviet Union, this region became part of Ukraine in 1992. After 1945, the congregations had to reorganize themselves into their present form. During the war, there were 104 ministers, who were reduced to 60 at the end of the war. Several ministers suffered persecution; the rest were placed under surveillance. By 1975, their number was 24, while there were 86 congregations. The Hungarian population was 31 % in 1910, but due to deportation, forced assimilation and settlement policy of the ruling nations, it fell to 10% in 2002. From 1975 on, the situation of the Church changed for the better. From 1991, two people were allowed to be trained for the ministry in Hungarian Reformed Theological Academies abroad. At present there are 95 congregations and 38 actively serving ministers. Some 90 young religious instructors graduated between 1992 and 1995. Lately, 12 new churches and 24 new manses were built, and several churches and manses have been repaired. There are three high schools as well. – B: 0922, T: 7103. → Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty; Vienna Award; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Reformed Churches of the Carpathian Basin – divided by historical causes in 1920 declared their unity on 22 May 2009, at 11:00 a.m., at the Debrecen meeting. The Hungarian Reformed Churches of Hungary, Transcarpathia (Ukraine), Vojvodina (Serbia), Transylvania (Romania) and Partium (Romania) signed a Constitution as one Hungarian Reformed Church. On 21 June 2011, at the Temesvár (Timișoara, Romania) meeting of the General Convent, the Presidium (the Bishop and the Lay President) of the Reformed Christian Church in Slovakia signed the Constitution of the Hungarian Reformed Church with legal reservation, thus joining the unity of the Reformed communities of the Carpathian Basin.

Consulting Synod of the Hungarian Reformed Churches (Magyar Református Egyházak Tanácskozó Zsinata) was established in 1995, which represents all Hungarian Reformed Churches worldwide. – B: 1613, 1031, T: 7103.

Reformed Hungarian Churches in Western Lands – In the last 125 years, Hungarians emigrated to the western countries in subsequent waves. At the turn of the 19/20th century, Hungarians – like many other eastern European people – moved as guest workers and emigrants because of the attractive job and living conditions in the West. After World War I, a new wave of Hungarian emigrants moved west, because of the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate (1920), which dismembered Hungary. Many of those Hungarians, who – against their will – had to live under oppressive foreign authorities in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), former northern Hungary (Felvidék, Czechoslovakia) and Voivodina (Délvidék, Yugoslavia/Serbia) preferred to emigrate to western countries. The next wave of émigrés moved to the west due to the political uncertainties after World War II, and the Communist takeover in Hungary. In a single new wave, some 200,000 emigrants moved to the western free nations after the crushed Revolution and Freedom Fight in 1956. The latest wave of emigrants left Hungary at the turn of the 80's and 90s of the 20th century, when the Communist system in Hungary crumbled and collapsed, creating existential uncertainty. Hungarian Churches were organized to serve the spiritual needs of these immigrants. This is how different denominations of Hungarian Churches, such as Roman Catholic, Evangelical-Lutheran, Greek Catholic, Unitarian, Baptist and Reformed/Presbyterian Churches among them – were organized in western countries.

Hungarian Reformed Churches in the United States of America.

The foundation of the Hungarian Reformed Church District in America took place on 5 July 1896 in Trenton, NJ. This date signifies the foundation of both the Hungarian Reformed Association in America, and the Protestant Church, the predecessor of the Calvin Synod. The Synod then belonged to the Reformed Church in the United States, which was the German Reformed Church. In 1904 six congregations and 8 ministers declared themselves part of the Reformed Church in Hungary, which supported them. However, after World War I, the mother Church in Hungary was unable to help them and, on 7 October 1921, in the Tiffin Agreement, they were transferred – by selling them – to the Reformed Church in the United States. In 1935, this Church united with the Evangelical Synod and founded the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Within it, the Hungarian congregations constituted the ‘Magyar Synod’. In 1958 this Church united with the Congregational Christian Church and formed the United Church of Christ. In 1960 the Magyar Synod assumed the name of Calvin Synod (Kálvin Egyházkerület); it is the oldest Hungarian Reformed Church and forms part of the United Church of Christ. The Calvin Synod has a bishop, and 4 classes or deaneries. The Eastern Classis has 12 congregations, the Central Classis has 6 congregations, the Lakeside Classis has 8 congregations, and the Western Classis has 7 congregations. The Church has some 4500 members. The 33 congregations are served by 28 ministers. There are 8 ministers serving in institutions and there are retired pastors as well.

Hungarian Reformed Church in America (Amerikai Magyar Református Egyház). This Church was established by 7 congregations, which did not agree with the Tiffin Agreement of 9 December 1924, at Duquesne PA. The Church later assumed the name of Hungarian Reformed Church in America. It has a bishop, and 4 districts or deaneries. The Eastern District has 9 congregations, the New York district has 8 congregations, the Central District has 7 congregations, and the Western District has 8 congregations. The 32 congregations are served by 34 ministers. Leaders of these two church bodies meet each year on Labor Day weekend. The Churches participate in the work of the Hungarian Reformed Federation and the William Penn Association. The Hungarian Reformed Federation in America runs the Bethlen Home at Ligonier, PA. This includes conference facilities, a senior citizens home, and Archives. There is a Bethlen Museum and Hungarian Heritage Center at New Brunswick, NJ. The Free Hungarian Reformed Church in Akron, Ohio, runs the Lorántffy Zsuzsanna Home for elderly people. In addition, there are some 9 Hungarian Reformed congregations belonging to other major church bodies, and there are 3 United Hungarian Lutheran and Reformed congregations as well. – B: 0906, T: 7103. → America, Hungarians in.

Hungarian Reformed Church in Australia. Some 50-55,000 Hungarians live in Australia. The Reformed Hungarians have the following Churches: Melbourne, Victoria: here live some 15,000 Hungarians; almost half of them emigrated from former Southern Hungary (Délvidék, now Voivodina, Serbia). In 1983, the Australian authorities recognized the independent state of the Church. The congregation has some 1200 members. Sydney, New South Wales: here some 15-20,000 Hungarians live, including 8-10,000 from the former Southern Hungary (Délvidék). The Reformed Church here bought a new manse for the minister in 2007. Queensland: there is a Reformed-Lutheran congregation in Brisbane; in the Gold Coast area, Queensland: some 2-3,000 Hungarians live here, of whom 25 % belong to the Reformed Church. Canberra, the capital city, has some 4-500 Hungarians. There are two small congregations in Adelaide, Southern Australia, and in Perth, Western Australia. Not long ago, four young ministers from Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) began serving in Australia. – B: 1875, T: 7103.→Australia, Hungarians in.

Hungarian Reformed Churches in Canada. Hungarians emigrated to Canada for the same reasons as they did to the USA. Hungarian Reformed Churches were established in Canada at the beginning of the 20th century. 15 Hungarian Reformed Congregations (Magyar Református Gyülekezet) belong to the Presbyterian Church in Canada. 2 Hungarian Reformed Congregations belong to the United Church of Canada, and 3 Hungarian Reformed Congregations belong to the Hungarian Reformed Church in America. The 15 Hungarian Reformed Congregations in Canada are served by 27 ministers, including 3 retired ones, and 3 in English service.→Canada, Hungarians in.

Hungarian Reformed Churches in Western Europe. The Hungarian Reformed Pastoral Service in Western Europe (Nyugat-Európai Magyar Református Lelkigondozó Szolgálat), was founded in 1944, in The Hague, Netherland, has been serving Reformed Hungarians live in Western Europe. Two congregations each are in Austria, Germany, and Switzerland; one each in England, Holland, and France; one Reformed-Lutheran congregation is in Estonia, Finland, Norway and Sweden respectively.

South America: Argentina. In 1953 Reverend Balázs Dezső (Blaise Desider) Nagy moved from Brazil to Buenos Aires, Argentina, where he organized the Hungarian Reformed Congregation and purchased a three-storey building for the church, manse and offices. The building is the center of the Hungarian Reformed people in Argentina. The name of the church is: Iglesia Cristiana Reformada Evangélica Húngara en la Argentina in Buenos Aires. There is a home for senior citizens maintained by the Hungarian Charity Society. Rev. Nagy also rendered pastoral care for the Hungarian Reformed people living in diaspora in Uruguay. – B: 1875, T: 7101→Nagy, Balázs, Dezső; Argentina, Hungarians in.

Brazil. Some 80, 000 Hungarians live in the Brazil, where they speak Portuguese. The Hungarian Reformed mission began with Rev. János (John) Apostol in 1932 sent to perform missionary work there by his mother Church. Soon he successfully organized and founded the Hungarian Reformed Church in Brazil in 1943. The first church was dedicated in Brazil at Árpádfalva in 1935. The Sao Paulo church, built in Kalotaszeg style, was dedicated in 1941. The central church at Sao Paulo also organized churches in the countryside in 17 different locations, among them in Burim, Árpádfalva and Rákóczifalva. In 1946, the congregations formed an independent Church under the name Igreja, Christa Reformada do Brazil. Rev. Apostol extended his missionary work over Uruguay and Argentina. In the meantime, his colleagues, Albert Varga, Balázs Dezső (Blaise Desider) Nagy, László (Ladislav) Báthory, Árpád Girid-Papp, Béla Mohai-Szabó, István (Stephen) Csákány, with his wife's assistance. After the death of Apostol, the new pastor, Rev. Csaba Kenéz arrived in Sao Paulo in 1993. – B: 1875, T: 7103.→Apostol, János; Csákány, István; Brazil, Hungarians in.

Uruguay. On the initiative of Rev. Balázs Dezső (Blaise Desider) Nagy from Argentina, there was a movement among the Hungarian Reformed people to establish a congregation in 1958. It was finalized in 1960 with Rev. Pál (Paul) Kovács. The congregation grew and was active. After the pastor moved to the USA, the congregation declined, and, from 1975, Rev. Imre (Emeric) Szabó served them from Argentina. Some 10 thousand Hungarians live in the country with 2-3 thousand in Montevideo. – B: 1875, T: 7103.→Kovács, Paul; Uruguay, Hungarians in.

Venezuela. At the turn of the millennium, some 4-5,000 Hungarians lived in the country. Hungarians of the Reformed Church form part of the Hungarian Lutheran Congregation in Caracas.→Venezuela, Hungarians in.

Reformed Church in South Africa. The Hungarian diaspora in the South African Republic is quite a new development. Since the turn of the 19th century, Hungarians have lived there; many of them arrived after the two world wars and the 1956 Revolution; now some 10 thousand live there. Since 1950 Rev. Kálmán (Coloman) Papp has served the Hungarian-Afrikaaner Congregation at Krügensdorf, and he founded six small congregations. He conducted worship service in Hungarian once a month. From 1951 Kálmán (Coloman) Papp has been minister. He founded seven small congregations. The Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak made him an Honorary Titular Professor in 2008. – B: 1875, T: 7103.→Africa, Hungarians in.

Reformed Churches, Hungarian in World Organizations:

They all belong to the World Alliance of Reformed Churches; The World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC) since 2010; the World Council of Churches since 1948; the Consulting Synod of the Hungarian Reformed Churches (Magyar Református Egyházak Konzultatív Zsinata) (established on 20 April 1995); the World Federation of Hungarian Churches, and the General Convent of the Hungarian Reformed Churches in the Carpathian Basin (A Kárpátmedencei Magyar Református Egyházak Generális Konventje) (established on 17 November, 2004). – B: 0906, T: 7103.

Reformed Theological Seminary in Losonc, Slovakia (now Lučenec) (1926-1939) – As a consequence of the unjust Trianon-Versailles Peace Dictate that was forced upon Hungary (1920), the Reformed Church in northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia) had to reorganize itself in the newly created Czechoslovak state, and it needed to found a Hungarian seminary for training ministers. The Reformed Church Convent in Hungary turned to the new state authority for help in setting up a minister-training seminary in 1922 and 1923, but to no avail. The Church, with its own means, and with the help of the Scottish and American sister churches, created an institution, which trained 123 ministers between October 1925 and 31 January 1939. The organizing work was carried out by Reverend Béla Sörös, a minister in Losonc, who became the principal. The teaching staff were: Gyula (Julius) Bacsó, Zoltán Galambos, Géza Kúr, Imre (Emeric) Narancsik, Mihály (Michael) Péter; László (Ladislav) Módos and Ferenc (Francis) Papp from Hungary; András (Andreas) Tunyogi Csapó and József (Joseph) Nagy from Transylvania (Erdély) etc. As a result of the First Vienna Award (1938), the ethnic Hungarian territories were returned to Hungary, and the maintenance of the Seminary was no longer necessary. Today, the Reformed Christian Church in Slovakia is training ministers at the János (John) Selye University of Komárom/Komarno (Univerzita J. Selyeho) as well as abroad. – B: 1878, T: 7103.

Reformed Colleges:

(1) College of Budapest – Although there was a Reformed Congregation in Pest in the 16th century, Protestant Churches were not allowed to have either congregations or schools until the Turkish occupying forces left Hungary (1699). This remained the case during the Counter-Reformation until the issuing of the Edict of Tolerance in 1781. At the end of the 18th, and the beginning of the 19th century, the foundation of a Protestant University became an urgent issue that could not be realized at that time.

Pál (Paul) Török, who was later elected bishop, worked hard to establish the Theological Institute of the Danube Church District, which was opened on 10 October 1855 at Calvin Square in Pest. Soon, there was not enough space in the existing buildings, so the church rented a building from the Ferencváros Tobacco Factory and turned the building into a Theological Academy with the financial assistance of the Church of Scotland. Students' rooms, and the valuable library that was bought from the family of Pál (Paul) Ráday in 1861, were also situated in this building at 28 Ráday Street. This complex, created from three neighboring buildings, began its work as the Budapest Theological Academy in 1912. The student hostel, where secular university students were also admitted between the two world wars was from 1937 on called Ráday College.

The General Assembly of the Church District decided in 1978 to extend and renovate the building. Between 1981 and 1983, a new wing was built with 75 rooms for 2 students each, and 8 apartments. The dedication of the building was on 10 October 1983, which is now the Memorial Day of the opening of the Theological Academy. Between 1983 and 1987, the old building was fully renovated; its roof and support system were repaired, and finally, the original facade was replaced. The building is a modern center for pastors' education, for library and archival work; it also contains the Danube Church District Offices and other institutions.

As a result of the return of nationalized Reformed Church schools by the state during the decade of the 1990's, the number of educational institutions has grown rapidly in the Danube Church District. Ráday College and other church educational and community institutions within it had to restructure their finances in order to be more independent.

Of the 150 students of the Theological Faculty of Ráday College, 30 come from abroad annually, mainly from neighboring countries, where Hungarian Reformed Churches exist due to the Trianon and Paris Dictated Peace Treaties (1920, 1947) It is an integral part of the faculty's work to co-operate with other educational institutions, and contact is maintained with the Hungarian-language pastors' training schools. The famous organization of Hungarian-language theological colleges, Coetus Theologorum, dating from before World War II, was re-organized in 1991. The Theological Faculty is in close contact with several theological institutes abroad, such as the theological faculties of Heidelberg, Bern, Leiden, and Vienna, and they pursue common research projects.

The main goal of the Ráday Collection is to provide appropriate literature for the faculty's students. There is also a printing press in the College. In addition to the textbooks of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University, many Church papers and College publications are printed.

There are about a thousand students studying at the Theological Faculty, the Faculty of Arts of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University, and the Teacher Training College in Nagykőrös. At the Faculty of Arts the following courses are offered: Hungarian Language and Literature, History, English Language and Literature, Dutch Language and Literature, Japanese Language and Literature, and mathematics and information sciences, with the co-operation of the Faculty of Science of the University of Budapest. – B: 1847, T: 1847, 7103.→Edict of Tolerance; Török, Pál; Károli, Gáspár Reformed University.

(2) Reformed College of Debrecen – Debrecen became a Protestant town in the 1530s. The direction of the town school was taken over by reformers in 1538, and that is why the foundation year of the Debrecen Reformed College is traditionally associated with this year. The Reformed College has played an outstanding role in Hungarian and world cultural history. Every level of education was provided for, from the lowest to the highest. Its students were peasants, craftsmen, bourgeois, and noblemen. After graduation, they either undertook study-trips abroad, sometimes lasting for several years, or returned to the communities they had come from to share their spiritual treasures with the villages and towns. Hundreds of village schools and printing presses were established because of their work; churches were built on the Great Hungarian Plain, and God's Word could be preached in Hungarian. The College Library collected the most valuable books of progressive scholarship; thus it became one of the most important academic collections in the educated world. But village schools were also provided with textbooks, maps and so on. The Museums of the College testify to this. The College has always been financed by voluntary donations, thus serving universal human culture and development.

The House of Representatives of the Hungarian Parliament held its sessions within the walls of the College – in the Oratory, the Prayer Room – between 9 January and 31 May 1849.

When Debrecen became the capital of the country for the second time, a temporary Parliament was established in the same place on 21 December 1944. The basic laws of the new, democratic Hungary were formulated there.

A new era in the College's life began with the nationalization of schools. In 1948 the high schools were gradually separated from their fellow high schools in the rest of the country. The teacher training college and the secondary schools had to be closed. In 1950 the Theological Faculty, which had been part of the state university's framework, returned to the management of the College as the Reformed Theological Academy and continued training ministers. In 1952, with the exception of the Debrecen Reformed High School, all other Reformed secondary schools were nationalized. A small proportion of the pupils and teachers were able to continue working at the High School. Finally, the Teacher Training Institute for the education of secondary school teachers also had to be closed. However, the College managed to keep its valuable scholarly collections, its Library, the Church District Archives, and the School History and Church Art Museum that was opened in 1967 on its property. Later, the College also lost the High School building on Péterfia Street (Református Főgimnázium); under political pressure, it had to “offer” the building to the State.

After the political changes of 1989, the Debrecen College once again joined the spiritual network of revived church schools and the University. In 1991, by an act of Parliament, this Academy became qualified as the Reformed University of Theology, Debrecen. The State has returned the building in Péterfia Street, which is where the Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey Reformed Teacher Training Institute now works. In 1992 the primary school of the College was restarted, and in this way the traditional structure of the institution was restored.

College's Institutions – The primary aim of the Theological Academy is the training of ministers. This is carried out by eight professors over the course of ten terms. The ninth Chair is the Chair for Training Teachers of Religion in Szeged. The Theological Academy also runs three research institutes: the Institute for Research on the Reformation, the István (Stephen) Hatvani Theological Research Center, and the Catechetical Research Center. In accordance with the traditions of the College, student self-government is once again functioning. The Theological Academy is one of the founders of the Universitas Union in Debrecen.

Many of the college students went to Heidelberg early in the 17th century on a scholarship; after 1623 they went to the universities of Holland. They also liked to go across to England, to the source of Puritanism, even if they had to do it secretly. There were some puritan professors in the College, such as György Mártonfalvi Tóth. The students of the College returned from their scholarship studies abroad, bringing back with them all the spiritual riches, the latest scientific results, spiritual, theological and artistic trends to Hungary.

The High School of the Reformed College in Debrecen employs ca. 30 full-time teachers to instruct its ca. 580 students. The majority of the latter is from the countryside, accommodated in a boarding school. The students are required to pass an entrance examination. Their education concentrates mainly on languages, computer technology, humanities, and the exact sciences. No tuition fee is charged, and students have to pay only for a part of their board, and scholarships are available.

The Teacher Training College bears the name of the great poet Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey (1790-1838), and awards diplomas for teachers, precentors and librarians. The training of ca. 900 day-students and 830 probationers is backed up by a library of 90,000 volumes, a boarding school accommodating 220 persons, a theater, and a number of special workshops.

The Reformed General School was established in 1992 with the help of the congregation of the Great Church (Debrecen Nagytemplom). This School has been organized on a Christian basis, and functions with two classes in each grade.

The Great Library is the greatest church library in the country, with a stock of over half a million volumes (excluding duplicates). The material of the scientific section is now being computerized for the public, and some 70,000 records are also available on the Internet.

In the Archives of the Church District and of the College, 1400 meters of systematized material awaits research workers.

The Museum of the College and of Church Art consists of two parts: a collection on educational history, and one on ecclesiastical art. The chalices and tankards exhibited are masterpieces of Hungarian goldsmith craft, and the cloths for the Lord's Table are rare products of Hungarian embroidery.

The College Kántus of Debrecen. College students have sung at burials and other events since the 16th century, and regular singing has always been an integral part of College life. The Kántus, as a choir in the modern sense, was organized by György (George) Maróthi. Its recent golden age began in 1967. In 1984 it was internationally recognized as an eminent mixed concert choir and, in the same year, it won first prize among youth choirs in Middlesbrough, England. During recent years, the Kántus has performed in a number of countries in western Europe and America, as well as in Transylvania, Slovakia, and the Carpathian Ukraine – B: 1847, 1928, T: 1847, 7103, 7456.→Debrecen; Hatvani, István; Maróthi, György; Kölcsey, Ferenc; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.→Debrecen, Reformed College.

(3) Reformed College of Pápa – The College was founded in 1531 and, from 1585, functioned as a two-tier college, with theology and a secondary school. Until 1797 it was financed by the Pápa Reformed Church, and thereafter by the Transdanubian (Dunántúli) Church District.

After the trials of the Counter-Reformation at the end of the 17th century, and the selling into galley-slavery of Bishop István Sellyei and Professor Bálint Csergő, the College had to struggle to survive for more than half a century. Until 1752, the Pápa Reformed Church and the College were exiled to Adásztevel near Pápa. It was only after the 1781 Edict of Tolerance that the College could return to Pápa, and from the 1790s on it was developing strongly.

The rules of the school were first codified in 1585. The basic ideals of the College: Christian morals and tolerance to fellow humans have been preserved until today. The school has always been tolerant of non-Reformed students, and it has supported poor students with foundations and scholarships. From the 17th century on, regular study trips abroad were provided for students. Over the centuries, several hundred college students have studied at universities in Germany, Holland, Switzerland, England, and Scotland. In addition to the formal discipline of the school, student self-government has also been developed, which has greatly contributed to the healthy and harmonious atmosphere of the school. Its creative atmosphere is emphasized by the motto on its ancient symbol: “Flourishing Freely” (“Szabadon tenyészik”).

The College, with its European standards, was silenced for 39 years after the nationalization of church schools in 1948 by the Communist government. It started operating again in 1991, after the regime change, beginning its 460th year. The College is gradually being rebuilt, as the nationalized wings of the building are coming into use again. Alumni of the College have co-operated in collecting donations both nationally and internationally in order to modernize the buildings that have been in bad condition, or even simply to make it possible to use them. The ground floor of the building holds the Collection of the Transdanubian Church District. There has also been an opportunity to construct physics and chemistry laboratories, computer rooms, as well as classrooms.

The school is a four-year secondary school with special classes in arts, sciences and general courses. It prepares students mainly for university or college studies. In some subjects – Hungarian language and literature, German and English languages, and mathematics – its students acquire a higher than average knowledge. The school shares the building with the 200,000-volume Library and the Museum. As it is a major aim to acquaint students with the basics of classical culture, Latin is a compulsory subject for at least two years. For those students who incline toward the arts, four specialist teachers, piano, organ, guitar and pottery, and a workshop for engraving are provided. Sports facilities include two gymnasiums, a weights room, an outdoor sports field, and a swimming pool nearby. Popular excursions and camps are regularly organized for the students, such as canoeing, skiing, language and study camps in other regions of Hungary, as well as trips to England, Germany, Holland, Austria, Romania and Slovakia. The school has maintained an exchange student link with Eastern and Western European sister schools. Students are prepared for university entrance exams free of charge. To give a statistical example: 105 students passed their final exams in 1996, and out of 94 who applied to university or college, 75 were admitted. Fifteen foundations, set up by alumni, and other school sponsors, support the talented students. The school works with full capacity; the 418 students are being educated by young teachers, who live in the 18 teachers' apartments.

To ensure the Reformed character of the High School, and to deepen students' faith, compulsory participation at the Sunday services and morning worship (organized on a denominational basis) is included in the educational program. Further visits to congregations and Advent evenings serve the goals of community building and faith. The College has been serving the Church and national culture for centuries. – B: 1847, T: 1847, 7103.→Kosci Csergő, Bálint; Galley Slave Hungarian Preachers; Decade of Mourning; Edict of Tolerance.

(4) Reformed College of Sárospatak – The school was founded in 1531 by Franciscan monks in the spirit of the Reformation, and in obedience to the Decree of the Lord of Sárospatak Castle, Péter Perényi. A majority of Sárospatak students came from different segments of society, all proud of their national independence. Another factor, which determined the spirit of the College was its openness, its European world-view, and the diversity of its education. The atmosphere of the school was influenced by the fact that Ámos János (John) Comenius (1592-1670), an eminent teacher, had worked and taught there. Another determining element of the College is the unity of its progress and tradition. Of its spiritual richness, the library, the collections, and the newly operating schools may be mentioned, while it has three characteristic features. The first is the standard of Theology at Sárospatak, which has always been of the very best. Already in the 16th century, students were reading the Scriptures in the original languages. Amidst changing and often turbulent historic circumstances, the Bible has always been looked to for guidance. The second characteristic feature is that natural sciences have always been included in the curriculum. The Reformed Christian world-view, as formulated by the Hungarian poet Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy (1759-1831), has always been followed: “It is necessary for our faith to be sensible, but also for our senses to be religious...” The third characteristic of the College is that its students could come from peasant families. The Alma Mater gave opportunities for study to children of humble origins, who could otherwise not have afforded the expense. The students returned to their villages as educated people, as pastors, teachers and physicians. Tradition has played a determining role in the formation of the College's internal life. On the tercentenary of the school, the motto “I have three torches burning: faith, native country, and humanity!” („Három fáklyám ég: hit, haza, emberiség!”) was adopted. These three concepts have for centuries been present in the life of the College.

At the turn of the millennium, there were more than 650 students studying at the Reformed High School. The number of pupils is continually growing, and pupils can enroll for either four or six-year courses. Modern equipment and laboratories, computers, and a high standard of foreign language teaching create a pleasant scholarly atmosphere in the College. From 1987 on, students have also been able to receive a bi-lingual Hungarian-English education. As a second foreign language, they may choose German, Russian, French, or Latin. A 350,000-volume library and other scholarly collections support these facilities.

The College Choir has toured both in Hungary and abroad. 145 students attend the Theological Academy, many of whom come from Romania or the Ukraine to become Hungarian Reformed pastors. In this way the Theological Faculty that was revived in 1991 not only trains pastors for congregations in Hungary, but also helps to cater for the needs of Hungarian Churches in surrounding countries that annexed territories from Hungary by the Trianon and Paris Dictated Peace Treaties of 1920 and 1947. – B: 1847, T: 1847, 7103.→Comenius, Ámos János; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Reformed Hungarian Universities→Universities, Hungarian.

Reformed Free Council, National (Országos Református Szabad Tanács) – Council that grew out from the search for the future of the Church after World War II in the midst of an awakening movement. Its origin was in the meeting called together by the Friendly Association of Reformed Congregational Evangelization (Református Gyülekezeti Evanglizáció Baráti Társasága) in Nyíregyháza, 14-17 August 1946, where the Council was formed. Its aim was to discuss the questions of evangelization, reformation, and the awakening. There was number of topics to be discussed, especially those related to the future of the Church; but a group of younger ministers did not agree with some of the proposals. After a couple of meetings, the Council was dissolved in May 1947. – B: 0910, T: 7103.

Reformed Pedagogical Institute, Transylvania (Református Pedagógiai Intézet at Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). The Institute was founded on Dutch (OGO) initiative and with their help on 1 September 1997. Its aim is to promote Reformed religious education in ecclesiastical as well as public schools. The Institute researches methods and strategies, which correspond with the teaching of the Reformed Church and its heritage, as well as that of modern pedagogy. The Institute tries to promote such education actively that helps churches and their members to contribute to the life of local churches, communities and the whole society. – B: 1853, T: 7103.

Reformed Renewal Movement (Református Megújulási Mozgalom) – An Acting Committee (Intézőbizottság) formed on 1 November 1956, for the spiritual and organizational rebuilding of the Reformed Church in the Hall of the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest, during the days of the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight. The movement asked retired Bishop László Ravasz to lead the spiritual renewal. One of the main aims of the movement was to liberate itself quickly from church leaders, who detrimentally influenced relations between church and state, or delivered the church to the will of the state, serving the interest of the state rather than of the church, and contributed to the disintegration of the church. On 1 November, Bishop Ravasz's address was broadcasted on the Hungarian Radio. In it he pleaded to the people of Hungary to maintain order and peace. On 13 November, he issued a "circular letter" to the sessions explaining why it was necessary to bring about the Renewal Movement, and stating the goals of the Movement. The Movement did not question even one statement of the Church-State Agreement, signed on 7 October 1948; it just wanted to return to it and to correct its practical deviations, e.g. on the issues of schools, the mission of the church, etc. It was not a “rebellion against the Word of God” at all. After the crushed Revolution in 1957, the state authorities made any activities of the Movement impossible and indicted and detained some of its leaders. – B: 0910, T: 7103.

Refugees (Hungarian) of World War II – At the end of World War II, there were more than one million Hungarians on Germany territory. They left Hungary either with the various governmental institutions evacuated from Hungary in advance of the arrival of the Soviet armies into Hungary, or were part of the Hungarian military units that were forced out of the country as the Soviet armies reached Hungary’s western borders. With Germany’s surrender on 8 May 1945, all diplomatic connections were temporarily suspended, among them the work of the Papal Nunciature, which served as a connecting link between the Vatican and the German bishops.

It was only in November 1945 that a Vatican Mission was established at the American Headquarters, under Bishop Carlo Chiaro, who appointed a Vatican delegate to work with each refugee group. The first Hungarian Vatican Delegate was Pater S. J. Tibor Gallus, who was later replaced by Zoltán Kótai, Ph.D, a former army chaplain. He considered it his first and most important task to unite the families torn apart by the war. In his registry there were about a million Hungarians. To help with the spiritual and moral needs of the Catholic refugees, he initiated religious services at Schloss Guttenberg near Mühldorf in Upper Bavaria. The spiritual needs of the members of Protestant denominations were also successfully attended to. To help those, who had suffered persecution by the Germans, the United Nations Relief Fund (UNRA) was set up after the war, but since the Hungarians were considered “former enemy aliens” they received no assistance from it. Later on UNRA was replaced by the IRO, the International Refugee Organization, which was to handle the affairs of all refugees. But the IRO did not recognize the Hungarian refugees as Displaced Persons (DP-s) either, for the same reason. The only Occupational Zone where Hungarians were treated as DPs was the French Zone, as Hungary did not declare war on France. It was from the French Zone that Hungarians first became eligible for emigration in 1948. By the early 1950s, the United States and other western countries opened their doors to Hungarians, and most of the refugees emigrated to various parts of the world, since they did not wish, or could not safely return to a Hungary occupied by the Soviet Union. – B: 1020, 7617, T: 7665.

Regéczi Nagy, Imre (Emeric) (Miskolc, 29 October 1854 - Budapest, 10 March 1891) – Physician and physiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1877. He served in Bosnia as a medical officer in 1878 to 1884; he was a demonstrator at the Biological Institute of the University of Budapest and, in 1881, became lecturer. From 1891 he was a professor in the Veterinary Department. He conducted research on biophysics and hematology. His works include The Blood Transfusion (A vérátömlesztés) (1878), and On Blood Pressure (A vérnyomásról) (1880). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Regino’s Worldwide Chronicle – Regino von Prüm, the Abbot of St Dominic’s Cloister in Trier, near Speyer, Germany, completed his Worldwide Chronicle in 908. Based on his research, Regino, one of the most educated men of his day, associated the Hungarians with the Scythians. In the description of the country of the Scythians, he used the works of Justinus, from the 2nd century, and Diaconus Paulus, from the 8th century, and he was familiar with the story of the Magyars and their moving from their earlier home near the Urals to the Carpathian Basin. Concerning the events of 896, he documented that, upon the death of the Moravian Prince Svatopluk, the Magyars attacked the Principdom bequeathed to his sons. In his Chronicle, he also gave an account of the Magyars' Italian campaign in 901. Hungarian chronicle writers also used Regino's work as a resource together with its continuation. – B: 0899, T: 7659.

Regőczy, Krisztina (Christina) (Budapest, 19 April 1955 - ) – Figure-skater and sports leader. From 1961, she was a figure skater first in the Budapest Petőfi Association, and later in the Budapest Sport Association (BSE). At first, she competed in figure skating individually and later, from 1967, she competed with András (Andrew) Sallay in ice dancing. From 1970 to 1980 they performed in the Hungarian National Team. From 1974 they placed among the first six in every World and European championship. They reached the peak of their career in 1980, when they won a silver medal at the Winter Olympics in Lake Placid, USA, and a gold medal at the World Championships in Dortmund, Germany. They concluded their amateur career after their victory in the World Championships. From 1980 Regőczy toured with András Sallay in the American Ice Follies, and as an ice-dancer in the ice show Holiday on Ice in the United States and Canada. In 1984, after her retirement, she opened an ice-dancing school, and organized international training camps in Europe. In Budapest, she was also engaged in training the young Hungarian skaters. In 1996 she became President of the Training Committee of the International Ice-Skating Association (ISU), and became the leader of the Ice-dance Special Committee. In 1999 she opened a fitness salon in Budapest, entitled Gymnastics School and Beauty House (Tornászda és Szépségház). Since 2009 she has been a member of the Presidency of the Hungarian Olympic Committee, and leader of the committee of the organization called Women in Sports (Nők a Sportban). In 2010 she was appointed Sports Director of the special branches: figure skating, ice dancing and synchronized skating of the International Ice-Skating Association. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→ Sallay, András.

Regős – According to linguists and historians, it was the name of the ancient Hungarian shamans. In medieval documents the regūs appears as a professional singer of epic songs in royal or noble courts; hence the expression, regősének, i.e. regős-song. The regős singers accompanied their songs with pipes, koboz, and tambourine. It was practiced up to the 20th century on the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld), in Transdanubia (Dunántúl), and also in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Lately, folk music groups were formed in Hungary and abroad under the name, performing ancient Hungarian folk music. – B&T: 7617.→Music of the Hungarians; Shaman; Koboz.

Reguly, Antal (Anthony) (Zirc, 11 July 1819 - Buda, 23 August 1858) – Linguist, ethnographer and traveler. He studied at Győr and at the University of Pest. He set as his life's ambition the explanation of the Finno-Ugric relationship to the Hungarian language. In 1839 he traveled to Finland through Germany and Sweden, and made a rich collection of ethnographic material among the Lapps. In 1841 he again returned to Helsingfors (Helsinki) and started research into the Estonian language. He made preparations for his research trip in St. Petersburg, and studied the eastern Finno-Ugric Zyrian (Komi), Mordvin, Cheremis (Mari) and Turkic-Chuvash languages. In the meantime, at Peterhof, he became ill from the strenuous work. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences gave him financial assistance with a larger sum of money and he departed from St Petersburg in 1843. Crossing the territory of the Votyaks, Udmurts and Bashkirs, he reached the Ural Mountains; after traversing them, he arrived in the territory of the Voguls (Mansis) at Vsevolodskoy. Living among them, he wrote a dictionary and collected songs. In 1844 he set out to go to the land of the northern Voguls. Soon he started to study the Ostyak (Hanti) ethnic group and its language, staying among them until March 1845. Then he studied the Cheremis language and finally he traveled to the southernmost Finno-Ugric tribe, from where he went to see the Chuvash. He returned to St. Petersburg in August 1846. Here, he worked on elaborating the map of the Ural Mountain region, stretching over 290 km, which he published. He succeeded in collecting linguistic material of fundamental and irreplaceable value. After returning to Hungary, he was the curator of the University Library from June 1848. His illness and his death prevented him from publishing his collected material. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1843). His legacy was processed by several scholars: the Vogul material by Pál Hunfalvy and Bernát Munkácsi; the Chuvash, Cheremis etc. material by József (Joseph) Budenz, and a part of the Ostyak material by József (Joseph) Pápay. The deciphering and publishing part of his work left without translation was undertaken by Budenz, Hunfalvy, Munkácsi and Pápay. His works include The Vogul Land and People (A Vogul föld és nép), published by Pál Hunfalvy (1864), and A Collection of Ostyak Folk-poetry (Osztyák népköltési gyűjtemény), published by József Pápay (1905). A Museum and a Library bear his name in Zirc, and also a street in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, 1068, B: 7456.→Hunfalvy, Pál; Pápay, József; Budenz, József; Munkácsi, Bernát.

Reich, Károly (Charles) (Balatonszemes, 8 August 1922 - Budapest, 7 January 1988) – Graphic artist. Between 1942 and 1948 he studied at the School of Applied Arts, under the masters György (George) Konecsni and Gyula (Julius) Hincz. His art represents one single period both for his drawings and his book illustrations. All his work is characterized by a natural and a deeply felt love for every living being. The nature-experiences of his childhood determined his art for the rest of his life. His deep love of life radiates from his depictions of young girls, boys and horses, characterized by archaic purity and simplicity, and abundant gaiety.. His illustrations of storybooks reveal this aspect of his personality as an artist. His drawings, filled with lyricism, are built on the beauty of the pure outline, or on the bright expressive strength of vivid colors. His significant works include Pastorale (1973); László Arany: Hungarian folk-tales (Magyar népmesék)(1979); Zsigmond Móricz: Animal Stories (Állatmesék) (1980), and Pencil Drawings (Ceruzarajzok) (1985). His individual exhibitions include Dürer Hall (1964), Art Gallery (1972, 1978), Vigadó Gallery (1981), Szekszárd (1976) and Sopron (1988). He was a recipient of the Metropolitan Council Art Prize and the SZOT Prize (1979), the “For children” Prize (1985) and the Hungarian People’s Republic Art Fund Prize (1987). He was awarded the Munkácsi Prize (1954 and 1955) and the Kossuth Prize (1963); he was honored the titles Merited Artist (1972), and Outstanding Artist (1975). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Reigl, Judit (Kápuvár, 1923 - ) – Painter. After the studies in her youth, she had an opportunity to further her education in Italy between 1946 and 1948. In 1950 she emigrated to France in an adventurous way, having crossed the Iron Curtain after several attempts. Since 1963 she has been living and working at Marcousiss, near Paris. During her career, she lived in privation for several decades, so that she could go her own way. She never gave up her artistic independence and she became more and more recognized. Reigl first worked figuratively; then went on to the abstract, capturing movement in her cosmos-like Outburst paintings, as well as in Man, a series of semi-abstract male torsos. In the Déroutement, or Unfolding series, Reigl drew inspiration from the Surrealists. Her works may be found in great international contemporary collections, such as the Museum of Modern Art and the Metropolitan Museum in New York, the Tate Modern in London, the Pompidou Center in Paris, and the Museum of Modern Art in Montreal. In the Tate Modern, the Metropolitan and in the Pompidou, her works are found in permanent exhibitions. In the summer of 2010, in Debrecen, she appeared with her oeuvre exhibition entitled The Rhythm of Existence (A létezés ritmusa). Reigl has had more than thirty solo exhibitions and more than twenty collective exhibitions. By now she is recognized world wide as the most important contemporary artist of Hungary. She is a recipient the Kossuth Prize (2011). – B: 2085, T: 7456.

Reiner, Frigyes (Fritz) (Budapest, 19 December 1888 - New York, 15 November 1963) – Conductor. He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest under the direction of István Thomán, Béla Bartók and János Koessler. In 1909 he was music coach at the Folk Theater (Népszínház), Budapest. In 1910 he was conductor of the theater at Laibach, Germany. Between 1911 and 1914 he was concertmaster of the Folk Opera (Népopera) in Budapest. Between 1914 and 1921 he was visiting conductor at the Court Opera House of Dresden, as well as the Hamburg, Berlin and Vienna Opera Houses. In 1921 he was conducting in Rome and Barcelona. From 1922 until his death, he lived in the USA, where first he conducted the Cincinnati Symphony, then, in 1929 he conducted the New York Philharmonic. In 1931 he became Chair of the Department of Orchestra and Opera at the Curtis Institute of Philadelphia. From 1938 he was Conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and, from 1948 he conducted the orchestra of the Metropolitan Opera of New York. From 1953 he was Conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and, from 1963 he again conducted the Metropolitan Opera. His fine technique and sense for color and rhythm made him one of the greatest conductors of the 20th century. Besides classical and romantic works, he conducted mainly Bartók and Stravinsky compositions, and also those of Zoltán Kodály and Leo Weiner. He was first to introduce some Bartók works to the USA and also made many recordings of Bartók's compositions. – B: 0886, 0883, 1031, 1081, T: 7684, 7456. → Thomán, István; Bartók, Béla; Koessler, János; Kodály, Zoltán; Weiner, Leó.

Reiner, Imre (Emeric) (Versec, now Vršac, Serbia, 18 August 1900 - Lugano, 21 August 1987) – Painter, woodcarver, etcher and type designer. At the age of fifteen, he started studying sculpting in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He moved to Budapest as a result of the Romanian occupation. In 1918 however, he left Hungary to see the world and receive further training. First, he studied in Frankfurt, then in Stuttgart at the State Academy, where he became a student of the renowned German artist I. H. Ernst Schneidler, type and book designer, calligrapher, printer and publisher. At the age of twenty, he had his first exhibition. Between 1923 and 1925 he lived in the United States. However, because he was not able to achieve his artistic plans, he returned to Stuttgart. In 1927, his baseless linear type, the Meridian, especially suitable for advertising, was completed. Reiner's most significant creation in type design was the Corvinus, belonging to the classicist letter types. Over the period of several years, he designed and created, one after the other, the letter types that became famous (Matura, Reiner Script, Reiner Black, etc.). Besides designing letter types, he painted, and created etchings and woodcarvings. Several of his illustrations appeared at exhibitions. In the beginning of the 1930s he resided in Paris; in 1931 he settled down in Ruvigliana near Lugano, Switzerland where, apart from later short-term stays in London and Paris, he lived until the end of his life. He had several exhibitions in Paris, Zürich, Bern and Milano. His paintings, etchings and woodcarvings appeared in artistic albums housed in many museums. He wrote several books and studies. His major works include: Examples of Typography and Illustrations (Beispiele für Typographie und Illustration) (1946); Modern and Historical Typography (1948); Typo Graphisme (1948), and Wish and Organization (Wünsch und Gestaltung) (1949). – B: 1654, 1672, 1081; T: 7684.

Reinitz Béla (Budapest 15 November 1878 - Budapest 26 October 1943) – Composer. He obtained a Ph.D. in Juridical Science and also in Law, but never practiced. From 1906 to 1917 he was a music critic for the daily, People's Voice (Népszava) then, in 1918, for the newspaper World (Világ). From 1910 to 1918 he was the secretary of the National Workers' Insurance Treasury. He was a believer in, and propagator of modern Hungarian music of Zoltán Kodály and Béla Bartók. Under the 1919 Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary he was the government commissar for cultural affairs, and the deputy of the nationalized theaters. In 1920 he emigrated to Vienna. He gave concerts in Austrian, German and Swiss cities as the composer of the workers' movement. He returned to Budapest in 1931. Reinitz was an exceptional cabaret-chanson composer, the first to set Endre (Andrew) Ady's words to music. His main works include music composition for the Hungarian poems of János (John) Arany, Mihály (Michael) Csokonai Vitéz, Attila József, Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, János (John) Vajda, Tamás Emőd, Ernő (Ernest) Szép, Andor (Andrew) Gábor, Zoltán Somlyó, as well as workers' songs. He was an early appreciator and enthusiastic propagator of the musical art of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. During his émigré sojourn in Vienna, his chansons were advertised under the name Viktor Erbé in the Apollo Cabaret. His musical stage work, Shadows Over Haarlem (Árnyak Haarlem felett) was first introduced in Germany in 1930. About 30 of his cabaret songs were published by the Bárd Music Publishers, and a booklet of his songs was published by them in 1956; also stage music e.g. Shadows over Haarlem. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7679, 7456. → Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Ady, Endre; Arany, János; Csokonai Vitéz, Mihály; József, Attila; Petőfi, Sándor; Vajda, János; Emőd, Tamás; Szép, Ernő; Gábor, Andor; Somlyó, Zoltán; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Reisinger, János (John) (Győr, 24 May 1784 - Pest, 12 February 1852) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree in surgery at the University of Pest. He practiced in Szeged in 1807; and later in the same year, he became Assistant Professor of Natural History in the Medical Faculty of the University of Pest. From 1810 he was Professor of Zoology and Mineralogy until his retirement in 1848. He was also Vice-Chancellor of the University in 1825-1826. He was an important early figure in Botany and Mineralogy and he also practised animal and plant protection. His works include Zoology on Vertebrates (Állattan a gerinczesekről) (I-II, 1848). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Reiter, István (Stephen) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 21 October 1944 - ) – Violinist. Between 1950 and 1958 he completed his primary studies in Kassa, in a school with Hungarian as the language of instruction. From 1958 to 1963 he studied at the Music Conservatory of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and took violin as his major under Jaroslav Kilicek. From 1963 to 1965 he furthered his violin-playing studies at the Kassa Conservatory of Music under Kálmán Takács. Between 1965 and 1969 he studied under Milan Bauer and Jan Skladaný at the Academy of Music and Drama of Pozsony. In 1968 he became a member of the Slovak Philharmonic Orchestra and, from 1980, he was its assistant concert master, while he was also a member of the Bratislavski Solisti Chamber Orchestra. Between 1981 and 1990 he was second violinist of the Slovak String Quartet. In 1990 he founded the Capella Posoniensis Chamber Orchestra; with it he appeared in Austria, Italy and Norway. In 1980, he was a founding member of the Franz Liszt Society. He conducted musical sessions on the Hungarian broadcast of the Pozsony Radio, entitled Roaming in Musicland (Barangolás zeneországban), and he wrote a film-script series: Musical Word (Zene-Szó). He is a merited member of the Slovak Philharmonia (1984). - B: 1083, T: 7456.

Reitter, Ferenc (Francis) (Temesvár, now Timișoara in Transylvania, Romania, 1 March 1813 - Budapest, 9 December 1874) – Engineer. He completed his studies at the Engineering Institute (Institutum Geometricum), Pest, in 1833. From 1833 to 1839 he worked with the National Directorate of Architecture (Országos Építészeti Főigazgatóság), Buda-Pest. Between 1833 and 1844, he took part in mapping and hydro-technical work on the Tisza and Maros Rivers. In 1850 (during the oppressive Bach Era), he was commissioned to oversee public building projects by the Architectural Directorate of the governorship of the Southern Hungary region. Reitter's most important work was the planning and building of the Danube embankments. In 1861 he developed and submitted the order of business and regulations, as well as the plan of the organization and beautification of Pest and the Buda Castle area. In 1865 he suggested the construction of a navigable canal following the line of the Large Ring Boulevard from the Margaret Bridge to Csepel Island. When the Council of the Metropolitan Public Works was formed in 1870, he became its section head. Reitter studied the modern town architectural work in London, Paris, Berlin and Munich. Using the experience he had gained, he made the plans for the radiating Avenues (e.g. the Andrassy Avenue) and the Large Ring Boulevard, and he worked out the national building regulation, as well as the program of the drainage system of Budapest. His work contributed to the development of the metropolis-like character of Budapest. His MS collection is held at the National Archives and the Metropolitan Archives of Budapest. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1865). His works include Danube Control Between Buda and Pest (Duna-szabályozás Buda és Pest között) (1865) and The Danube Canal of Pest (A pesti Duna-csatorna) (1867). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1865). A Street in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Bach Era.

Rejtő, Ildikó (Mrs. Jenő Ujlaky, later Mrs. György Sági) (Budapest, 11 May 1937 - ) – Foil-fencer and trainer. From 1951 she was a fencer in the Petőfi Sports Association (SE) of Budapest, and in the Bástya of Budapest. From 1956 she was a fencer of Elektromos Sport Club from 1960 of Dózsa Sport Club of Újpest. She became sixth in the Youth World Championships of Budapest in 1955, and in 1956 in Luxembourg; then, in 1957 in Warsaw, she won the Youth World Championships. In the same year, she joined the adult team. Rejtő took part in five Summer Olympic Games and won medals in all of them. In the 1964 Tokyo Olympics, she won the title of Champion, both in individual and in team events. In the history of women fencers, during her extraordinarily successful career, she won altogether seven Olympic and fifteen World Championship medals. In 1964, and starting from 1968, in four successive years, she became the woman fencer of the year. In 1978 she relinquished the title of selected. After her retirement in 1980, she became the technical head of the Dózsa Sport Club of Újpest, and later that of the Honvéd Sport Club of Budapest. In 1995 she won the title of Veteran European Champion. In 1999 she won the title of Veteran World Champion. In 1963 and 1964 she was made Sportswoman of the Year. She has been the “Athlete of the Nation” since 2007. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Rejtő, Jenő (Eugene) (Reich) (pen names: P. Howard, G. Lavery) (Budapest, 29 March 1905 - Jevdokovo, Soviet Union, 1 January 1943) – Writer. He was born into a Jewish family. He earned a diploma from the theater school of Szidi Rákosi in 1934. After this, he traveled all over Europe, mainly in France, and spent some time in Africa as well. When he returned to Hungary, he wrote plays, of which his 1934 operetta He Who Dares, Wins (Aki mer, az nyer) was a great success. Afterward, Rejtő used his experiences in travels abroad to write adventure stories, which were made exceptional by his unique and bizarre humor; his imagination, his comic view of life, the wealth of styles and his suggestive power made the genre he pursued an art. His biggest success was a novel that was a parody of the Foreign Legion, The Garrison Outpost (Az előretolt helyőrség) written under the pseudonym of P. Howard. Rejtő also wrote numerous cabaret sketches. His We Are Alone (Egyedül vagyunk) constantly provoked the authorities against him. In 1942 he was denounced by the Arrow Cross Party, dragged out of Nagykáta Hospital, even though dangerously ill, and was made to do forced labor. He died in the labor camp during World War II. After 1956, Rejtő's works appeared in a new edition. These writings included Death is a Good Business (Jó üzlet a halál) (1937); Brigade of Bones (Csontbrigád) (1938); The Blond Cyclone (A szőke ciklon) (1939); The Invisible Legion (A láthatatlan légió) (1939), and Quarantine in the Grand Hotel (Vesztegzár a Grand Hotelben) (1939). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Réka – (1) According to the 5th century Byzantine sophist and historian Priskos Rhetor, who visited the court of Attila in what is present-day Hungary, and to Jordanes, 6th century Roman bureaucrat, this was the name of Attila's first wife; her original name was Kerka or even Rekan. Hungarian orientalist Ármin Vámbéry (1832-1913) maintained that Kerka was not a personal name but a title. Tradition associates several places with her name: Réka Creek in Upper Hungary, a brook in southern Hungary, the name of a forest and a brook in County Háromszék (in Erdély, Transylvania, now in Romania) and Réka's grave site, also in Transylvania. (2) The original name of Zazriva Brook in Upper Hungary, which originates from the Magura Árva in the Parács Range, and flows south to the River Árva: length about 20 km. (3) The original name of the River Réka in southern Hungary, whose source is at Karst near St Kanzian, and which flows underground for 32 km, only to appear at Trieste, as the River Timavo, flowing into the Adriatic Sea. – B: 0942, 0883, 1020, T: 7658.→Priskos Rhetor; Vámbéry, Ármin.

Rékai, Katalin (Kati, Catherine) (Katalin Desider), (Budapest 20 October 1921 - Toronto, 1 February 2010) – Writer. In 1948, with her husband János (John) Rékai, a physician, she escaped to the West for political reasons. First, they lived in Paris, France, and finally settled down in Toronto, Canada. She was an employee of the Central Hospital of the City and also editor of Performing Arts Magazine. She also worked for the Canadian Ethnic Media Association, in order to preserve the culture of emigrant ethnic communities. She was a columnist for the English-Hungarian cultural periodical the Kaleidoszkóp. As the Director of the Foreign Department of the Association of Canadian Writers, she worked to make known Canadian literature within Canada. She became renowned for her literary activity. She mainly wrote children's books and plays. Her travel books became popular, with titles similar to each other, written for children. Her 20-volume work includes The Adventures of Mickey, Taggy, Puppó and Cica and How They Discover Toronto (Toronto, 1974, in French 1976, in Hungarian 1980, in Polish 1983); The Adventures... Ottawa (Toronto 1976, in French 1979); The Adventures... Budapest (Toronto 1979); The Adventures... Montreal (Toronto, 1979, in French 1982), The Adventures... Thousand Islands (Toronto, 1979, in French 1980). The Adventures... Vienna (Toronto 1980); The Adventures... the Netherlands (Toronto, 1981) The Adventures... Switzerland (Toronto, 1982), and The Adventures... France (Toronto, 1984). Several of her plays have been performed. Among her distinctions are: the Saint-Exupéry Prize, and the Order of Canada. – B: 1672, T: 7684.→Rékai, Pál.

Rékai, Pál (Paul) (Budapest 1911 - Toronto, 15 December 1995) – Physician and internist. He graduated from the University of Budapest and worked for a while at the Rókus Hospital, together with his brother, Dr. János (John) Rékai, a surgeon, before leaving Hungary in 1948. After a year and a half in Paris, the two brothers emigrated to Canada in 1950, and obtained Canadian Medical Licence in 1951. After years of family practice in Toronto, they opened a small private hospital in 1957. At first, the hospital had only 32 beds, 2 operating theaters and 2 maternity rooms. Within ten years, it had developed into the 175-bed, modern Toronto Central Hospital. The Hospital not only took care of the patients, but also initiated the care to be conducted in 30 native languages, whereby they introduced the concept of multilingualism and multiculturalism into Canadian hospital service. They compiled dietary instructions for the most common diseases. In 1976, a hospital satellite was established, offering multi-specialty outpatient consulting services. In 1967, to complete the Hospital, they organized the Central Clinic, an outpatient clinic, where the doctors of the Central Hospital treated the patients not requiring admission. In the Central Clinic, 20 specialists, a laboratory, an X-ray department, pharmacy, and an optometrist provided patient care. In 1988, the Premier of Ontario opened the “Dr Paul and Dr John Rékai Center” near the Central Hospital. The Center is a 125-bed Institute, providing senior care. The Rékai brothers became members in many scientific institutes, many of which elected them honorary members. They received several awards. János received the highest distinction of Canada in the form of the Order of Canada’s medal. He died in 1978. – B: 0893, 1020, T: 4342, 7660.→Rékai, Katalin.

Rékássy, Csaba (Budapest, 24 April 1937 - Budapest, 17 May 1989) – Graphic artist. He obtained his diploma from the School of Arts, Budapest in 1962, as a student of György (George) Kádár; his diploma work consisted of a plan for a mural ceramics. From 1966 he lived at Miskolc. He exhibited at the Youth Biennale of Paris in 1967, and in several international programs on graphic art. With his copperplate, entitled Fable Teller (Mesemondó), he won a prize in Tokyo (1970). His first collective exhibition was held in the music room of the Art Gallery of Budapest in 1971, where he summed up the results of his first artistic period with woodcuts, ceramics, carved collections and copper pieces. In his second artistic period, among his creations, regarded as classic are: the 15 copperplate sheets Ovidius Metamorphosis, crafted with incomparable skill, and a number of other copperplates, like the Primeval Elements (Őselemek). Fairy-tale books, informative picturebooks and illustrations of novels are linked to his name. In 1982, it was with his illustrations that Áron Tamási’s novel, Abel in the Jungle (Ábel a rengetegben), was published. He published a book, Eighteen Copperplates (Tizennyolc rézmetszet), with an introductory study by Magdolna Supka, (1981). He exhibited on three occasions (1967, 1969, 1975) at the Graphic Biennale of Miskolc. He was awarded a prize at the Dürer Exhibition (1971) of the National Gallery of Budapest, and he also received the Tornyai plaque in the same year. He was a recipient of the Munkácsy Prize (1972), and the Merited Artist title (1985). – B: 0883, 1654, T: 7456.→Tamási, Áron.

Relativity, Theories of – Two theories propounded by Albert Einstein (1879-1955) concerning the nature of space and time: the Special Theory of 1905 (to simplify the theory of electromagnetism), and the General Theory of Relativity of 1915, which involved a new approach to the concept of space-time. The special theory had far-reaching implications in physics, and time could be regarded an extra dimension in space: the four-dimensional “time-space” and Einstein’s famous newly developed equation  $E = mc^2$  expresses the equivalence between mass ( $m$ ) and energy ( $E$ ),  $c$  being the speed of light in vacuum. The General Theory of Relativity is basic for astronomy and, according to the general theory, light rays should be conceived as bending whenever they pass by a massive object, owing to its effect on local space-time; it can also predict the possibility of black holes, and it is impossible to distinguish between acceleration and gravitation in a small space.

It is important to note the following contributions by two Hungarian scientists, János Bolyai and Baron Lóránd Eötvös.

János (John) Bolyai (1802-1860), a theoretical mathematician, worked out a theorem in 1823, which he called “absolute geometry”; that was not yet understood by his contemporaries, except for German mathematician Carl Friedrich Gauss. His work entitled Appendix – that earned worldwide renown – appeared in 1832 as a supplement to his father’s paper, Tentamen. The General Theory of Relativity of physics related closely to the non-Euclidean geometry, developed by János Bolyai. Albert Einstein studied the work of the Bolyais, and proposed his theory of special relativity in 1905.

Baron Lóránd Eötvös (1848-1919), with his precision measurements, conducted together with Dezső (Desider) Pekár and Jenő (Eugen) Fekete, proved that, under the effects of gravitation, all physical bodies (tiny, large, heavy, lightweight, electrical, magnetic, radioactive) fall to Earth with the same acceleration, regardless of mass. This postulation led Einstein to conclude that characteristic data about the world can be measured either in a stationary or in a moving system: This enabled him to create the General Theory of Relativity in 1916. According to R. H. Dice: “Without the Eötvös documentation, Einstein never would have had the means to create the theory of relativity”. – B: 0883, 1138, 115, 1020, T: 7675.→Bolyai, János; Bolyai, Farkas; Eötvös, Baron Loránd.

Religion Accepted – Church organizations, legally acknowledged by the State, enjoying full religious freedom, supported by church and government finances. The concept of accepted religion had its origin in the ancient Roman Empire. Then it surfaced in the 16th century during the reign of the Transylvanian rulers. In 1568, the Diet of Torda in Transylvania (Tordu in Erdély, now in Romania) spelled out the freedom of religion for the first time in the world. In Hungary, the religious freedom of the Protestants was recognized in the first half of the 17th century; but Protestant congregations did not obtain equal legal rights with the Roman Catholic Church until 1791. The Unitarian faith became legally accepted in 1848, and the Jewish religion in 1895. – B:0876, 1020, T: 7682.

Religious Orders in Hungary, Roman Catholic – To belong to a religious order in the Roman Catholic Church means to accept a call to live a celibate life (vow of chastity), love of freedom from possessing material goods (vow of poverty), and being able to obey a human being as an expression of one’s love of God (vow of obedience). The evangelical counsels, which make up the core of any religious order, can be read in the Dogmatic Constitution of the Church of the Second Vatican Council, “have their foundation in the words and example of the Lord, are recommended by the Apostles and the early leaders of the Church, by its doctors and pastors” (LG, no. 43). They are a sort of witnesses to a Church living not only in this world but in heaven as well.

Almost all religious orders were abolished in Hungary for over forty years as part of the Communist plan to bury the Church. Yet, after the collapse of Communist rule in Hungary (1990), all revived with some additional new ones. All of them are listed below, indicating briefly the year they first began to work in Hungary (H), the ideal person or a purpose they set for themselves to follow (I), and the common good (C.G.) they promote in Hungary after 1990.→Catholic Church in Hungary (2.2) The Communist persecution.

Reliquary – There have been square or egg shaped relic holders, so called “encolpia”, made out of gold, silver, bronze or glass since the 3rd century. In these holders a piece of the martyr’s clothing, an object touched by his or her body, a piece of cloth dipped into the martyr’s blood, or a fragment of his or her bone were kept. Since the 7th century, relics have not only been built into the altars but have also been placed on it. Relic holders displayed on altars were ornate, artistic productions imitating coffins, houses, churches, towers, crosses or monstrances. The gold, silver or crystal holders were decorated with gemstones, enamel pictures, fine paintings and engravings. The reliquary of the “Three Kings” in the Cathedral in Cologne is the most magnificent example. Hungary’s most famous relics are the “Holy Right Hand of King St Stephen (Szent István)” (Szent Jobb) and the “Herm of King St László”. – B: 0942, 1178, T: 7662.

Relle, Gabriella (Budapest, 12 October 1902 - Budapest, 9 March 1975) – Opera singer (dramatic soprano). She studied at the Franz Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest under György (George) Anthes; while still a student, she was already contracted to the Opera House (1924). Her first role was Elsa in Wagner’s Lohengrin. In the Staatsoper of Berlin, as a guest artist, she sang with great success the title role of Tosca (6 February 1930). Her other outstanding role was Liu in Puccini’s Turandot. From 1939, owing to the newly introduced Jewish laws, she was only allowed to sing at the opera performances of a Jewish cultural organization. However, after 1945, she became a member of the Opera House again. She sang 40 leading roles. The strength and beauty of her voice was prevalent in Puccini’s operas. Her roles included Sieglinde in Wagner’s Walküre; Margareta in Gounod’s Faust; Gilda in Verdi’s Rigoletto; Santuzza I in Mascagni’s Cavalleria Rusticana (Parasztbecsület); Dorabella in Mozart’s Così fan tutte (Mindenki így csinálja); Mimi in Puccini’s La Bohème (Bohémélet); title role in Puccini’s Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony), and Rosalinda in Strauss’ Die Fledermaus (A denevér). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Reményi, Ede (Edwin) (Miskolc, 17 January 1828 - San Francisco, CA. USA, 15 May 1898) – Violin virtuoso and composer. At the age of 9, he already played in concerts. He completed his music studies between 1842 and 1845 in Vienna, under the direction of Josef Böhm. Thereafter, he returned to Hungary to participate in the 1848-1849 Revolution and Freedom Fight; he was on the staff of General Artúr Görgey and became his favorite violinist. Due to his involvement in the war, he had to flee abroad in 1849. His journey to the United States passed through Istanbul, Paris and London. He returned to Europe as an excellent violinist who, within a short time, accomplished an unparalleled career. In 1852 and 1883 he brought the young Johannes Brahms with him on concert tours. In 1853 he joined the Weimar circle of Franz (Ferenc) Liszt; he was active in London in 1854, where he was given the title “Court Virtuoso” by Queen Victoria, and he even became the “Violinist of the Queen”. He moved again to the United States in 1855. However, after he received amnesty in 1860, he returned to Hungary. For fifteen years, he was one of the central figures of Hungarian musical life. He also gave concerts in Asia and Australia. He was the Maecenas of many noble projects in Hungary, including erecting a statue for the poet laureate, Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi and Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi, and helped to fund the Academy of Music in Budapest. He finally settled down in the United States in 1878. His last concert in Budapest was in 1891. He died during one of his concerts in New York. The Hungarians of New York brought his ashes to their city and placed him at eternal rest in the Evergreen Cemetery. He was an important representative of 19th century Hungarian musical culture in the field of performance. His violin playing, regardless of which piece he was performing, always contained Hungarian coloring, lending it an individual quality. His compositions include Original Hungarian Folksongs and Czardas (Eredeti magyar népdalok és csárdások) (1863); Hungarian Virtuoso Violin Piece (Magyar hegedűverseny-darab) (1865), and virtuoso violin transcripts. He was an outstanding violin virtuoso who made 19th century Hungarian music popular at his concerts all over the world. A School bears his name in Emőd. – B: 1438, 0883, 1138, T: 7684, 7103. → Görgey, Arthur; Liszt, Ferenc; Petőfi, Sándor; Széchenyi, Count István.

Reményi, József (Joseph) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 1 December 1891 - Cleveland, USA, 25 September 1956) – Literary historian, poet, literary translator and storyteller. He obtained his Ph.D. from the Faculty of Humanities, University of Szeged. His first poems appeared in the literary weekly, The Week (A Hét). In 1912 he introduced himself with a volume of poetry. A year later, he published a volume of short stories. In 1914 he emigrated to the United States where, during the following decades, he was engaged in making Hungarian literature known through studies, articles and analyses in Hungarian and English. He taught comparative history of literature at Western Reserve University in Cleveland. He published regularly in periodicals as well and, in addition, several of his novels and poetry collections appeared in Hungary. During the 1940s and 1950s he was co-worker of several respectable American literary periodicals. He was mainly engaged in the promotion of Hungarian literature. His poetry, literary translations, studies and criticisms appeared mainly in the periodical Horizon (Latóhatár). His major works include Hungarian Literature (Washington) (1946); Dezső Szabó, Hungarian Novelist and Pamphleteer (London) (1946); Twenty Hungarian Writers (New York) (1947); Sándor Petőfi, Hungarian Poet (Washington) (1953); Three Hungarian Poets, Balassa, Zrinyi and Csokonai (Washington, 1955); World Literature (Pittsburgh, 1956), and Hungarian Writers and Literature (New Brunswick NJ, 1964). – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7684.

Reményi-Schneller, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest 15 March 1892 - Budapest 24 August 1946) – Politician, finance specialist. He started his career at the Hungarian Exchange Bank (Magyar Leszámlító és Pénzváltó Bank) from 1923 he was Director of the bank. In 1926 and 1927 he implemented the restructuring of the Victoria mill, established the Unified Mill Industries Co., took the leadership of the Budapest United Capital Savings Bank, which transformed into the Community Savings Bank in 1928, where he became Chairman. From November 1935, he was designated Chairman of the Hungarian Union of National Real Estate Credits (Magyar Földhitelintézetek Országos Szövetsége), created by the Gömbös government to implement the farm-policy. In 1935 he was elected to Parliament, based on the government program, as representative of County Baja. From 9 March 1938 to 16 October 1944, he was Finance Minister in the Darányi, Imrédy, Teleki, Bárdossy, Kállay, Sztójay, Lakatos, and the so-called Szálasi governments. In the Teleki, Bárdossy and Kállay governments, he was invested with the higher economic prerogatives. He led an extreme pro-German policy. After the war he was executed as a war criminal. B: 0883, 1830, T: 7679.→Darányi, Kálmán; Imrédy, Béla; Bárdossy, László; Sztójay, Döme; Lakatos, Géza; Szálasi, Ferenc.

Reményik, Sándor (Alexander) (pen name Végvári) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 30 August 1890 - Kolozsvár, 24 October 1941) – Lutheran poet in Transylvania (Erdély, now Romania) under the pen name of Végvári. He attended secondary school and law studies in Kolozsvár, later discontinued them because of an eye disease. From 1916 on, he dedicated himself to poetry. He never held any jobs; he was independently wealthy through his inheritance. He regarded poetry as his historic mission: he called upon Hungarians thrown under Romanian rule in Transylvania by the Trianon-Versailles Dictated Peace Treaty of 1920, not to escape but stay in their birthplace. In his religious poems, belief and unbelief clash; his search for God and his confessions are also present. From its inception in 1921, he was Chief Editor of the periodical entitled Shepherd Fire (Pásztortűz), and was one of the founders of the Transylvanian Helicon (Erdélyi Helikon) literary society. Besides Lajos (Louis) Áprily and László (Leslie) Tompa, he was a member of the “Helicon Triad” in Transylvania. His first poems To the Bitter End (Mindhalálíg) (1918), Végvári’s Poems (Végvári versek) (1918), still irredentist in tone, were circulated in Hungary under the pseudonym Végvári. In his later poetry, the poet’s humanist face had become categorically distinct. The volumes that followed yielded his emerging poetic personality as seen in the The Roar of Wild Waters (Vadvizek zúgása) (1921). His other poetry books of 14 include From the Workshops (A műhelyből) (1924); Between Two Lights (Két fény között) (1927); Flower On the Ruins (Romon virág) (1935), and High Tension (Magasfeszültség) (1940). His collected poems were published in nine volumes. Among his popular poems are: Church and School (Templom és iskola); Grace (Kegyelem), and Peace from God (Békesség Istentől). His poem The Giant (Az óriás) is his memorial to Martin Luther; and in The Translator (A fordító) he erects a memorial to Gáspár Károli, the 16th century Bible translator. Many of his outstanding poems are exquisite expressions of his symbolic depictions and humanistic world of ideas. Sándor Reményik was a prominent figure of Transylvanian Hungarian poetry between the two World Wars. He was buried in the Házsongárd Cemetery, Kolozsvár. – B: 1151, 1078, 1257, 1830, T: 7659.→Áprily, Lajos; Tompa, László; Károli, Gáspár.

Reményik, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Dormánd, 19 July 1900 - Budapest, 30 December 1962) – Writer. He studied law in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), but abandoning his studies, he emigrated to South America in 1920, where he lived for six years in difficult and adventurous circumstances. After returning to Hungary in 1926, he became involved in the literary world. His writings were published by the papers the Week (Hét), the Today (Ma), and the West (Nyugat). With two partners he founded the journal New Land (Új Föld) in 1927. From 1927 on, he also published articles in Social Review (Társadalmi Szemle) and Our Age (Korunk) of Kolozsvár (now Cluj Napoca in Transylvania, Romania). He published his first novel, Flea Circus (Bolhacirkusz) in 1932. All the while, he was a permanent correspondent of the Beautiful Word (Szép Szó) and later became one of its editors. In 1939 he emigrated to the United States and lived in Philadelphia, but returned to Hungary in 1941. He became an acknowledged writer of the regime in Hungary that followed World War II; after 1945 he wrote the greater part of his serial novel, Apocalipsis Humana. In this series, he used sharp satire and displayed strong critical tendency. He described the disintegrating life of the upper classes and the sinking world of the provincial country houses of the first quarter of the 20th century. He also wrote novels, short stories and dramatic works in the spirit of the developing avant-garde. His dramas included The Paternal House (Az atyai ház) (1943); Sword and Cube (Kard és kocka) (1955), and Corner Store (Saroküzlet) (1965). – B: 0883, 1257, 1445, T: 7659, 7456.

Rencz, Antal (Anthony) (Debrecen, 26 January 1901 - Debrecen, 1 July 1976) – Physician, radiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Debrecen in 1926, while he was a correspondent for Gyula Elischer in the Central X-Ray Laboratory of Budapest between 1922 and 1930, later becoming its director (1930-1939). Then he was Director and Head Physician of the State Hospital of Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine) from 1939 to 1941, while it was returned to Hungary. From 1946 to 1966 he was Head of the X-Ray Laboratory in the No. 1 Surgical Clinic and professor at the University of Debrecen; in 1948 he was a private lecturer. From 1953 to 1956 he was a consultant in Albania. His field of research embraces the entire spectrum of X-ray diagnostics; he made important advances in the treatment of breast cancer. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rényi, Alfréd (Budapest, 20 March 1921 - Budapest, 1 February 1970) – Mathematician. His wife, Kató Rényi, was also a mathematician. After completing high school, he studied at the University of Budapest under Lipót (Leopold) Fejér from 1940; but being a Jew, his stay in a forced labor camp interrupted his studies. He completed his studies at the University of Szeged, obtaining a Ph.D. in Mathematics under Frigyes (Frederic) Riesz in 1945. He went to Leningrad as a postgraduate student, and in June 1947, received a Candidate's Degree. Late in 1947 he became an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest. In 1949 he became a professor at the University of Debrecen and, in 1950, Director of the Institute of Applied Mathematics (later: Research Institute of Mathematics) of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1952 he received the Chair of the Department of Calculus of Probabilities at the University of Budapest. He held both positions until his death. Rényi's scientific activity embraces almost the entire field of mathematics, making his mark in virtually every branch of the discipline. He helped to develop the school of probability theory. The starting point of his work was the number theory. He found numerous number-theoretical applications of the calculus of probabilities, the most significant of them being the large-scale generalization of the Borel-theorem. In quantum mechanics, in connection with probability calculation, several problems could be solved. He also dealt with the philosophical problems related to mathematics and he published articles in the media regularly to popularize mathematics, initiating reform in the teaching of mathematics in schools. He edited the Proceedings of the Mathematical Research Institute. He was a member of editorial boards of numerous journals in Hungary and abroad. After 1957 he retired from public activities, keeping to scientific work and teaching, taking part in international mathematical congresses, and giving lectures as a visiting professor in American universities. He was an honorary member of the Churchill College of Cambridge, and founded the Alfréd Rényi Prize to help a young researcher annually. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1949, ordinary 1956). His works included Probabilistic Methods in Number Theory (1958); On the Foundations of Information Theory (1965); Probability Theory (1970); Foundation of Probability (1970); On the Mathematical Theory of Trees (1970), and Ars Mathematica (1973). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1949, 1954). – B: 0883; 1031, T: 7456. → Fejér, Lipót; Riesz, Frigyes.

Reök, Iván (Szeged, 16 May 1894 - Budapest, 1 November 1967) – Physician, surgeon and politician. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Vienna in 1921. Between 1921 and 1924 he was a practicing physician in Vienna. From 1924 to 1929 he lived as a private practitioner in Újvidék (now Novi Sad, Serbia). From 1929 he was senior physician in the Pestújhely Hospital. In 1945 he joined the Smallholders' Party, later becoming Vice-President and Co-President of the Medical Union. In May 1949 he became a Member of Parliament and also a member of the National Public Health Council (1945-1947) and President of the National Luther Association (1947-1948). After 1945, he was a surgeon and senior physician at the Uzsoki Street Hospital in District XIV of Budapest. From 1950 he was a member of the City Council. His works included The Surgeon Meets God (A sebész találkozik az Istennel) (1942), and The Spiritual World (A szellemi világ) (1948). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Reparation Obligation – Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States during World War I – in breaking with earlier traditions – proclaimed the principle that the losing states would not be required to pay punitive war indemnities. While the Allied Powers and their associates wanted to uphold this “Wilsonian Principle” – at least for the sake of public relations – they did not want to renounce their claims to war compensation. For this reason they declared in the Peace Treaties that all defeated states were responsible for all war damages suffered by the victorious states, and their citizens and were obliged to pay compensation for these damages. This obligation to compensate was then termed Reparation. Turkey was exempted from this obligation under the terms of the Treaty of Lausanne.

During World War II, the Heads of the Allied Powers determined in the Yalta Agreement in February 1945, then at the Potsdam Conference in July-August 1945 in the appropriate paragraphs of the Armistice Agreement, the basic principles of reparation and the method of its payment as they applied to the Axis Powers and their allies. The Allied Powers declared that the countries, which had suffered the greatest damage, should receive reparations. The total amount was established at 20,000 million US dollars.

The Treaty of Trianon – one of the minor treaties ending World War I at Versailles-Trianon – obliged Hungary, under the burden of sanctions, to pay reparations, the amount of which was determined by the Reparation Commission in 1924, to be 200 million gold crowns. Hungary was to pay this amount between 1924 and 1943. On the demands of the successor states, after repeated negotiations, the 1930 Reparations Commission meeting increased Hungary's obligations by an additional 13.5 million gold crowns, to be paid from 1944 for the next 23 years. Because of the outbreak of World War II, these demands lost their validity and could not be enforced.

The 1947 Peace Treaty of Paris obliged Hungary to pay 300 million US dollars (in 1938 values) in reparations. The Soviet Union was to receive 200 million dollars, Czechoslovakia 30 million and Yugoslavia 70 million dollars. According to the terms of the Peace Treaty, Hungary had 8 years to pay this amount in industrial products and agricultural goods. Hungary fulfilled her obligations to the Soviet Union in January 1951. – B: 0880, 1230, 1138, T: 7665.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Repiczky, János (John) (Ujbars, 23 April 1817 - Pest, 25 March 1855) – Orientalist, librarian. He carried out his studies at Korpona, Selmecbánya (now Banská-Štiavnica, Slovakia) and Pozsony (now Bratislava in Slovakia). At Pozsony he completed his theological studies at the Lutheran Lycée, while in 1842 he did further studies at Tübingen: besides theology he studied Hebrew, Arabic, Turkish, Persian and Sanskrit. After his return to Hungary he did some tutoring for a while, after which he received a position in the Library of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1851 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in Eastern languages at the University of Pest, teaching Turkish, Persian and Sanskrit languages. The Academy commissioned him to collect and translate Turkish-Hungarian historical sources and he completed a modest Turkish-Hungarian archival record. He was corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1847). His works include Eastern Hours (Keleti órák) (1848); Comparison Between the Persian and Sanskrit Languages (A perzsa és szanszkrit nyelvek párhuzama) (1850); Practical Turkish Grammar (Gyakorlati török nyelvtan) (1851), and The Turkish Correspondence of the Town Nagy-Kőrös (Nagy-Kőrös város török levelei) (1859). – B: 1883, 1031, T: 7456.→Zajzoni Rab, István.

Repka, Attila (Miskolc, 10 January 1968 - ) – Wrestler and trainer. He was a chef in his original profession. His career in competitions began in 1978, at the age of ten, and his trainer was József (Joseph) Gutman. It was at the age of 18, in 1986, that he first entered the selected team as a many-times champion. He earned four European Championship gold medals as a member of the Wrestling Club of Diósgyőr and, in 1992 he won an Olympic Champion gold medal in wrestling in the Greco-Roman style. In 2004, when he was 36, he received a silver medal in the National Championship in freestyle. In the 1990s, he tried several times to enter parliamentary and municipal elections. In 1993 he became an Honorary Freeman of the City of Miskolc. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Republics of Hungary – Five times in her 20th century history, Hungary adopted the republican form of government.

(1) After the loss of World War I on 16 November 1918, the National Council, sitting in the cupola hall of the Parliament Building, declared the first Hungarian Republic. This Republic ceased to exist after four months of operation.

(2) On 21 March 1919, the Hungarian (Soviet) Council Republic (Magyar Tanácsköztársaság) was formed. On 1 August 1919, the Revolutionary Governing Council and the Hungarian Communist Party at their joint session declared the dissolution of the Council Republic. It ceased to exist after 133 days.

(3) The National Assembly, sitting in the Parliament Building on 1 February 1946, passed Bill I. of 1946, which abolished the Hungarian institution of Kingdom and declared the Republic of Hungary. This republic existed for 3 years and 8 months.

(4) On 19 August 1949, the National Assembly, which was then under Soviet control, passed Bill XX of 1949, determining Hungary's new constitution, drawn up on the Soviet pattern. Thus Hungary became a People's Republic. With Soviet support, the Hungarian People's Republic was maintained for 40 years, until the collapse of the Soviet system.

(5) On the collapse of the Soviet Union, the Hungarian Council of Ministers, at its 18 October 1989 meeting, discussed the issue of Hungary's form of statehood and – to honor the 1956 Revolution on 23 October 1989 (on its anniversary), the Republic of Hungary was announced. – B: 1230, 1020, T: 7665.

Resettlements in Hungary during 17th-18th Centuries – After the re-taking of the fortress of Buda, the capital of Hungary from the Turks in 1686, the liberating campaign of Hungary continued for 13 years with fighting in the southern parts of the country, leading to further losses, aggravating the 150-year Turkish devastation. Turkish rule over Hungary officially ended with the Peace Treaty of Karlóca (Karlócai Béke) in 1699.

The loss of life was most severe among the Hungarian population. The population of Hungary, at the end of the 15th century, was between 3.5 and 4 million; in 1720, Hungary's population was 1,700,000, and 800,000 in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Such drastic decrease of the Hungarian population was the result of 150 years of Turkish occupation of the central one-third of Hungary, and in ceaseless defense fighting in the rest of the country along the border fortresses against the Turkish conquerors.

An advisory committee the Neoaquistica Commissio (New Acquisition Commission – Újszerzeményi Bizottság) was set up by the Imperial court in Vienna to deal with the revision and arrangement of the chaotic ownership rights after the Turkish rule. Cardinal Lipót (Leopold) Kolonics (1695-1707) was in charge. He readily restored church-estates, but other landlords had to prove their right by document over their recovered estates, and many of them could not. Their estates remained in the hands of the Emperor, who gave it mostly to foreign settlers. These areas were re-populated by Slovaks, Ruthenians and Wallachians (today's Romanians), who moved down from the higher mountainous regions and took over the abandoned settlements. Similarly, the Serbs moved northwards from their earlier historic regions even from under Turkish rule and settled in large numbers in the Bácska (Backa) and Bánát areas, now part of Voivodina in Serbia. Furthermore, planned immigration brought a great number of German settlers into Historic Hungarian territory. Even the Jászság and Kiskunság regions were pawned to the Order of German Knights. In addition, the Dráva-Szava Interfluve counties: Pozsega, Verőce, Szerém and Valkó fell under separate administration. The Viennese government guaranteed special rights to the settlers and, after 1720, even transported them in large numbers down the Danube into the Bánát region. Later, other nationalities were also settled in the Bánát, including Italians, Spaniards and Frenchmen. In 1763, Queen and Empress Mária Terézia (Maria Theresa, 1740-1780) settled a large number of Germans in the Bánát, a policy continued by her son, József II (Joseph, 1780-1790), who also extended it to the Bácska region. However, Hungarian peasants and farmers were prevented from settling in the abandoned territories.

The main reasons why the Habsburg rulers settled foreign nationalities in the repossessed Hungarian territories were that (1) after Count Imre (Emeric) Thököly's and Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II's Kuruc insurgences against Habsburg rulers, they regarded Hungarians unreliable subjects, while foreigners proved more reliable; (2) they wanted to uproot the strong Hungarian Protestantism; and (3) they planned to make Hungary a colony of Austria.

The settlement of a large foreign population in historic Hungarian territories in the long range resulted in a drastic shift in the ratio of Hungarian and emigrated populations in Historic Hungary in favor of the latter. The number of foreign settlers grew steadily, partly by their higher rate of reproduction, and partly by the infiltration of kindred people from outside Hungary: Vlachs from Wallachia (the later Romanians), Ruthenians from Ukraine, Slovaks and Serbs from Serbia. After a time this inevitably led to demanding the land for themselves, which also led later to the dismemberment of Historic Hungary by the Trianon-Versailles (1920) and the Paris (1947) Peace Treaties. – B: 1031, 1831, T: 7103.→Reconquest of Buda in 1686; Neoquistica Commissio; Settlements in Hungary; Maria Theresa, Empress and Queen; József II, King; Kolonics, Lipót; Thököly, Count Imre; Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Kuruc; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Reszler, András (Andrew) (Budapest 1 July 1933 - ) – Sociologist, political scientist. After the 1956 Revolution he went abroad and settled in Switzerland; later emigrated to the USA. Between 1968 and 1974 he taught at Indiana University, Bloomington. Since 1974 he has been a professor at the Institut Universitaire d'Etudes Européennes of Geneva. He has lectured on the History of European Ideas and Culture. Between 1977 and 1983 he edited a scientific periodical entitled Cadmos; he published mostly in French. In his works he deals with the history of European cultural and political ideas. His major works include L'esthétique anarchiste (Paris) (1971); Le marxisme devant la culture (Paris) (1975); L'intellectuel contre l'Europe (Paris) (1976); Mythes politiques modernes (Paris) (1981); Mythes et identité de la Suisse (Geneva) (1987); Vienna, Budapest, Prague... edited with Miklós Molnár (Paris) (1988); Le génie de l'Autriche-Hongrie, edited with Miklós Molnár Paris (1989); Le pluralisme (Geneva) (1990), and Rejoindre l'Europe (Geneva, (1991). – B: 1672, T: 7864.

Réthy Eszter (Esther) (Budapest, 22 October 1912 - Vienna, 28 January 2004) – Opera singer (soprano). She studied voice at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest under Béla Szabados. On a scholarship, she made her debut at the Opera House of Budapest in the role of Micaela in Bizet's Carmen in 1933. She soon became the leading lyric soprano. Between 1937 and 1942 she sang for the Vienna Opera House; then, from 1942 to 1943, she also performed at the Opera House in Budapest. Thereafter, as a member of the Staatsoper and Volksoper in Vienna, she appeared in Budapest as a guest artist on numerous occasions in 1959-1960 and also in 1965. She regularly appeared in the Salzburg Festival and, as a chamber singer, in the Staatsoper in Vienna, where she taught for 16 years at the Conservatory, and later at the Academy of Music until 1986, when she retired. Her roles included Susanna and Countess in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Pamina in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Agatha, Anna in Weber's Der Freischütz (A büvös vadász); Margaret and Elza in Wagner's Lohengrin, and Eva in Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (A nürnbergi mesterdalnokok). She played in some films as well. She was a recipient of a number of Austrian state and art awards. – B: 1445, 1679, T: 7456.

Réti, Csaba (Mezőberény, 11 November 1936 - Szeged, 2 April, 2009) – Opera singer (tenor). His singing studies were completed at the Special Music High School of Szeged from 1955 to 1960. Also, between 1953 and 1963, he was a member of the choir of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged, and from 1963 its soloist. In 1965 he won the Third Prize in the International Erkel Singing Competition. In 1971 and 1972 he was a member of the National Theater of Pécs; then, from 1972, he sang again at the National Theater of Szeged. Besides the famous tenor roles of the operatic repertoire, he was also well-known for singing in Oratorios. His fine voice and his musical interpretation rendered his moulding of romantic heroes memorable. His roles include Tamino in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Duke in Verdi's Rigoletto; title role in Verdi's Don Carlos; Des Grieux in Puccini's Manon Lescaut; Don José in Bizet's Carmen, and Turiddu in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (Parasztbecsület). For his artistic work, he was awarded the Franz Liszt Prize in 1974, received the title of Merited Artist in 1987, the Béla Bartók-Ditta Pásztory Prize, the Dömötör Prize in 1996, and was made Life Member of the National Theater of Szeged. – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Réti, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 4 March 1911 - Budapest, 6 April 1980) – Physician and medical historian. He studied Medicine at the University of Bologna, and later at Paris University, where he obtained his Medical Degree in 1940. At first he was a doctor in the French resistance; then, after returning to Hungary, he was enlisted into forced labor on the Soviet Russian front. After falling into captivity, he joined the Hungarian Jewish partisans. After the end of World War II in 1945, he carried out Party tasks. From 1966, he was Director of the Central Library of the Medical Faculty in the University of Budapest. From the 1950s, he was also interested in medical history. He took an active part in the Hungarian Medical Historical Society (Magyar Orvostörténelmi Társaság). From 1968 to 1970 he was its secretary, and from 1970 to 1972 its President. He was also Acting Secretary of the International Medical Historical Society. The University of Montpellier conferred on him an honorary doctorate in 1974. His medical historical work extended over almost the whole area of Hungary's medical past. He published nearly 200 medical articles and studies in Hungary and abroad. His works include Great Hungarian Physicians (Nagy magyar orvosok) (1954); Hungarian Darwinist Doctors (Magyar darwinista orvosok) (1963); The Healing Man (A gyógyító ember) (1963), and Medical Dissertations (Orvosi disszertációk) (1973). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Réti, István (Stephen) (Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Transylvania, Romania, 16 December 1872 - Budapest, 17 January 1945) – Painter. He was one of the founding members of the Nagybánya artist colony, and the theoretician of the movement in that colony. In 1890, after studying for a month at the Academy of Decorative Arts, he decided to give it up. In 1891 he went to Munich, where he taught himself in the free school of Simon Hollósy until 1893. Thereafter, he visited the Julian Academy in Paris. Returning to Hungary, in Nagybánya he painted his first significant work, the Bohemians' Christmas Eve in a Foreign Land (Bohémek karácsonyestje idegenben) (1893). In 1896, with János (John) Thorma and Simon Hollósy, he took part in the founding of the Nagybánya Artist Colony and, from 1902 he was a teacher at the school functioning there. In 1896 and 1897 he prepared illustrations for the poems of József (Joseph) Kiss and, in 1898, for the Silver Goat (Ezüst kecske) of Sándor (Alexander)

Bródy. In 1899 in Nagybánya, Réti created his life's principal achievement, the Burial of the National Guard (Honvédtemetés), now in the Hungarian National Gallery in Budapest, while for his Intérieur he received the small gold medal in the Glaspalast of Munich in 1901. Between 1900 and 1902, he painted the picture of his Mother (also in the National Gallery) and, in 1904 he painted his larger-scale church composition Christ Among His Disciples (Krisztus a tanítványai között) (now in private collection). With a Fraknói scholarship, he worked in Rome from 1905 to 1907, and then lived in Nagybánya until 1913. Thereafter, he was a teacher at the Academy of Applied Arts (Képzőművészeti Akadémia), Budapest, while also teaching in the summer at the free school of Nagybánya until 1927, when he became the vice-chancellor of the School of the Arts. In 1931, commissioned by the Capital, he painted a large Portrait of Kossuth (Kossuth arcképe) (1931), (now in the National Gallery), as well as portraits of Sándor (Alexander) Bródy, Ferenc (Francis) Herczeg and Mór (Maurice) Jókai. Réti also illustrated books. He retired in 1938. By this time, his artistic works were not on par with those he had produced in his younger years. His writings included The Nagybánya Artistic Colony (A nagybányai művésztelep) (1954) and The Art of Painting (Képzőművészet) (1944). In a number of articles he wrote about the history of the Nagybánya colony, and about his artistic views, based on the esthetics of Bergson and Croce. He received the Baumgarten Prize in 1941. – B: 0883, 0934, T: 7456, 7688. → Thorma, János; Hollósy, Simon; Kiss, József (1); Kossuth, Lajos; Bródy, Sándor; Herczeg, Ferenc; Jókai, Mór; Nagybánya Artist Colony.

Réti, József (Joseph) (Redl) (Ploești, Romania, 8 July 1925 - Budapest, 5 November 1973) – Opera singer (tenor). He began his career as a member of the Franz Liszt Choir; thereafter, he studied at the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. He was a member of the Opera House from 1953 until his death. In 1956 he received a complimentary diploma at a Schumann competition in Berlin and, in 1957 he was awarded a gold medal at a singing contest in Moscow. He had been tutoring privately for years; from 1964 he became music teacher at the Academy of Music, as the successor of Endre Rösler. His deeply felt, soaring voice rendered him ideal for tenor-solo roles in oratorio. As a result, he could present an equally high-level performance in a Bach Passion; as Don Ottavio in Mozart's Così fan tutte (Mindenki így csinálja), or Count Almaviva in Rossini's Barber of Seville (A sevillai borbély). His other main roles were: Rodophe in Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Des Grieux in Puccini's Manon Lescaut; Edgar in Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor, and David in Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (A nürnbergi mesterdalnokok). Toward the end of his life, he often appeared as a song recitalist at concerts, and appeared also on concert and opera stages abroad, the last time in South America. His most outstanding performances were in Mozart operas; he was a sought-after oratorio singer as well. He was a recipient of the Franz Liszt Prize in 1961, and was honored with the title of Artist of Merit (1968). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Reuter Camillo (Resicabánya, now Reșița, Romania, 11 February 1874 - Pécs, 5 December 1954) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1901 where, until 1914, he was a demonstrator in the neurological-mental clinic. During World War I he served as head of the military hospital at Zágráb (now Zagreb, Croatia). In 1917 he became an honorary lecturer in Neurology and Psychiatry at the University of Budapest. From 1918 he was briefly Professor of Neurology and Psychiatry at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and, after the Trianon Peace Dictate of 1920, he was transferred to the University of Pécs in the same capacity, working there until his retirement in 1945. He conducted research on psychopathology, but was also interested in local history and in popularizing touristic publications in journals and magazines. His works include Data on the Causes of Mental Illnesses (Adatok az elmebajok causistikájához) (1903) and Hysterical Attacks Resembling Fainting (Ájulásszerű hysteriás rohamok) (1908). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rév Lívia (Budapest, 1916 - ) – Concert pianist. She started her studies at age 9, when she won the Grand Prix des Enfant Prodiges. At age 12, she performed with an orchestra. She studied with Leo Weiner and Arnold Székely at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music; with Professor Robert Teichmüller at the Leipzig Conservatory of Music, and with Paul Weingarten at the Vienna Conservatory of Music. She left Hungary in 1946. Madame Rév lives in Paris, with her husband Benjamin Dunn. Rév has performed across Europe, in Asia, Africa, and in the USA in 1963, at the invitation of the Rockefeller Institute. She has been soloist with conductors including Sir Adrian Boult, Jascha Horenstein, Josef Krips, Constantin Silvestri and Walter Susskind. Madame Rév is still active, despite her high age. She is on concert tours in Japan, Hong Kong, the Middle East, Africa and elsewhere, and she also teaches at the Université Musicale Internationale de Paris. Each year she gives a public master-class at the Institut Hongrois in Paris. She has also appeared in recitals at the Academy of Music and the Palace of Arts in Budapest, and was also featured in a portrait film in Budapest. She has recorded extensively for SAGA, Palexa, and Hyperion. Among the works she recorded are the complete Préludes of Debussy, Chopin's complete Nocturnes, Mendelssohn's Songs Without Words, and Francis Poulenc's Toccata. She is well known for her light touch and clarity, and she belongs to the leading piano virtuosos of the world. She is a recipient, among others, of the Ferenc Liszt International Record Grand Prix, the Pro Culture Renovata Hungarica (2006), and was made a French Knight of the Legion d'Honneur (2009). – B: 1031, 1742, T: 7103. → Weiner, Leo; Székely, Arnold; Érdi, Tamás.

Révai, András (Andrew) (Endre Zsigmond) (Budapest, 3 August 1903 - London, 4 June 1973) – Publicist. He studied at the Universities of Leipzig, Munich and Berlin. He obtained a Doctorate at the University of Leipzig. Following that he lived, alternately, in Hungary and Germany. In Berlin, he established an art dealership called Pallas Galerie. In 1935 he settled in England, where he re-established his dealership of paintings under the same name, Pallas Gallery. During the same period, between 1938 and 1941, he was a correspondent for Pester Lloyd of London. After the disruption of Hungarian-English diplomatic contacts at the beginning of World War II, he established, together with others, the Free Hungarian Association of England (Angliai Szabad Magyarok Egyesülete); he became its president in 1943; and from then on he was, under the name of Candidus, the BBC's Hungarian commentator as an external associate. From April 1944, Révai participated in the activities of the Hungarian Council of England (Angliai Magyar Tanács). After the end of World War II, he offered his services to the Hungarian government. He wrote studies and articles on Hungarian subjects in leading English papers and periodicals in order to improve the reputation of Hungary. After the Communist take-over in Hungary in 1948, he discontinued his contact with Budapest and retired from public roles. After the 1956 Revolution, he started writing again about Hungarian questions, informing the English public. He took part in the editing of Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó). He published essays in the periodical New Horizon (Új Látóhatár). He committed suicide. His major works include A Colloquy between Graham Sutherland and Andrew Revai (London) (1964) and From the Other Shore (A túlsó partról), selected writings (London) (1975). – B: 1672, 0883, T: 7684.

Révai Codex (or Vienna Codex) – A copy of the translation of fragments of the Bible from the Vienna Codex. Miklós János Révai (1750-1807), a monk and linguist, copied it in three copies from the original dated from the beginning of the 16th century, at the Vienna Court Library. They transcribed it onto paper using so-called “monk-Gothic” characters. The accompanying psalm and the translations of the four gospels are contained in the Apocrypha Codex and the Munich Codex. – B: 1031, T: 7659. → Codex Literature; Révai, Miklós János.

Révai, József (Joseph) (Lederer) (Budapest 12 October 1898 - Budapest 4 August 1959) – Politician, minister, novelist and journalist. He completed a Commercial High School, later becoming a student at the Universities of Budapest and Vienna. During his student years, he joined the anti-war movement, and participated in the socialist revolutionary activities of the Galilei group. In 1917 he was a contributor to the journals Today (Ma), and the Deed (Tett). He was one of the founding members of The Communists' Party in Hungary (Kommunisták Magyarországi Pártja – KMP). From its beginnings, he was an associate of the Vörös Újság (The Red Journal). He was a member of the Worker's Central Council of Budapest; he moved to Austria after the collapse of the Hungarian Soviet (Council) Republic (Magyar Tanács Köztársaság) on 1 August 1919. He was a contributor to the journals Proletár (1920) and Red Paper of Vienna (Bécsi Vörös Újság) (1921-1925). He participated at the first congress of the KMP in 1925, and was a member of the secretarial body of the Congress. Révai returned several times to Hungary for illegal party activities, was arrested on 31 December 1930, and sentenced to 3 years' imprisonment. In prison, he wrote one of his large studies: Marx and the Hungarian Revolution (Marx és a magyar forradalom) (1932). After he was freed, he moved to Prague and later to the Soviet Union where, until the beginning of 1937, he worked for the Komintern. Between 1937 and 1939 he worked as a journalist for the Magyar Nap (Hungarian Day) in Czechoslovakia. After the German occupation of Czechoslovakia, he returned to the Soviet Union. In the period of the “Great Patriotic War” (1941-1945), he was an associate of the Kossuth Radio. He returned to Hungary in the autumn of 1944. At first he worked in Szeged. From 1945 to 1950 he was the editor-in-chief of the Communist newspaper: Free People (Szabad Nép). From the autumn of 1945, he was a deputy in the National Assembly, and a member of the Central Leadership and the Politburo. From 11 June 1949 to 2 July 1950, Révai was Minister of Education. After 1956, he was a member of the Central Committee of Hungarian Socialist Workers Party (Magyar Szocialista Munkáspárt - MSZMP). In his works, he insisted on applying the Marxist approach to historical evaluation, many times in a violent manner, in order to analyze the literary and historical developments. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1949). Révai was a trend-setting Communist culture-politician in the early years of the Communist rule in Hungary. His works include Ady (Budapest, 1945); Marxism and the Hungarians (Marxizmus és a Magyarok) (Budapest, 1946); Issues of Our Cultural Revolution (Kulturális forradalmun kérdései) (Budapest, 1952), and Selected Literary Studies (Válogatott irodalmi tanulmányok) (Budapest, 1960). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1949). – B: 0883, 1031, 1112, T: 7679.→Ady, Endre; Losonczy, Géza, Révai, Miklós János (Nicholas John) (Nagyszentmiklós, 24 February 1750 - Pest, 1 May 1807) – Monk, linguist and writer. He studied at the Piarist High School of Szeged and, in the interest of his further education, he joined the Piarist Order; but his passionate nature led to many conflicts. From 1771 he taught at Tata, Veszprém and Nagykároly (now Carei, Transylvania, in Romania). In 1776 he studied theology in Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia); from 1777 he studied drawing and architecture at the University of Vienna. After returning to Hungary in 1778, he was ordained a priest in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, in Romania), where he was an art teacher for a while; later, he became a teacher at the Academy. He resigned his position in 1781, and was a tutor in various places; then, in 1783, became Editor of A Magyar Hirmondó (The Hungarian Courier) in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). After this, he became a teacher again. In 1802 he was appointed Professor of Hungarian Language and Literature at the University of Pest. Révai suffered persecution for his liberal religious views and for his patriotism. As a poet, he was one of the pioneers of metric poetry. He was the first researcher and publisher of ancient Hungarian literature and the first regular Hungarian stylistics author. In course of his scientific linguistic work – even ahead of Grimm – he was the first to apply the historical process for the explanation of linguistic phenomena. In 1802 he carried on a debate with Ferenc Versegly and his followers, the so-called “iottists”, who discarded the etymological method over fundamental questions of Hungarian grammar. His “Elaborator grammatica Hungarica...” (1803-1806), opened up a new chapter in Hungarian linguistics. His methodology of the Hungarian language was adopted by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences at its formation. He was most keen to establish a Hungarian scientific society and published the works of many writers. – B: 1150, 0883, 1031, T: 7659.→Rájnis, József; Révai Codex.

Révai, Mór János (Maurice John), Révay (Eperjes, now Prešov, Slovakia, 24 February 1860 - 7 July 1926) – Book publisher and political writer. He completed his higher studies at the universities of Budapest and Leipzig; then entered his father's, Samuel Révai's bookshop, where he established a publishing department. In 1895, when the Révai Brothers' Literary Institute Co. (Révai Testvérek Irodalmi Intézet Részvénytársaság) was formed, he became its managing director. From 1901 to 1905 he was a Member of Parliament. The jubilee edition of the complete works of Mór (Mauric) Jókai and Kálmán (Coloman) Mikszáth appeared under his management. He edited the literary journal The World of the Novel (Regényvilág) from 1880 to 1885. He was the editor-in-chief and publisher of the Révai Great Encyclopedia (Révai Nagy Lexikona) (21 vols. 1911-1926, 1927, 1935). After World War I, he took an active part in the Hungarian Revisionist Movement. – B: 0883, 1068, 1031, T: 7456.→Jókai, Mór; Mikszáth, Kálmán; Révai, Sámuel; Revisionist Movement in Hungary.

Révai, Sámuel (Révay) (Sebeskellemes, now Lúky Šarišské, Slovakia, 13 April 1833 - Budapest, 13 November 1908) – Bookshop proprietor and book publisher. In 1856 he settled in Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia) as a bookbinder. In 1859 he purchased the largest local bookshop and transferred it to Pest in 1869. In 1880 expanded it to include a publishing section; then, with his brother Leo, he turned it into a shareholder company under the title Révai Brothers Literary Institute Co. (Révai Testvérek Irodalmi Intézet Részvénytársaság), which was soon taken over by his sons Mór (Mauice) and Ödön (Edmund), who gained nationwide reputation for the company. The professional development of the Hungarian book trade is connected with his name; it was he who founded the National Hungarian Book Traders' Society (Magyar Könyvkereskedők Országos Egylete). His works include: On Our National Literature and the Hungarian Book-trade (Nemzeti irodalmunkról és a magyar könyvkereskedelemről) (1887). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Révai, Mór János.

Révay, József (Joseph) (Kecskemét 22 November 1881 - Kecskemét, 19 February 1970) – Writer, literary historian, translator and classical philologist. From 1902 until 1917 Révay was a high school teacher in the countryside. Between 1918 and 1919 he was a high school teacher and principal in Budapest. For his activities during the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (1919), he lost his job in 1920. At this period in his life, he began to work on literature and popular writing. He became one of the contributors to the literary journal Bluebird (Kékmadár) by 1923. At first, Révay was an official with the Franklin Society and, in 1928, became a lector there. Between 1932 and 1942 he was the editor of the illustrated magazine Mirror (Tükör). After 1945 he taught at the University of Budapest until his retirement in 1952. Then Révay restricted himself to literary activities. His academic writings on ancient literature were published in domestic and foreign journals. His writings included Colonel Raevius' Journey (Raevius ezredes utazása), novel (1938); Walks in Roman Hungary (Séták a római Magyarországon) (1943); The Panther (A párdúc) novel (1954), and Multifaceted Antiquity (Százarcú ókor), (1962). He wrote many radio plays. He translated the works of Sophocles, Aristophanes, Plautus, Seneca, Josephus Flavius, Goldoni, Victor Hugo and Thomas Mann, among others. Révay was awarded the Baumgarten Prize in 1943. – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7688.

Révay, Miklós (Nicholas) (Német-Nagy-Szent-Miklós, now Sînmiclăușu, Transylvania, Erdély in Romania, 24 February 1750 - Pest, 1 April 1807) – Linguist and poet. He was a member of the Piarist Order but, because of differences of opinion with his superiors, from 1778 he lived outside the Order, experiencing severe hardship for years, until in 1802 he was appointed Professor of Hungarian Language at the University of Budapest. He published the Funeral Oration and Prayer (Halotti beszéd és könyörgés), the oldest Hungarian language relic written between 1192-1195, with explanations in his volume Antiquitates Litteraturae Hungaricae. In another work of his, entitled Elaboratio Grammatica Hungarica, he provided the first scientific grammatical systematization from a historical viewpoint. Using a historical approach he anticipated the great linguists of the West. He wanted to improve the contemporary use of the language on the basis of its antiquated form, thinking that the changes in a language constitute degeneration and corruption; in this view, he opposed Ferenc (Francis) Verseghy, who regarded the changes in the language to be a natural development. In the problem of correct spelling or orthography, he also stood in opposition to Verseghy, who believed in the etymological analysis of words. He was called a “jottist” and therefore he would write atyja, látja, instead of following the pronunciation of words in writing, a method followed by the “ypsilonists”, who would say attya, láttya. In this question, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences adopted Révay’s method. As a poet, he belonged to the old scribe’s (deák) school: he wrote elegies and odes in metric form, e.g. Immortality of the Soul (A lélek halhatatlansága). For many years, he played with the idea of forming a scholarly society. – B: 7456, 1031, T: 7456. → Funeral Oration and Prayer; Verseghy, Ferenc.

Révész, Andor (Andres) (Galgócz, now Hlovovec, Slovakia, 9 October 1896 - Madrid, 13 June 1970) – Writer, newspaper reporter, literary translator. He studied French language and literature at the University of Budapest. He went on a scholarship to Paris where, during World War I, he was considered a citizen of a hostile country. Therefore, in the summer of 1915, he moved to Spain. He wrote literary and political studies. From 1922 until his death, he was the foreign editor of the newspaper ABC, in Madrid. He wrote books in Spanish on contemporary international and conflicting issues and translated the works of Mór (Mauric) Jókai, Kálmán (Coloman) Mikszáth and Jenő (Eugen) Herczeg into French and Spanish. In 1945 he had edited an anthology of Hungarian short stories. Several of his novels, as well as a romantic biography, were published in Spanish. His major works include Alemaní no podía vencer (Barcelona, 1945); Antología de humoristas húngaros contemporáneos, edited and co-translated with Garda Mercadal, (Barcelona, 1945); Wellington, el duque de hierro, (Madrid, 1946); Le edad de amar (Barcelona, 1952); Un dictador liberal: Narvaez, (Madrid, 1953), and Cualquier tiempo pasado...(Barcelona, 1957). – B: 1672, T: 7684. → Jókai, Mór; Mikszáth, Kálmán; Herczeg, Jenő.

Révész, Imre (Emeric Reves) (Bácsföldvár, now Bačko Gradište, Serbia, 16 February 1904 - Monte Carlo, 4 October 1981) – Political writer. He completed his studies in Berlin, Zurich and Paris. In 1926 he obtained a Ph.D. in political science in Zurich. He lived in Paris, then from 1933 in London. In 1930 he established the press agency Cooperation Press Service and Publishing Office. At the beginning of 1941, he settled in the United States. His work, entitled Anatomy of Peace (A béke anatómiája) (New York, 1945, 1947), and appeared in German under the title Die Anatomie des Friedens, (Vienna-Zurich-New York, 1957). In it, he analyzed political “isms” and examined the possibilities of a lasting peace after a victorious war. He lived alternately in the United States and the French Riviera. His other major work was A Democratic Manifesto (New York, 1942), in Hungarian: Demokratikus kiáltvány (Budapest, 1947). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Révész, Imre Sr. (Emeric) (Újfehértó, 14 January 1826 - Debrecen, 13 February 1881) – Minister of the Reformed Church, church historian and writer. He studied Theology at the Universities of Debrecen and Vienna (1851-1852), Berlin and Switzerland (1851-1853). He was a Member of Parliament (1861); Minister in Szentes (1861), then in Debrecen (1856); he was Archivist of the Reformed College Library, Debrecen (1867).

He played a leading role against the absolutism of the Austrian emperor. He was an ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1859). He was the Editor of the Hungarian Protestant Church and School Spectator (Magyar Protestáns Egyház és Iskola Figyelmező) (1870-1878). Some of his major works are: Orientation (Tájékozódás) (1859); Principles of the Protestant Church Constitution (A protestáns egyházalkotmány alapelvei) (1856); The Cause of Public Education in the Low Countries (A közoktatás ügye németalföldön) (1858); János Erdősi (Erdősi János) (1859); Hungarian Students in Wittenberg (Magyar tanulók Wittenbergben) (1859); The Biography and Literary Works of Mátyás Bíró Dévai, the First Hungarian Reformer (Dévai Bíró Mátyás első magyar reformátor életrajza és irodalmi művei) (1863), and Calvinism and the Life of Calvin (Kálvin élete és a kálvinizmus) (1864). He was an Honorary Doctor of the Faculty of Theology of the University of Vienna. – B: 0910, T: 7103. → Dévai Bíró, Mátyás.

Révész Imre Jr. (Emeric) (Pápa, 30 June 1889 - Budapest, 27 February 1967) – Bishop of the Reformed Church, ecclesiastical, cultural and social historian. He completed his theological and humanities studies in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and Montauban, France. In 1916 he received a doctorate in humanities from the University of Kolozsvár. From 1912 he was a substitute professor, from 1913 an extraordinary professor, and from 1914 a permanent professor at the Theology Department of the University of Kolozsvár. He taught church history as full professor at the University of Debrecen, beginning in 1930. In 1920 he was elected minister for the Great Church of Debrecen. Between 1938 and 1949 he served as Bishop for the Cistibiscan Reformed Diocese. From 1913 to 1920 he was a chief contributor to, later assistant editor of the Calvinist Review (Református Szemle), Kolozsvár; and from 1920 to 1923 Révész edited the Debrecen journal Faith and Life (Hit és Élet). The new Hymnbook (1948) for the Hungarian Reformed Church was produced under his direction. His historical writings focused on Protestant church history, and many questions relating to Hungarian social and cultural history. His was mainly interested in studying the Hungarian Reformation, its struggles with the Counter-Reformation and governing absolutism, as well as the inner contradictions of Protestantism. Imre Révész' significant writings included Scientific Church History Writing (A tudományos egyháztörténetírás) (1912); The Teachings of Mátyás Bíró Dévai (Dévai Bíró Mátyás tanításai) (1915); Péter Bod as Historiographer (Bod Péter, mint történetíró) (1916); The History of Hungarian Protestantism (A magyarországi protestantizmus történelme) (1925); The Reformation (A reformáció) (1932); Chapters Relating to the Church Politics of the Bach-Regime (Fejezetek a Bach-korszak egyházpolitikájáról) (1957), and Vienna Against Debrecen (Bécs Debrecen ellen) (1966). From 1938 Imre Révész held an honorary doctorate from University of Geneva.. He was elected a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1935, and a full member in 1946. – B: 0883, 0910, T: 7688.

Révész, László (1) (Ladislás) (Kecskemét, 10 August 1916 - Bern, 4 November 1999) – Historian and lawyer. He began his university studies at the Reformed Academy of Law of Kecskemét, and in 1938 he obtained a Ph.D. in Law from the University of Szeged. After that, he was a scholarship student at the University of Krakow. Upon returning to Hungary, he was conscripted and entered military service. In 1944 he became a Soviet prisoner of war. Following his release, he became Professor of the History of Law at the Reformed Academy of Law of Kecskemét. In 1949 he became Professor of Legal History at the University of Budapest; however, he was demoted to be Associate Professor. At the end of October 1956, he became President of the Revolutionary Committee of the University. To avoid being arrested in January 1957, he escaped through Yugoslavia to Switzerland. In the autumn of 1957, he was employed by the Eastern European Institute in Bern, where he was soon promoted to Scientific Chief Associate. He lectured on Eastern European subjects in Fribourg (Freiburg) from 1962, and in Bern and Zurich from 1963. In his research and literary work, he dealt with the historical and social problems of the postwar times in Hungary, as well as Central and Eastern Europe. He wrote his works in German and Hungarian. He was co-editor of the Ungarn-Jahrbuch. His Hungarian studies and articles appeared, among others, in the periodical New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), the papers Vienna Diary (Bécsi Napló) and the Guardian of the Nation (Nemzetőr). His works include Imre Nagy, Zur politischen und rechtlichen Bedeutung seiner Ermordung (Imre Nagy - On the Political and Legal Significance of His Murder) (1959); Der osteuropäische Bauer (The Eastern European farmer) (Bern) (1964); Menschenrechte in der USSR (Human rights in the USSR) (Bern) (1977); Staat und Kirche im "realen" Sozialismus, Recht und Wirklichkeit (Church and State in "real" Socialism, Law and Reality) (1986), Minderheitenschicksal in den Nachfolgerstaaten der Donaumonarchie – unter Berücksichtigung der magyarischen Minderheit (Fate of Minorities in the Successor States of the Danube Monarchy – in the Context of the Hungarian Minority) (Vienna, 1990). – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7684.

Révész, László (2) (Ladislav) (Dombóvár, 19 April 1960 - ) – Archeologist. He completed his higher studies at the University of Szeged, majoring in Hungarian language and history and completed a special course in archeology (1979-1984). Afterwards he worked as a research student at the Hungarian National Museum, Budapest; after gaining his Degree, he worked as an archeologist at the Otto Herman Museum of Miskolc (1984-1994), and later as Deputy Director of a County Museum. In 1994, he became a Scientific Research Fellow at the Medieval Department of the National Museum in Budapest; later he was Head of the Department, then was appointed Scientific Research Fellow. His field of research is the Hungarian settlement in the Carpathian Basin, and the age of the establishment of the Hungarian State in the Carpathian Basin, in about 896 AD. His best-known excavations are: (1) Hódmezővásárhely to Nagysziget, where in the course of ten years he excavated a 10th - 11th century cemetery; (2) during 1986 and 1990, uncovering cemeteries of the Carpathian settlement era in the area of Karos (east of Sárospatak). The richest 10th century cemeteries became known as a result of these excavations. In the Karos area he also opened up the 10th century cemeteries of Bodroghalom, and those of the 11th century of the Karcsa-Kormoska area. In the 1990s they organized the exhibition for the 1100-year jubilee of the Carpathian settlement and the 1000-year existence of the Hungarian State. On the request of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (Magyar Tudományos Akadémia - MTA) he started the monograph series Finds and Tombs of the 10th – 11th Century Hungary, and also prepared and treated the bequest and excavated finds of the deceased István (Stephen) Dienes and János (John) Győző Szabó. Under his leadership a Gallery was prepared featuring the Carpathian settlement in the 10th century with its archeological finds. This Gallery was shown in Hungary (Miskolc, Budapest, Nyíregyháza) during 1995 and 1997, as well as in various museums of Europe (Bologna, Milan, Caen, Toulouse, Turku, and Madrid) during 1998 and 2000. Révész led the historical and cultural-historical exhibition (Hungaria Regia) for the Hungarian Year of Europe (1999), held in Brussels. From 2000 to 2002 the traveling exhibition, entitled The Middle of Europe Around 1000, was prepared with the cooperation of German, Polish, Czech, Slovak and Hungarian museums and research institutes. In addition to 4 books and 77 papers, he published a series of volumes entitled Opuscula Hungarica, reporting on new research results and conferences. – B: 2091, T: 7456.

Révész, Margit (Margaret), (Mrs. József Hrabovszky) (Bácsfeketehegy, now Feketic, Serbia, about 50 km south of Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 25 August 1885 - Budapest, 21 April 1956) – Physician and child psychologist. She obtained her Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1911 and, in the same year, founded a private institute for mentally retarded children. In 1917 she became a lecturer in experimental psychology in the College for the Education of Mentally Retarded Children. She conducted research in child psychology. Her works include Experimentelle Beiträge zur Psychologie der moralisch verkommenen Kinder (Experimental Contributions to the Psychology of Morally Depraved Children) (1911), The Psychology of Women from the Viewpoint of Kretschmar's Theory (A nő lélektana Kretschmar tanai szemponyjából) (1924), and War-afflicted Children (Háború sújtotta gyermekek) (1948). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Reviczky, Gábor (Gabriel) (Tatabánya, 28 March 1949 - ) – Actor. He obtained a diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. At first, he was contracted to the Gergely Csiki Theater (Csiki Gergely Színház) of Kaposvár. Later, from 1975 to 1977, he was a member of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház) of Debrecen; from 1977 to 1978 of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Miskolc; and in 1978-1979 of the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház) of Kecskemét. From 1979, for 10 years, he played in the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) of Budapest and then, for two years, was a member of the National Theater of Budapest. In 1991 he returned to the Comedy Theater. He is excellent in forming ironic and grotesque characters. His more than 110 roles include Claudius in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Trinculo in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar); Prince Miskin in Dostoyevsky-Gy.Százaz's The Idiot (A félkegyelmű); Trepljov in Chekhov's Seagull (Sirály); Artur Görgey in Gyula Illyés' Torch-flame (Fáklyaláng); Katz in Hasek-Spiro's Svejk, and Fjodor Karamazov in Dostoyevskiy's The Brothers Karamazov (A Karamazov testvérek). There are more than 50 feature films to his credit, including The Plague (A járvány) (1975); The Fortress (Az erőd) (1979); Without a Trace (Nyom nélkül) (1982); Miss Arizona (1984); Sztracsatella (1995); Hungarian Wanderer (Magyar vándor) (2004); The Little Vuk (A kis Vuk) (1997), and the Glass Tiger 3 (Üvegtigris 3) (2010). Among his more than 20 TV films are: Soldiers (Katonák) (1977); Klapka Legion (Klapka légió) (1983); Abel in the Country (Ábel az országban) (1994), and Lili (2003). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize in 1986, and the Ajtay Andor Prize in 1991. – B: 1445, 1031 1742, T: 7456.

Reviczky, Gyula (Julius) (Vitkóc, now part of the village of Kuzmice in Slovakia, 9 April 1855 - Budapest 11 July 1889) – Poet and novelist. He was born as an illegitimate son. From the fall of 1873 to the fall of 1874, he worked as an educator in Garamújfalú (now Nová Dedina, Slovakia). From the fall of 1874 to the fall of 1875, he tried to make a living from literary activities and, for a few months, worked as an assistant-editor for the paper, New Times (Új Idők). After many disappointments and six months of misery, he left for Denta in the Banat area, north of Versec (now Vršac, Serbia) to be an educator. He moved to Budapest in 1877, and worked as a journalist. In 1878 he was employed at the newspaper, Pest Diary (Pesti Napló); during 1878-1882 he wrote for the paper, The Homeland (A Hon). In this period he befriended Komjáthy Miklós and other young opposition novelists. He began his career as a critic and essayist. His writings brought a new point of view, a different approach to the conservative critiques of the time. He fought against epigonism. Reviczky protested through poems against the breach, pessimism, doubt and barrenness of the epoch. In 1884, for a few months, he was the redactor of the paper, Arad News (Aradi Hírlap). It was in Arad (in Erdély, Transylvania, now in Romania) that he wrote the long-planned novel entitled Patrimony (Apai örökség) (1884). In the fall of 1885 in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), he worked in the editing of the German language newspaper Pannonia. In 1886 he was a contributor to the Budapest newspaper, Independence (Függetlenség); from 1887 to the end of his life he was with the newspaper, News of Pest (Pesti Hírlap). He was a member of the Petöfi Society. He died of tuberculosis. His poems of quiet sorrow, with introverted musical lyrics, made him an early precursor of Hungarian symbolism. His omnibus volumes include Complete Poems of Gyula Reviczky (Reviczky Gyula összes költeményei), published by Pál Koroda (1895); Collected Works of Gyula Reviczky (Reviczky Gyula összegyűjtött művei), published by Imre Páku (1944); His Miscellaneous Poems and Prose (Vegyes költői és prózai művei), and His Poems, Translations (edited by Németh G. Béla, (Budapest 1969, 1989). – B: 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7679.

Revisionist Movement in Hungary – At the end of World War I, the Central Powers, Germany and Austria-Hungary, asked for an armistice on 11 November 1918, trusting in the American President Woodrow Wilson’s policy of 14 peace-points and his promise of plebiscites deciding the fate of disputed territories. At the peace negotiations in Versailles, France, that vital condition was disregarded, and the Hungarian delegates were not even invited or allowed to the negotiating table. They were just summoned to the signing ceremony, where they were forced to place their signatures onto a dictated Peace Treaty on 4 June 1919, which took away 2/3rd of the territory of the 1000 year-old Hungarian Kingdom, together with 1/3rd of its ethnic Hungarian population, that is 3.5 million people – all annexed to Romania, the newly created Czechoslovakia, and the Slovenian-Croatian-Serbian Kingdom (later Yugoslavia). Hungarians regarded the dictated Treaty as unwarranted, unjust and unacceptable, because it was born out of political consideration, completely disregarding the promised plebiscite, thus collectively punishing the people of Hungary. Out of this background was spontaneously born the Revisionist Movement in Hungary, with the slogan: “No, no, never!” (Nem, nem soha!), regarding the Peace Dictate imposed upon Hungary by the victorious powers in 1920.

After Count István (Stephen) Bethlen’s government successfully consolidated the internal situation of truncated Hungary, in his speech on 27 May 1927 at Zalaegerszeg, he announced that the time had arrived for an “active foreign policy” with “lawful demands”. This line was strengthened by his speech on 4 March 1928 in Debrecen. In it, he underlined Hungary's claim for revising the Peace Treaties. From then on, Hungary pursued a revisionist foreign policy until the end of World War II. The Revisionist Movement was advertised in 1931 by the historic trans-oceanic flight from America to Hungary of György (George) Endresz and Sándor Magyar in a single-winged airplane named "Justice for Hungary" (Igazságot Magyarországnak). In the 1930s, unexpected help for this movement came from Lord Rothermere, the English newspaper millionaire. With his newspaper articles, he stood by the Hungarian cause. His sentence "Hungary is the natural ally of Britain and France" became the credo of the Revisionist Movement. Lord Rothermere suggested reuniting with Hungary those territories inhabited by a Hungarian majority along the other side of the borders. In his honor, a statue of a woman with a truncated arm and leg was erected on Debrecen's Bem Square, symbolizing the Trianon Peace Treaty.

However, this did not go far enough for radical revisionists. Mussolini, the Duce of Italy, sided with the revisionist plan of Hungary, although Hungary had taken part in bitter fighting against Italy during World War I. The Duce had this policy because of his political plans in the Balkans. Hitler, the Führer very cunningly used Hungary's revisionist policy to further his own political agenda. By promising revision, he cajoled Hungary into an alliance with the Axis Powers. Under Hitler's influence, partial revision did take place as a result of the two Vienna Awards (1938 and 1940): Northern Hungary (Felvidék Southern Slovakia) and Sub-Carpathia (Ruthenia), northern Transylvania (Erdély), and southern Hungary, Vajdaság (the northern part of Voivodina) were returned to Hungary.

After World War II, the Paris Peace Treaty on 10 February 1947, as a result of political decision, again with collective punishment of the Hungarian people, took away from Hungary the partially returned territories. In the Communist system imposed under Soviet military occupation, the Revisionist Movement was suppressed. The existence of millions of ethnic Hungarians living under hostile foreign rule beyond Hungary's borders within the Carpathian Basin was hardly even mentioned.

After the political change in 1990, the Revisionist Movement spontaneously revived among patriotic Hungarians everywhere in the Carpathian Basin. However, none of the Hungarian governments have adopted it so far. Instead of fighting for border-changes, the main demand now is territorial autonomy for indigenous ethnic Hungarians under foreign rule in the Carpathian Basin. – B: 1765, 1285, 1865, 1866, 7103, T: 7103.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Bethlen, Count István; Kratochwill, Károly; Rothermere, Lord; Justice for Hungary; Endresz, György; Mussolini, Benito; Hitler, Adolf; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II; Paris Peace Treaty; Irredentist Movement in Hungary.

Rexa, Dezső (Desider) (Pest, 28 February 1872 - Budapest, 19 November 1964) – Archivist, cultural historian and writer. He studied law and completed a course at the School of Commerce in Budapest. He worked at Alsókubin (now Dolni Kubin, Slovakia) as the archivist of County Árva, and as Director of the Csaplovics library; later, he worked as Archivist of County Fejér at Székesfehérvár, and finally as Archivist of County Pest in Budapest. In his varied activities he also wrote poems, short stories, novels and stage plays. He translated into Hungarian the works of writers from other countries and published lesser-known works of famous Hungarian writers. Apart from his studies on the history of literature, he published notable works on the past history of Budapest. He wrote in an evocative, anecdotal style. His works include Catherin (Katalin, Katinka, Kati, Kätchen), short story (1895); Life is a Novel, vols. i,ii, (Az élet – regény. I, II) novel (1898); The Wall Paintings of Árva Castle (Az árvai vár falképei) (1912); The Modern Man (A modern ember) burlesque (1923); Tabán (1934), and Margaret Island (Margitsziget) (1940). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Rezek, Roman (Sándor, Alexander) (Gödöllő, 3 August 1916 - Sao Paulo, Brazil, 8 May 1968) – Benedictine monk, poet and literary translator. He started his noviciate in 1934 at the Benedictine Monastery at Pannonhalma. In 1936 he took his vow and was ordained in the summer of 1940. He obtained a Degree in Education in Hungarian and English, and in 1941 he obtained his Ph.D. In 1940-1941 he was a minister in Celldömölk. From 1941 to 1944 he taught at the Benedictine High School in Kőszeg. In 1944 he was recruited as an army chaplain. In 1945 he became a prisoner of war of the French, but was soon released from the POW camp at Mailly le Camp near Paris. He became the chaplain of the Hungarian Catholic mission in Paris. At the end of 1964 he became the Director of the Mission. In the beginning of 1965, his superiors posted him to Brazil. He arrived in Sao Paulo in March of 1965. During his years in Paris, he was involved in literary activities. He wrote poetry; however, after criticism of his work, he stopped writing poems. He translated the works of French thinkers into Hungarian; he dealt intensively with the works of Sartre and Gabriel Marcel. Rezek was the intellectual director of the young immigrant writers' periodical in Paris, called As It Happens (Ahogy Lehet). Toward the end of the fifties, he became closely acquainted with the works of Teilhard de Chardin, and he directed his translating and research activities into the service of making the works of this French philosopher and theologian known in Hungary. In Sao Paulo, he was a teacher of religion, novitiate master and pastor. From 1975 on, authorized by his superiors, he was able to dedicate his whole life to the study of Teilhard de Chardin. He completed the whole translation of his life's work in 28 volumes; his Hungarian and French commentaries made up 40 volumes. In Hungarian, he published articles in The Catholic View (Katolikus Szemle), the New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), and the South American Hungarian News (Délamerikai Magyar Hírlap). His works include We Fly Low (Mélyen szállunk) poems (Paris) (1952); Meditations on Beauty (Elmélkedések a szépségről) (Munich, 1952); Theory of Knowledge of Teilhard de Chardin (Theilhard de Chardin ismeretelmélete) (Sao Paulo, 1975), and A Drifting World, Teilhard de Chardin's Theory of Knowledge (Sao Paulo, 1976). – B: 1672, 0883, T: 7684. → Hungarian Prisoners of World War II in Western Camps.

Rezes, György (George) (Arad, now in Romania, 1911 - Haifa, Israel, 27 April 1977) – Writer and newspaper reporter. He emigrated to Israel in 1950, and settled in Haifa. In 1961 he started a number of periodicals entitled Israeli Messenger (Izraeli Futár); Israeli Courier (Izraeli Kurir), and The World is Calling (Üzen a világ). He wrote his books when he was living with Haifa resident, Margalit Gondos. His works include With Ten Nails (Tíz körömmel) reports with Margalit Gondos (Tel Aviv, 1951); Final Stop (Végállomás) novel, with Margalit Gondos (Haifa, 1954), and Two Tell it in Israel (Ketten elmondják Izraelben), diaries, with M.G. (Munich, 1960). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Rezler, Gyula (Julius) (Miskolc, 31 May 1911 - Budapest. 28 October 2001) – Sociologist. He completed his university studies in Budapest, Szeged and Pécs. In 1938 he obtained a PhD in Social History from the University of Szeged, and in 1941 he obtained a PGD in Political Science from the University of Pécs. His main interests were city and labor sociology. At the beginning of the 1940s, he became noticed with his researches of and books on the history of factory workers. In 1948 he escaped to the West. He settled in the USA. From 1957 to 1978 he was Professor of Economics and Director of the Institute of Industrial Relations at Loyola University of Chicago. In 1961-1962 he taught Labor Economy at the University of Ranchi in India. He was Professor Emeritus at the University of New Mexico. In the United States, he was a well-known expert on labor science. He occupied himself with the economic aspects of labor relations and the consequences of technical changes and automation. In his last years he lectured at Hungarian Universities, and was made a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His professional studies appeared mainly in American and European economic and social science periodicals. His Hungarian writings appeared in the New Horizon (Új Látóhatár) and Our Fame in the World (Hírünk a Világban). His major work is entitled Automation and Industrial Worker (New York, 1969). In 1995 he established a foundation in Hungary for a peaceful solution of labor disputes. B: 1672, T: 7684.

Rhédey, Countess Claudina de Kis Réde (? , 1816 - Erdőszentgyörgy, now Singiorge de Padure, Transylvania, in Romania, 1 October 1841) – A beautiful Transylvanian countess, descendant of the ancient Hungarian Aba Clan (settled in County Heves, northeast of Budapest after the Carpathian Conquest around 896 AD). Her earliest known ancestor is the 13th century nobleman, Mikó of Kisrhéde and Szentmárton. It is a known fact that the Rhédey family received a letter patent from King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) in 1466. The founder of her family's glory was Ferenc (Francis), born in 1611, Lord Lieutenant of County Máramaros and Counselor of Reigning Prince György (George) Rákóczi. When Prince Rákóczi had to resign as Reigning Prince of Transylvania in 1657, the Estates elected Rhédey as Reigning Prince on 2 November. The life of her aristocratic relatives continued for two centuries. In a morganatic union, Countess Rhédey married Prince Alexander, the brother of Prince-Elect Charles of Württemberg, a Hussar Colonel, stationed at Graz, who often visited Hungary, where he must have met her. She died young (aged 24, for unknown reasons), and was buried in her Transylvanian family estate at Erdőszentgyörgy. Her son, Ferenc (Francis) from her morganatic marriage, was made Prince Teck in 1863, and married the Royal English Princess Maria Adelhaida. Their daughter later became Queen Mary, the wife of King George V of England, thus Countess Rhédey was the great-grandmother of George VI and great-great-grandmother of Queen Elizabeth II. Queen Mary went to Erdőszentgyörgy in County Udvarhely, Transylvania and decorated the grave of Countess Rhédey with a memorial plate. The present Crown Prince Charles publicly acknowledged by saying that “Claudina, Countess Rhédey, the grandmother of Queen Mary, my great-grandmother, was a Hungarian”. Biography: Laura Lengyel. Mrs. Daniel wrote a biographical novel on Claudina, Countess Rhédey. – B: 1068, 1078, 1160, 7456, T: 7658, 7456.

Ribbentrop, Joachim von (Wesel, 20 April 1893 - Nuremberg, 16 October 1946) – German diplomat and foreign minister. As the son of an army officer, he was educated in Switzerland, France, England and in Canada. From 1911 on, he worked in London in the import business. When he moved to Canada, he worked in Montreal, Quebec, at the Canadian Pacific Railroad and, finally, he was employed as a journalist in New York and Boston. At the outbreak of World War I, he returned to Germany and joined the German army. On the front he was seriously wounded, and was decorated with the Iron Cross. In 1918 he served at the War Ministry and, as a member of the German delegation, he attended the Paris Peace Conference. After the War he worked as a salesman. In 1932 he joined the National Socialist German Workers Party – NSDAP, and soon he became Hitler’s advisor in foreign affairs. First, he was Ambassador to London in 1936. In February 1938 he became Germany’s Foreign Minister. In the fall of that year, he and Count Ciano, his Italian counterpart, worked out the First Vienna Award, which returned to Hungary a Hungarian-populated strip of Slovakia (Felvidék). At the arbitration process, Ciano wanted the restoration of ante-Trianon status quo, that is, giving back the whole of North Hungarian (now Slovak) territory to Hungary, while Ribbentrop insisted that only the Hungarian populated belt should be returned. In 1940, the two foreign ministers decided the Second Vienna Award, which returned to Hungary the mostly Hungarian populated northern Transylvania (Erdély) and the Szeklerland (Székelyföld) from Romania. (Romania was compensated for the loss of northern Transylvania in July 1941, when the German and Romanian Armies occupied Bessarabia and northern Bukovina in the Soviet Union, which Romania had annexed). On 23 August 1939, in Moscow, Ribbentrop and Molotov signed the infamous Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact, which made possible the outbreak of World War II. During the war, Ribbentrop was a background figure. At the end of the war, he was arrested and charged with war crimes at the Nuremberg War Crimes Trial; he was found guilty and executed. – B: 1312, 1031, T: 7103.→Ciano, Count Galeazzo; Hitler, Adolf; Stalin, Joseph; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II.

Richter, Gedeon (Ecséd, northeast of Hatvan, 23 September 1872 - Budapest, 14 December 1944) – Pharmacist. He was a research student for three years at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), also studying Art. He obtained his Pharmacology Degree at the Medical Faculty of the University of Budapest in 1895. He was a trainee in several pharmacies in Budapest and later, from 1897 to 1901, he studied up-to-date methods of preparation of medicines in Germany, France, Italy and England. In 1901 he sold his inherited property at Ecséd and purchased the Black Eagle (Fekete Sas) Pharmacy on Üllői Street in Budapest. In his laboratory he produced for the first time organically therapeutic medicines in Hungary, such as adrenaline, obtained from the adrenal gland to raise blood pressure (Tongem Suprarenal, etc). It was from this pharmacy laboratory that he developed the first pharmaceutical factory, which he expanded abroad in the form of agencies, the first in Milan in 1908, then subsidiary companies in Bucharest and London, as well as commission stores in 32 countries. During World War II, according to the newly introduced Jewish laws, his leading position was revoked and he was expelled from his own factory, but later reinstated. Finally, in 1944, he became a victim of the pro-Nazi Arrow Cross men. – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.→Szálasi, Ferenc.

Richterite [Na<sub>2</sub>Ca(Mg,Fe)<sub>5</sub>Si<sub>8</sub>O<sub>22</sub>(OH)<sub>2</sub>] – Greenish mineral occurring in 2 mm thick and 10 mm long columns of jadeite. It was thought formerly to be diallage; József Krenner identified it as amphibole; it was collected by the Zsigmond (Sigismund) Széchenyi Expedition. – B: 1078, 7674, T: 7674.→Széchenyi, Count Zsigmond; Krenner, József Sándor.

Richter, János (John) (Győr, 4 April 1843 - Bayreuth, 5 December 1916) – Conductor. He was descended from musical parents, reared in the German language. In 1853 he was a choral singer of the court choir in Vienna. Between 1860 and 1865, he studied at the Vienna Conservatory, while playing the horn in the orchestra of the Kärntnertheater of Vienna. On the recommendation of Wagner, he became the chorus master of the Opera House in Munich in 1867. In 1868-1869 he was a conductor there. Having become acquainted with the music of Wagner, he became his enthusiastic follower and collaborator. From 1876 he was one of the celebrated leaders of the Bayreuth Festival. Between 1871 and 1875, Richter was conductor at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Budapest, taking the place of the composer and conductor Ferenc Erkel. Here he also introduced Wagner's music dramas above everything else; he revived Lohengrin, introduced the Flying Dutchman (A bolygó hollandi) (1873) and Rienzi (1874), and he revived Gounod's Romeo and Juliet (1872), Weber's Der Freischütz (A bűvös vadász) (1821), etc. After 1875 he was the center of musical life in Vienna, the celebrated conductor of Wagner presentations at Bayreuth. He appeared as a guest conductor in numerous cities. In 1897 he settled in Manchester where, between 1900 and 1910, he was conductor of a symphony orchestra. During the last years of his life, the high point of his conducting was the first performance of Béla Bartók's Symphonic Poem Kossuth in Manchester. János Richter, with a romantic approach, was one of the greatest conductors of his time. Although he conducted mainly Wagner's works, he was also a well-known interpreter of the Viennese classical masters. He retired in 1910. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7684, 7456.→Erkel, Ferenc; Bartók, Béla.

Rideg, Sándor (Alexander) (Törtel, 12 February 1903 - Budapest, 8 February 1966) – Writer. His father was a servant for a noble family. He grew up in the country. In 1919 Rideg enlisted in the Hungarian army. He later worked as a factory employee, as a Junior Hungarian State Railway Officer, and then as an apprentice baker. In 1925, Sándor Rideg became a leading member of the Socialist Workers' Party. As a result of his involvement in the workers' movement, Rideg was repeatedly arrested. In July 1927, the authorities confiscated an illegal press in his apartment. Until 1944, he was under constant police surveillance, and later, he was transported to a concentration camp. From 1945 to 1947

Sándor Rideg was the President of the Csepel Free Port Operational Committee. For several years afterwards, he was a member of the Writing Corps of the People's Army. As a writer, Rideg first appeared on the scene in 1931. His novels appeared in the papers Voice of the People (Népszava), Our Age (Korunk), Hungary (Magyarország), and Bridge (Híd). Humor and love of storytelling characterized his style. Sándor Rideg's best known writings include Signal to Depart (Indul a bakterház), novel (1943); Trial by Fire (Tűzpróba) novel (1949); The Mirror-hearted Gingerbread Hussar (A tükrösszívű huszár) short stories, (1950), and Under Cold Stars (Hűvös csillagok alatt), short stories (1965). He was a recipient of the Attila József Prize three times (1950, 1951, 1952), and the Kossuth Prize (1954). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Riedl, Frigyes (Frederick) (Garamladomér, now Ladomer, Slovakia, 12 September 1856 - Budapest, 7 August 1921) – Historian of literature and essayist. He obtained a Ph.D. in Pedagogy and Humanities from the University of Budapest. While still a student, he became a writer for the newspaper, Pest Journal (Pesti Napló). It was in the pages of the paper that his first studies appeared (focusing on Petőfi, Béranger, Zsigmond Kemény and Walter Scott). Between the years 1879 and 1881, Riedl studied at the universities of Berlin, Paris and Vienna. From 1881 until 1904, he worked as a vocational high school teacher in Budapest. From 30 December 1904 until his death, Riedl was Professor of Hungarian Literary History at the University of Budapest. From 1900, he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society. His studies were characterized by a conservative world-view, artistic sensitivity, a colorful literary style, and an attraction to the French artistic style. He particularly encouraged Renaissance research; he proved that Kálmán Thaly's Kuruc Ballads were only imitations. Riedl's most noted writings were The Principal Directions of Hungarian Literature (A magyar irodalom fő irányai) (1896); Shakespeare and Hungarian Literature (Shakespeare és a magyar irodalom) (1916); The Life and Works of Vörösmarty (Vörösmarty élete és művei) (1937), and The History of Hungarian Drama, vols. i, ii, (A magyar dráma története, I-II) (1939-1940). He also wrote excellent textbooks: Rhetoric (Retorika) (1888) and Poetics (Poetika) (1889) both were used for decades. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1896. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Riedl, Szende (Besztercebánya, now Banská Bystrica, Slovakia, 15 March 1831 - Budapest, 15 October 1873) – Linguist. From 1847 he studied at the Seminary of Nagyszombat. With the outbreak of the 1848 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, he took a teaching position at his birthplace. After relinquishing his priestly vocation in 1852, Riedl became a high school teacher in Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia). By 1854 he was a professor in the Hungarian Department at the University of Prague. It was here, with the help of renowned scholars (Schleicher, Curtius) that Riedl started to occupy himself with linguistic studies. Returning to Hungary in 1861, Riedl earned his living as a high school teacher in Pest. In a memorandum, he asked the ruling authorities to dismiss German teachers from schools in Hungary, and allow only those to teach, who knew Hungarian. In 1863 Riedl was a private tutor for comparative linguistics. From 1866 on, he had a tenured position at the Pest University, teaching German Language and Literature. Riedl wrote a number of textbooks and scholarly tracts, and simultaneously collected material for formally systematizing grammar for the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Riedl was editor of several journals, including Critical Pages (Kritische Blätter); Literary Pages (Irodalmi Lapok) (1860); another Critical Pages (Kritikai Lapok); New Era (Új korszak) (1865-1866), and Hungarian Revue (Ungarische Revue) (1869). His other important publications included Hungarian Grammar (Magyarische Grammatik) (1858) and The Main Outlines of Hungarian Linguistics (A magyar nyelvrendszer alapvonalai) (1859). Riedl was made a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1858. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7688.

Ries István (Stephen) (Küngös, 14 November 1885 - Vác, 15 September 1950) – Lawyer, politician. He obtained his Law Degree from the University of Budapest. In 1912 he opened a law practice. He was a member of the Galileo Society from the time he was a student. In World War I he became a POW in Russia. After returning home, in the period of the Hungarian Soviet Council Republic during 1919, he was a Professor at the People's Party School, as well as Minister of Education. Later, as a soldier of the Red Army, he participated in the northern Hungarian campaign against Slovakian forces. After the abolition of this regime, he emigrated to Vienna, and later returned home, practicing as a lawyer again. In 1924 he joined the Social Democratic Party (SZDP) where, from 1943, he was in the leadership. During his activity as a lawyer, he repeatedly defended the members of the workers' movement. In 1945, he became a member of the interim National Assembly. From 21 July 1945 to 17 July 1950, he was Minister of Justice. From 1948 to 1950, he was a member of the Hungarian Democratic Party (MDP) Central Committee. During his ministership the new Constitution was adopted by the Parliament (law XX of 1949). In this period those laws were adopted, which reflected the big social changes. He was a member of the Hungarian Soccer Referee Body and Chairman of the Hungarian Soccer Association. Based on fictitious charges, he was arrested on 17 July 1950. He died in prison; he was rehabilitated posthumously in 1956. B: 0883, T: 7679.

Riesz, Frigyes (Frederick) (Győr, 22 January 1880 - Budapest, 28 February 1956) – Mathematician. He studied at the University of Budapest, the Zürich Polytechnic, and the University of Göttingen. He worked as a high school teacher at Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia) and later in Budapest. In 1907, his first work of note was presented to the Academy of Sciences in Paris. From 1911, he was acting professor of mathematics; from 1912 associate professor and, from 1924 full professor at the University of Kolozsvár. Since Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) ceased to be on Hungarian territory after the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon (1920), the University of Kolozsvár was transferred to Szeged, so Riesz continued his mathematical research and lecturing there. He had the lion's share in making the University of Szeged one of the world centers of mathematical research. In 1922, together with Alfred Haar, he founded and edited the journal Acta Scientiarum Mathematicarum. In 1945 he was Vice-Chancellor of the University of Szeged. In late 1945 he became Professor of Mathematics at the University of Budapest, where he worked until his death. In 1945, Riesz received the Grand Prix of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and became a corresponding member of the University of Paris at the Sorbonne, and an honorary doctor of the universities of Szeged, Budapest and Paris. The best-known result of his mathematical studies was on the field of the Riesz-Fischer theorem of real functions. He played a part in the development of the concept of abstract spaces and was one of the founders of a new branch of mathematics: functional analysis. His discoveries gave the foundation for the theory of function spaces, linear operations and subharmonic functions. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1916, ordinary 1936, honorary, 1955). His monograph, published in Paris in 1913, entitled Les systèmes d'équations linéaires à une infinité d'inconnues was considered epoch-making in its significance. His book: Leçons d'analyse fonctionnelle (with Béla Szőkefalvi Nagy) proved a great success. He was a recipient of the Grand Prix of the Academy, and twice recipient of the Kossuth Prize. A minor planet the Frigyesriesz (1980 TG) was named after him. – B: 0872, 0883, 1867, T: 7456. → Haar, Alfréd; Riesz, Marcell.

Riesz, Marcell (Győr, 16 November 1886 - Lund, Sweden, 4 September 1969) – Mathematician and younger brother of Frigyes Riesz. He studied at the University of Budapest between 1904-1906 and 1907-1908, while he spent the 1906-1907 academic year at Göttingen University, and that of 1909-1910 in Paris. In 1909 he obtained his Ph.D. in Mathematics. In 1911 he went to Sweden, worked for Acta Mathematica in Lund. From 1912 to 1926 he was a reader at the University of Stockholm. In 1926 he became Professor of Mathematics at the University of Lund, where he worked until his retirement. He gave lectures in a number of other countries as well. He received honorary doctorates at the universities of Lund and Copenhagen. He was also in contact with Hungarian mathematicians; he wrote a paper with his brother as co-author, and several of his articles appeared in the Acta Scientiarum Mathematicarum of Szeged. Riesz gained international reputation with his trigonometric series. He achieved his most significant results in the potential theory, wave diffusion, and the mathematical problems of quantum mechanics. He discovered the multi-dimensional new analogue of the Riemann-Liouville integral. He founded a famous school of mathematics; his students included H. Cramér, Einar Hille, Lars Garding, Lars Hörmander, and other eminent mathematicians. Under his influence, Lund became one of the European centers of mathematical research and teaching. His works include Neuere Untersuchungen über trigonometrische Reihen (1924); Intégrales de Riemann-Liouville et solution invariante du Problème de Cauchy pour l'équation des Ondes (1937). A minor planet, the Marcelriesz (2000 JE) was named after him. – B: 0883, 1967, T: 7456. → Riesz, Frigyes

Right to Resist – The fundamental right of the Hungarian nobility to resist, was instituted and promulgated in the Golden Bull (Arany Bulla) of King Andrew (András) II in 1222, on the basis of Paragraph 30. The English Magna Carta 1215 provided similar rights. The section declares that every Hungarian king, before he is crowned with the Holy Crown of St Stephen (István), must sign a contract of fealty, guaranteeing the freedom of the nobility. Were he to break this sacred trust, the nobility would have the right to resist, oppose and deny the king, without any charge of “lèse majesté”. This right of resistance, together with the right of free election of kings, was abrogated in Hungary by the Diets of 17 November and 10 December 1687, and in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) by the 3rd point of the Diploma Leopoldinum. – B: 0942, 1031, T: 7661. → Golden Bull; Diploma Leopoldinum.

Rigler, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Dunamocs, 4 November 1868 - Budapest, 30 August 1930) – Physician. He completed his medical studies at the University of Budapest in 1891, then he became a demonstrator in the Institute of Public Health, becoming the assistant of József (Joseph) Fodor during serological experiments. From 1899 he was Professor of Public Health at the Medical Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), from where, after the 1920 Trianon Peace Dictate, he moved to the University of Szeged and, from 1926 to 1930, he taught at the University of Budapest. He was an excellent textbook writer and editor of practical handbooks. His fields of research were public health in schools and balneology. He was the organizer of the state medical officer courses. His works include Methods of Hygienic Studies (Az egészségügyi vizsgálatok módszerei) (1894); Das Blut mit Typhusbacillen inficierter Thiere, with J. Fodor (1898), and Brief Textbook of Public Hygiene and Epidemiology (A közegészségtan és a járványtan rövid tankönyve) (1922). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rigó, Magda (Máramarossziget, now Sighet, Romania, 6 August 1910 - Budapest, 5 September 1985) – Opera singer (soprano). She studied at the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, from 1928 to 1933, under the direction of Béla Szabados. She made her debut in the Opera House of Budapest as Amelia in Verdi's Masked Ball (Álarcosbál) in 1935. During the years 1935 to 1963 she was a soloist of the Opera House. She was an excellent actress with a strong voice, which made her powerful in her roles. She appeared a number of times as guest artist at the Staatsoper in Vienna, also in Bucharest and Sofia. She also appeared as the partner of famed singers like Benjamino Gigli, Aureliano Pertile, Helge Roswaenge and Set Svanholm. Her roles included Aida of Verdi; Tosca of Puccini; Cio-Cio-San in Puccini's Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony); Dorabella in Mozart's Così fan tutte (Mindenki így csinálja); Elza in Wagner's Lohengrin, Senta in Wagner's Flying Dutchman (A bolygó hollandi); Santuzza in Mascagni's Cavalleria rusticana (Parasztbecsület), and Agatha in Weber's Der Freischütz (A bűvös vadász). She was presented with the title of Merited Artist (1963). – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7456. → Losonczy, György.

Rimay, János (John) (Alsósztrégova, now Dolná Strehová, Slovakia, circa 1570 - Divény, now Divín, Slovakia, between 9 and 11 December 1631) – Politician, poet, a well-known writer of the late Renaissance in Hungary. He was a landowner, descendant of the gentry in County Nógrád. His father was in the service of Bálint (Valentin) Balassa, with whom, from his early youth, he formed a close friendship. Later, he came into contact with the most prominent people in the country. In 1605, Rimay joined the uprising led by István (Stephen) Bocskai. His primary responsibility was to carry out secretarial tasks for the Principality of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In 1608, István Illésházy gave Rimay the assignment of being the representative of the Hungarian Estates in the Committee sent to ratify the Peace Treaty of Zsitvatorok in Constantinople, which ended the Fifteen Years' War between the Ottoman Empire and the Habsburg Monarchy on 11 November 1606. János Rimay later stepped into the service of the Thurzó family. Receiving the mandate of Imre (Emeric) Thurzó, Rimay participated in the 1619 Hungarian Diet at Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and, along with his master, supported Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen's political direction. In the fall of 1620, Rimay once again fulfilled the post of diplomat in Constantinople. From 1621 until his death, he lived in his Mansion of Alsósztrégo. Due to Balassa's influence, Rimay wrote love, courtly and religious poetry, as well as sententious verse patterned on neo-Stoic philosophical concepts. János Rimay wanted to publish all of Balassa's poetry. The preface to this planned edition is an important snapshot of the state of development of Hungarian literary knowledge. Rimay's poems appeared in numerous publications alongside Bálint Balassa's verses from the 1630s on. Modern editions centering on János Rimay include The State Papers and Letters of János Rimay of Alsósztrégo and Rima (Alsósztrégovai és rimai Rimay János államiratai és levelezése) (1887); The Writings of János Rimay (Rimay János Munkái) (1904), and The Complete Works of János Rimay (Rimay János Összes művei) (1955). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7688.→Balassi, Bálint; Bocskai, Prince István; Bethlen, Prince Gábor.

Rippl-Rónai, József (Joseph) (Kaposvár, 23 May 1861 - Kaposvár, 25 November 1927) – Painter. In 1884, Rippl-Rónai enrolled in the Munich Academy; but by 1887 he was in Paris. For two years he worked alongside Mihály Munkácsy, and was briefly inspired by his influence. He was then involved in contemporary French artistic circles. It was at this time that he became friends with Aristide Maillol, the renowned sculptor, with whom he shared an artist studio in 1892, and whose portrait he later painted. Rippl-Rónai worked in France until 1901. After the turn of the century, Rippl-Rónai returned to Hungary permanently. In December 1900, he staged an exhibition of his paintings, but the Hungarian public did not yet appreciate his talent. At this time, he went through his “black period”, which was characterized by decorative Secessionist coloring, later replaced by a fresh pastel technique and impressionistic forms. With his 1906 Budapest exhibition, József Rippl-Rónai became a great success. From this time on, the painter lived near Kaposvár, working in a place known as the “Rome villa”. It was there that he painted his “pointillist secession” pictures. Rippl-Rónai took part in the establishment of the Hungarian Impressionists and Naturalists Circle (Magyar Impresszionista és Naturalista Kör – MIENK), and in the West (Nyugat) movement. In 1914 Rippl-Rónai was interned in Paris with the outbreak of World War I. It was only in February 1915 that he could return to Hungary. Rippl-Rónai's paintings included Woman in a White Polka-Dot Dress (Nő fehérpettyes ruhában) (1889); My Aged Mother (Öreganyám) (1892), and When a Person Lives Only from his Memories... (Amikor az ember visszaemlékezéseiből él...) (1904). After the war he painted the portraits of Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz, Mihály (Michael) Babits, Lőrinc (Lawrence) Szabó, and a Self-Portrait (Önarckép) (1926), now in the Uffizi Gallery, Florence. Rippl-Rónai was a member of the French Nabis group of artists, and the most significant Hungarian painter among Post-Impressionists and Secessionists. His painting technique involved rich colors, and courageously stylized play with lines and decoration. His memoirs appeared in 1911 and 1957. Kaposvár established an Artists' Prize in his honor. He was a leading figure among modern Hungarian painters. –

Riszdorfer Ödön (Edmund) (Rissdorfer) (Batthyánpuszta, 26 September 1893 - ?, 1944) – Inventor. He read Law and had a career in commerce. As an amateur photographer he began getting engaged in the automation of cameras in the 1920s. After several years of work, he had two solutions patented. In a fully automatic apparatus the exposure-time was directly regulated by a photoelectric cell. He also constructed a semi-automatic apparatus in which he employed a photoelectric cell, but the setting of the shutter's speed was done manually. In October 1930, he applied for his first patent, followed later by several others. With his inventions, Riszdorfer revolutionized the camera industry. After the presentation of his first automatic apparatus, it was the largest companies that entered into contracts with him, e.g. Eastman-Kodak, Kodak, Voigtländer, Gamma etc. He had his own shop in Budapest. His inventions proved pioneering, and he might have been the first in the world to render various problems in photography automatic. – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7456.

Ritoók, Emma (Gálszécsi) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 15 July 1868 - Budapest 3 April 1945) – Poet, novelist, literary translator, esthete. She studied in Budapest, Leipzig and Paris, obtaining her Ph.D. in philosophy in 1906. She was a librarian in the Metropolitan Library (Fővárosi Könyvtár). In 1897 she won the science prize of the Szigligeti Association from Nagyvárad with her paper The Natural History Trend in Literature. In 1905 she distinguished herself by winning the competition with the theme for a novel entitled Alone On a Straight Path (Egyenes úton – egyedül), put out by the publishers of the leading magazine New Times (Új Idők). In her pre-war works she treated the issue of the modern working, single woman in a progressive and feministic way, while after World War I she became, through her works, a spokeswoman for revisionism. She wrote poems, did literary translations, esthetic studies, as well as research into literary history. She was the first writer to present her readers with the literature of the northern countries. Her main works are: The Theory of János Arany on Epic Poetry (Arany János elmélete az eposzról) textbook (1906); The Great Chance (A nagy véletlen) novel (1909); Four Around the Fire (Négyen a tűz körül) short stories (1911); Hostile World (Ellenséges világ) short stories (1911); Dark Months (Sötét hónapok) poems (1920); Le probleme de la Hongrie, with Sarolta Geöcze (1920); The Adventurers of the Spirit, vols. i,ii (A szellem kalandorai, I,II) (1921, 1993); Pan's Redemption (Pán megváltása) mystic play (1908), and Two Lives of Sándor Gyárfás (Gyárfás Sándor két élete), novel (1933). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7679.→Revisionist Movement in Hungary.

Ritoók, Zsigmond (1) (Sigismund) (Gálszécsi) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 5 January 1870 - Budapest, 1 October 1938) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1893. Until 1895 he was a research student in the No. 1 Clinic of Internal Medicine, and until 1902 practiced as a demonstrator. In 1910, he became an honorary lecturer, and from 1911 to 1935 he was the senior physician of the Rókus Hospital in Budapest. In 1931 he was made titular associate professor; between 1933-1935, he was Director of the Metropolitan Hospitals. From 1903 to 1908 he was a member of the Judicial Medical Council; from 1909 to 1917 its Secretary and, from 1920 to 1938, its President. His works include Data for the Etiological Relationships of Arteriosclerosis (Adatok az arterio-sclerosis aetiológiai viszonyaihoz) (1896); On the Value of Blood Pressure Determination in a Living Patient (Az élőbeli vérnyomás-meghatározás értékéről) (1909). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Ritoók Zsigmond (2) (Sigismund) (Budapest, 28 September 1929 -) – Historian, linguist. He completed his high school studies in Budapest, and studied for his Education Degree at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, also completing a B.A. course, majoring in Latin and Greek. In 1968 he earned a Degree in Education in Hungarian Language, to teach in high schools; and in 1986 he obtained a Ph.D. From 1952 he worked as a demonstrator at the Department of Greek Language and Literature; thereafter, he worked as a teacher in the Flóra Martos High School of Óbuda (northern suburb of Budapest) for twelve years. Later, he returned to the University of Budapest and was active in the Ancient History Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1986 he was professor at the Department of Latin Language and Literature, where he was also Head of Department from 1987 to 1993, retiring in 1999. For nearly six decades, he was engaged in the research on Greek and Latin literature, history of ancient times, and the esthetics of antiquity, concurrently with his teaching activities, encompassing several generations. He is a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1990 ordinary 1993), President of the Section for Linguistic and Literary Scholarship of the Academy (1996-1999); since 1990 he has been a member of the Academy of Europe (London) and, since 1994, a corresponding member of the Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften. His works include monographs: The Greek Rhapsodoi (A görög énekmondók) (1973) and The Golden Age of Greek Culture (A görög kultúra aranykora) with János Sarkady and János György Szilágyi (1984). He also edited books: Everyday Life in Ancient Greece (Régi görög hétköznapok) (1960); The Theatre and the Stadium (Színház és stadion) (1968); Sources for the History of the Aesthetics of Music in Greece (Források az ókori görög zeneesztétika történetéhez) (1988), and Greek Historians (Görög történetírók) (1988). His distinctions include the Albert Szent-Györgyi Prize (1992), the Péter Pázmány Prize (1997), the Széchenyi Prize (2001), the Middle Cross of Honor with the Star of the Republic of Hungary (2008), and the Bólyai Prize (2009). – B: 1031, 1817, 2062, T: 7103, 7456. → Szilágyi, János György.

Robay, János (John) (Romich, Achmed pasa) (Újvidék, now Novi Sad, Serbia, 1819 - Baghdad, 10 September 1855) – Physician, Honvéd Medic, Turkish head-physician. He acquired a Medical Degree at the Military Medical Academy of Vienna in 1846, after which he served in Italy. As a senior medical officer he fought throughout the 1848-1849 War of Independence against Habsburg oppression, alongside the 12th Hussar-regiment. When the war ended, he fled to Turkey in September 1849; in Vidin he was converted to Islam and became a Turkish medical officer. Under the name Pasha Achmed, he served in Egypt and Iraq as Head Physician. He perished during the Baghdad uprising. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rochel, Antal (Anthony) (Neukirchen, Austria, 18 June 1770 - Graz, Austria, 12 May 1847) – Physician and botanist. After studies abroad in Bohemia and England; obtained his Medical Degree at the Josephinum of Vienna in 1792, then he worked as a medical officer in the army. He was taken prisoner by the French and, when freed, he continued to live in France, later in Belgium. In 1798 he practiced as a private physician in England and later in Moravia in 1800, followed by his visit to Hungary. In 1820 he became gardener in the botanical garden of the University of Pest until his retirement in 1840. Well-known for his description of the Bácság flora, he was the author of some plant-geographic studies. His works included Naturhistorische Miscellen über den nordwestlichen Karpath in Ober-Ungarn (1821) and Plantae Banatus Rariores (1828). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rock Chapel (Sziklakápolna) – A Chapel of the Pauline Monastery of Buda in Budapest, artificially carved into the rockface from one of the naturally existing caves of Mount Gellért in 1926, in imitation of the cave of Lourdes in Southern France. The Pauline Monastery was built there in 1934, marking an important stage in the twentieth-century movement of the reorganization of the Order. In spite of the frequent dissolutions in recent centuries, the Paulines resumed their activity in their monastery at Buda in 1989. Their chapel is one of the most interesting ecclesiastical monuments of the Hungarian Capital. The Pauline Order (Pálosok – named after Saint Paul the Hermit) is the only monastic order of Hungarian origin. It was founded by Blessed Özséb around 1270, had monasteries at Budaszentlőrinc, close to Buda, and in a part of Óbuda called Fehéregyháza. These monasteries were destroyed during the Ottoman Turkish occupation of Hungary (1526-1686), and the returning monks established their new monastery in Pest on the site of the later University Church. The Habsburg Emperor József II (Joseph, 1780-1790) dissolved the Order in 1786.

In recent times, there were a number of plans to reorganize the Order, but in vain. Between the two World Wars, the Paulines of Poland supported the plan. Finally, the Pauline Monastery on the southern slope of Mount Gellért, and a Chapel were built in 1926; the Chapel was designed by Károly (Charles) Lux. This cave chapel was consecrated in honor of “Our Lady of Hungary”. Károly (Charles) Weichinger designed the monastery in the romantic style in 1934. After World War II, when the Communist government under Soviet military occupation took over, the Order was again dissolved. On Easter Monday of 1951, the Rock Chapel was surrounded by the secret police (AVH), and the monks were carried off, the relics in the chapel were destroyed, and a 2-meter high concrete wall was erected, thus blocking the entrance to the chapel. The monastery then served as a hall of the Residence for the students of the Institute of the Hungarian State Ballet. The Order restarted its activity in 1989, and the Rock Chapel was restored. The chapel is in the care of the Pauline monks. The way from the church to the monastery leading through the chapel was dedicated to king Saint Stephen (Szent István). The Rock Chapel consists of two parts: one is named after Saint Iván, a hermit who was once living in the natural upper cave, while the lower part is an artificially made system of caves. This latter is the place where the relic of Saint Paul the Hermit, a small piece of his bone, is safeguarded over the altar. The chapel is decorated with the motives of an ancient Christian chapel discovered in the desert of Thebes by Hungarian archeologists. – B:

Röck, István Jr. (Stephen) (Pest, 1 November 1812 - Budapest, 10 November 1882) – Engine builder. In 1840 he took over his father's workshop, which started to produce smaller agricultural machines. In 1853, he manufactured the first manual and horse-driven threshing machine. Late in 1857, he produced machines for the printing trade. In 1859, he exhibited the first steam thresher outfit, where the English engine-builder, Shuttleworth, was also present at the trial run. Late in the 1860s, his workshop mainly produced steam flour-mill installations, while in 1894 he set up installations for manufacturing steam engine boilers, ship engines, well-sinking machines, silk factory installations, and for constructing machinery for tobacco factories. He introduced boilers with heating pipes of corrugated iron. In his plant, he brought together a number of types of work: metal and iron foundry, workshops for boiler-making, iron and wood-turning lathes, and workshops for plumbers, locksmiths, carpenters, cartwrights, and others. Later, the April 4 Engineering Works was developed from his factory. – B: 0883, 1921, T: 7456.

Rockenbauer, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 14 January 1933 - Naszály 26 November 1987) – Naturalist and TV-editor. He studied at the University of Budapest and obtained a Degree in Education, majoring in Geography and Biology. In 1970 he completed a course in mountaineering. His first and last place of work was in Hungarian Television. He mainly directed documentaries dealing with nature. He was a founding member of the editorial board of the Hungarian TV Channel Natura, from 1978 the first workshop in Hungary dealing with the filming of nature. He took films along the coastal strips of the Mediterranean countries, and also in India, Nepal, Antarctica, North and South America, as well as Oceania. He shot films in Hawaii, on the Kilimanjaro, and in Qualido (Val di Mello, Italy), as well as in Pamir. In the High Tatra of the Carpathians, he climbed all the highest peaks. His famous TV films include the One-and-a-half Million Steps in Hungary (Másfélmillió lépés Magyarországon) and its continuation, And Another One Million Steps (És még egymillió lépés). The result of his trip to Antarctica was the film, A Bit of Antarctica. His work entitled In the Track of Sunshine (A napsugár nyomában) comprises 13 parts, covering every part of the Earth, and received the appreciation of a number of international nature-film authors. He died at the foot of Mount Naszály in the Danube-bend, aged 54 and, at his request he was buried at Zengővárkony at the foot of the Mecsek Mountain. He was the creator of Hungarian TV nature-films His books include What the Map Relates (Amiről a térkép mesél) (1986). His name is enshrined on the peak Kéktúra in Southern Transdanubia; there is also a hostel bearing his name and a memorial plaque on his home in Budapest. – B: 1031, 1742, T: 7456.

Rodé, Iván (Budapest, 6 November 1910 - Budapest, 13 July 1989) – Physician, radiologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1936 and, from then on, he was a correspondent for the Radium and X-ray Institute there. From 1951 he was a correspondent of the National Oncological Institute and, from 1961, was in charge of radiation therapy units. He became a Professor and Head of the newly established and first Onco-radiological Chair in Hungary, and organized the training for qualification in this field. He also launched the functioning of the first cobalt instrument in Hungary in 1958, and installed the ultra-high tension radiation treatment using a concentric accelerator. A number of his studies and books (also in other languages) are still valuable sources. His works include The Basic Principles of Radium Therapy (A radiumtherápia alapelvei) (1948) and Clinical Onco-radiology (Klinikai onkoradiológia) (1984). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rodolfo (Rezső Gács, Gross) (Budapest, 16 May 1911 - Budapest, 25 January 1987) – Conjurer. He learned his trade from a Chinese pearl merchant and from Zuárd Odry. At first they appeared on stage together; but from 1929, Rodolfo worked alone. He became a familiar artist in clubs and on the stages of Budapest, and later on the stages of varieties like the Arizona, Clarusse, Alpine Village and Moulin Rouge, and the Grand Circus. He teamed up with the Latabárs, Kamill Feleki and Alfonzo. He appeared in every large town of Europe including Lausanne, Paris and London. His last appearance was at the Microscope Stage (Mikroszkó Színpad) on 13 January 1986. His forte was his manual skill. He was at home in mindreading, memotechnique, suggestive sleights of hand and the art of pickpocketing on stage. He knew about 5000 tricks and combinations. He was President of the Artists' Union. His works include Beware, I am Cheating (Vigyázat, csalok) (1959), and The Rodolfo Conjuror Book (Rodolfo bűvészkönyv) (1965). He was awarded the titles of Merited Artist (1969), and Outstanding Artist (1971). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Rodostó (in Greek: Rodosto, in Turkish: Tekirdağ, in Turkey) – The place of exile of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II, and his entourage from 1721 to 1735. The town is situated on the northern coast of the Sea of Marmara, 135 km west of Istanbul. The Bay of Tekirdağ is enclosed by the great promontory of the mountain which gives its name to the city, Tekir Dağ: “Tekir” means the one who wears the crown, and “Dağ” means mountain: a spur about 2000 ft. that rises into the hilly plateau to the north. Between Tekirdağ and Şarköy is another mountain, Ganos Dağı. The history of the city of Tekirdağ dates back to about 4000 BC. It was ruled by Greeks, Bulgarians and Venetians, and finally by Turks. In the Ottoman period the city was in succession a part of the vilayet (province) of Rumelia, Kaptanpaşa, Silistre and Edirne. In 1905, the city had a population of about 35,000; of whom half were Greeks, who were exchanged with Muslims living in Greece in 1923. The Tekirdağ today is a commercial town and site of many holiday homes, and the location of the Namuk Kemal University. In the city there is the Rákóczi House, now a Museum, in a 17th century Turkish house, where the Hungarian national hero, Reigning Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II lived during his exile from 1720 till his death in 1735. Today, the Museum is the property of the Republic of Hungary. The replica of the house is in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). The church of Panagia Rheumatocratissa contains the graves of other Hungarians who took refuge there with their leader. Rodosto/Tekirdağ is visited by many Hungarians, having become a place of national pilgrimage. – B: 1031, 1440, T: 7103.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Rofusz, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 19 August 1946 - ) – Film director. His interest in cartoon and animation film-making started while he was a high school student. During his studies, he took special drawing and animation courses. He started to work at the Hungarian film studio (Pannonia Film) as a set designer, set painter and animator. In 1968, he joined the Pannonia Film Studio and participated in making the film John the Brave (János vitéz) (1973), and also partnered Marcell Jankovics in the animation project Gusztáv (Gustavus). In 1974, he made his first animated film: A kő (The Stone), and later, for A légy (The Fly) (1980), he received the Academy Award for Animated Short Film in 1981. Rófusz was not allowed by the Communist regime to leave the country to attend the Oscars. However, without his knowledge, somebody accepted the award for him during the show. He lived and worked in Toronto, Canada from 1988 to 1992, when he returned to Hungary. His other films include Deadlock (Holtpont) (1982); Gravity (Gravitation) (1984); Ceasefire! (Tűzet szüntess!) (2003), and A Dog's Life. Rófusz is one of the most popular cartoonists in Hungary with an international reputation. He is the first Hungarian cartoonist to win an Oscar. He is the recipient of a number of other awards, including the Don Quixote Prize, Krakow Prize (1981), the Béla Balázs Prize (1982), the OIAF Award (1984), and the Kossuth Prize (2011). – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Jankovics, Marcell (2).

Rogerus (Terre Maggiore, Italy, between 1201 and 1205 - Spalato 14 April 1266) – Prelate. He was born in Apulia in southern Italy, and became the chaplain of Jacob Pecorari (1232-1244), as well as that of English Cardinal John Toletanus (1244-1249). He first went to Hungary in 1233, and in 1241 and 1242 he was Archdeacon of Várad (later Nagyvárad, now Oradea in Romania). Between 1243 and 1249 he was Archdeacon of Sopron; in 1249 Canon of Zagreb and, from 1249, Archbishop of Spalato. He survived the Tartar invasion of 1241-1242 in Hungary, and the “Lament” (Carmen Miserabile super Destructione Regni Hungariae per Tartaros facta), which he wrote about the invasion, proved a valuable source of Hungarian history. The pope made him archbishop at the request of Cardinal Toletanus, as a result of which he was not on good terms with the Hungarian court or with the citizens of Spalato. He was buried in front of the entrance of the cathedral of Spalato. His works are included in Károly (Charles) Szabó's The Lament of Master Rogerus, Canon of Várad (Roger mester váradi kanonok siralmas éneke) (1861), and The Lament of Master Roger on Hungary Devastated by the Tartars (Roger mester siralmas éneke a tatároktól elpusztított Magyarországról), translated by Tihamér Turchányi (1904). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Rogue (Betyár) – The hero of Hungarian folk romanticism, an outlaw, who either wanted to escape his draft into the Austrian army, or was an escapee from justice, living in the forests or in desolate places. He robbed strangers and the rich, but never touched the poor, and often cooperated with the Hungarian population against Austrian oppressors. The first half of the 19th century was considered to be the golden age of the betyárvilág (era of the highwayman). The legendary outlaws of this era were Bandi Angyal (around 1760-1806), Jóska Sobri (1809-1837), Sándor Rózsa (1813-1878), Márton Vidróczky (1837-1873) and Jóska Savanyú (1845-1907). – B: 0942, 1231, T: 3240.→Highwaymen's Time; Rózsa, Sándor, Sobri, Jóska; Savanyú, Jóska; Vidróczky, Márton.

Rogue's Song – A kind of Hungarian folk song, very different from the regular folk songs. It is rooted in the period of fighting by the insurrectionist armies against the Habsburg oppression at the turn of the 17th century. These songs were known as “wandering songs”. They are simple and spontaneous, and quite distinct from the so-called bandits’ and robbers’ songs. – B: 0942, T: 3240.

Roheim, Géza (Budapest, 12 September 1891 - New York, 7 June 1953) – Ethnographer, and psychoanalyst. He studied at the universities of Budapest, Berlin and Leipzig, and obtained his doctorate from the University of Budapest in 1914. He became acquainted with Freud’s ideas at the German universities. In 1914 he received a PhD in Geography from the University in Budapest. Roheim worked in the Ethnographic Department of the Hungarian National Museum in Budapest. Between 1928 and 1931 he traveled on an ethnographic collecting assignments to French Somalia, Central Australia, Melanesia, and among the Yuman Native Americans of Arizona. Due to economic hardships in Hungary, he emigrated to the United States in 1938. Until 1939, Géza Roheim worked at the Worcester State Hospital and, in 1939, opened a private practice in New York. In 1947 he collected artifacts from Navajo Indians. His research of Hungarian folk beliefs and customs broadened into a thorough ethnographic examination of the topic, which was published in book form in 1925. Roheim emphasized studying a folk culture by looking at its numerous historical layers. In his publications, he analyzed authentic ethnographic materials from a psychoanalytic perspective. His books include The Origin of the Term Magical Power (A varázserő fogalmának eredete) (1914); Animism, Magic and the Divine King (1930); The Eternal Ones of Dream (New York) (1945), in French (Paris) (1970); Psychoanalysis and Anthropology (New York) (1950); Hungarian Shamanism: Psychoanalysis and the Social Sciences. Vols. i,ii,iii (1951); Hungarian and Vogul Mythology (1954); Origine et fonction de la culture (Paris) (1972), and Psychoanalytical Analysis of Primitive Cultures (Primitív kultúrák pszichoanalitikus vizsgálata) (Budapest) (1984). Géza Roheim was awarded a Freud Prize in 1921. – B: 0883, 1031, 1672, T: 7688. → Gallus, Sándor; Vászolyi, Erik.

Rökk, Marika (Marie Karoline) (Cairo, 3 November 1913 - 16 May 2004, Baden bei Wien) – Actress, singer, dancer. She was Egyptian born, of Hungarian descent. She started her career as a child actress. From 1922 she appeared on the stage as a professional dancer, not only in Budapest, but also with the company of the Hoffmann girls on the stages of the Moulin Rouge of Paris and, from the late 1920s, on Broadway. In the 1930s, on the stages of Europe (London, Paris), she scored successes as a soubrette. In 1931, she was the prima donna of the Royal Orpheum. In 1932 she became a member of the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház) in Budapest. In 1933 and 1935 she was a member of the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), in 1936 that of the Artist Theater (Művész Színház). For a few years she worked abroad, mainly in Germany, as an actress in films and operettas. Towards the end of World War II, she visited Hungary, playing repeatedly as a guest artist in the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pécs (where she played also in the early 1930s). Leaving Hungary again, she appeared regularly on German stages. She performed again at the Operetta Theater of Budapest in 1992. Her trademark was her Hungarian accent. She was a famous world star. Her roles include Katja in Imre (Emeric) Kálmán’s Countess Maritza (Marica Grófnő); Tamara in M. Eisemann’s The Star of the Circus (A cirkusz csillaga), and Sally in L. Lajtai’s: Old Orpheum (A régi Orfeum). There are 37 feature films to her credit including Why Sailors Leave Home (1930); Train of Ghosts (Kisértetek vonata) (1933); Karussel (1937); Wild Rose (Vadrózsa) (1939); Die Tzardasfürstin (Gypsy Princess – Csárdáskirálynő) (1951), and Der letzte Walzer (The Last Waltz) (1978). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Rolla, János (John) (Kötelek, 30 September 1944 - ) – Violinist. He received his qualification from the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest in 1969, where he was a student of Dénes Kovács. In the same year, he won third prize in the violin competition of the Hungarian Radio. Since 1963 he has been leader of the Franz Liszt Chamber Orchestra. He became especially known in concert halls of the world as a chamber musician. His partners included Maurice André, Jean-Pierre Rampal, Alexander Schneider, Henryk Szeryng and Tamás Vásáry. He was the founder of the Art Days of Zemplén. For his efforts to acquaint people in Hungary and abroad with Hungarian musical culture, he was presented with the title of Merited Artist in 1981, and awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1985. In the category of the arts, the French government gave him the distinction of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1991, and he also received the Middle Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 1994. He was elected honorary freeman of Sárospatak in 1996. – B: 1031, 1742, T: 7456.→Kovács, Dénes; Vásáry, Tamás.

Romanian Atrocities in Transylvania (Erdély, Transylvania, now in Romania) – In the 14th century, there were only 389 Vlach (Romanian) villages in Transylvania. The Vlach population in 1700 was only 250,000; by 1784 it had increased to 787,000; by 2002 the Romanian population had reached some 5.5 million. As the Vlach/Romanian population grew in Transylvania by immigration, so grew their intolerance against the Hungarian population; and when the circumstances were favorable, the intolerance turned into killings and massacres. For example: on 7 November 1784, freebooters Horea, Closka and Crisan (Hóra, Kloska, Krisán) massacred the Hungarian population of Verespatak (now Roșia Montană), Abrudbánya (now Ambrutus), Offenbánya (now Baia de Arieș) and many other places. The uprising lasted for 6 weeks against Hungarians. On 9 May 1849, Iancu's Vlachs ransacked and burned down the same town and killed almost its entire Hungarian population. On the night of 8 January 1849, Romanian insurgents, under the command of Axente Sever, raided the city of Nagyenyed, massacred about 700-800 Hungarians, and burned down the large library of the Reformed College. In 1848, in the village of Kisenyed, 40 Hungarian families fled into the fortified church and defended it for three days against Romanian insurgents. After negotiations, the Hungarians were granted free withdrawal. Despite the agreement, the Romanians attacked the villagers and massacred 175 people, including older people and children. During World War II, on 26 September 1944, at Szárazajta, the Soviet army was followed by Maniu's Romanian free troops, led by Captain Gavril Oltenau. In the schoolyard, using an axe, they beheaded 13 Hungarians, including a woman. Many were beaten and the village ransacked; 72 people were taken to the concentration camp of Földvár (with some 3000 Hungarian detainees) of only four returned. During the past 80 years of Romanian rule, since the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate of 1920 annexed Transylvania to Romania, Hungarians in Transylvania have been discriminated against, oppressed and regarded as second-class citizens by the Roman authorities. While in 1910, Hungarians made up 32 % of the Transylvanian population, under constant pressure their number decreased to under 20 % in 2002. – B: 0891, 0890, T: 7103.→Atrocities against Hungarians.

Rombauer, János (John) (Lőcse, now Levoca, Slovakia, 28 May 1782 - Eperjes, now Prešov, Slovakia, 12 February 1849) – Painter, a representative of the Hungarian Biedermeier painting style. He studied in Pest as a student of János Jakab (John James) Stunder. In 1806, a Russian Count took him to St. Petersburg, where he painted a number of portraits as court artist. The level of his paintings varies somewhat, but his knowledge was improved by copying the paintings of old masters at the Hermitage during 1810. In 1824, he returned to Hungary and worked at Eperjes until his death. His works include the portraits of Ignác Feszler (1824) and Ferenc Kazinczy (1825). He painted the altarpiece Christ and Doubting Thomas in 1834. At Eperjes, a commemorative exhibition of his works was held in 1963-1964 (cf. in Művészet, May 1964). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Rómer, Flóris (originally Ferenc) (Francis) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 12 April 1815 - Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 18 March 1889) – Archeologist and art historian. He entered the Benedictine Monastic Order in 1830, and obtained a PhD in Philosophy. He taught at the Győr Secondary School from 1839, and became a High School teacher in Pozsony from 1845. He took part in the 1848-1849 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, earned the rank of captain, and was sentenced to 8 years of prison during the Bach Era. Upon his release in 1854, he taught and tutored at several locations. He moved to Pest, left the monastic order, and became clerk of manuscripts at the Academy of Sciences, then a High School principal from 1862, and University Lecturer from 1868. He was appointed Canon at Nagyvárad in 1877. He edited the Győr History and Archeology booklets together with Károly Ráth between 1861 and 1868, and edited the Archeology Bulletin from 1868 to 1873, in which many of his studies appeared. It is to his credit that the VIIIth International Conference of Archeologists and Anthropologists was held at Budapest in 1876. Rómer was one of the founders in the field of scientific archeology. He was a founding member of the Hungarian Historic Society. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him to an ordinary membership in 1864. Many of his works appeared in book form, including Bakony (1860); Art Guide (Művészeti kalauz) (1866); The Old Pest (A régi Pest) (1873), and Ancient Wallpaintings in Hungary (Régi falképek Magyarországon) (1874). His unpublished diary of many volumes, illustrated with his own drawings, is a valuable resource in the areas of Hungarian archeology, art history, and preservation of heritage buildings. – B: 0883, 1144, 1257, T: 7675.→Ráth, Károly; Lipp, Vilmos; Bach Era.

Romhányi, József (Joseph) (Nagytétény, 8 March 1921- Budapest 7 May 1983) – Poet, novelist, artist, writer. He graduated from the High School of Music in Budapest and became the dramaturge of the Hungarian Radio in 1951. From 1957, he was the artistic director of the National Concert and Stage Management. 1960-1962 he was the artistic director of the entertainment department of Hungarian Television. From 1962 to the end of his life, he was the dramaturge of the Musical Department of the Radio. He was the lyricist of many classical compositions, such as Sugár Rezső's Hunyady Oratorio (1953); Horusitzky Zoltán's Báthory Zsigmond (1960) and Ránki György's opera Muzsikus Péter

(1963). He translated opera librettos, such as Gluck's Orpheus, Rossini's Le Comte Ory. He also wrote the script of numerous operetta and cabaret shows. He was the scriptwriter of popular cartoons including Mézga Aladár's Strange Adventures (Mézga Aladár különös kalandjai); The Next Please – Dr. Bubo. His wide popularity was due to the Hungarian translation of the dialogues in the William Hanna and Joseph Barbara cartoon The Flintstones (Frédi és Béni a két kőkorszaki). He translated the script of T.S. Eliot, on which the musical Cats (A macskák) was then cast. Lasting creations of his were also numerous books for children such as Tales of Misi (Misi meséi) (1969); Story of the Mouse's Tail (Mese az egér farkinácjáról) poem-story (1966, 1969); Bömbi (1967, 1999); Ten Little Piglets (Tíz pici coca) poem-story with pictures, (1969); Mézga Aladár's Strange Adventures, fiction novel (1974, 2000); Doctor Bubo, humoristic, sketch-volume with drawings by Béla Ternovssky, (1979, and 7 editions); Donkey's Ear (Szamárfül) satirical poems, (1983, and 7 editions), and The Family Mézga (A Mézga család) (2003). He was a gifted poet, a sought out and popular lyricist, literary translator and "artist emeritus" (1983). – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, 1257, T: 7679

Romsics, Ignác (Ignatius) (Homokmégy, 30 March 1951 - ) – Historian. His higher studies were taken at the Teachers' Training Institute, Szeged, where he read Hungarian Literature and History (1970-1974); later, he studied History at the University of Budapest (1974-1976). Between 1974 and 1977 he was an archivist of County Bács-Kiskun, Kecskemét. From 1977 to 1985 he worked at the Institute of Historical Science of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1983 he obtained a Ph.D. in History. From 1986 to 1991 he was Deputy Director at the Hungarology Institute. He taught at the Department of Modern Hungarian History of the University of Budapest from 1991 to 1997; in the same year he became professor at the University. He taught as a guest professor at the Hungarian Institute of Indiana University, USA, intermittently from 1993 to 1998. In 1999 he was on a Széchenyi Scholarship. Since 1999, he has been General Secretary of the Hungarian Historical Society and, since 1991, he has been a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His books include Count István (Stephen) Bethlen's Political Career 1901-1920 (Gróf Bethlen István politikai pályaképe 1901-1921) (1987); István (Stephen) Bethlen. A Political Biography (Bethlen István. Politikai életrajz) (1991); American Peace Plans for Post-war Hungary. ed., (Amerikai béketervek a háború utáni Magyarországról) (1992); Our Place and Destiny in the Danube Basin (Helyünk és sorsunk a Duna-medencében) (1996); The Trianon Peace Treaty (A trianoni békeszerződés) (2001), and The 1947 Peace Treaty of Paris (Az 1947-es párizsi békeszerződés) (2006). He is a recipient the Pro Renovanda Cultura Hungariae (1999), the Academy Prize (2000), and the Széchenyi Prize (2005). – B: 0874, 0878, 1031, T: 7103.

Romzsa, Tódor György (Theodore George) (Nagybocskó, now Veliky Bichkiv, Carpatho-Ukraine, 14 April 1911 - Munkács, now Mukacheve, Carpatho-Ukraine, 1 November 1947) – Greek-Catholic cleric of the Munkács Diocese in Sub-Carpathia (Part of historic Hungary before 1920 and between 1939 and 1944 allotted to and part of Czechoslovakia between 1920 and 1939 attached to the USSR in 1945, now Ukraine). After attending secondary school in Huszt (now Khust, Ukraine), from 1930 on he studied Philosophy and Theology at the Gregorian University in Rome. He returned to Munkács in 1935. After military service in the Czechoslovak army and having been a parish priest for some years, in 1939 he became spiritual leader and lecturer in philosophy at the Ungvár Seminar (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine). In 1944 he was consecrated Bishop of the Munkács Diocese. After the Russian Army occupied Sub-Carpathia in 1944 and the territory was attached to the Soviet Union, Romzsa refused to sever the relations with the Vatican and urged the priests of the diocese to resist the pressure to join the Russian Orthodox Church. N.S. Khrushchev, then Secretary of the Ukrainian Communist Party, asked for and received permission from Stalin to liquidate him. A team of the MGB (Ministry of State Security), under the command of Pavel Sudoplatov, made plans to kill him. As he did not die in an arranged road accident and the subsequent beating, and was recovering at the Munkács hospital, an agent, planted there as a nurse, forced him to inhale a lethal drug. He was buried in the crypt of the Ungvár Cathedral that was later turned into an Orthodox Church. In November 1997, at the Russicum Collegium in Rome, an international scientific conference was organized to commemorate the 50th anniversary of his death. – B: 1053, T: 7683.

Róna, Emy (Budapest, 20 February 1904 - Budapest, 17 December 1988) – Graphic artist and painter. She studied under the direction of Manó Vesztróczy at the Industrial Drawing School (Iparrajziskola), Budapest. She started her creative career in 1921, when she joined the editorial board of the journal, Theatrical Life (Színházi Élet). Her name became known with her illustrations of the storybook of Piroska Tábori, entitled Dani Dugó (Dani Cork). Between 1926 and 1928 she worked in Paris as a contributor for a satirical paper, and pursued further studies at the Colarossi School and the Julian College. She also organized an exhibition in the Galeria Zodiaque, together with her sister, Klára. Emy Róna provided illustrations for the poems of Ady, Baudelaire and Verlaine. From 1928 she again lived in Budapest, working for newspapers, journals, e.g. Pest Diary (Pesti Napló), Theater Life (Színházi Élet), and the book publisher, Atheneum. She studied fresco painting in Rome under Ferruccio Ferrazzi from 1934 to 1936. She won a prize (gold diploma) for graphic art at the New York World Exhibition. Her specialization was illustrating fairy tales. She illustrated almost 400 books, the best-known being John the Brave (János vitéz); Oz, the Miracle of Miracles (Óz, a csodák csodája); The Finest Fables from the Thousand and one Nights (Az ezeregyéjszaka legszebb meséi) (in multiple variations); Andersen's and Grimm's Fables; Fawn of the Old Auntie (Öreg néne őzikéje); Bambi, etc., and she also made drawings of Nudes (1970). She held group and individual exhibitions at the National Salon (1937, 1940), Budapest; Dürer Hall (1966) Zürich (1975), Ervin Szabó Library of Budapest, and the Salgótarján School Gallery. She was made an Artist of Merit (1983) and received the "For Children" Prize in 1987. – B: 0883, 1922, T: 7456. → Tábori Piroska; Ady, Endre.

Róna, Magda (Magdalene) (Budapest, 21 May 1902 - Budapest, 21 May 1989) - Dancer, choreographer, stage manager and educationalist. She studied calisthenics in Alice Madzsar's school, where she soon became a teacher, and, after Alice Madzsar's death, Director of her Teachers' School. As a teacher and choreographer, she joined the avant-garde theatrical movements in the late 1920s, and took part in the theatrical experiments of her husband, Ödön (Edmund) Palasovszky. During 1945 and 1946, together with her husband, she was artistic director of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), and later that of the Workers' Theater (Dolgozók Színháza). Her expressive, chamber-style compositions and numerous calisthenic dramas represent an individual aspect of modern Hungarian dancing and choreography. Her works and solos include Bimini (1928); Gothics (Gótika) (1930), and Walls (Falak) in A. Madzsar's Shackles (Bilincsek). She promoted surrealist and avant-garde theatrical movements. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456. → Madzsar, Alice; Palasovszky, Ödön.

Róna, Viktor (Budapest, 17 August 1936 - Budapest, 15 January 2004) – Dancer, choreographer and ballet director. He studied at the school of the Opera House of Budapest, and later continued his studies at the State Ballet Institute. He received his diploma in 1954; but as early as 1950, he became a member of the Opera House and, from 1957, its solo dancer. He spent one year in Leningrad in the master class of A. Puskin. He was one of the outstanding classic dancers of his generation, equally successful in danseur noble roles as in demi-character roles. He appeared as a guest artist on almost every ballet-stage of the world, and was the partner of several world-famous ballerinas in the 1960s: Margo Fonteyn, L. Daydé, G. Samtsova. Between 1974 and 1980 he was the leading soloist and ballet master of the Norwegian National Ballet. From 1980 to 1982 he was leading ballet master of the Paris Opera, the citadel of classic ballet. He was a regular teacher of the school of R. Hightower in Cannes. He was a guest professor in Tokyo, Bonn, Stockholm and Berlin. His roles include Desire in Petipa's The Sleeping Beauty (Csipkerózsika); Orion in L. Seregi's Sylvia; Alber in Lavroskij's Giselle; Prince in Vojnone's The Nutcracker (Diótörő); title role in L. Seregi's The Wooden Prince; James in Bourneville's Les Sylphides; title role in L. Seregi's Spartacus, and Orion in L. Seregi's Sylvia. He received the Kossuth Prize (1965), the Ferenc Liszt Prize (1963), the title of Merited Artist (1972), the title of Outstanding Artist (1976), and the White Rose of Knighthood of Finland. – B: 1445, 1105, T: 7456, 7103.

Rónai, András (Andrew, Avram) (Römer) (Budapest, 14 September 1932 - Tel-Aviv, Israel, 4 April 2005) – Actor, director. He began to act at the age of 10 in a children's theater and in a film. In 1949 he emigrated to Israel, learned Hebrew and, in 1950, he played in the military theater. From 1953 to 1963 he was a member of the Ohel Theater. In 1963 he became a member of the Israel National Theater, and later became its life member. For many years, he devoted his summer holidays to the Hungarian-language theater, where he played the leading role in F. Molnár's The Play's the Thing (Játék a kastélyban). In 1958 he played in German as a guest artist in the Theater der Courage of Vienna. He was Director at the theater of Békéscsaba in Hungary in 1990, and that of Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, Romania) in 1992. He appeared in several hundred radio plays on the Israeli Radio, which also featured Hungarian authors. He played leading roles in numerous TV plays on Israeli TV, and appeared in some 40 feature films, including Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában). His roles include George in Steinbeck's Of Mice and Men (Egerek és emberek), Dandy/Ficsúr in Molnár's Liliom, later adapted into the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical play Carousel; Dorante in Molière's Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme; Falstaff in Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor (A windsori víg nők); Pandarus in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida; King Philip in F. Dürrenmatt's King John (János király). His translations include F. Kishont's Marriage Certificate (Házasságlevél) (1990) and Chanoch Levin's The Labor of Life (Mesterség az élet) (1991). He was awarded the Nordau Prize (1963), the Herzel Prize (1972), State Prize (1973), Klatshkyn Prize (1990), and the Pro Cultura Hungarica Prize (1992). – B: 1445, 1105, T: 7456, 7103.

Rónai, Pál (Paulo) (Budapest 13 April 1907 - Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 1 December 1992) – Literary translator, linguist. From 1925 to 1932 he studied at the University of Budapest and at the University of Paris, Sorbonne. He became a French-Latin-Italian teacher and he obtained his Ph.D. in 1930. Between 1934 and 1940 he taught Italian and French in Budapest. He translated short stories, essays and books from different languages into Hungarian. In 1940 he traveled to Rio de Janeiro on a Brazilian scholarship. He remained in Brazil. Until his retirement in 1978, he taught in a high school in Rio de Janeiro. At the same time he was a guest professor at universities, a radio editor, a publishers' lector, and a literary translator. He transplanted into Portuguese the works of Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi, Frigyes (Frederick) Karinthy, Ferenc (Francis) Molnár, among others, and writings of Brazilian authors into Hungarian. In addition he translated German, French and English authors. He edited several anthologies. He established the Association of Brazilian Translators. His major works include Balzac e a Comedia Humana (Rio de Janeiro-Porto-Allegre-Sao Paulo, 1947, 1957); Antologia do Conto húngaro, which he translated and edited (Sao Paulo-Bahia, 1958, 1967, Rio de Janeiro, 1975); Encontros com o Brasil (Rio de Janeiro, 1958); Contos húngaros, anthology, edited (ibid., 1964); Antibabel ou O problema das linguas universais (Sao Paulo, 1970); Latin Smile (Latin mosoly) selected studies (Budapest, 1980); Dicionário Universal Nova Fronteira de Citações (Rio de Janeiro, 1985); Witches' Saturday (Boszorkányszombat) anthology of Brazilian short stories (Budapest, 1985). In 1977 he was given the Translators' Commemorative Medal from the Hungarian PEN Centre, and in 1981 the International Translators' Award. – B: 1672, 1257, T: 7684. → Kosztolányi, Dezső; Karinthy, Ferenc; Molnár, Ferenc.

Rónai, Zoltán (Újpest, 21 November 1924 - ) – Writer, newspaper reporter, literary translator. He went abroad at the age of 20. Since 1950 he has been living in Madrid. He completed his university studies in Salzburg and Madrid; he took his diploma exam in the Faculty of Humanities of the University of Madrid. Between 1958 and 1968 he worked as a translator in the Spanish Ministry of Education. Between 1959 and 1968 he was an associate of the Hungarian channel of the Spanish National Radio, and its head from 1968 to 1975. From 1975 until his retirement in 1989, he was a translator for the Spanish radio-television (RTVE). Since 1964 (under the name of Zoltán Ónódi) he has been a reporter in Madrid for the Radio Free Europe. His writings have appeared since 1948 in Western European Hungarian periodicals and papers; among them the Hungaria; The Sunday of Catholic Hungarians (Katolikus magyarok vasárnapja); Canadian Hungarians (Kanadai Magyarság); The Hungarian News of Vienna (Bécsi Magyar Híradó); New Europe (Új Európa); Hungarian News of South America (Délamerikai Magyar Hírlap); New Horizon (Új Látóhatár), and Catholic View (Katolikus Szemle). He produced works regularly for Spanish periodicals and papers. He also published studies, translations and literary essays in Spanish anthologies and encyclopedias. He translated into Spanish, poetry, short stories, essays from Hungarian and German. His major work is Teatro hungaro contemporaneo, an anthology, which he edited and translated (Madrid, 1969). – B: 1672, T: 7684.

Rónay, György (George) (Budapest, 8 October 1913 - Budapest, 8 April 1978) – Poet, writer, translator of literary works, literary historian. His higher studies were completed at the University of Budapest, receiving a Degree in Education from the Hungarian and French Department of the Arts Faculty. In 1949 he obtained his Ph.D. in French Literature and Hungarian History from the University of Szeged. The “third generation” themes of the literary paper West (Nyugat) are featured in his early poems. In 1937 he started to work for the Révai Publishers as a literary adviser; in 1943 he was one of the founders and editors of the journal Silver Age (Ezüstkor). He did not publish between 1947 and 1956. His essays embrace almost the whole Hungarian literature. From 1947 to 1949 he was a Member of Parliament. From 1945 he was a member of the editorial board of the periodical, Vigilia, and from 1969 until his death, he was its Editor-in-Chief. Ronay’s life work was mainly inspired by the example of the great poet and writer Mihály Babits, and also by the greatest figures of the Neo-Catholic literature, especially Paul Claudel. His themes are from contemporary reality, family and progress, sin and punishment, faith and reason. His novel Crossroad (Keresztút) (1937) proved controversial. He was attracted to French literature; he wrote a volume of translations: Modern French Lyric Poetry (Modern francia líra) (1939). In his poems, the voice of the man gazing at the beautiful aspects of the world and feeling responsibility for them became strongest; in his novels, the dominant element was self-examination. He often touched on the problems of World War II. As an essayist, he mainly painted portraits of the writers of the great generation of the West (Nyugat), while, as a critic for more than a decade, he regularly surveyed the most important works and most characteristic aspirations of contemporary Hungarian literature in his The Reader’s Diary (Az olvasó naplója). His work as a translator covered almost all the languages of Europe; outstanding are the so-called analytical pieces of translation. His essays, dealing with the theoretical problems of translation, are considered significant. As a thinker he worked for the creation of co-existence between Christianity and Marxism, gaining some international recognition for it. Rónay’s works include poems: Withering of the Tulips (A tulipánok elhervadása) (1931); Death of the Nabob (A nábob halála) (1959); The Garden (A kert) posthumous (1979); Barn (Szérű) collected poems (1981). Novels: Trees and Fruits (Fák és gyümölcsök) (1941); Evening Express (Esti gyors) (1963), and Panther and Goat (Párduc és Gödölye) (1978). Short stories: The Happiness of Man (Az ember boldogsága) (1959); The Shackles of Love (A szeretet bilincsei) (1965). Studies: Between Petőfi and Ady (Petőfi és Ady között) (1958); The Great Generation (A nagy nemzedék) (1971); Faith and Humanism (Hit és humanizmus) (1979), and translations: The Poetry of the French Renaissance (A francia reneszánsz költészete) (1956). He was awarded the Baumgarten Prize (1942) and the Attila József Prize (1967). – B: 0878, 0877, 0883, T: 7456.

Rónay, Jácint (Hyacinth) (Székesfehérvár, 13 May 1814 - Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 17 April 1889) – Cleric and natural scientist. He joined the Benedictine Monastic Order, and taught in Győr from 1840. He obtained a Ph.D. in Philosophy at Pest in 1842. He was an army chaplain in the 1848-1849 War of Independence, clerical commissioner of the government in the County of Győr, and later served in the army in the field. After the crushing of the war, he went underground beyond the River Tisza but later was forced to emigrate. He settled in London, where he worked in the British Museum, supplementing his income with private tutoring and writing for the newspapers. At one time, he was the tutor of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth's children. Rónay returned to Hungary in 1866. He edited the Bulletin of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1867 to 1871, and became a Member of Parliament in 1867, and later an ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He left the monastery in 1871 and was appointed to teach Hungarian history to Crown Prince Rudolph in 1871-1872. Rónay became Chief Prebendary of Pozsony in 1872, and was ordained a bishop in 1873. Between 1875 and 1883 he was the tutor of Archduchess Maria Valeria. He administered the sacrament of Extreme Unction to the dying Ferenc (Francis) Deák in 1876. He lived in Pozsony from 1883. While still in London, he studied the Behistun Inscriptions together with H. Rawlinson, an amateur archeologist-linguist. According to their conclusions, those were Scythian linguistic relics. They lectured at the London Antiquarians' Society on 7 March 1850 and published the results of their research work in the 1851 under the title Archeologia of Miscellaneous Tracts Relating to Antiquity. Rónay was a progressive-thinking natural scientist, and in his book Evolvement of Races, expounded Darwinism. Earlier, he was also involved in literary works during his theological studies at Pannonhalma, and wrote several plays in the style of Károly (Charles) Kisfaludy. He took part in the establishment of the Hungarian Historical Society. He published his valuable memoirs in 8 volumes, ten copies each, entitled Fragments of a Diary. He willed his voluminous library to the Toldy Society of Pozsony. – B: 0883, 1020, T: 7675.→Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Deák, Ferenc; Kisfaludy, Károly; Kossuth, Lajos.

Ronyecz, Mária (Kunágota, 25 June 1944 - Budapest, 2 November 1989) – Actress. She received a diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1967, and already attracted notice with her dramatic power and deep voice so suited for interpreting tragedies. With her diploma, she was contracted to the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pécs. From 1970 to 1982 she was a member of the National Theater in Budapest. She scored great success in the Castle Theater (Várszínház) with the monodrama of István (Stephen) Kocsis's in the role of Árva Bethlen Kata (Orphaned Kata Bethlen). From 1977 she was a demonstrator with József Gáti at the Academy of Dramatic Art. In 1982 she transferred her contract to the newly opened, independent József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház) in Budapest. In her last role, she acted the dying woman in the play Wedding at Canett (Canetti esküvő). In a TV presentation, she gave an individual interpretation of Gertrudis in József Katona's Bánk bán. Her roles included Eszter Rhédey in Zsigmond Móricz' Gentlemen's Fun (Úri muri); Mirigy in Mihály Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Regan in Shakespeare's King Lear, and Jenny in Brecht's The Threepenny Opera (Koldusopera). There are 18 feature films to her credit including The Best Age for Men (A legjobb férfikor) (1971); Sign-language (Jelbeszéd) (1975); Time Stands Still (Megáll az idő) (1982), and Basic Formula (Alapképlet) (1988). She was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1977) – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Bethlen, Countess Kata Árva.

Roosevelt, Franklin Delano (Hyde Park, New York, 30 January 1882 - Warm Springs, Georgia, 12 April 1945) – President of the United States. He studied Law at Harvard University and Columbia Law School. Following the example of his relative, President Theodore Roosevelt, he entered public service. He won election to the New York Senate in 1910. He was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and Democratic nominee for Vice President in 1920. In 1921 he was stricken with poliomyelitis, but fought courageously to regain the use of his legs. In 1928 he became Governor of New York. He was elected President four times between 1932 and 1945; the first time in 1932, amidst severe economic problems. He announced the New Deal program to curb unemployment and the recovery of the economy, and introduced reform in the banking system. At the outbreak of World War II in 1939, he kept America out of the war; but after France fell in 1940, he secretly helped England's involvement in the war with materials, including 50 warships. When the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor on 7 December 1941, the USA entered the war. He prepared plans after the war, including the setting up of the United Nations Organization. However, he died shortly before the war ended. Roosevelt was one of the central figures of the 20th century. As to Hungary, his administration prepared three plans for the post-war period. The first envisioned the creation of an independent Transylvanian state, similar to the independent state of the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries. The second was to return to Hungary some Western Transylvanian territories in the Partium, with a majority of ethnic Hungarian population. The third option was to consider giving autonomy to the Szeklerland. None of his plans was realized because of the Soviet occupation of Hungary. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Hitler, Adolf; Ciano, Count Geleazzo; Churchill, Sir Winston; Stalin, Joseph.

Rooster – A bird, in an abstract sense: symbol of the rising sun, marking the beginning of existence, birth of spiritual light, i.e., the symbol of resurrection, as the rooster's crow first greets the sun in the early hours of the morning. It was also the symbol of alertness, awakening, and the measuring of time. In the Old Testament, the rooster was associated with God-given understanding, yet in Christian symbolism, the rooster, because of his sexual passion and tyrannical nature, became the symbol of various sins. However, the rooster, placed on the top of church steeples revived again the ancient meaning of the symbol: that of the sun, of life, and signified the resurrection of Christ. Finally, the rooster also became the embodiment of manhood and bravado. The Hungarian pagan priests (shamans) wore rooster feathers in their hair, which guided the departing shaman (táltos) on his way to the other world. This tradition still lives on in the borica dance, where rooster feathers decorate the head of the masked kuka dancers. The popular belief is not only associated with heavenly fire (Sun), but with the incense-filled, destructive fire (the red rooster). It was also one of the symbols of the ancient Sun cult. The fire-honoring Hungarians in the tenth century spared the church of St. Gallen, because they feared its patron saint, Saint Gall, who was associated with fire. – B: 1136, 1020, T: 7682.→Táltos; Shaman.

Ropog, József (Joseph) (Szádalmás, now Jablonov nad Turnou, Slovakia, 16 April 1944 - ) – Actor. His primary education was in Szádalmás, with Hungarian as the language of instruction (1950-1958); he completed high school in the Agricultural and Technical School of Szepesi (now Moldava nad Bodvou, Slovakia) (1958-1962). In 1962-1963 he had a job as a skilled worker in a tractor and machine plant. From 1963 he was an actor in the Hungarian Regional Theater of Komárom (Komárno, Magyar Területi Színház – MATESZ, now in Slovakia) and, from 1990 on, he was an actor in the Jókai Theatre (Jókai Színház) of Komárom until his retirement in 2007. Also, from 1990 he was a member of the Czechoslovak Chamber of Actors. In 1981, Ropog participated in a theatrical competition at Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia). His acting roles include Tibald in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (MATESZ production, 1968); Vronszkij in L. Tolstoy's Anna Karenina (MATESZ, 1970); Ádám in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) (MATESZ, 1973); Sganarelle in Molière's School for Husbands (Férjek iskolája) (in the Jókai Theatre of Békéscsaba, 1978); Angelo in U. Betti's Crime on Goat Island (Bűntény a Kecskeszigeten) (studio presentation, 1986, also produced on Radio Budapest, 1987). From 1964 he appeared in regular character roles on the Hungarian broadcast of Radio Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and later in Slovak and Hungarian feature films. An essay by him appeared in the paper Sunday New Word (Vasárnapi Új Szó) on 30 December 1979. He won the prize for best interpretation of the role Repán in Peter Kováčik's drama, The Guesthouse "To the Green Tree" (1981). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Rosas, Antal (Anthony) (Pécs, 31 December 1791 - Vienna, 31 May 1855) – Physician. He began his medical studies at the University of Pest in 1805, continued at the University of Vienna in 1811, obtaining his Medical Degree there in 1814, and his qualification as a surgeon in 1816, when he became junior physician at the Allgemeine Krankenhaus in Vienna, assistant in Beer's eye-clinic. In 1819 he was invited to a Chair at Padua, where he also established an Eye Clinic. From 1821 he was Professor of Ophthalmology at the University of Vienna. He was a member of several societies abroad. His works include Handbuch der theoretischen und praktischen Augenheilkunde (1830) and Lehre von den Augenkrankheiten (1834). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rösler, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest 27 November 1904 - Budapest 13 December 1963) – Opera singer (tenor). He learned to play the violin at the National School of Music, Budapest (Nemzeti Zenede), and voice from László Géza. He further trained his voice in Italy, with the guidance of vocal masters Giuseppe De Luca and Edoardo Garbin. He started his musical career as a baritone. The role of Alfred from Verdi's La Traviata was, however, presented by him as a tenor in 1926. From 1926 to the end of his life, he remained a member of the Opera House, Budapest; from 1953 to his death, he was a professor at the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. For decades, he was almost the exclusive tenor of the Oratorio in Hungary. He was one of the best singers of Mozart, and an inspired performer of new Hungarian music. At the premiere of Batók's Cantata Profana, he sang the tenor role. His international performances also proved to be a great success. He participated in the Salzburg Music Festivals in 1935 and 1936. For several years, he performed at the Maggio Musicale in Florence. His main roles include Tamino in Mozart's The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Ferrando in Mozart's Così fan tutte (Mind így csinálja); Belmonte in Mozart's Il Seraglio (Szöktetés a szerájból); Don Ottavio in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Florestan in Beethoven's Fidelio; Walther in Wagner's Tannhäuser; Erik in Wagner's The Flying Dutchman (A bolygó Hollandi); Loge in Wagner's Das Rheingold (A Rajna kincse); Almaviva in Rossini's Barber of Seville (A Sevillai borbély); Pinkerton in Puccini's Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony); Sumsykin in Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov; Lensky in Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin; King László V in Erkel's Hunyadi László; the title role in Gounod's Faust, and Alfred and Eisenstein in J. Strauss' Die Fledermaus (A denevér). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1955), the titles of Merited Artist (1951), and Outstanding Artist (1954). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7679. → Bartók, Béla.

Rost, Andrea (Budapest, 15 June 1952 - ) – Opera-singer (soprano). She studied singing at the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and was a student of Zsolt Bende (1983-1989). After finishing her studies, she made her opera debut as Juliette in Gounod's Romeo and Juliette. From 1989 to 1991 she was a singer at the Budapest Opera. Soon she became a solo artist at the Wiener Staatsoper, singing such Mozart roles as Zerlina, Rosina, Adina and Susanna. Then she added Donizetti's Lucia in Lucia di Lammermoor to her repertoire, and made a very successful debut at La Scala as Gilda in Rigoletto (1994). She also sang Pamina and Violetta there. At the Salzburg Festival, she participated in a new production of Richard Strauss' Die Frau ohne Schatten under the baton of Sir George Solti; L'Incoronazione di Poppea (The Coronation of Poppea) by Monteverdi under Nikolaus Harnencourt, and La Traviata, under Riccardo Muti. Andrea Rost was heard at the Paris Opera as Susanna, Lucia, and also Antonia in Les Contes d'Hoffmann (The Tales of Hoffmann), and Gilda in Verdi's Rigoletto; at Covent Garden, London, she made her debut as Susanna in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro, and also sang Violetta and the title role in Rossini's Elisabetta. In the USA she sang Zerlina, Gilda, Violetta and Giulietta in Chicago, and in 1996 made her Metropolitan Opera debut as Adina in L'Elisir d'Amore by Donizetti, where she was also heard as Gilda and Lucia. She sang Offenbach's Antonia in the Washington Opera, and in Los Angeles Mozart's Pamina. She has also appeared at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden as Susanna and Violetta, and at the Paris Opera as Susanna, Lucia and Gilda. She was invited by Riccardo Muti to sing Gilda in a new production of Rigoletto at La Scala, Milan. She also appeared in a number of leading roles in the Opera Houses of Zurich, Cologne, Helsinki, Covent Garden, Hollywood and elsewhere. She is also successful as an Oratorio singer, and made a series of recordings with the Sony Co. She was the winner of the Mirjam Helin singing contest, Helsinki (1989), and also a recipient of the Franz Liszt Prize (1997), and the title of Merited Artist (1999). – B: 0874, 1445, T: 7103. → Solti, Sir George.

He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1950, where he worked for the No. 1 Pediatric Clinic from 1950 to 1960. In 1955-1956 he was in charge of the pediatric ward of the Hungarian Hospital in Korea; from 1960 to 1977 he ran the infants' section of No. 2 Women's Clinic of the University of Budapest.. He specialized in the pathology of infants and the problems of jaundice. He was Secretary of the Hungarian Pediatric Society from 1966 to 1977. In 1968 he founded the journal Pediatrater, and was its secretary until his passing. His works include Public Health ABC (Egészségügyi ABC) (1966) and The Provision of the Endangered Fetus and the Infant (A veszélyeztetett magzat és újszülött ellátása) (1973). In 1968 he received the Markusovsky Prize from the journal Medical Weekly (Orvosi hetilap) – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rosty, Pál (Paul) (Pest, 29 November 1833 - Dunapentele, 7 December 1874) – Globetrotter and travelogue writer. He participated in the 1848-1849 Hungarian Revolution and War of Independence as a soldier in the Károlyi Cavalry Regiment; after the surrender he escaped to Munich, then he moved to Paris. In Munich he worked in natural sciences, mainly in chemistry; while in Paris, he acquired the knowledge of the photographic processes, utilizing his chemical know-how; then after preparatory geographic and ethnographic studies, he traveled to America in 1856. He traveled across Texas, Mexico, Canada, and the islands of Central America. He returned to Hungary in 1859, where he published his travel experiences in an illustrated book. For a long time his book was registered as one of the “most beautiful deluxe editions”, for which he was elected Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. On the strength of his extensive worldwide knowledge, Rosty related his travel experiences by providing exact professional geological, botanical, zoological and ethnographic descriptions supported by his artistic photographs. The complete Spanish translation of his book was published in 1968. In Venezuela and other parts of South America he is regarded as one of the foremost geographical globetrotters, whose contribution was vital in the process of discovering the Continent. He was regarded internationally as one of the best landscape photographers, whose photographs, taken during his travels in Havana, in the Orinoco region and in Mexico, are kept in the National Széchényi Library in Budapest. – B: 0883, 1614, T: 7659.→Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Róth, Miksa (Maximilian) (Pest, 26 December 1865 - Budapest, 14 June 1944) – Glass painter. He had his training in his father’s workshop. Later he went on a study trip abroad, in the course of which he became acquainted with glass painting. After his return to Hungary, he successfully manufactured glass of special kinds and colors, thereby raising Hungarian glass painting to an internationally recognized level. His workshop was in operation from 1885. His early work reflected the spirit of historicism, while his later work that of secessionism. Róth was also engaged in decorative painting. For instance, he prepared the glass panels and windows of the St. Stephen Basilica, the Parliament Building, the Academy of Music, the National Bank, etc. in Budapest. With the collaboration of Aladár Körösfői Kriesch and Sándor (Alexander) Nagy, he prepared the mosaics of the Mental Hospital of Lipótmező of Budapest, and those of the Palace of Culture in Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mures, in Transylvania, Romania). His autobiography is entitled Recollections of a Glass Painting Artist (Egy üvegfestőművész emlékei) (1943). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Rothermere, Lord Harold Sidney Harmsworth, first Viscount Rothermere (26 April 1868 - 29 November 1941) – British press magnate and politician. He grew up in a family of 14 children. Together with his older brother (Lord Northcliffe) he founded the Daily Mail in 1896, and the Daily Mirror in 1903. With these two newspapers, the brothers were regarded as the pioneers of popular journalism. He supported the policy of the British government in World War I, and in 1917 he was appointed Minister of Aviation by Lloyd George. By 1926, the number of printed copies of the Daily Mail reached 2 million. With his property of 25 million pounds sterling, he was counted as the 3rd richest man in England. Lord Rothermere paid his first visit to Hungary in 1927 and, after that, he became the chief supporter of the Hungarian revision. His historically famous article of 21 June 1927, entitled Hungary's Place Under the Sun appeared in the Daily Mail. This drew the attention of the world to the situation of Hungary, dismembered by the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920). He donated a statue to Debrecen, called the Statue of Hungary's Grief (Magyar fájdalom szobra) that lacks an arm and a leg, symbolizing truncated Hungary. With public contributions, his admirers had a fountain built in Budapest, placed on Ervin Szabó Square, still viewable there. In his political views, he moved increasingly toward nationalism and, with Lord Beaverbrook, he established the United Empire Party. In his newspapers, he supported reconciliation with the German Third Reich and later, he also supported an alliance with it. Still later, he became the most influential supporter of the British Union of Fascists. He gave support with $10,000 to György (George) Endresz and Sándor (Alexander) Magyar in their trans-oceanic flight, when they flew across the Atlantic Ocean in record time in 1931. - B: 1031, T: 7456.→Endresz, György; Revisionist Movement in Hungary; Irredentist Sculptures.

Rothman, Ármin (Nagyceceb, now Žbince, Slovakia, 30 October 1860 - Budapest, 19 July 1932) – Dentist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Pest in 1883. Starting his practice in 1884, he worked in the Dental Institute there, assisting József Árkövy. In 1891 he became an honorary lecturer at the Department of Pathology and Dental Therapy. From 1887 to 1932 he was a senior physician of the Polyclinic at the University of Budapest, and President of the Hungarian Dental Association from 1926 to 1930. His fields of research are dental histology and the pathology of dental pulp. His works include Patho-Histologie der Zahnpulpa und Wurzelhaut (1889) and Handbook of Medical Saving (with others) (Az orvosi mentés kézikönyve (1891)). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rottenbiller, Lipót (Leopold) (Pest, 11 November 1806 - Pest, 17 November 1870) – Lawyer and civil servant. His father was a guild-master of fishermen. He studied Law and Arts at the University of Pest. From 1826, he was a clerk of the Court of Appeals. From 1828, he worked as an attorney. From 1843, he was deputy mayor of the city of Pest, from 1848 its Lord Mayor. During the period of Habsburg absolutism, after the defeat of the 1848-1849 Hungarian Revolution and War of Independence from Austria, he was removed from his office. In 1861, he was again Lord Mayor but, after a couple of months, he was forced to resign and only after the provisional arrangement (transition from absolutism to constitutional rule) in 1865 did he take up his office again. In these stirring and eventful times he held his own admirably. In 1864, he founded the Industrial and Savings Bank (Iparbank és Takarékpénztár). He started the project of filling-up with earth the low-lying areas of the Capital, and the development of the metropolitan waterworks. In 1867, he had to withdraw from civil service because of illness. József (Joseph) Borsos painted his portrait (1848). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Borsos, József.

Rotter, Lajos (Lewis) (Budapest, 18 July 1901 - Budapest, 19 October 1983) – Airplane designer and pilot, engineer. In 1923, he obtained his Mechanical Engineering Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic. During his university studies, he won an international competition: the firm Orell Füssli of Zürich invited applications for the technical solution of airplanes of a helicopter system. In 1921, he was one of the founding members of the Sports Airplane Association of the Budapest Polytechnic. In 1923, with his classmate Gyula (Julius) Feigl, he formed the airplane construction company Feigl-Rotter (FEIRO). First, they completed a high-wing passenger monoplane with closed cabin and four seats, called FEIRO DARU, and later a two-winged training plane, the FEIRO DONGO; but neither of them could be marketed. Thereafter, Rotter took part in the serial manufacture of French airplane engines, working on a license at the Weiss Manfred Airplane and Motor Works. In 1933, he completed his glider with a wingspan of 20 m, the Karakán, by means of which he beat all the Hungarian glider records. In 1934, he was flying continuously for 24 hours above Budapest. In 1936, he was invited to the Berlin Olympics, and was encouraged to build a racing glider: this became the 20-m wing span Nemere, by means of which Rotter flew from Berlin to Kiel, to the scene of the Olympic aquatic sports; the distance of 336 km became the world record of target long-distance flying. Rotter played an active role till the end of his life in the further development of the Hungarian amateur sports-plane flying; in addition, he was also engaged in other engineering tasks. Between 1936 and 1947, he worked at the Danubia Arms and Ammunitions Works, later at the Orion Radio and Electrical Company, where he became works manager. – B: 2086, T: 7456. → Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation.

Rotunda – Rotundas were built mainly in the Central European countries of Austria, Hungary, and Poland in the 10-13th centuries. They were small churches with circular ground plans. Their interior was 5-7 m. in diameter with a half circle sanctuary on their eastern side. There are some restored round churches in Hungary (Öskü, Sárospatak, Veszprém); others are in ruins, or were incorporated as sanctuaries into new church constructions, e.g.: Hidegség, Karcsa. They are referred to as “round churches” in medieval documents. Sometimes the church gave the name to the surrounding settlement, like in case of Kerekegyháza. – B: 1020, T: 7663.

Rozanich, István (Stephen) (Rozgonyi) (Csáktornya, County Zala, 28 August 1912 - Houston, Texas, USA, 5 November 1984) – Journalist, writer, poet. He graduated from High School in Székesfehérvár and started work as a journalist. From 1934 he was an associate of the paper New Fehérvár (Új Fehérvár). He moved to the West in 1945. He lived in Germany, France, and Belgium. In 1949 he emigrated to Venezuela. After a variety of jobs, he became the cashier of a company, and thereafter he established a poultry farm. In 1956 he established the mimeographed Caribbean Paper (Caribi Újság) in Venezuela, which he edited till the end of his life. He wrote poetry, novels and short stories. He published, among others, in the National Guard (Nemzetőr); the Hungarian Friends of Books (Magyar Könyvbarátok), and in the Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap) of Buenos Aires. His works are: The Miracle of the Bell (A harangszó csodája); Bread and Wine (Kenyér és bor) poems (Buenos Aires) (1974), and From the Other Shore (A másik partról) selected poems (Buenos Aires) (1981). – B: 1672, T: 7684.→Venezuela, Hungarians in.

Rózsa, Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 18 April 1907 - Los Angeles, CA, USA, 27 July 1995) – Composer. His mother was a classical pianist, who learned piano from a student of Franz Liszt. Through his father, he became acquainted with Hungarian folk music. At the age 5, he studied violin, later viola and piano. By age 8, he was performing in public and composing. He studied music between 1926 and 1929 at the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Music Academy of Budapest, and continued studying in Leipzig under Hermann Grabner, a former student of Max Reger, where he obtained his diplomas. From 1932 he lived in Paris where, at the suggestion of Marcel Dupré, he composed classical musical works, presented by conductors such as Charles Munch, Karl Böhm, George (György) Solti, Eugene (Jenő) Omandy and Leonard Bernstein. In 1934, his friend, Arthur Honegger, introduced Rózsa to film music. In 1935 he moved to London and was invited by Alexander

Korda to write film music. Rózsa soon joined Korda's London Films. In 1939 he went with Korda to America, where he settled, and produced a long list of film scores. In 1945 he was invited to a professorship at the University of Southern California, and in 1955 was elected President of the Screen Composers Association Guild. The influence of Hungarian folk music is noticeable in his art. His more than 37 orchestral works include Hungarian Serenade for Small Orchestra; Theme, Variations and Finale; Notturmo Ungharese; Three Hungarian Sketches; Violin Concerto; Cello Concerto; Piano Concerto; Ben-Hur Suite, and the Quo Vadis Suite. There are more than 100 great film scores to his credit, including The Thief of Baghdad (1940); The Jungle Book (1947); Madame Bovary (1949); Quo Vadis? (1951); Ben-Hur (1959); King of Kings (1961); the Golden Voyage of Sinbad (1974), and the Last Embrace (1979). During his lifetime he received three Oscars for his film music, among other prizes. Miklós Rózsa is best known for his film-scores. – B: 1197, 0883, 1031, T: 7684, 7103.→Korda, Sir Alexander; Solti, Sir George; Ormándy, Eugene.

Rózsa, Norbert (Dombóvár, 9 February 1972 - ) – Breast-stroke swimmer. He entered his first swimming competition at the age of seven, and became member of the National Team in 1989, when he was 17. He represented Hungary in three successive Summer Olympic Games. He first received a silver medal at the 1992 Summer Olympic Games in Barcelona for 100 m and 200 m breaststroke swimming. Four years later, at the 1996 Summer Olympic Games in Atlanta, he became Olympic Champion in the 200 m. He was successful in World Championships, as well as in European Championships. He was one of the most successful Hungarian breaststroke swimmers. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Rózsa Sándor (Alexander) (Szeged, 16 July 1813 - Szamosújvár, now Gherla, Romania, 22 November 1878) – Leader of highwaymen on the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld). Originally he was a shepherd, who was imprisoned for eighteen months in 1836 because of stock robbery. After he escaped from prison, he returned to the *Puszt*a (steppe) around the town of Szeged. On his arrest and imprisonment in 1845, he pleaded for clemency, but his request was declined. On 13 October 1848, the National Defense Committee granted him amnesty and, with his irregular troops, he fought on the southern front during the 1848-1849 War of Independence. Since these troops proved to be lacking in discipline, resorting even to robberies and atrocities, the Hungarian high command disbanded this troop-formation. Rózsa did not stop carrying out robberies even after the end of the War of Independence. In 1853, a prize of 10,000 silver forints (blood money) was set on his head. Four years later he was captured and sentenced to life imprisonment; however, by that time he had become a legendary figure, whose release from prison was petitioned by hundreds in 1868; in the same year he was freed by an amnesty. He volunteered to become a gendarme, but was refused. He returned to life on remote farms. In 1868 he attacked a train bound for Ókanizsa and, during this incident, he received a serious shot in one of his knees. Early in 1869, to eliminate the threat of robberies by outlaws, a commissary was sent out, led by Count Gedeon Ráday. He managed to ambush Rózsa, who was again sentenced to life imprisonment. He died in the prison of Szamosújvár. The legends circulating about him describe him as fearless but chivalrous, and the friend of the poor. The eminent Hungarian novelist Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz wrote a novel about him in 1941. There were earlier works as well featuring Rózsa, such as by Miklós (Nicholas) Fekete: Famous Highwayman of the Great Plain, Sándor Rózsa (Híres alföldi betyár Rózsa Sándor) (1902), and by Gyula (Julius) Krúdy: Sándor Rózsa, the Star of the Highwaymen (Rózsa Sándor, a betyárok csillaga) (1923). One of several works that also appeared in English, featuring Rózsa, was E. J. Hobsbawm: Primitive rebels (1959). – B: 0883, 1078, T: 7456.→Móricz, Zsigmond; Krúdy, Gyula; Highwaymen's Time; Sobri, Jóska; Savanyú, Jóska; Vidróczki, Márton; Zöld, Marci.

Rózsafi, Mátyás (Matthew) (Komárom 29 November 1828 - New York, NY, USA, 6 May 1893) – He wanted to become a priest; but at the outbreak of the 1848-1849 Hungarian Revolution and War of Independence, he enlisted in the army. He participated in the defense of the Komárom fort and, during its siege he established the daily newspaper Komárom Herald (Komáromi Értesítő) with artillery colonel József (Joseph) Makk. He was against the surrender of the fort. After the surrender of Komárom (1849), he went to Turkey and stayed with Lajos (Louis) Kossuth. At the end of 1851 he went to Pest, Vienna, Paris, and finally to London, where he married. In 1858 he emigrated to the United States and settled in Peekskill, NY, where he lived as a farmer. He participated in the North American civil war and served as a colonel in the Federal Army. After the war he moved to Washington, D.C. and worked in the Bureau of Statistics. Later he opened a patent office, and was a staff member of the paper American National Guard (Amerikai Nemzetőr). He started to write a large Hungarian-related work, but it remained unfinished. – B: 0907, 0942, T: 7644.→Makk, József; Kossuth, Lajos; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Rózsahegyi, Aladár (Nagykálló, 4 August 1855 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 27 January 1896) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1878. He was a demonstrator in the Institute of Public Health from 1877. In 1878, as a member of a European Medical Committee, he studied on site the great bubonic plague in Russia. In 1881 he was an honorary lecturer in industrial health; from 1883 he was a professor of Public Health at the Medical School of the University of Kolozsvár; and Director of the Institute of Public Health. He conducted research on epidemics, industrial health, settlement hygiene and industrial illnesses. He was the first to demonstrate the bactericidal effect of aniline dyes, and was among the first to apply chemotherapy. He died of tuberculosis at the age of 41. His main work was On Bacteria (A baktériumokról) (1887). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rózsahegyi, Kálmán (Coloman) (Endréd, 6 October 1873 - Budapest, 27 August 1961) – Actor. After completing his studies at the School of Dramatic Art, Budapest, he started his acting career with Sándor (Alexander) Dobó's company in 1892; later he worked in Debrecen and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Transylvania, Romania). In 1898 he was contracted to the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), Budapest, where he played operetta roles. In 1900 he became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, where he was a life member. In 1926 he was guest artist in the USA; after 1935 he appeared in various private theaters. He founded a School of Dramatic Art, which trained many notable artists. Rózsahegyi was an actor with a wide scope; his roles covered every aspect from burlesque to sentimental humor. In the molding of his roles, he was Ede Újházi's student. On the Hungarian stage, he was one of the best representatives of realistic acting. He was a popular actor. His roles include in Shakespeare's works: Weaver in A Midsummer-Night's Dream; Grave-digger in Hamlet; Fool in King Lear; Olivia's fool in Twelfth Night (Vízkereszt); Young and Old Gobbo in The Merchant of Venice (A velencei kalmár). Also Scapin in Molière's The Schemings of Scapin (Les Fourberies de Scapin – Scapin furfangjai); Master Jacob in Molière's The Miser (A fősvény); Gábor Göre in G. Gárdonyi's The Wine (A bor), and Luka in Gorkij's Night Refuge (Éjjeli menedékhely). His film roles include The Gypsy (A cigány) (1925); The New Landlord (Az új földesúr) (1935); Europe Does Not Answer (Európa nem válaszol) (1941); State Department Store (Állami Áruház) (1952); Liliomfi (1954); Budapest Spring (Budapesti tavasz) (1955), and What a Night (Micsoda éjszaka) (1958). He received the title of Outstanding Artist (1960). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Újházi, Ede.

Rózsás, János (John) (Budapest, 6 August 1926 - ) – Author, historian, writer of memorials. He completed his junior high school studies in Budapest and Nagykanizsa. In 1945 he became a prisoner of the Soviet Army. He was sentenced to ten years in a labor camp in the Soviet Union, where he became acquainted with Alexander Solzhenitsyn. He was released after the death of Stalin in 1953, and returned to Hungary. Rózsás wrote extensively about the life in labor camps. He collected and published the names of Hungarians in these camps, the living and the dead, all contained in the Gulag Lexicon (2000). His other works include Bitter Youth vols. i-ii (Keserű ifjúság I-II) (1982) edited by Á. Tóbis, with a foreword by Alexander Solzhenitsyn; Nurse Dusja (Duszja nővér) (1995); Dream of the Prisoner (A rab álma) (1997), and Remembering the Red Hell (Emkékezés a vörös pokolra) (1998). He is regarded as the "Hungarian Solzhenitsyn". He was a recipient, among other awards, the Knight's Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2001). He was made an honorary citizen of Nagykanizsa. – B: 0878, 0877, T: 7103.

Rózsavölgyi, Márk (Marcus) (Rosenthal) (Balassagyarmat, 1789 - Pest, 23 January 1848) – Violinist and composer. He was a descendant of a merchant family. He studied the violin in Prague, later in Pest. From 1813 to 1833 he lived mostly in Baja, and from the 850s, again in Pest, but gave concerts all over Hungary. For a while he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. His composition National Sounds of Joy (Nemzeti örömhangok) was written for the opening of the theater. In his old age, he was left to himself and died destitute. The great poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi laments his death in his poem On Rózsavölgyi's Death (Rózsavölgyi halálára); there was a warm friendship between them for many years. Rózsavölgyi was one of the last composers representing the recruiting dance verbunkos, which he rendered polished and formed into a round-dance and the so-called “Wreath” (Koszorú), all social dances, transforming them into chamber ensembles. He wrote the first czardas dances from 1835 on, e.g. Sarolta czárdás (1846). Most of his dances were published independently or in the series Hungarian Songs from County Veszprém (Magyar noták Veszprém vármegyéből). His music for the stage follows Italian models, e.g.: The Treasure Seekers of Visegrád (Visegrádi kincskereső), accompaniment for the stage play Cap of Illyés (Illyés Sapkája) (1839). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Petőfi, Sándor; Dance (Hungarian).

Rozsnyai, Dávid (Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mures, Transylvania, Romania, 1641 - Fogaras, now Fagaras, Transylvania, Romania, 4 March 1718) – Interpreter of the Turkish language, memorialist. In 1663 he joined the Turkish war as the secretary of his superior, Gábor Haller, then settled first in Belgrade, then in Adrianople, and finally in Istanbul, where he studied the Turkish language and writing in 1665. Between 1668 and 1670 he was an interpreter at the Porta; from 1671 to 1687 was Turkish interpreter in the Chancellery of Apafi in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). In the meantime, he accompanied the delegates several times to the Porta or to the Turkish camp. Between 1705 and 1710 he was in the service of Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II, as a Turkish interpreter. He was the first Hungarian adapter of the famous Indic collection of animal fables of ancient Sanskrit literature, the Panchatantra (Horologium Turcicum et speculum continuum de rebus in orbe externis et internis), published by Sándor Szilágyi (1867) and Lajos Dézsi (1926). He reported about the events of his age in his autobiography entitled Dávid Rozsnyai, the Last Turkish Scholar's Historical Remnants (Rozsnyay Dávid, az utolsó török deák, történeti maradványai), published by Sándor Szilágyi (1867). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Rozsnyai, Mátyás (Matthew) (Szabadszállás, 14 May 1831 - Arad, 5 August 1895) – Pharmacist and chemist. In 1859, while still a young man, he wrote the first Hungarian book on chess entitled The Elements of Chess. He won the prize of the Congress of the Hungarian Physicians and Nature Examiners for his work on eliminating the bitter taste of quinine that impeded its usage among children. He did not patent his invention but surrendered it free of charge to public health. The preparation, which was named after him, became widespread throughout the world. His works include Studien über die quantitative chemische Analyse der China-Alcaloide...(Arad, 1878), and Four New Inventions (Négy új találmány) (Arad, 1878). Pharmacies in Abony and Nyíregyháza bear his name; his statue is in his place of birth, and a memorial contest was named after him.

Rozsnyai, Zoltán (Budapest 29 January 1926 - San Diego, Calif. US, 10 September 10 1990) – Conductor and music director. He was a graduate of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he studied under Zoltán Kodály, Béla Bartók and Ernst von Dohnányi, among others. Already a concert pianist at the age of 10, he was one of the youngest students ever accepted by the Academy. At 24, he was appointed Music Director of the Debrecen Opera Company.

In 1954, he became permanent conductor of the Hungarian National Philharmonia Concert Organization. In May 1956, he was awarded a prize at the International Conductor's Competition in Rome, which resulted in an immediate invitation to return to Rome as a guest conductor. The same year, after the Revolution, Rozsnyai left Budapest for Vienna, where he founded the famous Philharmonia Hungarica Orchestra, composed of outstanding exiled musicians. With tireless effort, he built the Philharmonia Hungarica into one of the most outstanding concert orchestras in Europe. Under the auspices of the Rockefeller and Ford Foundations, Rozsnyai brought the Philharmonia Hungarica to America in 1959 for its first United States tour. They earned high critical acclaim everywhere. Individual guest invitations followed. The Orchestra was later taken over by conductor Antal Doráti.

In 1961, Rozsnyai became a United States resident. In 1962, he became Assistant Conductor of the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein. In 1963, he was named Music Director of the Cleveland Philharmonic, and the next year, Music Director of the Utica Symphony Orchestra.

In 1967, Rozsnyai was selected over 130 candidates for the position of Music Director of the San Diego Symphony. Under his direction, the Orchestra also made its first professional recording on the Vox label. This recording was added to Zoltán Rozsnyai's many record credits, which include Columbia Masterworks, as well as distinguished European labels. In 1982, he founded the Knoxville Symphony on the occasion of the World's Fair; and in 1987, he founded the International Orchestra of San Diego. This Orchestra consisted of a select group of young musicians who had performed with symphony orchestras and musical ensembles all over the world.

The Orchestra, being close to Mexico, performed on both sides of the border to unusual acclaim. He merged his International Orchestra of San Diego with the Pro-Musica Ensenada Choir, and the Convivium Musicum Choir of Mexico, and produced Mozart's Requiem, Vivaldi's Gloria, and made a recording of Haydn's Seasons. He worked with the International University Orchestra of San Diego until September 10, 1990, when he died from a heart attack. – B&T: 7617.→Philharmonia Hungarica; Doráti, Antal; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Dohnányi, von Ernst.

Rozsos, István (1) (Stephen) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 14 September 1922 - Budapest, 17 February 1963) – Actor. He started his career in Szeged, but he soon appeared at the City Theater (Városi Színház), during 1945-1946 in the Madách Theater and Magyar Theater (Madách és Magyar Színház) in 1946, and in the Artist Theater (Művész Színház) in 1947, in Budapest. He was a member of the Madách Theater between 1947 and 1950 and the Youth Theater (Ifjúsági Színház) from 1950 to 1953. He acted at the Comedy Stage (Vidám Színpad) from 1955 to 1960 and in the Jókai Theater (Jókai Színház) from 1960 to 1963. He made his characters memorable with his acrid humor and peculiar personality. His roles include Adolf in Szigligeti's Liliomfi; Weisz in F. Molnár - S. Török's The Paul Street Boys (A Pál utcai fiúk), and Porfir in Dostoevsky-Baty's Crime and Punishment (Bűn és bűnhődés). There are more than 25 feature films to his credit including Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában) (1947); The Amazing Forward (A csodacsatár) (1956); Upward on the Slope (Felfelé a lejtőn) (1959); Sleepless Years (Álmatlan évek) (1959); Sunshine on the Ice (Napfény a jégen) (1961), and Wonderpest (Csudapest) (1962). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize in 1959 and 1962. – B: 1445, 1504, T: 7456.

Rozsos, István (2) (Stephen) (Budapest, 6 July 1944 - ) – Opera singer (tenor). He studied at the Franz (Ferenc) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under the direction of Mrs. F. Révhegyi (1963-1969). Thereafter he was contracted to the Opera House, Budapest where, still as a student, made his debut in the opera of R. Strauss' Ariadne auf Naxos (Ariadne Naxos szigetén) in the role of Scaramuccio. As member of the Opera House, he sang some 70 roles. From 1984 to 1986 he was guest artist at the Staatliche Bühne Osnabrück, Germany, and later, he was a member of the Deutsche Oper am Rhein, Düsseldorf. He was a guest singer in operas and oratorios in a number of countries, including Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Japan, Russia, Poland, Belgium, the Netherlands, Finland, Romania and Greece. Rozsos took part in the recordings of numerous Haydn operas. By means of his multi-faceted acting and musical-technical erudition, he was one of the most eminent character tenors of the Opera House in Budapest. Apart from singing the classical repertoire, he played an important role in introducing contemporary works. His roles include Verdi's Don Carlos; David in Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (A nürnbergi mesterdalnokok); Loge in Wagner's Das Rheingold (A Rajna kincse); Goro in Puccini's Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony); Basilio in Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Painter in Alban Berg's Lulu, and the French King in P. Kacsóh's John the Brave (János vitéz). He also acted in feature films, such as Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában) (1947); Battle in Peacetime (Ütközet békében) (1957); What a Night (Micsoda éjszaka) (1958), and Cheating Peter (Csalóka Péter) (1979). He was awarded the Mihály Székely Plaque, the Ferenc Liszt Prize, and the Bartók-Pásztory Prize. – B: 1445, 1742, T: 7456, 1703.

Rubik's Cube – A game of logic, a mechanical puzzle, invented by Ernő (Ernest) Rubik Jr. in 1974. Originally called the "Magic Cube" by the inventor, it was renamed "Rubik's Cube" by Ideal Toy in 1980. The six-sided cube has faceplates, each divided into 9 equal multicolored squares. Each of the tiny cubes can be rotated along its axis resulting in more than 43 billion (thousand million) color combinations. The aim is to re-align the squares to the desired position, that is, to the original solid color of each faceplate. Within a short time the cube became extremely popular worldwide. Clubs and associations were founded and tournaments and world championships were organized bearing its name. It won the 1980 German Game of the Year. So far more than 300,000,000 Rubik's cubes have been sold worldwide. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7675. → Rubik, Ernő Jr; Gömböc.

Rubik, Ernő Jr. (Earnest) (Budapest, 13 July 1944 - ) – Architect, industrial designer, inventor. His father was an airplane-constructor. He completed his degree course in architecture at the Budapest Polytechnic between 1962 and 1967. He also attended the School of Applied Art, Budapest. Thereafter, he worked as architectural designer from 1968 to 1975. He became first an adjunct, then an assistant, and finally a full professor of architecture at the School of Applied Art, Budapest. In 1982 and 1983 he was Editor-in-Chief for the magazine ...And the Game (...És a Játék). From 1983 he managed the Rubik Studio, and he also set up three foundations. In 1985 he created the Magic Squares (Bűvös kockák). From 1990 he was President of the Hungarian Engineering Academy. He published several popular educational books. Rubik's name is associated with several of his logic games: the world-famous Rubik's Cube (Bűvös kocka), (1975), the Snake (Kígyó) (1977), and the Magic Squares (Bűvös négyzetek) (1985). Later he invented, among others, the Magic Domino (Bűvös Dominó), the Rubik's Clock (Rubik óra), the Rubik's Tangle (Rubik gubanc), and in 2009, the Rubik's 360 (Rubik gömb). He was featured in the news media worldwide after the appearance of the Cube, which is available in various sizes. Clubs, associations, tournaments and world-championships were organized for the fans of the Cube; it appeared in the Museum of Modern Art in New York. He was a recipient of the State Prize in 1983, the Dénes Gábor Prize in 1995 and the Kossuth Prize in 2007. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7675, 7456.→Rubik's Cube; Gömböc.

Rudas, László (Ladislav) (Sárvár, 21 February 1885 - Budapest, 29 April 1950) – Politician, Marxist philosopher, writer and journalist. He joined the Hungarian Workers' Movement at the age of 18. He became a journalist for the newspaper People's Word (Népszava) (1905). He was one of the founding members and leader of the Hungarian Communist Party, and Editor-in-Chief of the Red Journal (Vörös Újság). After the fall of the short-lived Communist rule in Hungary in 1919, he moved to Austria, then to Germany, later to Italy, and finally to the Soviet Union in 1922. There, he was a teacher at the Lenin School and taught philosophy, history and political economy at universities. After World War II, he returned to Hungary and became Director of the Communist Party's Central School, later Rector of the University of Economics, Budapest. He was one of the leading theoreticians of the Communist Party. His works include translation of Lenin's book entitled State and Revolution (Állam és Forradalom) (1919); Dialectic Materialism and Social Democracy (A dialektikus materializmus és szociáldemokrácia) (in German 1943); Materialistic World View (Materialista világnézet) (1947); Theory and Practice (Elmélet és gyakorlat) (1947), and Dialectic Materialism and Communism (Dialektikus materializmus és kommunizmus), study-collection (1956). He was an ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1949. – B: 0883, 0895, T: 7103.

Rudimenta – Its full title is: “Rudimenta priscae hunnorum linguae brevibus questionibus ac responcionibus comprehensa opera et studio” (Records of the Huns' Ancient Language Summarized in Brief Questions and Answers). An experimental textbook (“rudiments”) written by János (John) Telegdi in 1598 for the purpose of popularizing runic writing. In his work he wrote about the Hun/Szekler lettering, as did the Hungarian chroniclers, who also mentioned a Szekler runic writing. After the work of János (John) Sylvester, Telegdi's work may be regarded as the second significant Hungarian-language textbook.

Hungarian runic writing continued in two forms at the end of the 16th century: (1) The first type of epigraphical writing material was inscribed on hardwood, stone or metal, and the writing implements were a pointed tool or a chisel. The use of hard material forced an economy of space and the carver endeavored to write many expressions using abbreviated signs. (2) The second type of paleographical writing material was soft paper or leather, or something similar, and the implements were a pen or a brush. Since there was no need to abbreviate, the rigid, closed form of the signs loosened up and became calligraphic.

The paleographic runic writing activity of the intelligentsia commenced with János Telegdi's Rudimenta in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Although Telegdi in his work referred to the abbreviation system of Hungarian runic writing, which he illustrated by using some vowel abbreviations, his own two writing specimens did not include any abbreviations.

The first complete Telegdi-type runic alphabet was published at Oxford in 1678, as a two-volume work by George Hickes: Antiquae litteraturae septentrionalis libri duo. – B: 1174, 1257, 1020, T: 7669. → Telegdi, János; Sylvester, János; Hungarian Runic Script; Marosvásárhely Manuscript's Szekler Alphabet; Forrai, Sándor; Sebestyén, Gyula (2); Linear Writing; New Trends in the Research of Hungarian Ancient History.

Rudnai, Ottó (Reinhardt) (Lovrin, 15 km south of the River Maros in former County Torontál, now in Romania, 14 February 1917 - Budapest, 6 September 1986) – Physician. He received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1943; then was a correspondent of the National Public Health Institute. He became an assistant lecturer in 1944, a scientific correspondent in the Institute from 1950, and Head of Department from 1960. Between 1970 and 1975 he was Head of the Microbiological Section and, from 1975 to 1985, its deputy director. From 1955 he headed the hygiene-training course. He obtained additional qualification in officer training in 1948, and also in public health and sport-specialist (1959) qualification; in 1960 he obtained a Master's Degree in Medicine. From 1974 he was Professor of Public Health and Epidemics. He dealt mainly with dysentery, poliomyelitis, salmonellosis and morbilli. He was Secretary, then President of the Hungarian Hygienics Society. His works include Practice in the Fight Against Infectious Diseases (A fertőző betegségek elleni küzdelem gyakorlata) (1954); Dysentery (Dysentéria) (1955) and Epidemiology (Járványtan) (1961). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rudnay, Gyula (Julius) (Pelsőc, now Plešivec, Slovakia, 9 January 1878 - Budapest, 4 January 1956) – Painter. He was a student of Simon Hollósy in Munich and Nagybánya, while he also went on a study trip. In 1903 he furthered his training in Paris. In his younger years, he turned to realism and the study of the common man. Later, he wanted to create a peculiar, national style in his art, so he moved to Hódmezővásárhely in 1905; the paintings he created there were exhibited, together with János (John) Pásztor's works, in Budapest in 1910. These were melancholy, poetic scenes and penetrating, deep compositions with human figures, such as Woman with Lace Kerchief (Csipkekendő asszony), Banquet (Lakoma). The war elicited some monumental, dramatic compositions from him; he painted a long string of pictures showing people in flight, e.g. Fugitives (Menekülők). Rudnay painted some large-scale compositions for the University of Debrecen, such as Recruiting (Toborzó) and Csokonai Among the Students (Csokonai a diákok között). During these years he worked at Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia). In 1918 he organized his first one-man exhibition in the Ernst Museum in Budapest with great success. From 1919 he produced more and more paintings at Bábonya (now Băbiu, in County Kolozs, Transylvania, Romania). With his powerful creations, Rudnay emerged as one of the foremost artists of the early 20th century. In 1922 he was appointed lecturer at the School of Arts, Budapest. He also dealt in etchings at the time. He appeared in other one-man shows and took part in exhibitions abroad as well, earning a gold medal in Vienna and Genoa, and the Grand Prix and silver medal at the World Fair in Barcelona in 1929. In 1925, he held one-man shows in Milano and Zurich. It was in 1926 that he prepared for the Parliament Building in Budapest the tapestry depicting Árpád's Tribal Assembly at Pusztaszer. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1949, and honored with the title Outstanding Artist. An Agricultural School and College in Tab bear his name. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Hollósy, Simon; Tornyai, János; Pásztor, János.

Rudolf Lake, Kenya, East Africa – A land-locked saline lake of ca. 8500 km<sup>2</sup> area without drainage on the border area of the country, situated in the East-African Rift Valley. Still active volcanoes surround its barren shoreline. Count Sámuel Teleki discovered the lake for Europeans on 6 March 1888, and named it after his friend, Crown Prince Rudolf. The original name of the lake in the Turkana language is “Basso narok”, meaning Black Lake. Subsequent to Teleki’s visit, in 1896, Bottego worked here, and later other investigators as well. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7456.

Ruffy Péter (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 28 July 1914 - Budapest, 28 December 1993) – Journalist, writer. He began his career in Transylvania in the mid-1930s. He completed his “apprenticeship” with two dailies in Nagyvárad: Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) and Transylvanian Papers (Erdélyi Lapok) during 1933-1934; after 1935 he ~~was~~ became Editor of Brasso Papers (Brassói Lapok), which happened to be in its golden age. This paper, following a policy of open mentality in Transylvanian’s public life between the two World Wars, offered a good opportunity for the beginner journalist to publish constantly. His reports and interviews provided authentic information about the conditions of the Hungarians in Transylvania: they became documents of the age. The paper ceased publication because the Romanian Iron Guard destroyed its printing press in the late 1940s. Ruffy moved to Hungary, joined the liberal paper, News (Újság) in Budapest, and worked on its editorial staff until the German occupation of Hungary on 19 March 1944, when the paper was banned. Ruffy was witness to exceptional historical moments, like the transfer of a small area at Oroszvár (now Rusovce) to Czechoslovakia following the Treaty of Paris in 1947; or the inner-political events at Szabadszentkirály in County Baranya in 1954. His report from here was important not only because it proves how untenable was the Communist system in produce delivery to the state in the 1950s, but also because he was able to put in words his ars politica: Writing is not for entertainment; it is a means of announcing the truth. Indeed, Ruffy’s whole journalistic output is permeated by the passionate desire to “announce the truth”. After the end of World War II in 1945, he was perhaps the most versatile writer of reports on the rebuilding of Hungary: he managed to appear always, where “something happened”. His reports were published in seven volumes, including From Göcsej to Hegyalja (Göcsejtől Hegyaljáig)(1955); Portraits and Stories (Arcképek és történetek) (1962), and On Untrodden Paths (Úttalan utakon) (1974). His travelogues include Warsaw at Dawn (Varsói hajnal), on Travel-adventures in Poland (1961); Picture Book of Szeged (Szegedi képeskönyv) (1964), and The Heart of our Country, Budapest (Hazánk szíve, Budapest) (1968). His other writings include Our Exiled Literary Records (Bujdosó nyelvemlékeink) (1977); The Book of our Crown (Koronánk könyve) (1981), and Hungarian Relics, Hungarian Symbols, history (1988). Ruffy was a cultivator of journalistic work with a literary standard, who was also a reporter and publicist. His work was rewarded with the Pulitzer Memorial Prize (1991), and the Sándor Petőfi Prize (posthumously) (1994). – B: 0878, 1031; T: 7456.→Vienna Award II.

Ruga (? - ? 434) – Hun ruler, son of Balambér, leader of the Huns who attacked Europe, co-ruler with Oktar over the Huns in the Carpathian Basin. His brother was Mundzuk (Bendeguz), Attila’s father. – B: 1230, 1020, T: 7658.→Attila.

Ruha, István (Stephen) (Nagykároly, now Carei, Transylvania, in Romania, 17 August 1931 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj Napoca, Transylvania, 28 September 2004) – Violin virtuoso. He studied at the Academy of Music of Kolozsvár under Ferenc (Francis) Balogh. In the course of his career, he was concertmaster at the Hungarian Opera House of Kolozsvár from 1949 to 1957. He was first violinist (1957-1958) and soloist (from 1958) at the Kolozsvár Philharmonic, and from 1963 to 2003 professor at the Gheorghe Dima Academy of Music where, in 2003, he was appointed consulting professor. In 1962 he founded and was leader of the Napoca (later Transylvania) String Quartet; the Quartet gave concerts in a number of countries in addition to Romania, until 1988. Ruha was an outstanding representative of the Transylvanian violin school. He had an international name, traveling widely, but he played mostly in his two native countries, Transylvania and Hungary. Among the prizes he received were: 1st place in the Enescu Competition (1958), and the 2nd place in the Jacques Thibault – Marguerite Long Competition (1959). He received the titles Merited Artist (1964), and Outstanding Artist of the Republic of Hungary (2001). His memory is preserved by a fund. – B: 1036, 1031, T: 7456.

Runic Stick – Usually a small wooden stick with three or four sides covered with runic writing, carved by people of the equestrian culture to record numerical data or text. It was an account-settling tool of the Szekler and Hungarian herdsman and shepherds. – B: 1138, 1174, 1020, T: 7669.→Hungarian Runic Script.

Runic Writing Research – The most important objective of Hungarian runic writing research is the question and examination of its origin. Károly Antal (Charles Antony) Fischer (1838-1926) conducted the first methodical research work and published the first book on Hungarian runic writing relics under the title Hun-Hungarian Writing and its Relics (Hun-Magyar írás és annak emlékei). He already mentioned the stenography-like abbreviations noted in the written relics. Tivadar Galánthay-Glock also carried out important research, recorded in his essay, Stenographische Werke in der Altungarischen Schrift, published in Dresden in 1916. He likewise denied the theory of Turkic origin, but accepted the concept of common origin.

The contribution of folklore researcher and literary historian Gyula (Julius) Sebestyén (1864-1946) to the runic research is considerable. Initially, he investigated the origin of Hungarian and that of the Finno-Ugric languages, and later, the Turkic languages and stood by their relationship to Hungarian. He devoted two books to the ancient Hungarian writing system; the first entitled Runic and Runic Writing (Rovás és Rovásírás) (1909), and the second: The Authentic Remnants of Runic Writing (A rovásírás hiteles emlékei) (1915). He was the first to describe in its entirety the Stick-Calendar (Botnaptár) from the Age of Reigning Prince Árpád (9th century). He translated from Latin the Rudimenta of János (John) Telegdi. He erected an obelisk with runic writing in the garden of his cottage at Balatonszepezd.

The activity of Anna Fehér-Walter in runic writing research is also important; she published the results of her large collection in two volumes in Buenos Aires in 1975, under the title From Cuneiform to Runic Writing (Az ékirástól a rovásírásig). Using the basis of the history of writing, Sándor (Alexander) Forrai studied writing with letters as they evolved from pictograms to runic writing. He concluded that writing with letters first evolved in Phoenician territory, mainly from the consonant group signs of Egyptian hieroglyphs. – B: 1020, T: 7669.→Rudimenta; Telegi, János; Forrai, Sándor; Sebestyén, Gyula; Friedrich, Klára; Hungarian Runic Script.

Rupp, Nepomuk, János (John) (Pest, 10 January 1808 - Budapest, 23 April 1881) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Pest. He played an important role in combating the cholera epidemic in County Nógrád (in northeastern Hungary) in 1831. Between 1831 and 1834, he went on a European study trip, looking chiefly at the western European administration and regulation of public medical health. He was Secretary of the Medical School from 1834 to 1844, and again from 1849 to 1860. From 1844 to 1872 he was a lecturer in state medicine; from 1866 to 1867 Vice-chancellor of the University and, for several periods, he was Dean of the Medical Faculty. From 1868, Rupp was a member of the National Public Health Council, later its first President, and also President of the State Book Publishing Society from 1863 to 1881. He was mainly engaged in dealing with problems of forensic medicine. His works include On the Non-Contagious Nature of Cholera (A cholerának nem ragadós voltáról) (1831) and Historic Speech on the Occasion of the Hundredth Anniversary of the Medical Faculty (Történeti beszéd az orvoskar századik ünnepére) (1871). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Rusznay, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 22 January 1889 - Budapest, 15 October 1974) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1911. He was a correspondent at the Institute of Pathological Anatomy No. 1 of the University from 1910 to 1911 and, during the period 1911 to 1931, he was a demonstrator in No.2 Clinic of Internal Medicine; in 1926 he became an honorary lecturer. In 1928 he was assistant lecturer, and between 1931 and 1945 Professor of Internal Medicine in the Medical Faculty of the University of Szeged, and Director of the Clinic of Internal Medicine; in 1937 and 1938 he was Dean of the Faculty. In 1945-1946 he was Director of No. 2 Clinic of Internal Medicine at the University of Budapest. From 1946 to 1970, he was Director of No. 1 Clinic of Internal Medicine.. From 1954 he was Director of the Experimental Medical Research Institute of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, its member (correspondent 1946, ordinary 1946), Director (1946-1949), and President 1949-1970. Rusznyák also filled important political positions, such as member of the Hungarian-Soviet Friendship Society between 1946 and 1950. From 1945 to 1967 he was a Member of Parliament. From 1949 to 1958 he was President of the Presidium. With his scientific research, he shed new light on the biology of the lymphatic vessels and their pathological significance. He also dealt with the illnesses of the heart, liver, lung and kidney, as well as the etiology of edema. He was an honorary doctor of the Soviet University and the Lomonosov University of Moscow; a member of the academy of numerous European countries; honorary, corresponding and ordinary member of a number of societies abroad. He was editor of Physicians' Journal (Orvosok Lapja) (1945-1948); Medical Weekly (Orvosi Hetilap) (1948-1949), and Acta Medica Hungarica from 1950. His works include Illnesses of the Liver and Gall Passages (A máj és epeutak betegségei) (1933) and The Biology and Pathology of the Circulation of the Lymphatic Vessels (A nyirokkeringés élet- és kórtana) (1955). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.

Ruszt, József (Joseph) (Isaszeg, 4 July 1937 - ) – Stage manager. From 1957 to 1962 he studied at the School of Dramatic Art, Budapest. Between 1962 and 1973 he worked in Debrecen; concurrently, he was a member of the University Theater (Egyetemi Színház), Budapest. From 1973 to 1978 he was chief manager in the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház), Kecskemét. In 1978 and 1979 he participated in the Gyurkó Folk Theater experiment. From 1980 to 1982 he was artistic consultant at Szeged. In 1982 and 1983 he was one of the founding members, and also artistic director of the Sándor Hevesi Theater (Hevesi Sándor Színház), Zalaegerszeg. From 1982 to 1984 he was chief manager, and from 1987 to 1988 stage manager of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In 1989 he formed the Independent Stage (Független Színpad) at Szeged. Since 1994 Ruszt has been a member of the Kamara Theater (Kamara Színház), Budapest, and its artistic director since 1995. He is renowned for applying the most modern principles of stage management. Some of his important stage works are: Jean Genet's The Maids (Les Bonnes; A cselédek); Tolstoy-Piscator's War and Peace (Háború és béke); T. Williams' A Streetcar Named Desire (A vágy villamosa); O'Neill's Morning Becomes Electra (Amerikai Elektra); Schiller's Don Carlos; Z. Kodály's Háry János; Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Mozart's The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Strindberg's Danse Macabre (Haláltánc), and Katona's Bánk bán. He is the recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize, 1975, the titles of Merited Artist (1977), Outstanding Artist (1985), the Prize for Hungarian Art (1989) and the Kossuth Prize (1993). He is a life member of the Zalaegerszeg Theater. – B: 0874, 1445, T: 7684. → Kodály, Zoltán; Katona, József.

Ruthenians – Their original home was at Lake Ilmeny, about 200 km south of St Petersburg, Russia. In the ancient Lithuanian language their name means “one who operates a raf”. Until the end of World War I, they navigated lumber, loaded on floating rafts down the River Tisza to the Hungarian Plains. Their independent history began in 1395, when the Lithuanian Prince Vitold ordered the arrest of Todor Koriatovich, Prince of Podolin, for his intentions to secede from Lithuania to form an independent state. Koriatovich escaped in 1397 and moved his people to Hungary, where King Zsigmond I (Sigismund of Luxemburg, 1387-1437) gave them the uninhabited territory around the Castle of Munkács (now Mukacheve, Ukraine) in the Northeastern Carpathian foothills. Later, other groups also followed from the old country. In 1660, they founded their first Ruthenian Greek Catholic Diocese in Munkács, which was later moved to Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine).

The Ruthenians embraced the fate of the Hungarians. They were among the first insurrectionists of Tamás Esze, the first soldiers of the liberation army of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II (1703-1711). Prince Rákóczi bestowed upon them the distinction of "charissima et fidelissima natio", that is: the “most devoted and faithful nation”. From 1771, their Greek Catholic Church and its schools were the strongholds of the Ruthenian language. Their nationalistic feelings flared up in the 19th century. Alexander Duhnovits (1803-1865) wrote the Ruthenian national anthem and the first Ruthenian grammar in 1853. For centuries, their livelihood was transporting much needed timber to the Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld) from the Carpathian Mountains. At harvest time they regularly worked on the fields of the Transstibiscan territory east of the River Tisza (Tiszántúl).

Following the Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), most of their territory came under Czech rule. Their natural way of life disappeared after the political detachment of Sub-Carpathia from Hungary, and the Ruthenians endured great economical hardship due to the neglect of their new Czechoslovak rulers; consequently, thousands chose emigration. Their region was briefly returned to Hungary (1939-1944). The Hungarian government made great economic sacrifices to assist the returning Ruthenians. However, soon after World War II, Ruthenia was annexed to the Soviet Union, and in 1993 to the Ukraine.

The present-day Ruthenians speak a different language from the other Slavic peoples, and are distinct from the Russians, Ukrainians, Slovaks and Czechs. Following World War II, the newly settled Russian and Ukrainian population in Sub-Carpathia slowly obscured the identity of the original Ruthenians. – B: 1078, 1230, 1133, T: 3240.→Esze, Tamás (1); Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty; Karaganda Labor Camp.

Ruttkai, Éva (Russ) (Budapest, 31 December 1927 - Budapest, 27 September 1986) – Actress. She was Miklós (Nicholas) Gábor’s wife and later partner of Zoltán Latinovits. She started her career at the age of five as a child actress in Lakner’s Children’s Theater in Budapest, obtaining her practice on stage and the theatrical profession from Margit Makay. In 1945 she was contracted by Daniel Jób for the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest. Her first role was replacing Klári (Clare) Tolnay as Alexandra in the comedy The Swan (A hattyú) by Ferenc Molnár. From 1948 to 1951 she played at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest; then she returned to the Comedy Theater (called the Hungarian People’s Army Theater during the Communist regime) and remained its member until her passing. During her career, spanning four decades, she was one of the most colorful and multi-faceted actresses. She could offer equally outstanding performance in classical and in modern tragedies and comedies in Hungary and abroad. She often recited poems on the radio or on stage, and with individual charm she used to recite chansons, immortalized on records, such as Hats (Kalapok), How did it happen? (Hogy volt?). Her last premier was held at the Chamber Hall of the Municipal Concert Hall (Vigadó) in Budapest, in the play Soft Bonds (Gyöngéd kötelék) by L.Bellon, on 24 April 1986. Éva Ruttkai's roles included Lujza in Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem); Johanna in Shaw's St. Joan; Helena in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (A Szentiványéji álom); Cleopatra in Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra; title role in Tolstoy's Anna Karenina; Cassandra in Euripides' The Trojan Women (A trójai nők), and Ranyevskaya in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyés kert). There are more than 50 feature films to her credit, including The Siege of Beszterce (Beszterce ostroma) (1948); Liliomfi (1954); Budapest Spring (Budapesti tavasz) (1955); At Midnight (Éjfélkor) (1957); Three Stars (Három csillag) (1960); Foto Háber (1963); Christening (Keresztelő) (1967); Eclipse of the Crescent Moon i, ii (Egri csillagok I, II) (1968); Szindbáb (1971), and Mission in Evian (Küldetés Evianba) (1988). Among her more than 20 TV roles are Two Empty Glasses (Két üres pohár) (1962); Knights of the Golden Gloves (Az aranykesztyű lovajai) (1968); The Hypochondriac (A képzelt beteg) (1971); Abigél (1978), and the Fantastic Aunt (Fantasztikus nagynéni) (1985). In 1987, her daughter, Júlia Gábor, founded a Ruttkai Memorial Prize, and organized a Memorial Room in Keselyű Street of District II in Budapest. Gábor Szigethy compiled the memory of her career from fragments, letters, notes, and occasional writings entitled At Your Command, My Fairy Queen! (Parancsára, tündérlányom!). She was a recipient the Mari Jászai Prize (1955, 1959), the Kossuth Prize (1960), the titles Artist of Merit (1966) and Outstanding Artist (1971). – B: 0883, 1122, 1031, T: 7456.→Makay, Margit; Tolnai, Klári, Gábor, Miklós; Latinovics, Zoltán.

Ruyter, Michiel de (Vlissingen, now Flushing, the Netherlands, 24 March 1607 - Bay of Syracuse, 29 April 1676) – Admiral of the Dutch Navy. He went to sea for the first time at the age of 11, serving for the Lampsins family. In 1621 and 1622 he served under Prince Maurits. By 1635 de Ruyter was a merchant captain. After serving as Rear Admiral of a Fleet assisting Portugal against Spain in 1641, he returned to the merchant service for the next 10 years, fighting against the Barbary pirates off the North African coast. Although he planned to settle with his family in Amsterdam, de Ruyter accepted the office of Vice-Commander in the Navy. During the First Anglo-Dutch War (1652-1654), he distinguished himself against the English, while serving under the Dutch admiral Maarten Harpertszoon Tromp. In 1653 de Ruyter became Vice-Admiral of Holland. In 1666 he had his own flagship, De Zeven Provinciën. During the Second Anglo-Dutch War (1664-1667), he defeated the English in the Four Days' Battle fought near Dunkerque, France, in 1666. He waged war against the French on the Mediterranean Sea, when the Protestant States in Europe learned that 41 Hungarian Protestant pastors, Lutherans and Calvinists, were sold as galley slaves at Naples in March 1675. On the order of the State Council of the Netherlands, de Ruyter freed the 26 still living Hungarian pastors, five Lutherans and twenty-one Calvinists, on 11-12 February 1607. The contemporary European Protestant community learned it with relief and joy. De Ruyter was the most famous and best admiral in Dutch history. – B: 1986, 1031 T: 7103.→ Galley Slave Hungarian Preachers.

Ruzitska, György (George) (Vienna, 1789 – Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 2 December 1869) – Composer and pedagogue. His father was a musician of the court. He arrived in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in 1810. He became a music teacher at Baron János (John) Bánffy's court at Nagyfalu. In 1819 he moved to Kolozsvár, where he made a living as a music teacher. For a short time, he was conductor of the orchestra of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Kolozsvár, and was a friend of Ferenc Erkel. Between 1835 and 1837, he was Director of the New Musical Society (Új Muzsikai Társaság). The Music Conservatory was reorganized based on his concepts, where he taught until the end of his life. In 1859 he started to write his memoirs, edited by István (Stephen) Lakatos, under the title: Confessions of a Transylvanian Musician (Egy erdélyi muzsikus vallomásai), (Transylvanian Rarities, no. 3, 1940). His major works are: Hungarian Overture (Magyar nyitány) (around 1820); Alonso, opera (1826-1827); Requiem (1829); Arise, Magyar (Talpra Magyar), choir and orchestra (1848); Te Deum (1850); Symphony in d-minor; Cello compositions (e.g. Introduction et Variations sur un thème hongrois); Piano compositions; Compositions for String Quartet; String Quintet, etc. Music-pedagogical works include Canto, Piano, Violin-teaching, and Theory of Music (Összhangzattan). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7679.→Erkel, Ferenc; Kótsi Patkó, János.

Rúza Magdi (Magdolna) (Ruža) (Verbász, now Vrbas, Serbia, 28 November 1985 - ) – Singer. Rúza studied in Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia) to become an obstetric nurse. She wanted to attend medical courses at university. However, unable to afford it, she decided to try out for a pop-idol contest in Budapest, where she was discovered in 2005. After winning the competition, Rúza's Album, featuring the songs she performed during the show's finals, became triple platinum, and has sold around more than 80,000 copies. Her first album, Devilish Angel (Ördögi Angyal), was released in 2006, and has sold more than 36,000 copies so far. These two albums were the biggest-selling releases in 2006 in Hungary. Rúza was voted New Talent of the Year in 2006, representing Hungary at the 2007 Eurovision Song Contest in Helsinki. She decided to sing in English, because she felt that the lyrics of the song were of great importance and wanted people to understand what Unsubstantial Blues was all about. At the finals on 12 May 2007, she finished 9th with 128 points. Being the songwriter of Unsubstantial Blues, she was also granted the Best Composer Award, which is given to the best songwriter among the Eurovision song composers every year. Her albums include Connection Concert (Kapcsolat koncert) (2007) and Compass (Iránytű) (2008). Her songs include Got my Mind Set on You; I Want to Break Free; One Love; May It Be, and Song of Joining (Összefogás dala). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Rybár, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 7 May 1886 - Budapest, 18 November 1971) – Physicist, geophysicist. He obtained a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest in 1909. From 1909 to 1910 he furthered his studies at the Institute of Waldemar Voigt at the University of Göttingen, and obtained his Ph.D. in 1911. In 1908 he joined the research activities of the eminent physicist Baron Loránd Eötvös; early on, he participated in field measurements using the Eötvös torsion balance. From 1912 he was Eötvös' demonstrator and later his assistant lecturer, and from 1915, lecturer at the University of Budapest. During Eötvös' illness and then after his death (8 April 1919), Rybár continued the university lectures of Eötvös as a temporary lecturer. In 1922 he was appointed to the Chair of Applied Physics, and from 1940 to 1949 he was Professor of Experimental Physics at the University of Budapest. From 1950 until his retirement, he was scientific contributor to the State Geophysical Institute. For a long period of time, he was a member of the Geophysical Commission of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; he was also a founding member of the Society of Hungarian Geophysicists. His scientific activity embraced a wide field. At first, he carried out studies in the field of light reflection and spectral analysis. Later, following the traditions of Eötvös, he was mainly engaged in the modernization and further development of the torsion balance. He prepared excellent torsion filaments, thus substantially reducing errors caused by temperature changes, and instead of visual observation, he introduced the photographic registration. He constructed the small-size torsion balance with the name of Auterval. His torsion balance, marked E 54, was developed by him in the Geophysical Institute. E 54 won the Grand Prix at the World Fair in Brussels in 1958. He was also honored with the Eötvös Memorial Medal in 1957. He obtained a Ph.D. in Physics in 1957. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1918, ordinary from 1931 to 1949). His works include Scientific Work of Loránd Eötvös (Eötvös Loránd tudományos működése) (1930) and Physical Measurements (Fizikai mérések) (1931). – B: 0883, 1408, T: 7456.→Eötvös, Baron Loránd.

S

Saáry, Éva (Balatonkenese, 28 November, 1929 - ) – Poet, writer, painter, photographer and geologist. She obtained a Degree in Geology at the University of Budapest, and a Diploma at the Photographers' School. She studied Fine Arts at the private school of Jenő (Eugene) Szimon. As a geologist, she worked first at the Hungarian-Soviet Oil Company (Magyar-Szovjet Olajtársaság – MASZOLAJ), a research establishment at Nagylengyel; later at the Pest-region Mineral Mines Company (Pestvidéki Ásványbánya Vállalat). After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, she escaped to the West. She first lived in Switzerland, then in France. From 1957 to 1959 she worked in Gabon as a geologist. In 1960 she returned to Europe for family reasons and made her home in Lugano, Switzerland. She works as a newspaper reporter and she paints and works as a photo artist. She is a permanent associate of several Hungarian periodicals in the West. Her poetry and prose works appear in a number of these, including New Horizon (Új Látóhatár) and Literary Journal (Irodalmi Újság); also Catholic View (Katolikus Szemle); Rainbow (Szivárvány); National Guard (Nemzetőr); New World (Új Világ), and Canadian Hungarians (Kanadai Magyarság). Since 1976 she has been President of the Hungarian Literary and Art Circle of Switzerland (Svájci Magyar Irodalmi és Képzőművészeti Kör – SMIKK) and organizer of the study days of Lugano. Starting in 1978, she edited the twelve study-volumes of the SMIKK; among these the three-volume Hungarian Scale (Magyar Mérés), and with Judith Stelmann the three volumes of the history of Hungarians, entitled Gesta Hungarorum. Since 1965 she has organized several exhibitions of her paintings and photographs in Europe, as well as in America. Her main works include Pervasive Silence (Átható csend) (Lugano, 1973); Interesting People, Western Hungarian portraits (Érdekes emberek, Nyugati magyar portrék) with Zsuzsa (Susan) Vadnay (Zurich 1981); A Hundred Different Kinds of Love (Százféle szerelem) (1984); Where was it, where was it not (Hol volt, hol nem volt), stories, sketches, reports (Munich 1985); Mélységes csend (Profound Silence) (in French, Cayey, Puerto Rico 1986); Spring in Lugano (Luganói tavasz) (Lugano 1987); Mirages (Káprázatok) (Lugano 1987); Burning Stubble (Tüzes tarló) (Lugano 1988); Shall We Weep or Laugh? (Sírjunk vagy nevéssünk?) (1991); Words Scattered in the Night (Éjbeszórt szavak), poems (2007), and The Fifteen Years of Workshops in Lugano (Luganói tanulmányi napok tizenöt éve) (2003). She was also involved in editorial work. Saáry is a renowned painter as well. Since 1965 she has regularly exhibited her pictures and graphics. She has participated in some 78 international exhibitions including Switzerland, Italy, Germany, France, England, USA, Australia and Hungary. She has also made several book illustrations and book covers. Her paintings are in private and public galleries, including The Hungarian Photographic Museum, Kecskemét; Hungarian Oil-industry Museum in Zalaegerszeg; Petőfi Literary Museum, Budapest, and the Museum of Ráday Collections in Budapest. She is the recipient of a number of prizes, among them the Árpád Academy Prize eight times (1973, 1982-1985), the Otto Herman Society Medal (1994, the Officer's Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1995), and the Pro Cultura Hungarica Prize (2009). – B: 1672, 1654, T: 7684, 7103.

Sabirs (Savards) – The Sabir people inhabited the Caspian region prior to the arrival of the Avars. They appear to have been a Turkic people, possibly of Hunnic origin. The Sabirs lived predominantly in the Pontic steppe region bounded on the east by the Caspian Sea, on the west by the Black Sea and on the south by the Caucasus Mountains. In 552 AD the Sabirs, previously allied with Sassanid Persia, switched their allegiance to the Byzantines and invaded the Caucasus. Soon afterwards, they were conquered first by the Avars and later by the Göktürks. By the 700s they largely vanish from the historical record; probably being assimilated into the Khazars and Bulgars.

In the 10th century AD, a Hungarian delegation visited the court of Byzantine Emperor Constantinos Porphyrogenetos (Konstantin VII, “The purple-born”). He writes in his De administrando imperio (On the administration of the empire, written between 947-952): “In the old days the people of the Turks (Tourkoi, the Byzantine name for the Magyars) acquired a territory in the region that they named after their first leader (Levedi) Levédia. They were not called Turks at the time, but “sabartoi asphaloi”, for some reason or another. The Turks consisted of seven tribes... They lived together with the Khazars for three years... When war broke out between the Turks and the Petchenegs, who were then called Kangars, the army of the Turks suffered defeat, and broke into two. One part moved towards the East, and settled near Persia. These tribes are called sabartoi asphaloi to this day. The other part, led by their leader Levedi, moved west and settled in a place called Etel Küzü (Etelköz)... named after the nearby river... (Etel or Etil, now the River Volga), but still regularly sends delegations to those who stayed behind in the Caucasus region near Persia”.

There is still no consensus on the precise meaning of “sabartoi asphaloi”. Sabartoi has been interpreted by some historians to mean Sabirs. The meaning of asphaloi has not been satisfactorily explained to this day. According to some, in the Byzantine Greek language it meant “great” or “powerful”; according to others, it meant “white”.

This splitting up in two halves must have happened a long time ago, because they were mentioned as Sapires even before the birth of Christ; later on, up to the 14th century, they were known as Savards. Their homeland was referred to as Zapaortene by Justin and Pliny the Younger (61-c. 112), while other ancient historical sources call them “Sabirs”, an ethnic group that is sometimes called “Hunut” by Turks and Arabs.

Ptolemy (c. 90-168) refers to them as the tribe of Svardeni or Savari, and also Materi (Magyar). Priskos Rhetor mentions a Sabirou people about 460 A.D., who were driven from their homeland by the Avars; later Jordanes in the 6th century includes the Savaris, Zakarias Rhetor (455-after 536) the Sabirs among the Hun tribes.

Thephanes the Confessor (c. 758/760 - 817/818) relates that the Aspharus (Sabirs) left the confederation in 650, after the death of Kubrat and conquered Bulgaria; their rule lasted for hundred years under the reigns of Princes Asparuk, Tervel, Tovirom and Sevar. Their rule over Bulgaria is corroborated by the grave goods ornamented in palmetto style, also material proof of the Sabir-Magyar coexistence. The Hungarian chronicles unequivocally preserve this alliance with names such as Zoard, Soba-Moger, Dentu-Moger and Dentia.

In 1870, in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), Kristóf (Christopher) Lukácsy published his important work The Ancestors of the Hungarians, their Ancient Names and their Dwelling Places (A magyarok őselei, hajdankori nevei és lakhelyei), a scholarly work written with great circumspection, basing his historical work on original sources,

The Romans gave the name Savaria to the capital of the province Pannonia Superior; the present-day successor of this town is Szombathely (in German Steinamanger), and about 15 km from it is situated the settlement of Szabar, the Szabar Creek and Szabar Mount, and a little further away in County Zala, a place with the name Zala-Szabar. Therefore, prior to Roman rule, this area must have been settled by Sabar (Sabir) tribes; these appellations could only have been derived from them. These Sabir tribes could only have migrated into Transdanubia during the Scythian occupation of the Carpathian Basin (4-1 c. B.C.) It is conceivable that of all the Hungarian tribes taking part in the occupation of the Carpathian Basin, four tribes were Sabir-Magyars. – B: 0942, 1078, 1138, 1230, 1020, 7617, T: 7456, 7617.→Priskos Rhetor; Ancestral peoples, Dentu-Moger; Migration period; Scythians; Szombathely; Sándor, Count Róbert.

Sacred King Murders – The supernatural honoring of the sacred monarch consisted of more than glory and illumination among the Turkic nations. The monarch, honored as a demigod, was sacrificed when his reign came to an end, or if the people suffered a natural disaster. The king could also be sacrificed if the people suffered serious losses during a hostile attack. There were several reasons for the royal murder. The very idea, that the king must be killed, can be traced to sacrificial rites.

According to 10th century Arab historian, Ibn Fâdhlan, the “...head monarch could rule only 40 years. Beyond this period, but a single day, he was to be killed by the people and nobility, because they believed that his mind has weakened and his insight was not stable”. However, this practice among ancient Hungarians has yet to be proven.

The heathen nobility, following ancient customs, conspired to murder King István I (St Stephen) of Hungary (997-1038). According to some historians, the khagan (Reigning Prince) of the Hungarians, Álmos, had to die, because he still represented the deity of the former country, its earth and fertility. According to the ancient faith, his magical power, upon returning to the deity, would multiply in the cosmic center of the heavens and under the protection of the true heavenly father, it would pour forth without limit, perpetually, throughout the centuries on his successors and on the people he ruled.

After the Magyars had settled in their new country in the Carpathian Basin, Khagan Árpád received the power by obtaining the grass, water and land. The fertility of the new country was identified with his personal well-being. He became the absolute lord and commander of all the Magyar peoples, who owed unconditional obedience and aliegence to him. Should they sever the connections with the royal house, it would undermine their own well being as well. – B: 1151, 1020, T: 7682.→Álmos; Árpád.

Sacrifice – In a cult it is a significant practice to make an offering of a gift to a deity, a supernatural being, an ancestor or a deceased. It was practiced both in primitive cultures and within developed religious systems. It was based on a belief that somehow, through a sacrifice, one can obligate the supernatural being to reciprocate the offering. The supernatural is entitled to the very first of everything: the firstborn child and the first of the harvests. The offering of the sacrifice could happen by annihilation: the killing of a human or an animal. It can be bloody or bloodless. In the religion of the Hungarians before accepting Christianity, sacrifices also played an important part. Our Latin Chronicles also report animal sacrifices. The noblest sacrificial animal was the white horse, which amongst the Obiugors, was regarded even into the 19th century as a valuable offering. – B: 1134, T: 7682.

Sacrificial Cup – The Szekler Chronicle of Csík (Csiki Székely Krónika, c. 1533) describes it as a vessel used by the early Hungarians during sacrificial ceremonies. Anonymus also referred to it in relation to the Blood Covenant. The 14th century Szekler Chronicle referred to such a sacrificial cup, which was preserved since ancient times in its original shape. The sacrificial cup of the Szeklers was used for the last time in the county of Csík in 1712.

Several dissertations have been written and scientific discussions have been held throughout the years concerning the cup. In the 1960s, the cup was kept in Tapolca in Transylvania under the guardianship of the Sándor family, which in old times held the office of Rabonbán. – B: 0942, T: 7682. → Anonymus; Szeklers.

Sadler, József (Joseph) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia. 6 May 1791 - Pest, 12 March 1849) – Botanist and pharmacist. He was first an assistant in the Pharmacy of the Brothers of Mercy in Pozsony (Irgalmasrendi Gógyszertár); following that, from 1810 to 1812, he completed his pharmaceutical studies in Pest. From 1812 to 1819 he continued his studies at the Faculty of Humanities and at the Faculty of Medicine. From 1815 he was a teaching assistant at the University's Faculty of Chemistry and Botany. In 1820 he became a medical doctor and assistant custodian in the Natural History Collection of the Hungarian National Museum (Magyar Nemzeti Múzeum) of Budapest, increasing its collections substantially. On his trips in Hungary and abroad, he collected plants, minerals and insects. In 1829 his herbarium contained more than 28,000 species. From 1832 he was an assistant, and from 1834 a regular instructor at the Botanical Faculty of the University, and successor of Károly (Charles) Haberle. As an assistant, he also taught Chemistry from 1832 to 1842. At the same time, he remained the Museum's custodian. In 1848, after the Revolution, he was among the first to undertake teaching in Hungarian. Sadler dealt with flora research, as well as the research of ferns and fungi. The collection of the flora of Hungary remained only a plan. He also began writing systematic monographs when he wrote treaties on the ferns and gramineae of Hungary. The main significance of his work was his ability to organize instructional and popularizing activities and the establishment of a great central herbarium. In his university teaching, he established the progressive system of István (Stephen) Englisher, and it remained in use even after his death. He was a member of Russian and German Natural Science Societies. Plants were named after him. His main works were: Verzeichniss, der um Pesth und Ofen wildwachsenden phanerogramischen Gawechse... (1818); Explanation to the Collection of Hungarian Plants (Magyarázat a Magyar plánták száritott gyűjteményéhez (Section 14, Pesth, 1824-1830); Flora Comitatus Pestiens...vols. i,ii (Floral Wreath of Pesth...I. II) (1840), and Die Grasser Ungarns (Hungary's grasses) (Section 2, in De Filicibus veris Hungariae... 1830). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7684.

Saint Gellért Legend – Bishop, who died as a martyr in Buda in 1046, elevated to sainthood together with King István I (St Stephen) (997-1038) and his son, Prince Imre in Csanád on 26 July 1083. The legend, based on a primitive biography, probably began around this time. There is a long and a short version. The longer one treats the Bishop's life in detail. It was rewritten many times; the last was written in the spirit of the Benedictine reforms at the beginning of the 14th century. These revisions greatly diminish their historical value, although they still contain many important details about life, and especially that of the culture of the 11th century. It has a description of a maid singing while working with a hand mill. (Symphonia Ungarorum, Symphony of the Hungarians). As for its style, the original parts are rhymed, while the addenda and rewritings show all the signs of rhythmical prose. The shorter legend was drawn up to satisfy the need of a religious songbook. Cecile Tormay's translation concentrates on Bishop Gellért's Hungarian experiences. – B: 1230, 1136, 0942, T: 3240. → Gellért, Bishop; Tormay, Cecile.

Saint George Order of Knights – In 312, the Byzantine Emperor, Constantine the Great, founded the St. George Militia Aurea Order. According to the original document, found in the Vatican Archives, the Byzantine Emperor Isaac II Angelus (1185-1195), on 27 June 1190, gave 50 knighted heroes – among them several European rulers, or their accredited envoys – new rules for the Order. These new rules were based of previously established rules of knightly orders. Hungarian King László I (St.Ladislav) (1077-1095) was good friend and cousin of Emperor Alexios I Comnenos (1081-1183), who had a close relationship to the Order.

On 24 April 1326, the feast day of St George, King Károly I (Charles Robert, 1307-1342) commemorated the birth of his son by founding in Hungary the St George Heroes' Order. Later, King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382) expanded it. This was the first Knightly Order in Hungary and it was founded to protect the King, homeland and Church. The rules were laid down in a document in the Cathedral of Esztergom; the 50 members wore their emblem consisting of a red cross on a white background. According to some opinions, King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437) reorganized the Order and named it the Order of St. George, the Dragon Slayer, whose very valuable golden necklace was worn with pride by almost every one of Europe's rulers and dignitaries. In the spring of 1992, the Order was reactivated in Hungary under the name of The Brotherly Society of The Knights of St George. A silver double cross in a red field, enclosed in a triangular shield, was worn on the left breast on a black robe. Their leader was the Governor of the Order. – B: 1230, 1153, 1020, T: 7671.

Saint Germain, Peace of – The peace treaty made after World War I between the Entente Powers and Austria on 10 September 1919. It ratified the creation of successor states in place of the dissolved Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and, accordingly, fixed the new borders of Austria, awarding her from the territory of Historic Hungary parts of Moson, Vas and Sopron counties, the Órvidék, Felsőórvidék or Várvidék – all of them collectively called Burgenland. The Treaty restricted the size of Austria's armed forces, obliged her to pay war indemnities and prohibited her from uniting with Germany. – B: 1138, T: 7665.→Western Hungary; World War I; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Saint István→István I, King.

Saint István's Day, 20 August (St Stephen's Day) – On 20 August 1083, István, King of Hungary was solemnly canonized in the Cathedral of Székesfehérvár. On 20 August 1860, the 777th anniversary was officially commemorated, and it became a countrywide national day of celebration. In 1938, the 900th anniversary of the canonization was celebrated countrywide. St István's Day was an official national holiday until 1945, the end of World War II. After 1945 it was repealed but, in 1949, it was reinstated as the Holiday of the Constitution (Alkotmány Ünnepe), and also the Day of the New Bread (Új Kenyér Ünnepe). After the collapse of the Communist regime in 1989 it again became St István Day, and it is a national holiday, observed annually. – B: 1230, 1153, T: 7669.→St. István Jubilee; Gold Train; Holy Right Hand.

Saint István Jubilee – In 1938, on the 900th anniversary of the death of King István I (St Stephen), the founder of Hungary, a Eucharistic World Congress (Eucharisztikus Világ Kongresszus) was organized in Hungary. After thorough planning and organizing, the jubilee year commenced with an open Mass at the Parliament Building in Budapest. It was followed by a procession, carrying the Holy Right Hand (Szent Jobb), St István's embalmed, right hand. The procession ended at the Heroes Square, Budapest. In the procession, not only Hungary's civic and religious leaders and many foreign dignitaries participated, including Cardinal Pacelli, who later became Pope Pius XII, but also 11 cardinals, 37 archbishops and 190 bishops, followed by a huge crowd. The memory of St István was to be honored by an act of Parliament and 20 August – the day of his canonization – was declared 'Saint István's Day' and a national holiday. The Communist regime of Hungary renamed it Holiday of the Constitution Festival (Alkotmány Ünnepe). St István's Day was reinstated after the collapse of the Communist regime in 1989. The Holy Right Hand was carried around the country on a Gold Train. – B: 1020, T: 7103.→St. István's Day; Gold Train; Holy Right Hand.

Saint John's Night Fire – Wherever the Hungarian language was spoken, the night before 24 June was the most important rite of fire lighting. Fires were lit in other seasons as well: Christmas, Lent, Carnival and Easter. However, they paled in significance with the fire lit during the summer solar solstice festivals. The ancient Hungarians revered the fire. The Christian churches expurgated the most spectacular pagan customs and, from the former reverence of fire, only the customs and beliefs of the home fireplace remained.

The custom of fire lighting on St John's Eve or Midsummer's Eve (Szent Iván Éj) in the 16th century was widespread all over the Carpathian Basin. The preacher Miklós (Nicholas) Telegdi wrote, in 1577, about the St. John's Eve fire as approved by the Church. Two centuries later, a Church historian, Inchofer, mentioned that, while the Hungarians had already celebrated the feast of John the Baptist in the 11th century, it had deteriorated into a pagan superstition: "we lay the fire in a quadrangular form: in one corner, handsome old men are sitting; in the second corner, beautiful old women; in the third, handsome young boys and in the fourth, beautiful unmarried maidens". The fire was fed from thatch straw and branches while the groups sang to each other. Meanwhile, all the girls and boys, alone or together, jumped over the fire, while the elderly women smoked in the fire sweet smelling plants and flowers, and then used them as medicines. The purpose of jumping was partly purification, partly to determine which girl would become a bride at the next carnival. The summer solstice is the beginning of the autumn Sun god religion cycle. The most important parts of this festival are the singing of the couples, the fire dance and the rite of jumping over the fire. Today, this custom is in decline, but it can still be found in Göcsej, in County Somogy among the Palóc people and in the Csángó parts in eastern Transylvania. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 7882.→Telegdi, Miklós.

Saint László King, Song to (St Ladislas) – This is the oldest poem in Hungarian translation from the beginning of the 16th century. The original, written in Latin around 1470 in the style of the 14th century chronicles, was based on the Legend of Saint László. It declares the Hun-Magyar identity. Some parts of it can be found in the Peer Codex of 1526, while others in the Gyöngyösi Codex of the early 16th century, all in Latin. The Latin origin seems to be the acceptable one. It features the life of King László I. It praises his comeliness, his bravery, and his battles with the Tartars, Turks and Bogomils, in the same way as the Hunyadis used the King's knightly image, as their own political model. The poem mentions the equestrian statue of King László I erected in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) in 1390. The numerous folk elements in this poem have preserved many of the florid folk sayings, such as "...he was known as Brave László". – B: 1151, 1020, 1230, T: 3240.→László I, King; Codex Literature.

Saint László Legend – Its original title is Legenda Sancti Ladislai Regis, written in Latin by an unknown author. The story originated in 1191, around the canonization of King László I (St Ladislav, 1077-1095). It enumerates many miraculous events concerning King László: such as his levitation during prayer, the cart starting alone with his body to Várad, and so on. It was translated into Hungarian at the end of the 15th century. Its Hungarian translation is part of the Érdy-Codex. – B: 1230, 1136, T: 3240.→László I, King; Érdy Codex.

Sajnovics, János S.J. (John) (Tordas, 12 May 1733 - Buda, 4 May, 1785) – Theologian, linguist and astronomer. He entered the Jesuit Order in 1748, studied in the Arts Faculty at the University of Nagyszombat, (now Trnava, Slovakia), and pursued theological studies at the University of Vienna. He obtained a diploma of education from the Teachers' Colleges of Győr and Vienna. From 1758 to 1760 he was a demonstrator under Miksa Hell in the court observatory of Vienna. In 1768 he accompanied Hell on a trip to the northern part of Norway, to the island of Vardö, in order to observe the planet Venus as it was passing in front of the Sun's disc in June 1769. From this time, he set out to clarify the language relationship between the Hungarians and the Lapps. His first meeting with the Lapps at Marsund confirmed for him that the Hungarian and Lapp languages were related and, knowing full well that the relationship between two languages can not be proven merely by agreement of words, he also tried to show agreements in inflexion and word formation. On his return, he spoke of his results before the Danish Learned Society at Copenhagen and published his work. In its Hungarian version, he also gave, for the first time, the full text of the oldest Hungarian language relic, the Funeral Oration and Prayer (Halotti beszéd és könyörgés) written between 1192 and 1195. On 19 January 1770, he and Hell were elected to be members of the Royal Danish Academy. In Hungary Sajnovics' theory of the Hungarian-Lapp language relationship was received with indignation by the nobility, but a few, like the historian György (George) Pray, already took a stand in favor of a northern relationship. Because of all the criticism, Sajnovics gave up the completion of his further linguistic study plans; he became Professor of Mathematics at the Buda Academy and was an assistant lecturer at the observatory of Buda. His work is the first significant attempt in the Finno-Ugric-Hungarian comparative linguistics with a historical approach, which also attracted interest abroad. With his theoretical studies, he contributed significantly to the formation of the basic principles of modern comparative linguistics. At the same time, he made thousands of observations at the observatory of Buda. His main linguistic work was: Demonstratio Idioma Ungarorum et Lapponum idem esse (Demonstration of the identity of the Hungarian and Lapp languages) (1770-1772). It was with this work that the theory of Finno-Ugric origin for the Hungarian language first entered the Hungarian scientific literature. With this work, Sajnovics actually anticipated Franz Bopp, the founder of the Indo-European comparative linguistics. He also wrote: Idea Astronomiae honoribus regiae Universitatis Budensis dicata (Thoughts on Astronomy dedicated to the honourable Royal University of Buda) (1778). His statue and commemorative plaque were unveiled in his birth place, the town of Tordas, County Fejér, on 11 May 1986, in the presence of Danish, Soviet, American, and Hungarian linguists. The hypothesis of the Finno-Ugric origins of the Hungarians has been criticized by some because there is no common comprehension between these languages and Hungarian, as there is between the Romance and the Slavic languages. – B: 1031, 1160, 1068, T: 7456.→Hell, Miksa; Funeral Oration and Prayer; Pray, György; Hungarian Language; Hunfalvi, Pál; Finnish-Hungarian Language Relationship.

Sákovics, József (Joseph) (Budapest, 26 July 1927 - Budapest, 2 January 2009) – Foil fencer. He completed the College of Foreign Languages, majoring in English and French; in 1965 he obtained a diploma as fencing instructor specialist in the School of Physical Education. He was at first a competitor for the Csepel Club, later for the Budapest Locomotive Club, and then, from 1954 in the Budapest Honvéd Club. From 1957 to 1964 he competed for the Red Meteor (Vörös Meteor) Club of Budapest (MTK). In 1949, he was the individual Hungarian champion in duel foil-fencing and, in 1950 he received the title of champion in foil-fencing. Between 1951 and 1962 he was a member of the selected team on 75 occasions. At the World Championship in Stockholm in 1951 he attained seventh place in duel foil-fencing. In the World Championship in Rome in 1955 he was a member of the team that received a bronze medal. In the 1956 Olympics in Melbourne, his duel foil-fencing team received a silver medal, the foil team a bronze medal. In 1959 in Budapest, he became World Champion in duel foil-fencing. In the Rome Olympics of 1960 he achieved fourth place in individual foil-fencing, as well as in the duel foil-fencing team. Between 1963 and 1968 he acted as Captain of the Fencing Federation. In the 1964 Tokyo Olympics, he won four gold medals. From 1970 he worked as a trainer of the Federation; from 1972 he was an associate of the Physical Research Institute. From 1974 he was active as a trainer in Budapest, while, between 1979 and 1980 he again served as Captain of the Federation. Sákovics is the first Hungarian duel foil-fencer, Federation Captain of the Hungarian select duel foil-fencing team. His wife, Lidia Dömölky, was also an Olympic champion in foil fencing. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Salamon – (1) According to the chronicle, written in the Manx Gaelic language on the Isle of Man (1066-1266), Solomon was the original name of King István I (St Stephen, 997-1038) of Hungary. The chronicle, as published with commentary by George Broderick of Edinburgh in 1973, includes accounts of the lives of both King István and his wife, Gizella, who were both honored as saints in the Christian Church. It suggests a connection with the British Royal family through István's relative, Agatha. (2) King István I was known as Solomon by John of Fordun (died in 1384), a Scottish chronicler, who also indicated that Solomon was bestowed the Christian name of Stephanus. – B: 1020, T: 7658.

Salamon, Béla (Saly) (Beregrákos, now Rákosin in Slovakia, 4 March 1885 - Budapest, 15 June 1965) – Actor, theater manager. He started work as a shop assistant; in 1913 he became an actor in the Royal Orpheum, later, in the Royal Beer Cabaret. In 1920 and 1921, he was acting for the Bonbonnière Cabaret and, from 1921 to 1923 he was a member of the Apollo Stage. In 1921 he also worked for Transylvanian Hungarians Cultural Society (Erélyi Magyarok Kulturális Egyesülete – EMKE) and the Trocadero Cabaret. In 1923, together with Endre (Andrew) Nagy, he founded and managed the Teréz Ring-Boulevard Stage, running it until 1931. He played on the stage of almost all the cabarets of the Capital. From 1939 to 1945 he was banned from the stage because he was a Jew. In 1951 he was contracted with the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad), where he stayed until his death. Many of his stage witticisms became household words. Till the end of his life he played the clumsy, but cunning, helpless, average man, with which he made his first success in the scene String Quartet (Vonósnégyes) by Szőke Szakáll. He enjoyed a very wide popularity. He played episode roles in a number of films including Kiss me, Sweetheart! (Csókolj meg, édes!) (1932); The Clever Mom (Az okos mama) (1932); Young Lady looking for a Room (Úrilány szobát keres) (1937); Momentary Cash-flow (Pillanatnyi pénzzavar) (1938); The Hypochondriac (A képzelt beteg) (1952), and Love-Thursday (Szerelencsütörtök) (1949). He wrote several of his sketches and croquis appeared in dailies and weeklies. He was the author of the books: Hey, performer! (Hej, Színművész!) (1939), and Soda Water Bottle and its Surroundings (Szódásüveg és környéke) (1964). He was awarded the title of Merited Artist in 1958. – B: 0883, 1105, 1445, T: 7456. → Nagy, Endre; Szőke, Szakáll.

Salamon, Ferenc (Francis) (Déva, 29 August 1825 - Budapest, 9 October 1892) – Publicist and historian. He studied at the College of Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania) and coached the children of Baroness Simon Kemény. In 1848 he joined the national army (Honvéd) of Hungary. After the collapse of the Revolution and Freedom Fight of 1849, he taught deaf-mute children at Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). In 1854 he was engaged as a teacher at Nagykőrös. However, in 1856, he gave up his teaching career and moved to Pest, where he became a journalist, working as a contributor for Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap), and later for Pester Diary (Pesti Napló). He was a supporter of Baron Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kemény, Ferenc (Francis) Deák, and the 1867 Compromise with Austria. From 1867 he was Editor of the official paper, Budapest Gazette, and later, from 1870 until his passing, he was Professor of Hungarian History at the University of Pest. In 1860 he became a member of the Kisfaludy Society. Besides esthetic and critical studies, he wrote some important historical works. They include Hungary in the Era of the Ottoman Turkish Occupation (Magyarország a török hódítás korában) (1864), for which he received the Grand Prix of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1887); The first Zrinyis (Az első Zrinyiek) (1865); His Smaller Historic Studies (Kisebb történelmi dolgozatai) (1875); History of Buda-Pest, vols. i-iii (Buda-Pest története, I-III) (1878-1885), and Literary Studies, vols. i,ii (Irodalmi tanulmányok, I-II) (1889). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Kemény, Baron Zsigmond; Deák, Ferenc; Compromise of 1867.

Salamon, King (1063 - 1074) – The elder son of King András I (Endre, Andrew) (1046-1060), crowned by his father at the age of six, and formally enthroned in 1063 upon the death of King Béla I (1060-1063), when he arrived in Hungary supported by German troops. He was betrothed at the age of not yet five to the 10-11-year-old Judit, the daughter of Holy Roman Emperor Heinrich III. He was forced to release the Duchy to his cousins Princes Géza, László and Lambert, who then assisted him in defeating the Cumanians and the Pechenegs. He recaptured Nándorfehérvár in 1071, and continued his warfare into Byzantine territory.

In 1074 he fought heavy battles against the Princes; was victorious against Géza, but suffered complete defeat at Mogyoród and lost his throne, upon which he fled to his brother-in-law Henry IV, Holy Roman Emperor (1050-1106) to offer Hungary as feudal tenure. He was only able to retain the Fortress of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) despite assistance from Henry IV. Salamon acknowledged King László I (St Ladislas), (1077-1095), but turned against him, was imprisoned and released in honor of the canonization in 1083 of King István I (St Stephen) (997-1038). Assisted by the Cumanians, he unsuccessfully attacked Hungary and the Byzantine Empire. After his death, he was buried on the Peninsula of Istra at Pola, Italy, where he was later revered as a saint. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7658.→Judit; King András I; King Béla I; King László I; King István I; Sword of God.

Salamon, László (Ladislas) (Tamás Salló) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 10 July 1891 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca Romania) 16 October 1983) – Poet, publicist and essayist. He completed his high school education at his birthplace, where poet Gyula (Julius) Juhász was among his teachers. At the University of Budapest, he enrolled in the Arts course, majoring in Hungarian and Latin and joined the club of the socialist students. In 1913 he started his journalistic career with the paper Nagyvárad Diary (Nagyvárad Napló). In World War I he served on the front, was wounded and discharged. He took part in the 1918 Revolution; later, he was imprisoned, returning to Nagyvárad in 1922. Early in 1924 he moved to Kolozsvár, becoming associate editor of the paper New Orient (Új Kelet). His writings appeared in the papers, Temesvár News (Temesvári Hírlap) and Future Society (A jövő társadalma). With László Dienes, he took part in the founding of the journal Our Age (Korunk), and became associate editor of the daily of the Social Democratic Party, entitled Worker News (Munkás Újság). In 1931 he launched the first leftist social democratic journal, The Other Road (A Másik Út). During World War II, his articles appeared in the leftist paper, People's Word (Népszava). During the German occupation of Hungary, the Gestapo captured him and deported him to the Dachau Concentration Camp. He returned to Hungary only at the end of the war. From 1948 he was Editor of the paper, Truth (Igazság), and from 1950 until his retirement in 1954, he was an associate editor of its editorial board at Kolozsvár on behalf of the State Literary Publishers. His works include For the Altar of Eros (Eros oltárára), poems (1916); Dreadful Adolf (Rettenetes Adolf) tragic-comic epic (1933); Man, Where Are You? (Ember, hol vagy?), poems (1943), and Blue Bird of May (Május kék madara), essays (1923-1943) (1971). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Juhász, Gyula.

Salánki, János (John) (Debrecen, 11 May 1929 - Budapest, 29 January 2003) - Physician, biologist. In 1954 he earned his Medical Degree at the Faculty of Medicine of the University of Debrecen. From 1955 to 1959 he completed his postgraduate studies at the Lomonosov University of Moscow. From 1960, he was a contributor to the Institute of Pathological Biology of the University of Debrecen. From 1962 to 1990 he worked as Director of the Tihany Research Institute of Biology of the Academy of Sciences. From 1991, he was a research professor of neurobiology, comparative biology and environmental biology. He introduced the microelectro-physiological technique for the study of elemental neurological mechanisms and demonstrated the central localization on cell level of taste-sensing receptors in gastropods. He showed the degree of contamination of heavy metals among animals of Lake Balaton. From 1977 he was Editor of Acta Biologica Hungarica and a member of a number of scientific societies in Hungary and abroad. His works include Comparative Studies on the Regulation of the Periodic Activity in Marine

Lamellibranches (in Comp.Biochem, Physiol, 1966), and My Way in Science (in Acta Biol. Hung., 1999). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1976, regular 1987). He was awarded several prizes; among them the Academy's Prize, and the Order of Labor. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Salgó, András (Andrew) (Andrés Salgo) (Mezőtúr, 1909 - Mexico City, 1976) – Painter. At the University of Budapest he studied Architecture, and at the École Supérieure des Beaux-Arts of Paris, he studied painting. He emigrated to Mexico, escaping from fascism. There he mainly painted large murals, and created expressive panel paintings (Don Quijote-series; also in portfolio). His murals are characterized by neo-primitive simplification and the monumentalism of the great Mexican artist generation. He published art critiques and essays in Mexican papers and journals. He was President of the National Group of Mexican Painters and Sculptors. In 1965 he showed his works in the Exhibition Hall of the Institute of Cultural Connections (Kultúrális Kapcsolatok Intézete) Budapest. A few of his works and a portfolio were placed in the Hungarian National Gallery and in his hometown. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.

Salgótarján, Massacre of - Ironically, of all the massacres perpetrated by the Communists during the 1956 Revolution, probably the worst occurred on 8 December 1956 in Salgótarján, an old leftist center of the workers' movement. At the outbreak of the Revolution on 23 October 1956, the Communist leadership of the county and the higher ranking AVH (Államvédelmi Hatóság – State Security Police) officers fled with their families to Besztercebánya (now Banská Bystrica, Slovakia) in neighboring Czechoslovakia. The lower ranking AVH personnel went into hiding near the border, crossing it regularly, because the First Secretary of the Communist Party in Besztercebánya was supplying them with provisions and weaponry.

On 5 November, the newly armed AVH unit, which was hiding out in Karancslapujtó near the border, attacked the County National Committee located in the Salgótarján County Hall and disarmed the National Guard unit which defended it. The next day, however, the freedom fighters, under the leadership of Rudolf Haday and Lajos (Louis) Hargitay, the National Guard commanders, retook the County Hall and scattered the AVH or Pufajkás unit in Karancslapujtó as well. (The Pufajkás unit was comprised of the remnants of the various security organs of the Communist state, which lacking official uniforms or status as yet, were dressed in the Russian style winter jackets padded with cotton). To regain their position, the Communist leaders of Salgótarján called for Soviet help and a Red Army detachment, under the command of Colonel Seludin, arrived on November 14 to take control of Salgótarján. The same day there was an armed conflict on the Czechoslovak border between the National Guard and the AVH personnel, who were receiving help from across the border. Under the protection of the armed Soviets, on 17 November, the Salgótarján Communists set up a new executive committee and the commissioners of the Interior Ministry removed those officers from the security units who sympathized with the freedom fighters. The workers of the city united behind the newly formed independent County Workers' Council.

The County Workers' Council announced a 48-hour warning strike for December 3-4, while Pufajkás units were harassing the population in the surrounding villages. On December 6, the AVH forcibly dispersed a meeting of the Workers' Council, and the next day they arrested two of its members. On 8 December, a demonstration was organized to demand the release of those arrested. The unarmed demonstrators, numbering about 2000, included workers, women and children. They were lured to the square in front of the county police headquarters, where they were trapped between the Soviet troops and the AVH units. The massacre began at 11 o'clock and the firing lasted for several minutes. The fleeing unarmed people were shot from behind, even children, as their wounds later revealed.

There is no agreement on the exact number of dead. The clerk of vital statistics put it to 131. The estimated number of the wounded came to 150. Though there were no injuries among the Hungarian security troops or the Soviet soldiers, Communist propaganda later claimed that they were attacked, and only fired in self-defense. Following the massacre, the Workers' Council was dissolved and the main participants and their leaders were arrested. The cruelly tortured and bullet-ridden bodies of the National Guard commanders, Rudolf Haday and Lajos Hargitay, were found in the Ipoly River on 10 December. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→State Security Police; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Salkházi Sára (Sarah) (Schalkházi) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 11 May 1899 - Budapest, 27 December 1944) – Social worker, nun, teacher, newspaper reporter and editor. She gave up the career of teacher and editor and entered the Society of Social Worker Nuns (Szociális Testvérek Társasága) (1929). She was the leader of the Slovakian Catholic Young Women's Movement (Szlovákiai Katolikus Leányifjúsági Mozgalom) for the whole country, then Central Director of the Organization of Catholic Working Girls and Women (Katolikus Dolgozó Lányok és Nők Országos Szervezete) (1942-1944). She hid the persecuted after the German occupation of 19 March 1944 in the home for the laborer women on the shore of Lake Balaton. When someone denounced those hiding in the home in Bokréta Street in Budapest, she too was carried off. The circumstances of her death are unknown. She wrote articles in the papers The People (A Nép); The Working Woman (A Dolgozó Nő), and The Word of the Spirit (A Lélek Szava). She also wrote The Black Flute (Fekete Furulya), short story (1926) – B: 0883, T: 7684.

Sallay, András (Andrew) (Budapest, 15 December 1953 - ) – Ice-show dancer. He was the male member of the legendary Regőczy-Sallay ice-show dancing pair. He attained his most important sporting results when he joined up with Krisztina Regőczy. From 1972 to 1980 he was nine times Hungarian champion. In 1970 the pair became part of the selected pool. They took part in numerous international championships, with good placing. They received sixth place in the World Championships in Munich in 1974, in Colorado Springs in 1975, as well as in the European Championships in Copenhagen. They finished in fifth place in the Olympics in Innsbruck in 1976, and received fourth place in the World Championships in Göteborg, and also in the Europe Championships in Geneva. They reached fourth place in the World Championships in Tokyo and, finally, they received a silver medal at the European Championships in Helsinki, at the Lake Placid Olympics in 1980, and at the European Championships in Göteborg, while they became World Champions in Dortmund. Between 1980 and 1985 they were professional ice-dancers. They were members of the American Ice Follies and Holiday on Ice. In 1985 they ended their joint active professional career as three-time professional world-champions. Since 1986 Sallay has been engaged, among other things, in sport-management as a representative of the International Management Group. He is President of the Blue Danube Golf Club. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Regőczy, Krisztina.

Salló, István (Stephen) (Csíkszereda, now Miercurea Ciuc, Romania, 3 March 1932 - Tatabánya, 1 November 2004) – Hungarian sculptor in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He was a teacher in Transylvania between 1951 and 1959, and was Director of the Culture House at Csík Rajon (closed since), and also of the Folk Arts House of Hargita County between 1968 and 1978. Together with his colleagues, he fought for the preservation of the Szekler cultural heritage. Under their direction many folk-theatrical groups were formed, together with the folk dancers, folk orchestras, singers and performers. He regularly organized exhibitions for folk artists who worked individually or in groups (wood carvers, potters, weavers, spinners, embroiderers). He published folk literature as well. His literary output includes poetry, fairy tales for children and folk comedies. His short stories, instructive articles and mini-fictions appeared in newspapers. Besides his educational and cultural work, he dedicated himself to sculpting. In 1978 he moved to Hungary and settled in Tatabánya, where he spent the rest of his life. His art was recognized and his work is sought after. His working material was almost exclusively fine carved, sometimes colored wood. He took part in several collective (6) and individual (11) exhibitions in Transylvania and in Hungary. His works include Kings of the House of Árpád (relief); St Margaret (woodcarving); Portrait of Széchenyi; Portrait of Jakab Fellner, and Cry for Help (Segélykiáltás), memorial stone and column and gate. His major works are in Budapest, Tata, Csorna, Kisbér, Tatabánya, Komárom, and in schools, cultural centers, squares and museums (Esztergom, Tatabánya). He was a recipient of the National Prize III, Bucharest (1981), National Grand Prix, Budapest (1987), Art Prize of County Komárom (1987) and he was named honorary freeman of the town of Csorna (1987). – B: 1654, 1105, T: 7103.

Samo, Principality of – In 626 A.D., under the leadership of Samo, an adventurer-trader of Frank origin, the Vends, residing on the western side of Pannonia (now Transdanubia or Dunántúl, Western Hungary), broke away from the Avars and defeated the army sent against them by Dagobert I, the Frank king. The uprising of the Vends surprised the Avars, who were at that time involved in an attack on Byzantium. While the Vends were successful in breaking away from Avar rule, they could not challenge their supremacy in the East, and were forced to withdraw behind the Vienna Basin. Due to the Vend uprising, the Avars gave up the siege of Byzantium in 627, and could only occupy Samo's territory west of the Vienna Basin after his death. The independence of the Vends ended with the death of Samo around 658. – B: 1230, 1031, T: 7665. → Avars.

“Sandaled” Gentry – It was the most destitute stratum of the lesser nobility in the time of late feudalism in Hungary. The landless, uneducated “bocskoros nemesek” (Squireens) wore only sandals instead of boots, which was the custom with the well-to-do nobility. In the period of the Reform Movement, they opposed any bourgeois reform and, after 1848, with the abolition of serfdom, they assimilated into the class of the poor peasantry. – B: 1231, T: 3233.

Sándor, Anna (Budapest, 1950 ? - ) – Screenwriter. She spent her childhood in Canada and was educated at the University of Windsor, Ontario (1975). She began her career as a stage- and TV- actress in her mid-twenties, and has written more than 50 TV scripts. She was a lecturer in 'Writing for TV' at the Summer Institute of Film in Ottawa (1985), guest speaker at ACTRA Screenwriters Seminar (1986), a guest panelist at the Banff TV Festival, Convergence Montreal (1989). Her screen writings include Tarzan in Manhattan (1989); Stolen One Husband (1990); Miss Rose White, TV teleplay (1992); Amelia Erhardt: The Final Flight (1994); Tiger Cruise (2004); Mom, Dad and Her, story, teleplay (2008). Sándor Codex – A Hungarian linguistic record from the beginning of the 16th century. It was copied by an unknown nun around 1521. Its most notable section is the translation of Visio Tundali's 10th chapter, based on a work written around 1150 by a friar named Marcus. The first Hungarian drama, Three Christian Girls, loosely translated by Hrotsuita Dulcitus, a famous nun of Gandersheim Abbey in Germany in the 10th century, is also in this Codex. Originally, it was part of the Cornidus Codex. Ferenc (Francis) Toldy named this section after the bibliographer István (Stephen) Sándor, following the Codex-division at the University Library of Budapest in the middle of the 19th century. – B: 1150, T: 3240. → Codex Literature.

Sándor, Count Móric (Bajna, northwest of Budapest, 23 May 1805 - Vienna, 23 February 1878) – Sportsman and landowner. He acquired fame for his daring exploits on horseback, in swimming and hunting. His nickname was “the devil-rider”. He ended his life in the mental hospital of Döbling, Austria. He donated his rich library to the National Széchenyi Library. He wrote the work Hunting in our Country and Sport in Hungary (Hazai vadászatok és sport Magyarországon), co-authored with Count Manó Andrassy and others (1857), also published in French. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Sándor, Count Róbert (Budapest, 16 April 1929 - ) – Research scientist. He moved to Sweden in 1947; and received his higher education in Sweden and in the United States. He was Dean of the Stockholm Ophthalmologic-Optometrists School, where he modernized the organization of the School. He founded the Ophthalmological Information Center, of which he became Chief Executive Officer after it was incorporated (1972-1984). He has been Director of the Hoja Optikslip optical firm since 1984. Besides his work in optics, his interests led him to other scientific fields: Japanese history, cultural developments and combatant sports. Several Swedish and international organizations and institutes invited him to join their memberships. By 1985 he had produced more than 100 scientific publications (studies and books). Especially interesting are those dealing with the Japanese sword smiths and his studies about their relationships to the Sabir people's hammering technique. His work is known all over the world and is highly esteemed. – B: 1020, T: 7675. → Sabirs.

Sándor, Erzsé B. (Liz, Elizabeth) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 18 August 1883 - Budapest, 21 March 1962) – Opera singer (coloratura and dramatic soprano). She was born into a Szekler family. Her father was a tenor soloist of the Szekler Regiment and the little Erzsé learned singing from him. At the age of 10 she made her debut in the title role of the play Hőköm Matyi. She was chorister of a church choir, and graduated from a teacher training college. However, in 1903 she started to study voice under the direction of Ödön (Edmund) Farkas, the director of the Music Conservatory of Kolozsvár; later with Mrs. V. Maleczky at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Music Academy of Budapest. In 1908 she traveled to Paris for further studies. Between 1905 and 1931 she was a member of the Opera House of Budapest, where she made her debut in Delibes' Lakmé. During her career, she performed at Ostend, Vienna and Berlin with great success. Her perfectly trained voice, superb virtuosity, balanced and sweeping performance elevated her to a position among the most important opera singers. She excelled in the leading soprano roles of Mozart's operas, and she was a renowned oratorio singer as well. Erzsé Sándor's main roles in Mozart's operas included Constanza in Il Seraglio (Szöktetés a szerályból); Donna Anna in Don Giovanni; Susanne in The Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága); Fiordiligi in Così fan tutte, (Mindenki így csinálja), and The Queen of the Night (Az éj királynője) in The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola). In Verdi's operas, she played Violetta in La Traviata; Gilda in Rigoletto; Desdemona in Otello, and three roles in Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann (Hoffmann meséi). In Puccini operas she played: Mimi in La Bohème (Bohémélet); title role in Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony); Liu in Turandot; additional roles were Sophie in R. Strauss' Rosenkavalier (Rózsalovag), and Melinda in Erkel's Bánk bán. Her song and oratorio performances were equally successful. In 1917 she was awarded the prestigious title of Chamber Singer of the Emperor and King (Kaiserliche and Königliche [k.u.k] Singer (Császári és királyi kamaraénekesnő)). In 1929 she met with G. Puccini who asked her to sing Liu in his last opera, Turandot. In 1921 she was elected life-member of the Opera House, and in 1934 its honorary member. She was a recipient of the Corvin Wreath (Corvin Koszorú) in 1930. Her white marble bust is in the Opera House of Budapest. Zoltán Bosnyák, her husband, Secretary of State and playwright, started to write her biography; but it was Imre (Emeric) Balassa who completed it and published it. – B: 0902, 0883, 1444, 1031, T: 7103.→Sándor, Mária; Farkas, Ödön; Bosnyák, Zoltán; Balassa, Imre.

Sándor, Frigyes (Frederick) (Budapest, 24 April 1905 - Budapest, 1 June 1979) – Violinist, conductor and educator. He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest with Gyula (Julius) Mambriny and Imre (Emeric) Waldbauer. From 1926 he was concertmaster, and from 1933 assistant conductor in the Budapest Choral and Orchestra Association. Due to problems with his arms, he was gradually forced to abandon violin performances. By the mid-1930s, he was a well-known conductor of a number of ensembles including the Hungarian Women's Chamber Orchestra. He promoted primarily Baroque music, also the works of Haydn, Mozart, and contemporary Hungarian composers. He was the first to perform Béla Bartók's Divertimento for String Orchestra. From 1945 he taught violin and chamber music at the Capital's Higher Music School (Székesfővárosi Felsőbb Zeneiskola), and the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest. In collaboration with Pál (Paul) Járdányi, Albert Rényi, and Endre (Andrew) Szervánszky, he published a five-volume series on violin teaching in 1949, where the technique for playing pentatonic melodies, based on folk music motives, prominent in Kodály's compositions, was developed for the first time for the purposes of basic education. In the same year, he was appointed Director of the newly founded Béla Bartók Specialized Secondary School of Music. He continued musical performances as conductor of the institution's choir and orchestra. Between 1958 and 1975, Sándor taught chamber music at the Academy of Music of Budapest and, with his students, he founded the Franz Liszt Chamber Orchestra in 1963. He remained its music director until his death. His works include Violin Studies (Hegedűtetűdök); Mihály Hajdú: 8 Studies for Youth Chamber Orchestra (Hajdú Mihály: 8 etűd ifjúsági. vonózenekarra), with Ottó Till; Dances and Trio Sonatas from the 17th century (Táncok és triószonáták a XVII. századból), with Olivér Nagy; János Decsényi: 15 Studies For Youth Chamber Orchestra (Decsényi János: 15 etűd ifjúsági Vonózenekarra), with Ottó Till; István Szelényi: 8 Short Duets and Sonatina for 2 Violins (Szelényi István: 8 kis duett és szonatina 2 hegedűre); Tartini: 3 Sonatas for Violin and Piano (Tartini: 3 szonáta hegedűre és zongorára), and Music Education In Hungary (A zenei nevelés Magyarországon), (1964). A Music School in Dunaújváros bears his name. – B: 0883, 1735, T: 7667, 7456.→Sándor, Renée; Járdányi, Pál; Szervánszky, Endre; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Sándor, György (George) (Streit) (Budapest, 4 April 1938 - ) – Writer, performer and humorist. He was born into a Jewish family, but converted to Catholicism in 1978. His father died as a soldier in a forced labor camp. His performing career started at Kaposvár in 1957. In the same year he was admitted to the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. However, he was dismissed as an ungifted individual in 1958. In 1959, he worked at the Géza Gárdonyi Theater (Gárdonyi Géza Színház), Eger as a carpenter, but he also acted in smaller roles. From 1960 he worked as an assistant and supernumerary at the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház), and at the Thália Theater (Thália Színház), Budapest. His first evening performance was at the University Stage (Egyetemi Színpad) in 1964. He significantly contributed the phraseology of TV Cabaret. He published his writings in the papers New Hungary (Új Magyarország), the Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet), and the Snow-shoe (Hócipő), among others. He had eight evening talk shows with András (Andrew) Nagy Bandó at the Third Theater (Harmadik Színház) of Pécs, which later was published in a book. Since 2008, he has his Evening Shows at the Chamber Theater (Kamaraszínház), Budapest. In his work four phases can be discerned: 1) Evening Shows, such as Hook (Horog); Talcum Powder (Hintőpor); The Most Happy Barrack (A legvidámabb barakk), and the Diary of More Insane (Több örükt naplója); 2) Radio plays, such as Cabaret Theater (Kabareészínház). 3) Television pieces, such as I Lost My Way (Elvagyok tévedve), and the The Humorist, and the Substitute New Year's Eve (Humorista és Pótsziveszter). 4) Books, such as How Did I Become a Humorist? (Hogyan lettem humorista?), and Strange Dialogue (Furcsa párbeszéd), with András Nagy Bandó. He is recipient the Mari Jászai Prize (1998), the Sándor Petőfi Freedom Prize (1992), the Heritage Prize (199), and the Kossuth Prize (2011). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.→Nagy Bandó, András.

Sándor, István (Stephen) (Luka, 11 August 1750 - Vienna, 29 March 1815) – Bibliographer and writer. He studied at the Jesuit College of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) (1774). With his inheritance he managed the Luka estate. In 1784 he moved to Vienna; then traveled further abroad. In 1791 he published a monthly paper entitled Variety (Sokféle), and edited it until 1808. In 1803 he pioneered the writing and publishing of the Hungarian Library House (Magyar Könyvesház) on Hungarian bibliographies. He bequeathed his personal library and a considerable sum of money to the future Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Ferenc (Francis) Toldy named the Sándor Codex after him. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 3240.→Sándor Codex; Codex Literature.

Sándor, János (John) (Budapest, 7 June 1933 - Victoria, BC, Canada, 14 May 2010) - The Hungarian-born Canadian conductor, János Sándor, graduated with distinction from the Franz Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. As a student at the Academy he won 3rd prize at the Besançon (France) International Conductors Competition. From 1961 to 1975 he was Principal Conductor of the Győr Philharmonic Orchestra and Music Director of Opera Pécs. In 1975 he was appointed Conductor of the Budapest State Opera, and from 1986 to 1989 he was Head of the Music Department of the Academy of Drama and Film in Budapest. Sándor conducted Hungary's top symphony orchestras and has appeared as a guest conductor with numerous other orchestras in more than twenty countries. His interest in young people led to his involvement with many youth orchestras, including the Festivals of Canadian Youth Orchestras in Banff, Alberta, where he conducted the Gala Concert of the inaugural festival in 1974. A founding member of Jeunesses Musicales in Hungary, he regularly conducted the International Orchestra of the Jeunesses camp at Pécs, and was an invited guest conductor at International Youth Orchestra Festivals in Switzerland and Scotland. He was a guest conductor more than 20 countries. Since coming to Canada in 1991, János Sándor was guest conductor with the Victoria Symphony Orchestra, the CBC Vancouver Orchestra, the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, the Victoria International Festival Orchestra, the Civic Orchestra of Victoria, as well as the Sonor Ensemble of San Diego. His first appearance as Guest Conductor of the Greater Victoria Youth Orchestra was in spring 1995. In September 1995 he joined the University of Victoria as Artist-in-Residence, and Music Director and Conductor of the University of Victoria Orchestra and Chorus. He was appointed Music Director of the Greater Victoria Youth Orchestra (GVYO) in 1998. He was featured in the Gala concert celebrating the opening of CBC Victoria in October 1998, and the following spring he was Special Guest Conductor for the Ontario Festival of Youth Orchestras. In April 2000 he directed the combined musical forces of the UVic Orchestra and the GVYO, together with the UVic Chorus and a specially auditioned children's choir in the first-ever performances on Vancouver Island of Gustav Mahler's Symphony of a Thousand. János Sándor made more than 30 recordings. His recording for Hungaroton of Béla Bartók's Miraculous Mandarin, Dance Suite and Hungarian Peasant Songs, in the complete edition of Béla Bartók's works, qualified as one of "the best five recordings of the year", in Hi-Fi News, and it was awarded the Arthur Honegger Prize of the Grand Prix Nationale du Disque. A recipient of the Liszt Prize (1963) and the Merited Artist title (1967), from his native Hungary, he retained his ties there as Permanent Guest Conductor of the Budapest State Opera and as Music Director Laureate and Honourary Life Member of the Győr Philharmonic Orchestra. – B: 1031, 1868, T: 7617.→Bartók, Béla

Sándor, Judit (Judith) (Budapest, 10 October 1923 - Budapest, 25 October 2008) – Opera singer (soprano). She studied singing in the Fodor Music School, Budapest, under Elizabeth Gervay and later, between 1941 and 1948, at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest under Ilona Durigo, Imre (Emeric) Molnár and Margit Walter. She made her debut as Cherubino in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro. In 1948, the Opera House of Budapest engaged her, where she remained a member until 1978. Both as a soprano and mezzo-soprano, she made a number of memorable renderings on stage. In her Mozart opera roles, like Donna Elvira in Mozart's Don Giovanni, and Dorabella in Così fan tutte, she reached the peak of her career. Her feeling for style and fully living her part in acting rendered her interpretations unforgettable. She also played the leading roles in several premières of Hungarian operas. In addition, she acquired an international reputation as a singer in oratorios and in German Lieder.. She was able to render the demands of her vocal as well as her prosodic message in equal purity. Her best-known roles were Mélisande in Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande; Leonora in Beethoven's Fidelio; Octavian in R. Strauss' Der Rosenkavalier; Cherubino in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Figaró házassága), and Sieglinde in Wagner's Die Walküre. Since 1978 her pedagogic activity has been increasingly coming to the fore and she acted as a juror in a number of international vocal competitions. She gained distinction as an interpreter of the works of Arnold Schönberg and Paul Hindemith. She wrote a book on her life entitled On the Pilgrimage of Music (A zene zarándokútján) (2004). In 1953 she was a recipient of the Franz Liszt Prize; in 1963 she was awarded the Merited Artist title; in 1992 the Béla Bartók–Ditta Pásztor Prize, and in 1993 the Kossuth Prize. – B: 1445, 1742, T: 7456.

Sándor, Kálmán (Coloman) (Újpest, 14 January 1903 - Budapest, 24 December 1962) – Writer and journalist. He completed his education in Budapest; as a student he was a member of the Galileo-circle. After the fall of the Hungarian Soviet Council Republic on 1 August 1919, he went to Vienna in 1920, where he stayed for a few months; then he returned to Hungary, where he became a commercial correspondent and later, a book-keeper. He took part in the work of the illegal study circle of the socialist students. In 1926 he was a student of the École des Hautes Études Sociales in Paris. In 1927 he returned to Hungary, where he was engaged in journalistic work. He began his work as a literary writer in 1929. His essays and short stories appeared in the papers, West (Nyugat), People's Word (Népszava), and Pester Diary (Pesti Napló). The novels he wrote in the 1930s, featuring the privation and reduced circumstances of the workers and petty bourgeoisie, paint a damning picture. In 1944 he was deported to the concentration camp of Dachau, where he became seriously ill. After the war, for a while he was medically treated abroad and he returned to Hungary in 1946. He played an important role in the post-war literary life and then his literary skills developed considerably. His works include Senior Neanderthal Bookkeeper (A neandervölgyi könyvelő) short stories (1947); Pillory (Szégyenfa), novel (1951); The Day of Anger (A harag napja), drama, produced in the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház), Budapest, in 1952, also presented as a film in 1953; The Town of Nobody (A senki városa), play (1955), and Showy Wedding (Díszes esküvő), short stories (1961). He received the Kossuth Prize in 1953, and the Attila József Prize in 1950 and 1951. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Sándor, Károly (Charles) (Csikar) (Szeged, 26 November 1928 - ) – Soccer-player. He first began playing soccer in his town of birth. In 1947, the Hungarian Gymnasts' Circle (Magyar Torna Klub – MTK) engaged him; he remained faithful to this organization during his entire career. His team proved to be triple champion. Between 1949 and 1964 he played on 75 occasions in the national eleven and scored 27 goals. Early in the 1950s, he played mainly in the reserves. From 1957 he was the team captain of the selected team. He took part in the World Championships in Sweden in 1958, and in Chile in 1962. He ended his career in 1964 aged 36. He was an excellent outside forward. He was famous for his sprinting and for his goals achieved from a sharp angle. During the time of the Golden Team it was L. Budai, who was his rival on the guard. For this reason he missed the 1952 Olympic gold, he did not play in the Championship of the Century; he was only a reserve and he was also not nominated for the 1954 World Championship, even though he traveled there with his team. Altogether in 379 championship matches he scored 182 goals. Between 1955 and 1964, he participated in 21 international matches and he was successful in 11. During his lifetime, he received a number of distinctions: in 1993, he was presented with the Middle Cross Medal of the Republic of Hungary, and in 1998 he received the Gold Commemorative Medal of the President of the Republic of Hungary. There is a College named after him at Agárd on Lake Velence. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Sándor, Mária (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1895 - Budapest, 9 October 1964) – Opera singer (mezzo-soprano). She was the younger sister of Elizabeth Sándor. Sarkadi, Imre (Emeric) (Debrecen, 13 August 1921 - Budapest, 12 April 1961) – Writer, journalist. In 1941 he worked as a pharmacist's assistant, then, in 1943 and 1944 as a typesetter, while also studying Law at the University of Debrecen. In 1946 he was Managing Editor for the paper Free Word (Szabad Szó) and, in 1950 he was Assistant Editor for the periodical, Civilized Nation (Művelt Nép). From 1954 to 1955 he was a contributor to the Literary News (Irodalmi Újság), and worked as a dramaturge for the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest, from 1955 to 1957. He was among the most prominent chroniclers of the ways of how the new socialist order transformed the life of the Hungarian peasantry. His first writings appeared in the papers Answer (Válasz) and Star (Csillag). His early essays, depicting changes in country life, reflect Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz's influence, yet already these reveal his own unique, tragic and dramatic style, which would unfold fully in his later writings. These are now considered to be important representatives of Hungarian socialist literature. In the final phase of his life, his writings reflect a personal quest for moral purity. Although he attempted to fight his own pessimism, disillusionment and bitterness become increasingly evident. He ultimately succumbed to this struggle and took his own life. His main works include The Way of János Gál (Gál János Útja) (1950); Rozi (1951); September (1955); The Coward (A gyáva) (1961); The Lost Paradise (Az elveszett paradicsom) (1962), and The Fugitive (A szökevény) (1962), His film scripts are: The Carousel (A körhinta) (1955), and Beast of Prey (Dúvad) (1961). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1955) and the Attila József Prize (1951, 1952, 1954). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667.→Móricz, Zsigmond.

Sárkány, Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 15 August 1908 - Vienna, 20 December 1998) – Water-polo player. From 1922 he was a swimmer and water polo player at the Gymnastics and Fencing Club (Torna és Vívó Egylet – TVE) of Budapest and, from 1938, at the Gymnastics Club of Újpest (Újpesti Torna Egylet – UTE). From 1933 until 1939 he performed on 60 occasions in the Hungarian selected team. In 1932 he was a member of the Hungarian team that won the Olympic Championship in Los Angeles in 1932 and in Berlin in 1936. After World War II, from 1945 to 1947, he became the Federation captain of the Hungarian water polo selected team. Under his direction, the Hungarian National Team achieved fourth place in the European Championships in 1947. From 1947 to 1958 he was a trainer in Hungarian club teams, such as the Budapest Club and the Dózsa Club of Újpest. His team received the title of Hungarian Champion on five occasions (1948, 1950, 1951, 1952 and 1955). In 1958 he emigrated, and settled at Wuppertal in Rhine-Westphalia, Germany. Between 1968 and 1973 he was the leading trainer of the water polo selected team of the German Federal Republic. From 1973 until his death in 1998 he lived in Vienna. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Sárközi, György (George) (Budapest, 22 January 1899 - Balf, 8 March 1945) – Poet, novelist, narrator and translator of literary works. He was the son of a minor railway clerk. His schooling was in Vác and Budapest. For a short time, he was a student at the Academy of Music, Budapest; later, he studied Philosophy at the University of Budapest. From 1917 he became a permanent contributor to the journal West (Nyugat). From 1919 to 1938 he worked as a referee at the book publisher Athenaeum. He also took part in the editing of the literary journal Pandora. In 1926 he published his first book of poems entitled Angels' Struggle (Angyalok harca). Between 1935 and 1938 he was Editor of the journal Answer (Válasz). He launched a sociological book series of the village-researching writers entitled Discovery of Hungary (Magyarország felfedezése), written by village researchers. In 1936 he married Márta Molnár, the daughter of writer Ferenc (Francis) Molnár. He was one of the leaders of the folk writers' movement. Sárközy played a significant role in the organizing and leading of the March Front, in shaping its anti-Fascist character. In his works of simple, refined style, he portrays the dreary life of the town bourgeoisie and officials. In the spring of 1944, the Fascist authorities carried him off to the concentration camp of Balf (East of Sopron), where he died of starvation. His works include Like Loosened Sheaf (Mint oldott kéve) historic novel (1931); Sylvester, short story, (1934); Viola, novel (1935); Dózsa, drama (1939), and Selected poems, edited by László Lator (1993). His translations include the first part of Goethe's Faust (1937), and Thomas Mann's Jacob and Joseph in Egypt (1937). His complete book of poems and some shorter translations were published in 1947. – B: 0883, 1031, 1160, 1257, T: 7456.

Sárközy, György (George) (Budapest, 3 November 1913 - Budapest, 11 October 1971) – Civil engineer. He obtained his Degree from the Vienna Polytechnic in 1938. Back in Hungary he started working for the engineering contractor, Emil Hacker, and a little later he obtained an engineering position at the firm Hungarian General Road-Building Co., (Magyar Általános Útépítő Rt) where he conducted the construction of roads and bridges; in 1943, he was appointed Chief Engineer, and in 1945 Works Manager. In 1948 he was commissioned with the work-management tasks of the amalgamated nationalized road-building firms, later becoming a section head and chief engineer of the Road and Railway Construction Industrial Center (Út- és Vasút építő Ipari Központ), which became a National Company after 1949. In 1950 he was appointed Chief Engineer of the Concrete-Road Construction Enterprise (Betonútépítő Vállalat). From 1958 he dealt with the same set of tasks for the No. 1 Civil Engineering Enterprise (1. sz. Mélyépítő Vállalat). In 1961 he transferred to the technical secretariat of the National Central Planning Office (Országos Tervhivatal) and, from 1962, he was in charge of the department of the National Technical Development Committee (Országos Műszaki Fejlesztési Bizottság). He gave numerous public lectures both in Hungary and abroad on the subject of technical development. A number of innovations are linked to his name; some have been adopted in other countries. His activities covered a large field. In Hungary, he was the first to introduce open-cut coal mining. He was also engaged in the soil improvement of sodic-soil areas e.g. with the caustic sludge procedure; he also established rice plantations and organized their management. He gained distinction in the planning of several aerodromes, industrial plants and office blocks. He was one of the initiators of constructing expressways in Hungary. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize for his work in the mechanization of earth works (1954). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Sarkozy de Nagy-Bosca, Nicholas Paul Stéphane (Paris, 28 January 1955 - ) – French politician of Hungarian nobility descent on his father's side: Pál (Paul) Sárközy, who emigrated from Hungary to France in 1944. His mother, Andrée Mallah, was the daughter of a Greek Jew. Nicholas was the middle of three brothers; he was baptized Roman Catholic and grew up in Paris. His father left his mother in 1960 and the young Nicholas hardly ever saw his father, so he did not learn Hungarian. He was mainly under the influence of his Gaullist grandfather on his mother's side, descendant of a Jewish family from Thessaloniki. In 1974, young Nicholas became member of the de Gaulle Party; later he joined Jacques Chirac's party. In 1982 he studied Law at the University of Paris at its Nanterre Law Faculty. Between 1981 and 1987 he worked as a lawyer in Paris. From 1977 to 1983 he was also a member of the City Council at Neuilly-sur-Seine, from 1983 its mayor until 2002. From 1988 to 1995 he was a Member of Parliament. In 1989 he was campaign manager of Giscard d'Estaing and Juppe. In 1993 and 1994 he was Minister of Finance; in 1994 and 1995 Minister of Telecommunication and spokesman for the government with the Balladur Cabinet. Since 1997 he has been the people's representative in the National Assembly. From 1999 he was a member of the European Parliament. He was also the Interior Minister in the Jacques Chirac Government of 2002. He became Minister of Economics under Raffarin in 2004. In May 2005 Sarkozy again became Minister of the Interior under the new Prime Minister de Villepin. Early in 2007, during his presidential campaign he stressed four cardinal aims: work, authority, education and public law and order. On 6 May 2007, he won the election with 53% of the 85% voters' presence and was elected the sixth President of the 5th Republic. He has been married twice and has three children. In 2007 soon after his election, he visited Hungary. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7684, 7456.

Sarlós, Robert Károly (Charles) (Budapest, 6 June 1931 - Portland Oregon, USA, 29 August 2008) – Theater historian. He was born into an assimilated Jewish family and attended the renowned Lutheran High School, Budapest. In 1949 he was admitted to a select class in stage direction at the Hungarian Academy of Theater and Film Arts. After one semester, he was expelled because of his “bourgeois” descent and thinking. He became a lathe-operator, served in the Hungarian Peoples' Army, studied theater history, had a small part in the 1956 Revolution, and then left his native land. After three months in Austria, Sarlós was admitted to the U.S. as a refugee, worked as a lathe-operator in Long Beach, CA, then attended Occidental College (L.A.) on a scholarship (B.A., 1959). A Woodrow Wilson Fellowship enabled him to study Theater History with A. M. Nagler at Yale (Ph.D., 1965). In 1962 he married Charlotte Harris and became a U.S. citizen in November. Charlotte and he had two children: Lilian Margit, born in 1962, and Tibor Thomas in 1965; they were divorced in 1986. Sarlós taught Theater History at the University of California, Davis, from 1963 until retirement in January 1993. He contributed to 15 books in America and Europe and published over forty articles and reviews in scholarly journals, such as the Theater Research International; Maske und Kothurn; Theater Survey; The Drama Review, etc., dealing with various periods of European and American theater and drama. His book, Jig Cook and the Provincetown Players; Theater in Ferment (1982) was honored with the Barnard Hewitt Award in 1983. At the Department of Dramatic Art in Davis, Professor Sarlós took a leading role in creating the Ph.D. program, of which he served as Director for over twenty years. He was chiefly responsible for the development of the Shields Library's Performing Arts holdings, and for the assembly of a significant body of source materials in Special Collections. He directed seven productions, including the English language premiere of The Tót Family (Tóték) by Hungarian playwright István (Stephen) Örkény (1968), and a performance reconstruction of the Stuart Masque, The Triumph of Peace (1974). Sarlós organized, or contributed to several exhibitions; he was instrumental in saving the Woodland Opera House, and in its eventual restoration. He participated in the creation of the University's Intercampus M.A. in Dance History and, from 1990 to 1992, served as Director of the Budapest Study Center of the University's Education Abroad Program. After his retirement, he first lived in Vienna, Austria and, in November 2002 he moved to Portland, OR. – B: 1872, T: 7103.→Örkény, István.

Sarmatians – Relatives of the Scythians, who supposedly spoke a similar language and had a common origin. There are suggestions that Sarmatian came from the Turkic or Fimmo-Ugrian groups, such as some early form of Hungarian. However, these suggestions have not so far been generally accepted. After defeating the Scythians around 150 BC, they gradually occupied Southern Russia and assimilated some of the Russians. One of their tribes, the Yazigs, arrived in the Carpathian Basin and settled on the Hungarian Plain in 101 AD. The so-called “Csörsz árka”, a long, protruding fortified wall at the edge of the Plain, is attributed to them. Their relatives, the Roxolans who, at first, settled in Wallachia, followed them, and later, moving through Dacia, the majority of them also settled on the Plain. The Sarmatians arrived in the Carpathian Basin in three waves between 101 and 271. These two tribes were the first line of defense against the barbarians from the East. The Gepids and the Goths, arriving from the East, assaulted the line of the Danube in several waves from about 270 to gain entry into Pannonia. The Sarmatians were not mentioned by the sources until 469, at the time of the arrival of the Huns, when they resurfaced among the members of the German alliance fighting against the Eastern Goths. Their last mention is dated to 488, when the Eastern Goths, moving into Italy, defeated them. Emperor Constantine I defeated the Goths and later, during the internal fights among the Sarmatians, he allowed a great number of people to cross the border at the River Danube into Pannonia. They ruled until the end of the Roman Empire but eventually were wiped out in the internal squabbles. Some of them survived to be absorbed by the Avars. They were fierce fighters, adopted the same fighting methods the Scythians had used before them and the Magyars after them. Herodotos and other contemporary writers portray them in a fighting habit made of fastened scaly horn-sheets. This description was later substantiated by archeological finds. Their art, such as arms, jewels, and equestrian accoutrements found in their tombs were made of precious metals. The important characteristic of their art, the depiction of animals, was pushed into the background and the few remaining pieces show animal struggles and not the animals per se. The botanical and geometric ornaments appeared together with what is called the polychrome style; the advent of colorful precious stones encased in precious metal. Together with the traditional art of the Scythians, the Greco-Bactrian and Hellenistic art also strongly influenced them. The most important artistic finds are from the Kuban region and the so-called Siberian Gold sheets. – B: 1230, 1666, 1144, 1153, 1020, T: 3240.→Scythians; Avars.

Saroldu (Sarolt, Sarolta) (around 954 - after 997) – She was a daughter of Kalota, the first Transylvanian gyula, granddaughter of the leader Tétény (Tuhutum), and wife of Reigning Prince Géza-István. In Turkish her name means white weasel, a more appropriate version may be “white lady” (princess). Her striking beauty caught the attention of Reigning Prince Géza, and she became his wife. She was educated in the Byzantine Christian rite, supported the spread of Christianity, and with her husband converted to the Roman Catholic rite in 972. She was noted for being strong willed, appreciative of fine drinks, and was a good horse-woman. She took a life-long vow to acquaint the whole nation with the new faith and is credited with the spread of Christianity in Hungary. Her first child, Vajk, born in 975, was crowned the first Christian king of Hungary, as István I (later St. Stephen). She also had four daughters: Judit married Polish Prince, Boleszlo I; the second daughter married Radomir, Crown Prince of Bulgaria; the third married Otto Orseolo, Doge of Venice; and her namesake, Sarolt, married the Hungarian Palatine Aba. Their son, Sámuel Aba, later became the king. Upon the death of her husband, Saroldu continued to manage his wealth until Koppány, ruler of Somogy, proposed to her in order to assume total control according to the ancient levirate practice. The remainder of her life was not chronicled. – B: 0942, 1666, 1020, T: 7658.→Géza-István, Reigning Prince.

Sárosi, György (George) (Budapest, 16 September 1912 - Genoa, 20 July 1993) – Soccer-player. As a 19-year old, he moved from the Polytechnic Team to the Ferencváros FC (Budapest district) team. Shortly thereafter, he became the determining and legendary player of the green-whites: in 383 matches he gained 340 goals; with his team, he received seven official and one non-official championship titles; he was also a member of the winning Hungarian Cup team four times. He was very successful in the selected team: in 61 matches, he kicked 42 goals into the opponent’s net. He took part in two world championships (1934, 1938); in the 1938 match he reached the finals and, in the finale of the match against the Italians, he also scored a goal. Hungary lost the finals 4 - 2 and the contemporary Press described it as an enormous tragedy and disgrace. During those years, he finally obtained a Doctorate in Law. World War II ended his career. Afterwards, he worked as a trainer in Italy. Among others he was with the Juventus team for three years, during which time he received one championship title and one silver medal. Later, he led the Bari and the Select Roma teams; moreover, he became the professional leader of the Italian selected team. He was one of the most successful Hungarian soccer-players of all time. – B: 1884, 1895, T: 7456.

Sárosi, Gyula (Julius) (Sárosy) (Borossebes, now Sebiş, Romania, 12 February 1816 - Pest, 16 November 1861) – Poet. He completed his legal studies at the College of Eperjes, (now Prešov, Slovakia), while he taught Hungarian language and literature at the local High School. In 1838 he was a Deputy Clerk of County Sáros and, in 1840, Clerk of the Court of Bills of Exchange at Arad (now in Romania). Already in his student years, he joined the writers’ circle of the College at Eperjes. His poems appeared in journals from 1838. He was a member of the Kisfaludy Society from 1846 and, during the summer of 1848, he was a Judge of the Court of Bills of Exchange. Early in 1849 he was operating as a government commissioner in Debrecen; in April 1849 he was elected Member of Parliament. Urged by Regent Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, he composed and published the poem Gold Trumpet (Arany Trombita) (1849), a rhymed chronicle, dealing with the War of Independence, composed of 12 “breaths”, at first in epic form, later in a spasmodic, ragged presentation to present the condition of the riotous country. Finally, it became a rhymed political pamphlet justifying the right for the War of Independence, at the same time ridiculing the enemy. Following the fall of the War of Independence, every possible copy of the pamphlet was destroyed and Sárosi was forced to flee. In his absence, he was sentenced to death in 1851. First, he was in hiding in various parts of the country; later, from 1850 to 1852, he lived incognito, under the pseudonym Albert Sorsich, as a language teacher and was in hiding in Gyöngyös. In 1852 he was caught, again sentenced to death; then the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment in a fortress. Until 1855 his captivity was spent in Königgrätz. After he was freed, he continued his work as a writer. In 1859, on hearing about the Austrian defeat at the Battle of Solferino, he composed the improvised poem Krinolin-verse. He was charged again and, from March to November 1860 he was interned in the Czech Palace of Budweis. He spent the last months of his life in Pest (later to become Budapest). His works include Poems (Költemények) (1858) and All the Works of Gyula Sárosi, vols. i-iii (Sárosi Gyula összes művei, I-III) (1881-1883). – B: 0883, 1257 T: 7456.→Kossuth, Lajos.

Sárospatak – Town in County Zemplén, north of Tokaj, on both banks of the Bodrog River at the southeast-foot of the Eperjes – Tokaj Range, on its southeastern-slopes, the so-called Tokaj-Hegyalja; it is 119 m. above sea-level; with a population of 7911 (in 1901); 11,413 (in 1930, mostly Roman Catholic, some Reformed Protestant), and 15,000 in 1983. It is a lively cultural and commercial center, called the Athens upon Bodrog. Famous for its old Reformed Academy, known as Kollégium (founded by Péter Perényi in 1531), with three faculties: Theology, Philosophy and Jurisprudence (until 1925), and a Library of over 75,000 volumes. At present, the Academy also includes a Teachers’ College and a High School. The Calvinist Reformer István (Stephen) Kopácsi developed the Institution into a College in 1548. Its full flowering was reached in the time of Prince György (George) Rákóczi I (1630-1648), and his wife Zsuzsanna (Susanna) Lorántffy (1600-1660): both of them provided it with rich endowments. Ámos Janus Comenius taught there at the time (1650-1654). The Academy experienced some vicissitudes over the centuries, especially during the Counter-Reformation era: many of the students and some of the teachers left the Academy to live in exile in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Mihály (Michael) Apafi settled them in the old town of Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania). Only in the years from 1682 to 1687 did the Academy start functioning again in Sárospatak. But in 1687, the Jesuits drove the Academy away and they had to ride out the crisis in Gönc and later in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). From 1703 it could again function in Sárospatak. Its Faculty of Law, with a Chair of Jurisprudence, opened in 1793; Lajos (Louis) Kossuth studied law there, his professor was Sándor (Alexander) Kövy. The faculty did not function between 1853 and 1861, and it finally closed down in 1925. In the town there are Reformed and Catholic High Schools, an Art Gallery, a castle with four towers that belonged to the Rákóczi family, and an adjoining Mansion with a large park, owned by Prince Windischgrätz. The town has some industry: cloth-manufacturing, important winegrowing, brandy distillery, fishery, brickyard, mill-stone and tobacco factories and flour-mills. In the outskirts of the town there are stone quarries. The Fortress (now in ruins) was well known during the Árpád Dynasty (1000-1301); it is possible that St. Elizabeth, daughter of King Andrew II, was born here. The oldest section of the town has the so-called “living-tower” from the age of King András I (Andrew) (1046-1060) and King András II (1205-1235); the finest part is the Renaissance-wing built around 1530. The 17th century wing was built by Zsuzsanna (Susanna) Lorántffy; it was in this wing that Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi I, and Ilona (Helen) Zrinyi (mother of Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II) held their wedding feast in 1666. Emperor Leopold I (Lipót) (1654-1705) had part of the castle pulled down in 1702. – B: 1068, 1582, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Perényi, Péter; Rákóczi I, Prince György; Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna; Comenius, Ámos János; Kövy, Sándor; Kossuth, Lajos; Reformed College of Sárospatak.

Sárospatak Cheerful Songs – Eleven handwritten volumes of many 18th and 19th century folk songs make up this collection. Károly (Charles) Nánásy Oláh gathered them from earlier sources in the County of Hajdú between 1842 and 1830; more songs were added until 1848. Today, it is part of the Protestant Scientific Collection. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Sárospatak Reformed College Books in Russia – During World War II, part of the most valuable manuscripts and printed books of the Library of the Sárospatak Reformed College, about 1400 printed and 47 MS library units, including many 16th century books and the MS Polish Bible (Old Testament from about 1390 to 1455) were deposited for safekeeping in the safe rooms of two Budapest banks. Immediately after the occupation of Budapest in 1944, special units of the Soviet Army opened the rooms and the individual safes and moved everything (gold, paintings, books, money etc.) to Russia. The transport of books to Russia was denied until the appearance of an article in the Moscow daily Izvestiia in 1992, admitting it. In 1997, even a catalogue in Russian of the “Trophy-books of the Sárospatak Reformed College” was published in Russia. Now, 79 per cent of the missing books are in the State Library of Nizhnii Novgorod. The whereabouts of the Polish Bible is unknown, but it is believed to be in Moscow. All attempts, even high-level discussions aimed at returning the books taken in violation of several international agreements, have so far failed. Even Russian laws rule that properties belonging to churches should be returned; but this too has been disregarded in this case. However, some of the books were returned to Hungary in 2006. – B&T: 7683.

Sárvári, Éva (Budapest, 9 March 1931 - ) – Writer. She fled from Hungary after the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight. She first went to Austria and Denmark, but in 1957 she emigrated to Australia. From there she moved to Canada in 1966, and settled in Toronto. She wrote novels and short stories based on her experiences in Australia and Canada, published serialized in the magazines Canadian Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet); Chronicle (Krónika), and Illustrated Hungarian World News (Képes Magyar Világhíradó), as well as in the We Exist (Vagyunk) of Munich. Her works include four novels: The Light is on (Kigyúlt a fény) (1972); Halfway (Félúton) (1975); Far in the South (Messze délen) (1976), and A Platter of Gold at the End of the Rainbow (Egy tál arany a szivárvány végén) (1994). – B: 0892, 1672, T: 4342, 7456.

Sas, József (Joseph) (Polacsek) (Békéscsaba, 3 January 1939 - ) – Humorist, actor, manager, writer. In 1957 he completed Kálmán (Coloman) Rózsahegyi's School of Dramatic Art and was engaged by the Kisfaludy Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) in Győr. From 1958 he was a member of the Jókai Theater (Jókai Színház) in Gyula; from 1959 a member of the National Theater of Pécs (Pécsi Színház); from 1960 a member of the Hungarian People's Army Ensemble (Néphadsereg Együttese) and, from 1966, a member of the József Katona Theater of Kecskemét (Kecskeméti Színház). Since 1973 he has been an artist on the Microscope Stage (Mikroszkóp Színpad) and, since 1985, its Manager and Director. He plays leading roles in operettas and prose works and is a permanent participant in Radio and TV-cabarets e.g. Joe, where are you? (Hol vagy Józsi?); Disco Joe (Discós Józsi); Buffoon Joe (Józsi bohóc), Dogs (Kutyák), musical, and Lala, several of them exist in recordings. He is author and presenter of numerous independent evenings. His main roles are: Tóni Slukk in Imre Kálmán's Circus Princess (Cirkuszkirálynő); Count Bóni in I. Kálmán's Gipsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő); Spirit Youth in Ede Szigligeti's Liliomfi, appeared in English translation as Youth Brings Life; and Miska in Albert Szirmai's Miska the Grandee (Mágnás Miska). He is the author of the musical Dogs (Kutyák). His stage-management at Microscope Stage include The Good Party Learns for Life (A jó párt holtig tanul); Cut Out the Politics (Csak semmi politika); The Cloven Hoof is Showing (Kilóg a lóláb); The Flat Side of Life (Az élet lapos oldala), and Watch Out NATO, the Hungarians Are Coming (Vigyázz NATO jön a Magyar). He is a recording artist of Eagle Applause (Sas-taps); Eagle-Cabaret (Sas-kabaré), and This Was It (Ez volt). He is a recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize (1980), the Karinthy Ring (1985), the Merited Artist title (1985), Erzsébet Prize (1993), the Officer's Cross of Order of Merit of Republic of Hungary (1995), the Pro Urbe Prize (1997), and the Outstanding Artist title (2002). – B: 1445, 1439, 1742, T: 7456.

Sáska László (Ladislav) (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 26 September 1890 - Arusha, Tanzania, 8 November 1978) – Physician, scientific researcher. He completed his Medical studies in Budapest and Vienna; following that, he became district Medical Officer at Isaszeg. In 1933 he emigrated to Africa and settled down in the Italian Somaliland. Because of the unbearable climate, he moved to Abyssinia, where he became Court Physician to the Imperial Family; he also organized the Medical Service of the Abyssinian Army. From there, he moved to the Tanzanian Arusha in 1940 where, for decades, he was engaged in research on tropical diseases, mainly malaria and cancer. Because of his activities in the area of cancer research, he was elected a first member of The English Royal Cancer Research Institute. He was also member of the Romanian Academy of Medical Sciences (1972). He had close contact with Albert Schweitzer. Ernest Hemingway visited him several times in Tanzania. He was a passionate hunter; his trophies are preserved at the Museum of Natural Sciences (Természettudományi Múzeum), Budapest, and at the College at Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania). His main works are: My life is Africa (Életem Afrika) (prepared for publication by János (John) Xantus, Bucharest, 1969), and From Malaria to Cancer (Malariától a rákig) (Arusha, 1939). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7684, 7456. → Xantus, János.

Sass, Árpád (Budapest, 1 September 1896 - Békéscsaba, 27 June 1957) – Painter. He began his studies in Nagybánya, (now Baia Mare, Romania) a famous artist colony, at the time in Transylvania, Hungary. After World War I he went to Italy on a study trip. After his return he went to Szolnok, another artist colony. From 1929 to 1937 he worked in the artist colony of Kecskemét. Later, he settled in Békéscsaba. In the wake of World War II, he was in charge of the County Békés Section of the School of Arts Foundation until his death. He mainly painted scenes and compositions with figures. His works include Street in Szolnok (Szolnoki utca); Circus; Fisherman's Hut (Halásztanya), and Itinerant Knife-grinder (Vándorköszörűs). In 1927 he appeared at the National Salon in a collective exhibition. Some of his paintings, such as the Halásztanya, Szolnoki utca, and Circus are held in the National Gallery, Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Sass, Flóra (Lady Baker) (Sepsiszentgyörgy ?, now Sfântu Gheorghe, Romania, 6 August 1842 - Sandford, England 11 March 1916) – Africa researcher. In the autumn of 1848, the Romanian peasants, incited against Hungarians in Transylvania (Erdély) by the Habsburgs, murdered her parents; her Romanian nurse saved her. An Armenian family adopted both of them. Her foster father, as an army major, took an active part in General József Bem's army throughout the Transylvanian campaign in the War of Independence against the Habsburg's rule (1848-1849). In the wake of the defeat the Armenian family fled with other Hungarians to Viddin, Turkey, where, in the general confusion, the little girl disappeared without a trace. Only a decade later, in January 1859, an English engineer, Samuel White Baker, found her in Viddin's slave market, bought and married her.

Baker, a passionate hunter, was just preparing to go to Africa, when he learned that his countrymen, Grant and Speke, were trying to determine the source of the Nile River. At his own expense, he equipped an expedition and set out in 1861 from Cairo up the Nile valley. On his dangerous journey, his wife, Flora, saved him from the mutinying slaves. He met the remnants of the Grant and Speke returning expedition. Proceeding further south, Baker and his wife discovered Lake Albert, which he named after the late consort of Queen Victoria. Later, they discovered the second source-branch of the Nile. Back in the British Capital, they were received with great celebration, and the Queen knighted Baker.

In 1869, in agreement with the Egyptian Monarch, Ismail Kediye, the British began their large-scale political and military undertaking to extend Egypt's suzerainty over the unexplored African territories south of Gondokoro. They also wished to take strong measures against the slave trade on the Nile and, last but not least, to serve the interests of Britain in the unoccupied areas. An expedition of over 2000 adventurers was shipped up the River Nile in steam ships and trawlers under the ultimate authority of Sir Baker. Flora Sass accompanied her husband everywhere, including this dangerous journey, almost equal in size to a military campaign. The wife of "Pasha" Baker kept a private diary of the trip that ultimately became a unique historical document: the chronicle of a colonial undertaking. On this trip they faced epidemics and attacks by natives, who decimated the crew. The elimination of the slave trade took place only during the presence of Baker's soldiers. They reached the goal of their journey, Masindi, capital of the kingdom of Unyoro, in the summer of 1873. Here Baker had a fort built and began to negotiate with the ruler, Kabba Rega, who overtly accepted the suzerainty of Egypt, but secretly endeavored to reject it. As a result of the fierce attacks, the English-Egyptian force, by then diminished to 100 men, was forced to flee the capital. Thereupon Baker used diplomacy: he installed the tribal chief Rionga, the adversary of Kabba Raga, the ruler of Unyoro, who accepted the overlordship of Egypt and possessed sufficient military forces backed by foreigners to assert his power. Baker's mission successfully ended the African phase of Flora Sass's life, which she started as a slave girl, continued as an explorer and finally became a chronicle-writer. The memory of Flora Sass remained for a long time among the natives living along the Nile. She was given the title of 'Myaudue' (Morning Star), and the colonial officials heard stories about her even a quarter of a century later. The Hungarian Florence Nightingale, Flora Sass, is the chief heroine of the book by Richard Hull, The Lover of the Nile, published in London, and her name also appears in Baker's Biography. – B: 1482, 1105, 1020, T: 7456.

Sass, Sylvia (Budapest, 12 July 1951 - ) – Opera-singer (dramatic soprano). She comes from a musical family. At the age of 14, she sang with the school orchestra in Adam's operetta Nürnberg Puppe (Nuremberg Doll). She studied music at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as a student of Mrs. F. Révhegyi. (1970-1972). She then sang in the Hungarian State Opera, Budapest (1979-1986). She has been a teacher at the Academy of Music, Budapest, from 1996. She had her debut as Frasquita in Bizet's Carmen in 1971. She became popular in Budapest in roles such as Freia in Wagner's Das Rheingold, Violetta in Verdi's La Traviata, and Mimi in Puccini's La Bohème. It was in 1976 that she ascended to stardom by singing Giselda in Verdi's I Lombardi at Covent Garden in London. In 1977 she sang in Turin as Lady Macbeth in Verdi's Macbeth, and that same year made her Metropolitan Opera debut in Puccini's Tosca with José Carreras. In 1978 she conquered the last of the major opera houses, debuting at La Scala with Plácido Domingo in Puccini's Manon Lescaut. In 1984 she starred in a revival of Franz Schrecker's Der Ferne Klang (The Distant Sound) in Venice, and also performed the world premiere of Alfano's ending of Turandot in 1982. She also performed in the world premiere of D. Malipiero's Sogno di un tramonto d'autunno in Mantova in 1988. She wrote an opera libretto, runs her own music business and voice school in Budapest, and has started to produce her own recordings, labeled Cant-Art, and has released four CDs. In the 1980s she retired from the stages of opera houses, but continues to give recitals and master courses; between 1996 and 2000 she taught at the Music Academy of Budapest. She wrote three books: The Inner Voice (A belső hang), Songs of Dreams (Álmok éneke) and In the Fascination of Angels (Az angyalok bűvöletében). She is also an accomplished painter, and had nine art exhibits throughout Hungary, and even a documentary about her artwork, broadcast on Hungarian Television. She settled in France. She is the recipient of many awards and prizes, among them: first prize at the Kodály Voice Competition in Budapest in 1972; won the Grand Prix as Violetta in La Traviata at the International Opera Competition in 1973. In 1974 she won the Silver Medal (there was no First Prize) at the International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. She also received the Merited Artist title in 1977. – B: 0874, 1031, 1445, T: 7103.

Sauer, Ignác (Ignatius) (Veszprém, 2 October 1801 - Pest, 17 November 1863) – Physician. He studied at the Universities of Pest and Vienna; in 1826 he obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Vienna. From 1826 to 1841 he practiced in Vienna; between 1843 and 1860 he was Professor of Peculiar Pathology at the University of Budapest, and in his inaugural address, he flagrantly used the Hungarian language. In 1846 he became National Senior Physician, organizer of civic public health and Senior Physician of the National Guard (Nemzetőrség); in 1861 he was again National Senior Physician; in 1862 and 1863 he was Vice-Chancellor of the University. He introduced percussion and auscultation in Hungarian medical practice. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1859). His works include Der Typhus in vier Cardialformen (1841), Prolonged Skin Eruptions (Huzamos bőrkütegekről) (1844). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Savanyú, Jóska (or Józsi; Joe) (Savanyó) (Oroszi, 1845 - Tótvázsony, 9 April 1907) – Highwayman of the Bakony Mountain Range. His father was head shepherd at Oroszi in the northern foothills of the Bakony Range, in County Veszprém. The years from 1878 to 1884 represented his golden age as a robber leader, carrying out his robberies and ravages in the Counties of Veszprém and Zala (both are in Transdanubia). He became a legendary figure who helped the exploited servants against their masters. In 1883, a nationwide warrant was issued for his apprehension; in 1884 he was caught during revelry in the inn of Haláp (east of Debrecen). He was imprisoned in the fortress jail of Illava (now Ilava, Slovakia, in the Vág River valley, northeast of Trenčín, now Trenčín, Slovakia) until 1901; then, until 1906, he was kept in the Vác jail. Through the good offices of the Bishop of Vác, Count Károly (Charles) Csáky, he was pardoned and released. He opened a tailor's workshop, but soon afterwards committed suicide. – B: 0883, 1134, T: 7456. → Highwaymen's Time; Sobri, Jóska; Rózsa, Sándor; Vidróczki, Márton.

Savar Hungarians – As a consequence of the Kangar offensive, part of the Sabirs joined forces with the ancestors of the Magyars in Lebedia, while the remainder returned to their ancestral territory, the Caucasian Mountains. Byzantine Emperor Constantine VII wrote in the 10th century that the Kangar offensive forced the settlement in the Caucasus region by part of the Magyar tribes well before their settlement in the Carpathian Basin in the 9th century AD. – B: 1153, 1020, T: 3240. → Sabirs; Lebedia.

Sávoly, Ferenc (Francis) (Alsóelemér, 29 April 1870 - Budapest, 16 May 1938) – Meteorologist, the founder of agro-meteorology in Hungary. In 1906, after obtaining his Ph.D., he entered the Meteorological Institute. On his initiative, in 1919 the Institute's Agro-meteorological Department was established; he was appointed its head. From 1925 he lectured on economical climate studies at the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1927 he was Deputy Director of the Museum of Agricultural Sciences (Mezőgazdasági Múzeum); he later became its director. He first gained acknowledgement with his research into plant diseases and their relationship to the climate, studying the affects of one or another meteorological element on the results of plant growth, and the biological needs of plants for certain climate. He also dealt with the problems of forestation and the relationship of the winds of the Nagyalföld (Great Plain). He was a permanent contributor to the periodical The Weather (Az Időjárás). From 1910 to 1927 he prepared the Monthly Report about Hungary's weather. His main works include Hygienic Importance of Humidity (Levegőnedvesség higienikus jelentősége) (1906), and From the Great Plain's Forestation and Irrigation to the Value of Bioclimatic Improvement in the Area of Agriculture (Az Alföld fásításától és öntözésétől a mezőgazdaság terén várható bioklimatikus értéknövelésről) (1920). – B: 0883, 1406, T: 7684.

Sávoly, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 30 January 1893 - Budapest, 20 December 1968) – Structural engineer. He obtained his Degree from the Budapest Polytechnic; first he worked at a Dutch planning office in 1920, where he soon became an independent designer. Noteworthy among the bridges built under his direction are: the cable bridge on the River Naft; 52 bridges for Thailand, and the opening bridge over the Hwang-Ho River near its mouth at Tien-tsin (Tianjin). He also had successes in several international bridge-building competitions (e.g. Casablanca, Mechra and Abbei). Returning to Hungary in 1925, he opened an engineering office. In 1929 he was a consultant for the construction of a bus garage in Budapest. In 1930 he took part in the building of the Talbot power station at Bánhida; in 1932 he participated in the planning of the Árpád Bridge over the Danube at Óbuda (northern part of Budapest). In 1936 he planned the bridgeheads of the Petőfi Bridge at Boráros Square, Budapest, as well as the subways and overpasses. He also planned the sewage-transfer plant of Angyalföld (northern suburb of Budapest). Between 1937 and 1939, apart from a number of works, he was responsible for the construction of the Danube banks fast-traffic road, subways under the Chain Bridge and Margaret Bridge, as well as the bridgehead of the latter, in Budapest. After World War II, he participated in the rebuilding of the destroyed Danube bridges of Budapest, blown up by the Germans in late 1944, during the siege of Budapest (24 December 1944 - 13 February, 1945), e.g. the Francis Joseph (Freedom) Bridge and the Chain Bridge; also the bridge at Szob over the Ipoly River (northwest of Budapest). Apart from rebuilding blown-up bridges, he also planned a large number of new bridges, directing their construction, as in case of the Friendship Bridge at Komárom, the Danube bridges at Újpest, Baja, Dunaföldvár, and also the ones over the Tisza River at Tokaj and Szolnok. Sávoily planned the 800 m long vehicular and railway-bridge over the Nile River at Heluan in Egypt. His engineering magnum opus was the planning and designing of the re-construction of the Elizabeth Bridge of Budapest (1960-1964) in its new form, a 6-lane suspension (cable) bridge, fully spanning the Danube from bank to bank, standing on its original piers on the banks, which was opened to the public on 21 November 1964. His last work was a plan for a bridge in the south of Budapest between Csepel and Budafok. His published works include The Nile Bridge at Heluan (A heluani Nílus-híd) (1958) and The New Elizabeth Bridge as an Engineering Achievement (Az új Erzsébet-híd mint műszaki alkotás) (1966). He was among the best of Hungarian bridge builders. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1954) and the State Prize (1965). – B: 0883, 1850, T: 7456.

Savoyai, Jenő→Savoyenor, Eugen von.

Savoyenor, Eugen von (Savoyai Jenő, Prinz Eugen, originally Eugène de Savoie-Carignan) (Paris, 18 October 1663 - Vienna, 21 April 1736) – Aristocrat and military commander. He was descended from the House of Savoy. He led the forces to liberate Buda from the 150-year Ottoman Turkish captivity. From early boyhood he wanted to be a soldier, but his parents intended him for the priesthood. He left France and joined the service of Leopold I Habsburg Emperor and King of Hungary (1654-1705). Already in 1683 (aged 20) he participated in the fighting around Vienna, surrounded by the Turkish forces; in the unsuccessful siege of Buda in 1684, and also in the victory at Esztergom in 1685. It was here that his exceptional talent as a military leader was first noticed. He fought in the united European army organized by Pope Innocent XI, which had retaken Buda from the Ottoman Turks in 1686; he was wounded in action at Buda. He also took part in other victorious battles against the Turks and cleared almost all of Hungary from Turkish occupation, leading to the Peace of Karlóca (Karlowitz, 26 January 1699), confirming the new situation. In recognition of his military achievements he was granted landed property in Hungary. His country mansion still stands at Ráckeve on Csepel Island, south of Budapest, and his equestrian statue may be seen in Buda Castle. – B: 1031, T:

Scepter – A symbol of imperial authority. Formerly the staff was an important symbol of might for kings and emperors. In general, the staff was a sign of office. The ancient Greek and Roman rulers already used a short rod with a sphere. The Hungarian royal scepter is also an ancient symbol of authority, and is part of the coronation insignia. – B: 1138, 1336, T: 7662.→ Coronation, Insignia of.

Schaár, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) (Budafok, 27 July 1908 - Budapest, 29 August 1975) – Sculptor. She completed her university studies in Budapest; her teacher was the famous sculptor, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kisfaludi Strobl. She showed her work in exhibitions from 1926 on. She arranged her first one-man show in Budapest in 1932. In the beginning of her career she became known for her character portraits. Her small-size wooden reliefs of the 1940s were followed in the 1960s by wedge-like sculptures and figures. At the same time, she created another group: female figures lying in bed, lovers and dead soldiers lying on the ground. From about the middle of 1960s, she attempted, with more and more consistency, to depict building elements – walls, doors, windows – thereby bringing alive the living space in which human activity takes place. From that time on, she used in her work the light synthetic material, the hungarocell, which made it possible for her to realize her ideas in a larger size, in life-like measurements. In spaces bordered by building elements, she created the connection between architecture and figures that were closed in and final. In 1974 she showed her new composition, the Street, in Székesfehérvár; that work theoretically and in reality is the summation of her artistic career. In 1970 she had a large exhibition arranged in the Műcsarnok (Art Gallery), in Budapest. In 1972 she had a show in Antwerp and Geneva. During her lifetime, many of her sculptures decorated public squares in Budapest, Kecskemét, Miskolc, Pécs, Tihany and other places. Her major works include Child's Head (Gyermekfej) lead (1926); Inside and Outside (Kint és bent) wood (1949); Marcell Benedek, bronze portrait (1963); Iren Psota, lead portrait (1964); Dead Soldiers (Halott Katonák) bronze (1965); Lovers (Szerelmesek) terracotta (1965); Bartók, portrait (1965); Boy Bust, bronze (1965); Lead Wall (Ólomfal) (1967); Doors (Ajtók) aluminum (1967); Story of a Relationship – Chairs (Egy kapcsolat története – Székek) bronze (1967-1972); Scientists (Tudósok), artificial stone (1968-1970); Miklós Radnóti, bronze portrait (1969); Bluebeard's Castle (A kékszakállú herceg vára) glass and bronze (1970); Monument of Sachsenhausen (Sachsenhauseni emlékmű) synthetic stone (1971), and Lőrinc Szabó, gypsum portrait (1973). Most of her estate is preserved in the King Stephen Museum (István Király Múzeum) in Székesfehérvár. A number of her works can be seen in the Hungarian National Gallery in Budapest, at the Janus Pannonius Museum in Pécs, and several other national and foreign public and private collections. In 1964 it was Gábor Kovács who made a film about her work, entitled Psota-Portré, and in 1967 he made a film about the artist's works for television. In 1973, Boris Zsigmondi prepared a TV portrait film about her; Peter Fitz' small film immortalized her composition The Street (Az Utca) in 1974. She won the Szinyei Award (1932), the Munkácsy Award (1965), and the Merited Artist title (1972). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7684, 7456.→Kisfaludi Strobl, Zsigmond; Ferenczy, Béni; Vilt, Tibor.

Schafarzik, Ferenc (Francis) (Debrecen, 20 March 1854 - Budapest, 5 September 1927) – Geologist. He studied at the University of Budapest (1876-1882), and was a demonstrator in its mineralogical-geological department, under József (Joseph) Szabó. From 1882 he was on the staff of the Geological Institute. Between 1884 and 1888 he was Editor of the Geological Bulletin with Gyula (Julius) Pethő. From 1891 he was an honorary lecturer in Engineering Geology at the Budapest Polytechnic; from 1904 a professor in the department of mineralogy and geology. Between 1910 and 1916 he was President of the Geological Society; also President of its hydrological section until the end of his life. Earlier on, he worked in the field of petrology. From 1877 to 1885 he researched the volcanic rocks of the Cserhát Mountain. In 1886 Schafarzik participated in Mór (Maurice) Déchy's expedition to the Caucasus Mountains, where he made a study of descriptive petrology and investigated the volcanism and morphology. In 1881 he instituted the seismological committee of the Geological Society. During the 1910s, he studied the geological structure of the Eastern and Southern Carpathians and the Krassó-Szörény Ore Mountains (in Transylvania, Erdély, now in Romania) and made a detailed geological study of the environs of Budapest, specializing in the hydrology of the Danube banks on the Buda side, and the thermal waters of Buda. He founded the Schafarzik Medal of the Hungarian Hydrological Society in 1943. He was one of the pioneers of engineering geology, seismology and hydrology in Hungary. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1902; ordinary 1916). His works include The Pyroxene Andesites of the Cserhát Mountain (A Cserhát piroxénandezitjei) (1892) and Geology of the Environs of Ruszkabánya (now Rusca Montană, Romania) (Ruszkabánya környékének geológiai viszonyai) (1906). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456.

Schaffer, Károly (Charles) (Vienna, 7 September 1864 - Budapest, 16 October 1939) – Physician, psychiatrist. In 1889 he obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest. From 1893 he was an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in neuropathology; in 1901 became a titular associate professor. Concurrently, from 1889 he worked at the Neurological and Psychiatric Clinic of the University of Budapest, where he became a demonstrator in 1890; Senior Physician of the Elizabeth Hospital for the Poor, and of the Outpatient Department from 1895. In 1912 he became an Associate Professor and also Director of the Institute for studying brain tissue. From 1925 he was a full Professor of Psychiatry and Neuropathology. He was one of the founders of the Neuropathological Histology School in Hungary, and one of the founders of the study of neurons. He also carried out research in the fields of morphology and histology. He clarified the pathology of Tay-Sachs illness and investigated the material bases for talent and genius. Schaffer was the first to show the short-axis cells of the cerebral crust and the fasciculus arcuatus bulbi, found on the myelencephalon. For the explanation of the morphological bases of inheritable mental and neurological illnesses he set up the Schaffer trials named after him. He was editor of the journal Hirnpatologische Beiträge published in Berlin. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1914, ordinary 1926, honorary 1938). His works include Suggestion und Reflex (1895); The Nervous System of Count István Széchenyi from a Medical Specialist's Point of View (Gróf Széchenyi István idegrendszere szakorvosi megvilágításban) (1923), and The Genius (A lángész) (1938). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Schandl, József (Joseph) (Bakonybél, 27 April 1885 - Budapest, 10 July 1973) – Veterinarian. In 1909 he obtained his Veterinary Degree and, in 1914, his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest. In 1911 he was a demonstrator at the Veterinary Academy of Mosonmagyaróvár; from 1912 a senior lecturer and, in 1918 and 1919, a full professor. From 1919 to 1922 he was a lecturer at the College of Veterinary Science at Budapest; from 1919 a professor and, from 1923 to 1933 Dean. From 1927 to 1960 he was Director of the National Wool and Silk Institute. In 1953 he obtained his Ph.D. in Agronomics. From 1945 to 1948 he was Dean of the Faculty, and from 1948 to 1960 Director of the Livestock-raising Research Institute. He was an outstanding representative of Hungarian agronomics, and an eminent specialist of sheep farming and animal husbandry. He organized the registering of sheep herds and introduced the supervision of milk yield. He was a member of the Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1953, ordinary 1960). His works include Encyclopedia of Animal Husbandry (Az állattenyésztés enciklopédiája) (1924); Sheep Breeding (Juhtenyésztés) (1951), and Stock-raising (Szarvasmarha-tenyésztés) (1952). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1954. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Schedius, Lajos (Lewis) (Győr, 20 December 1768 - Pest, 12 November 1847) – Writer, linguist and esthetician. His tertiary studies were in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), Sopron and Göttingen, Germany. From 1792 he was Professor of Esthetics at the University of Pest, where he lectured on Greek Language and Literature, as well as on Pedagogy. In 1835 he was Vice Chancellor of the University. In 1841 he became a member of the Kisfaludy Society and also its Vice President. The syllabus he worked out for the Lutheran schools (1816) reflects the more recent aspirations of neo-humanism. He became the drama critic of the first Hungarian theater company formed in 1790 and, with József (Joseph) Kármán; he took part in the launching of the journal Uránia (1794). He was editor of the journals Literarischer Anzeiger für Ungarn (1797-1799) and Zeitschrift von und für Ungarn (Newspaper from and for Hungary) (1802-1804), in which he (Literary Gazette for Hungary) endeavored to acquaint foreign countries with the conditions of Hungary. He was in close friendly relations with Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy and Károly (Charles) Kisfaludy. He wrote poems and works in Hungarian, German and Latin on bibliography, philosophy, esthetics, history, society, geography and economics. In 1836 he published a large wall map of Hungary: The land outlay (geography) of Hungary and Transylvania (Magyarország és Erdély földabrosza) (Pest, 1833-36), edited by the surveyor of Pest, Benjámín Sámuel. His main work was Principia philocaliae seu doctrinae pulchri... (Principle of Love of Beauty or the Doctrine of Beauty) (Pest, 1828). His other works include Commentatio de sacris operis veterum Christianorum (History of the sacred word of ancient Christianity) (Göttinga, 1790); Der dankbare Jüngling (The Tankful Youth) (Pozsony 1792); Compendiaria graecae grammaticae institutio (A comprehensive Greek grammar instruction) (Buda, 1818). More of his treatises appeared in the paper Urania, such as The amiable nature of religion (A vallásnak szeretetreméltó volta) (1794), later in the Aurora, such as The Science of Beauty (A szépség tudománya) (1822). He also published agricultural work: Vollständiger Unterricht über die vortheilhafteste und leichteste Art des Seidenbaues (Full instruction on the most advantages and easiest way of making silk) (Pest 1810). Schedius was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (honorary 1831, director 1845). – B: 0883, 1257; T: 7456.→Kármán, József; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Kisfaludy, Károly.

Scheiber, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 9 July 1913 - Budapest, 3 March 1985) – Rabbi, linguist, literary historian. From both parents he was the descendant of rabbi ancestors. He was a student of Bernát Heller, and was made a rabbi in 1938. Between 1938 and 1940 he searched through the libraries of Oxford, Cambridge and London to study Medieval Hebrew manuscripts. From 1941 to 1944 he was a senior rabbi at Dunaföldvár. Somehow he survived the German occupation of Hungary, but he lost his mother. The Rabbinical Training Institute was destroyed, but he had it rebuilt (1945-1950); from 1950 he became its director and, although he received a number of invitations from abroad, he remained in this position until his death. He published some 1600 works. His magnum opus is his Geniza Studies (Hildesheim, 1981), dealing with universal Jewish cultural history; for this work he was awarded a Doctorate in Linguistics in 1983. He published the Fauna und Mineralien by Immanuel Löw in 1969; the Diary of Ignác (Ignatius) Goldzieher (1978), and the Majmun Codex (1980). He edited the memorial volumes of Heller (1941), Löw (1947), and Goldzieher (1958), the volumes of the Hungarian-Jewish archives (from 1965), and the monographs of the Jewish parishes of Hungary. From 1970 he restarted the Annals. Scheiber's literary research and decoding is considered significant. He created a new school with the method of using comparative tradition and subject matter. He published previously unpublished letters, poems. His research on the works of J. Arany and K. Mikszáth is important. His sermons represent the finest traditions of the oeuvre. The Jewish material of his library is held in the Eastern Library of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His works include Hungarian Jewish Inscriptions, monograph (1960, 1983), and Folklore and Subject-history (I-II, 1974, 1977, III in 1984). In Budapest a High School, an Elementary School, and a prize bear his name. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Goldzieher, Ignác; Jews in Hungary.

Scheitz, László (Ladislav) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1897 - Katanga, 24 April 1963) – Physician, Minister of Health in Katanga, Africa. His medical studies were completed at the University of Kolozsvár (1919). From 1920 to 1925 he was a surgical student at the University of Budapest, later a surgeon there. Between 1925 and 1934 he was a surgical assistant physician and later an assistant lecturer at the Rókus Hospital, Budapest. From 1934 to 1936 he was the senior physician at the National Social Insurance Fund (Országos Társadalom Biztosítási Alap – OTBA). From 1938 to 1939 he worked as a surgeon in the Belgian Congo. In 1940, on the outbreak of World War II, he returned to Hungary. Between 1940 and 1945 he was an assistant lecturer at the St. István Hospital, Budapest, and in 1946 a senior physician in the hospital on Maglód Street, Budapest. In 1948 he went back to the Belgian Congo as a senior physician and after the announcement of the independence of Katanga on 11 July 1960, he became Minister of Health of Katanga. – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456.

Schenek, István (Stephen) (Esztergom, 3 July 1830 - Budapest, 26 July 1909) – Chemist, inventor. He received his Doctorate from the University of Vienna in 1856; became a chemistry teacher in a special, modern high school in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) in 1859, as well as in an agricultural college in Keszthely in 1867. Schenek was invited to assume the chair of professorship in the Mining and Forestry Academy of Selmechánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia) in 1870, where he lectured in chemistry and natural sciences until 1872; and thereafter, until his retirement in 1892 he lectured in general and introductory chemistry. In 1885, he and his professor colleague, István (Stephen) Farbaký invented a much-improved lead battery, which was named after them. Several of his scientific papers were published in contemporary journals, and the Hungarian Academy of Sciences invited him to become a member. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7456.→Farbaky, István.

Schenker, Zoltán, Ozoray (Váradszentmárton, 13 October 1880 – 25 August 1966) – Saber and foil fencer. He participated in three Olympiads, winning 3 medals. He first competed at the 1912 Stockholm Games, and took the Gold Medal in the team saber event. He was also fencing in the individual foil competition, and won both his 1st and 2nd round pools, but was eliminated in the semifinals. Schenker returned to the Olympics at the 1924 Paris Games, and fenced in 4 events. He won 2 medals in team competitions. In team foil, the Hungarian team easily captured the Bronze Medal. In the team saber, Schenker and Hungary won the silver medal. In the individual saber, Schenker advanced to the finals and finished 4th overall. His final Olympiad was the Amsterdam Games in 1928. Competing only in individual foil, he advanced to the semifinals, where he was eliminated. In the 1910s and 1920s, Schenker was one of Hungary's top fencers when the country was known as the best fencing nation in the world. He was also a well-known author on fencing. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Scheuthauer, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Töketerebes, now Trebišov, Slovakia, 25 km north of Sátoraljaújhely, 11 March 1832 - Budapest, 28 January 1894) – Physician and pathologist. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Vienna in 1861. Between 1860 and 1870 he was a demonstrator under Professor Rokitsky in No.1 Institute of Pathological Anatomy in Vienna. In 1870 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) and a pathological anatomist of the National General Hospital of Brünn (now Brno, Czech Republic). From 1870 he was an associate professor of pathological histology at the University of Pest; from 1871 a pathological anatomist and a senior physician of the Rókus Hospital; then, between 1874 and 1894, a full Professor of Pathological Histology at the University of Budapest. He was engaged in the research of brain histology, nerve fibers and the pathology of illnesses caused by intestinal parasites. He also worked as forensic physician for the defense of the Tiszaeszlár trial. He carried out research in medical history as well. His works include Theoretical Pathological Anatomy (Elméleti kórbonctan) (1878). – B: 1730, T: 7456.→Tiszaeszlár Affair.

Schiff, András (Andrew) (Budapest, 21 December, 1953 - ) – Piano-virtuoso. He began taking piano lessons at the age of five with Elisabeth Vadász, and studied music at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, with Pál (Paul) Kadosa, György Kurtág and Ferenc Rados (1968-1975); he also studied harpsichord with George Malcolm in London. He was a member of the National Philharmonic Society, Budapest (1976-1979). He taught at the Academy of Music, Budapest (1975-1983). Between 1983 and 1985 he was a soloist of the Decca Studio, London, and recorded all of Mozart's piano-sonatas and piano-concertos, the piano works of J. S. Bach, piano sonatas of Robert Schumann, etc. He performed recitals in all of the international music capitals, playing the major keyboard works of Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn and Bartók. He has a multi-faceted career as both soloist and conductor. He performs in this dual role with the Chamber Orchestra of Europe on its North American tour, with appearances at both New York's Lincoln Center and Carnegie Hall, Chicago's Orchestra Hall, San Francisco's Davies Symphony Hall and Princeton, New Jersey's McCarter Theater. He performed Bach's

Goldberg Variations at Los Angeles's Walt Disney Hall, in San Francisco and Santa Barbara, and in a live recording released it on the ECM label. For the Bach celebrations in 2000, commemorating the 250th anniversary of the composer's death, he gave a series of recitals and conducted the St. Matthew Passion and other compositions. In 2001 he directed concert performances of Mozart's Così fan tutte in Vicenza, and at the Edinburgh Festival. From 1989 to 1998 he was the founder and artistic director of Musiktage Mondsee, a music festival near Salzburg. He is also the artistic director of the Hommage to Palladio series in Vicenza. He has established a prolific discography, including recordings for ECM New Series, Teldec and London/Decca. He is the recipient of several international awards and prizes, including two Grammy Awards, the Bartók Prize (1991), the Claudio Arrau Memorial Medal, Düsseldorf (1994), the Kossuth Prize (1996), the Leonie Sonnings Music Prize, Copenhagen (1997), the Palladio d'Oro Award by the city of Vicenza (2003), and the title of Ambassador of Hungarian Culture (2008). – B: 0874, 1868, T: 7103.→Kadosa, Pál; Kurtág, György.

Schlachta, Margit (Margaret) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 18 September, 1884 - Buffalo, USA 6 January, 1974) – Founding leader of the Social Sisterhood Association (Szociális Testvérek Társasága), legitimist politician. She joined the 'Social Mission Society' (Szociális Missziói Társulat) in 1908, and organized the Christian Women's Camp (Keresztény Női Tábor). She founded the Social Sisterhood Association (Szociális Testvérek Társasága), which was active between 1923 and 1949. In 1934 she also founded the Catholic Women's Social Center (Katolikus Női Szociális Központ). During World War II, she turned against Nazism, and in 1944 she rescued and protected persecuted persons in the Mission Society's houses. From 1945 until 1949 she was a Member of Parliament. In 1946 she took a legitimist position in support of the Monarchy, and voted against a republican form of government. For a speech in 1947, she was banned from the Parliament for 60 days. She emigrated overseas and settled in the USA in 1949. From 1915 to 1944 she was Founding Editor of the periodical Christian Woman (Keresztény Nő), and between 1918 and 1922 she was Editor of Hungarian Woman (Magyar Nő). Her articles were also published in periodicals, such as the Word of the Spirit (Lélek szava) and Catholic Review (Katolikus szemle) – B: 0883, 0945, T: 7667.

Schlägl Glossary (Schlägl Szójegyzék) – The most extensive antique Hungarian handwritten word list, it was prepared by an unknown copier between 1400 and 1410. The librarian of the Premonstran Monastery in Schlägl, Upper Austria found it when reorganizing the library in 1890. Originally a Latin dictionary, titled Hortularium, containing 130 Hungarian language glosses, was attached to it. While its arrangement and vocabulary show a close relationship with the Beszterce Glossary of the early 15th century (Besztercei szójegyzék), its text is more reliable and contains word groups not appearing in the other. It contains 2140 itemized words (mainly nouns) grouped in 32 conceptual areas. One part of its word treasure belongs to the conceptual sphere of literary erudition. – B: 1150, 1230, T: 7669.→Beszterce Glossary.

Schleicher, László (Ladislav) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 30 March 1903 - Pozsony, 17 January 1999) – Teacher, choirmaster and composer. From 1926 to 1935 he studied Hungarian- and Latin- music in the Faculty of Arts of Pozsony University and received a diploma in 1935. From 1946 to 1950 he completed violin, composition and conducting classes at the Pozsony Conservatory of Music under Gustáv Náhlovský, Eugen Suchoň, Ján Cikker and Kornel Schimpl. From 1935 to 1938 he was a teacher at the Hungarian High School of Érsekújvár (now Nové Zámky, Slovakia). Between 1938 and 1945 he taught at the Hungarian High School of Pozsony. From 1950 to 1959 he was a teacher at the Pozsony School of Music and at the Conservatory of Music; on 1 September 1959 he was discharged because of his church activities. From 1960 until his retirement in 1968, he lived in Somorja (now Šamorín, Slovakia). Between 1968 and 1978 he taught violin, music theory and chamber music at the School of Music in Pozsonyhidegkút (now Dúbravka, Slovakia). From 1959 to 1975 he ran a conducting course. Between 1955 and 1978 Schleicher played viola in a String Quartet, engaged in music-composition, choir-direction and artistic photography, as well as giving lectures. During the years 1926 to 1971 he was choirmaster of the Salvator Mixed Choir; from 1964 to 1972 he was choirmaster of the Central Hungarian Teachers' Choir in Czechoslovakia; between 1972 and 1982 he was choirmaster of the Hungarian Christian Church Choir. He was the founder and general secretary of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Society (1980-1999). He conducted orchestras on more than 820 occasions; in his concert programs 80 instrumental masses were performed. He initiated the Singing Youth Movement (Éneklő Ifjúság Mozgalom). He participated in the activities of the Toldy Circle (Toldy Kör), Ottokár Prohászka Circle and the Béla Bartók Choral Ensemble. He composed songs, church music (psalms, masses), military songs, edited folksongs, songs of the highwaymen; also composed accompaniments, and arrangements of piano works for instrumental ensembles. His books include Playing and Analyzing Choir Scores (Énekkari partitúra játssása és elemzése) (Pozsony, 1972) and Methodology of Teaching Choir-singing (Karénektanítás módszertana), by Zbyněk Mrkoš, translation (1973). Commemorative medals were presented to him in numerous cities and country towns (1979-1989). – B: 1083, 1890, T: 7456.

Schlick, Ignác (Ignatius) (Pest, 13 April 1821 - Pest, 23 December 1869) – Iron manufacturer and owner of one of the first Hungarian ironworks. After completing his public and high school studies, he learned his profession in the great ironworks of France and Switzerland. After seven years, he returned home and established an ironworks in Buda that was in operation for only a short while. For several years, he was the manager of the foundry of the ship building factory in Óbuda; thereafter he, together with his son-in-law, Frederick Langenfeld, he opened a foundry in Buda. Later on, they moved to Pest and established the Schlick Factory. Noteworthy creations of the factory are: the stage of the Hungarian Opera Theater, Budapest; the former Main Customs Building; the roof structure of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (Magyar Tudományos Akadémia) and that of the Opera Theater, the metal structure of the Industrial Hall (Iparcsarnok), Budapest; and the great Drava-River Bridge at Varasd (now Varaždin, Croatia). Later on he set up a sculpture foundry. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7684.

Schlosser, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 11 October 1889 - Budapest, 19 July 1959) – Soccer player. He played for the Gymnastics Club of Ferencváros (Ferencvárosi Torna Club – FTC) and contributed to all its successes. He was selected for the national team 68 times, for the first time in 1906. In 1915 he transferred to the “Hungarian Gymnastics Circle” (Magyar Testgyakorlók Köre – MTK). Later, he coached in Budapest, at Norrköping in Sweden, and in Krakow for Wisla. In 1925 he signed up with the WAC of Vienna as a player and coached the Brigittenauer AC at the same time. Following his return from abroad he joined the FTC again, where he was champion in the 1926-1927 season. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667.

Schmidt, Eligius Robert (Karánsebes, now Caransebeș, Romania, 23 March 1902 - Budapest, 23 July 1973) – Mining engineer, geologist, hydro-geologist, and holder of a Candidate's Degree in soil and mineralogy (1953). He obtained his Degree from the University of Mining and Forestry Engineering of Sopron (1928). With his dissertation on the first thousand-meter boring at Szeged, he obtained a Doctorate from the University of Szeged in 1929. In 1930 he was a geology specialist in the Ministry of Finance; thereafter, having obtained a state scholarship, he spent 2 years at the Polytechnic of Vienna and also at the Mining Institute of Loeven (1930-1932). In 1939 he obtained an honorary lecturer qualification at the Polytechnic of Budapest. He was a geologist at the Institute of Earth Sciences (Földtani Intézet) (1932-1942). From 1942 to 1944 he was Manager of the Hungarian Italian Petroleum Co. (Magyar-Olasz Ásványolaj Rt.). Between 1945 and 1951 he worked in various ministries; then he returned to the Institute of Soil Sciences where he was Head of the Water-Soil Sciences Department until 1966, and worked there until his death. In 1947 Schmidt was appointed Professor at the Budapest Polytechnic. He also dealt with the research of native hydrocarbons and salt; then, after 1945, with the questions of native energy bases. The numerous borings and wells of the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld) occupied an important place in his life's work. In the explanatory booklets issued along with the soil science maps, he gave detailed information regarding deep borings of wells to obtain water, on the basis of his inspection tours and survey measurements. He participated in researches for the Crown; he had an important role in the establishment of thermal water wells at Hajdúszoboszló and Debrecen. He spent decades in his studies with the geothermal gradient of the Hungary (1932, 1936, 1938, 1941, 1943, 1964). He was the first to provide a scientific water-land classification of the country. In his geo-mechanical researches he conducted, first of all, tectonic investigations. He dealt with the geological structure of Thuringia, and even that of with Iceland. From the beginning of the 1960s, he dealt with the research, exploration and composition of native thermal, mineral and medicinal waters. For years he had been the head of the department that provided an official professional opinion of all efforts to obtain water from below the surface before it could be tapped. These proved to be especially successful in the establishment of industrial and drinking water wells at Paskál-malom, Budapest-Zugló, around the Balaton, and the thermal wells on the Hungarian Lowlands. He publicized the results of his water-land sciences research and observations in his work, the Hydrological Atlas of Hungary; and his tectonic ideas and explanations in his book entitled Geo-mechanics. These works are of trailblazer quality in Hungary; and are significant works in the international professional literature. In total, he published 170 scientific essays and books. Schmidt's major works are: Geo-mechanics (Geomechanika) (1957) and Hydrological Atlas of Hungary (Magyarország vízföldtani atlasza) (1961, 1962). He was an outstanding Hungarian professional of the techniques and evaluation of deep boring. He achieved outstanding results in evaluating the water-soil sciences from the geotechnical and geo-mechanical point of view of great (land) recesses. He was one of the outstanding hydrologists in the 20th century. The Hungarian Hydrological Institute awarded him the Ferenc Schafarzik medal (1961), the Silver Class of the Pál Vásárhelyi Award (1972), and the Samu Zorkóczy Commemorative Medal (1969). The Soil Science Society of the German Democratic Republic elected him an honorary member in 1967. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1956). – B: 0883, 1405, T: 7684.

Schmidt, Éva (Budapest, 28 June 1948 - Khanty-Manshiysk, 4 August 2002) – Linguist, Ostyak-Vogul researcher. From the University of Budapest she acquired a Degree in English, Finno-Ugric Languages and Ethnography. From 1969 to 1971 she was on a scholarship in Leningrad, USSR (now St. Petrograd), where she met Ostyak and Vogul students and secretly visited their land. She obtained a Doctoral Degree from the University of Leningrad in 1973. In the same year she worked at the Ethnographic Research Institute, Budapest. Her plan was to develop a folklore archive of the North Ostyak people, which she realized in the early 1990s. Among her collections are a complete record of a Bear Festival and a collection of fables. She published some 70 studies, e.g. Trend in the 20th Century Ob-Ugric Oral Tradition (1980); Connection Between Metrics, Style and Music in Northern Khanti Folk Poetry (1985); Khanti and Manshi Religion (1987); Bear Cult and Mythology of Northern Ugrians (1989), and History of the North Ostyak Folklore Archive in Beloiarski (1997), in Hungarian. Some of her works remained in manuscript. – B: 1012, 1031, T: 7103.

Schmidt, Ferenc (Francis) (Zalagereszeg, 21 January 1881 - San Diego, 29 July 1958) – Physician. He studied Medicine at the Universities of Budapest and Graz. He worked as a medical officer in World War I until 1915, and later as a surgeon-major. He worked in the army until his retirement. In the meantime, the Arch-Abbot of Tihany Abbey (on the peninsula in Lake Balaton) appointed him Head Physician of the Sanatorium at Balatonfüred, where he worked until 1952. In 1922 he became a lecturer at the Medical School of the University of Budapest and, from 1952 to 1954, had a private practice in Balatonfüred. He published a number of articles in the journal Medical Weekly (Orvosi Hetilap) between 1929 and 1940. After the death of Ernő (Ernest) Cséplő in 1938, he became Co-President of the Balaton Council. To join his children, he emigrated to the USA, and died in San Diego. He was the physician and a good friend of the great poet Endre Ady (1917). In 1926 he restored the health of Rabindranath Tagore, the Indian Nobel-Prize Laureate poet, with whom he remained in contact until his death. He was one of the founders of the renowned Cardiac Sanatorium of Balatonfüred. He was the author of a great number of specialist medical studies. His works include The New Balatonfüred (Az új Balatonfüred) (1913); Chronic Cardiac Insufficiency (Idült szívelégtelenségek) (1936), and Transdanubia and Transylvania (Dunántúl és Erdély) (1940). – B: 0932, 1477, T: 7456. → Ady, Endre.

Schmidt, Mária (1953 - ) – Historian. She studied German Literature and History at the University of Budapest, obtaining a Ph.D. in 1999. She worked as a researcher in modern history. She dealt with, among other topics, the Hungarian Jews after World War I. She went on a scholarship to Austria, England, America, Germany and Israel. Formerly, she taught at the University of Innsbruck, the Péter Pázmány Catholic University (1996); she was the Head of the 20th and 21st Century Institutes (1999-2000). Her fields of research include the history of Hungarian Jews from 1918, the history of Hungary under dictatorships in the 20th century and the dictatorships in the 20th century. She was chief advisor to Prime Minister Viktor Orbán (1998-2002). She is the Head of the House of Terror Museum (2002). Her major works include Collaboration or Co-operation?

(Kollaboráció vagy kooperáció?) (1990); On the Devil-coach of Dictatorships (Diktatúrák ördögsekerén) (1998); The Role of Anti-Semitism in the Years of System-change (Az antiszemizmus szerepe a rendszerváltás éveiben) (1999); Transition and Contradiction. The Case of Hungary (co-editor) (1999), With the Same Measure (Egyazon mércével) (2003), and Politically Incorrect (Politikailag inkorrekt), selected writings between 2002 and 2010, (2011). Among his distinctions are: Commander of the Order of Merit of the French Republic (2001), Great Cross of the Order of Merit of the Loyalty of the Patria (2004), and the Commander Cross of the Merit of the Republic of Poland (2011).

Schmidthauer, Lajos (Louis) (Révkomárom, now Komarnó, Slovakia, 1 March 1882 - Budapest, 4 November 1956) – Organist and composer. He studied with János (John) Koesler, Árpád Szendy, István Thomán, K. Straube, F. A. Guilmant, and E. Bossi. First he worked as a pharmacist; but eventually dedicated the rest of his life to music. He was owner of the Igmánd Bitter-Water Well (Igmándi Keserűvíz) that he made popular in the country. In the hall of his villa on Orlay Street, Budapest, he had his own pipe organ. He also taught at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music from 1934 to 1944, and at the National Music School between 1940 and 1944. He visited most of the major European cities on concert tours. In his performances he introduced, often for the first time, the works of a number of contemporary composers (e.g. Paul Hindemith). He was particularly talented in improvisation. He was also famous as a designer of great Hungarian organs, and he inaugurated many of them. Known as a patron of artists, he supported young painters and writers. His works include scherzos, pastorals, e.g. Storm on Lake Balaton, Fantasy for Organ (Vihar a Balatonon, orgonafantázia) (1933). His writings include Unified Organ Design (Egységes orgonatervezet) in Music Pages (Zenelap) (1918); Tasks and Problems of the Concert Organ (Aufgabe and Probleme der Konzertorgel) (1934), and Insights, Innovations, Exaggerations and Mistakes of the New Hungarian Baroque-movement in Organ Design (Az Új magyar barokk-mozgalom jó meglátásai újításai, túlzásai, és tévedesei az orgonaépítészetben) (1937). When the Soviet Army laid siege to Budapest on 4 November 1956 he committed suicide. A plaque was placed on his birthplace in Komarnó.

Schmitt, Jenő Henrik (Eugene), (Znaim, Moravia, 5 November 1851 - Schmargendorf, near Berlin, 14 September 1916) – Philosopher. He studied at the Universities of Budapest and Berlin; on a Trefort scholarship, he furthered his studies, and in 1888, received a Ph.D. from the University of Budapest. From 1890 he worked as a librarian for the Library of the Ministry of Justice; however he relinquished his position in 1896 so that he could ensure his writer's freedom. He spent the last years of his life near Berlin. At first he was a follower of Hegel, but later he developed his own thought system, which he called the New Gnosticism, mixing oriental theosophical doctrines and the anarchist ideas of Tolstoy and Nietzsche. His work entitled Das Geheimnis der Hegelischen Dialektik (The Secret of Hegelian Dialectic) (1880), attracted attention and was honored by the Philosophical Society of Berlin. He propagated his anarchist doctrines in his books and in his journals until 1900 (Without State, Without Violence, and Ohne Staat) and they were also spread by word of mouth, especially among the peasantry of the Great Hungarian Plain, exercising influence on the workers. He corresponded with Leo Tolstoy, who was also an associate of his journals. Because of his anarchism, lawsuits were brought against him several times, which was a sensation of the times, but he was acquitted. He designated the early Christian gnosis as the historical preliminary of his philosophical thought; his students organized themselves in sects, also calling themselves Gnostics. With his philosophical tendency he influenced some of the writers of the early 20th century, e.g. Gyula (Julius) Juhász. In Leipzig he edited three annual volumes of Die Religion des Geistes (The Religion of Spirit). Among his further works were: Friedrich Nietzsche an der Grenze zweier Weltalter (Friedrich Nietzsche on the Border of Two Ages) (1900); Graf Leo Tolstoy und seine Bedeutung für unsere Kultur, I, II (Count Leo Tolstoy and his Meaning for our Culture, vols. i, ii) (1901); Die Gnosis (The Gnosis, vols. i, ii) (1903 - 1907); Der Idealstaat (The Ideal State) (1904), and Kritik der Philosophie von Standpunkte der Erkenntnis (The Critique of Philosophy from the Viewpoints of Cognition) (1907). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Juhász, Gyula.

Schmitt, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 13 May 1942 - ) – Fencer, diplomat, politician. He studied at the University of Economics, Budapest and obtained a Degree in 1965; he received a Ph.D. from the University of Physical Training in 1992; since 1994 he has been a titular professor. First, he worked for the tourist business and became Deputy-Manager of the Hotel Astoria, Budapest. In 1981 he was in charge of the People's Stadium (Népstadion) in Budapest. In 1983 he was Vice-President of the National Physical Education and Sports Office (Országos Testnevelési és Sportivatal). He began his sports-career in 1955; he was twice foil fencing Olympic Champion (Fencing Team, Mexico City, 1968; Fencing Team, Munich, 1972), twice World-Champion (1970, 1971), and World-Cup Winner in 1971. He has been a member of the International Olympics Committee since 1983, President of the Hungarian Olympics Committee since 1989, and was elected to the International Olympics Executive Committee in 1991. He was voted Vice President of the International Olympics Committee in 1995. He became Hungary's Ambassador in Madrid from 1993 to 1997, and in Bern from 1998 to 2002. In 2003 he was elected Vice-President of the FIDESZ political party. From 2004 to 2010, he was a member of the European Parliament and leader of the EP delegation of FIDESZ, and finally Vice-President of the European Parliament. In 2010, he was elected President of the Republic of Hungary. However, amidst controversy over his doctoral qualification 20 years ago, he resigned from office on 2 April, 2012. He is a recipient of the Miksa Esterházy Prize (2001). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.→Fidesz; Political Parties in Hungary; Áder, János.

Schneider, Antal (Anthony) (Bey Hussein) (Transylvania, 1816 - Budapest, 1 September 1897) – Physician, officer of the Honvéd (soldier of the national defense force), later senior Turkish medical officer. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Vienna in 1840. From 1840 to 1848 he was a practicing physician in County Temes. In the spring of 1848 he became a captain in the National Guard; and from the summer of 1848 he was a Hussar Captain in General Damjanich's army. On several occasions, he saved himself with his bravery; in February 1849 he obtained important information as a reconnaissance patrol. He served also in Bem's troops, became the Polish General's friend and doctor, and followed him to Turkey. As Bey Hussein, working as a regimental medical officer, he was a member of General Bem's retinue in Damascus and Aleppo; at the General's deathbed he was his attending physician (Schneider donated the general's shroud to the Hungarian National Museum, and in 1929, Hungary presented it to Poland). In the Crimean War, Schneider was Head Physician of the Arab Army and, as a cavalry commander, he took several strategic points. After the war he practiced medicine in Istanbul. He was arrested for forgery, sentenced to 15 years imprisonment in a fortress; the English Ambassador freed him. In 1860 he lived in Korfu; joined Garibaldi's army and fought in Italy. After the 1867 Compromise between Hungary and Austria, he returned to Hungary. For some time he was under police supervision and was not allowed to practice medicine. With the help of the famous Honvéd General György Klapka, he worked as an official at the Financial Administration of Buda. – B: 1730, 1031, T: 7456.→Damjanich, János; Klapka, György; Compromise of 1867; Bem, József.

Schodelné, Klein, Rozália (Mrs. Schodel, Rosa) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 29 September 1811 - Nyáregyháza, 19 September 1854) – Singer (dramatic and coloratura soprano). She was born into a family of actors. In her childhood she was adopted by János (John) Schodel (1796-1863), who trained her voice from the time she was five years old, and married her in 1826. He then took her to Italy for further education both in voice and acting. She attended the Music School in Kolozsvár. She first appeared in 1829 in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) in the role of Agathe in Weber's Der Freischütz (Bűvös vadász). She learned singing in Vienna and, between 1833 and 1836, she was a member of the Kärntnerthor Theater, and later the Josephstädter Theater in Vienna. In 1836 she appeared in Kolozsvár, and in 1837, in the German Theater (Német Színház) of Pest. Thereafter, she was contracted by the new National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pest. She became the leading soprano despite intrigues against her. She parted with this Theatre in 1840. In 1842 she appeared on stage in Hannover, Mainz and Cologne in Germany, and at Covent Garden in London. Between 1843 and 1848, she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pest; she retired in 1849 and, at the end of her life, she lived on the estate of Pál (Paul) Nyáry, former sub-prefect, in Nyáregyháza. She is the first Hungarian dramatic singer. Her even voice, clear pronunciation and outstanding interpretation secured European renown for her. The Normafa in Buda's Hills is named after her interpretation of Bellini's Norma. Her major roles included title role in Erkel's Mária Báthori; Erzsébet Szilágyi in Erkel's László Hunyadi; Abigail in Verdi's Nabucco; tile role in Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor and Lucrecia Borgia; Lady Macbeth in Verdi's Macbeth; Donna Anna in Mozart's Don Giovanni, and Leonora in Beethoven's Fidelio. She was the first professionally trained coloratura and dramatic soprano of European standard in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, 1703, T: 7684, 7103.→Nyáry, Pál.

Schoefft, Ágoston (Augustine) (Pest, 1809 - London, 1888) – Painter. He was the most outstanding member of an old artist family of Pest. He studied at the Academies of Vienna and Munich; returned to Pest in 1835; but from 1836 he was in Bucharest, then in Odessa and Constantinople, where he worked as a much sought after portrait painter. From there he went for a longer journey to the East, where he painted the picture Crossing the Tigris River (Átkelés a Tigris folyón). He worked in Persia for a while; thereafter he painted numerous portraits at the Court of the Maharaja of Lahore. In Calcutta he drew a picture of Sándor (Alexander) Kőrösi Csoma. He visited several cities in India. In the early 1840s, he sojourned for a short while in Pest. In 1845 he had been working in Venice for some time, and he created Venice in the Night with the Palazzo Grassi (Velence éjjel a Palazzo Grassival) (now in Salzburg). From the mid 1850s, he lived alternately in Vienna and Pest. From 1864 to 1866 he traveled in North America and Mexico. The majority of his paintings depict foreign themes. He spent the last years of his life in London and died in poverty with a deranged mind. – B: 0883, 1482, T: 7684.→Kőrösi Csoma, Sándor.

Schola Hungarica – An Ensemble founded by the musicologists László (Ladislav) Dobszay and Janka (Jane) Szendrei in Budapest in 1969. The Ensemble concentrates its efforts on Gregorian chant, and has sung many works from late-medieval choral traditions and liturgies throughout Hungary, France, Italy, Sweden and Bohemia. In-depth musicological research on the repertoire and a lively interpretive performance are the hallmarks of the Ensemble. The characteristic sound of the Schola Hungarica is produced through a combination of children's, men's and women's voices. Sources record that in the late Middle Ages only boys and male adults sang in cathedrals, collegiate and parish churches, or women or men of religious orders in their chapels. The choir has made more than fifty records and compact discs, for which it received numerous international prizes. The Schola Hungarica has toured many European countries, and is one of the most recorded choral ensembles specializing in Early Music. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Musica Historica Ensemble; Musica Antiqua Hungarica Ensemble; Camerata Hungarica; Muzsikás Hungarian Folkmusic Ensemble.

Schönherr, Gyula (Julius) (Pen name Décsényi between 1885 and 1892) (Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Romania, 26 September 1864 - Nagybánya, 24 March 1908) – Historian. He studied Law at the University of Budapest and History at the University of Vienna. From 1889 he worked at the archival section of the Hungarian National Museum, becoming a Curator, later Director-Curator, as well as an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Budapest in 1900. Apart from writing on Hungarian political history, he was engaged in heraldry, family history, medieval Hungarian bibliography, and the review of archival sources. From 1906 his neurosis prevented him from continuing his work, and in 1907 he withdrew to his town of birth. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1896). His works include John Hunyadi Corvin 1473-1505 (Hunyadi Corvin János 1473-1505) (1894); The House of Anjou and its Successors (Az Anjou-ház és örökösei) (1895, facsimile 1995), and Hungary in 1301 (Magyarország 1301-ben) (1902). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

School Dramas of the Jesuits – The Jesuit schools created and produced dramatic forms for the sole purpose of popularizing the Counter Reformation and Habsburg domination. While they played an important role in Hungary in the popularization of acting, advanced stage-technique, and the standardization of the Baroque theatrical style, their productions did not create any lasting works. They focused on showing the lives of the saints and martyrs through allegorical ballets. There are more than thousand items about the themes of the performances that were drawn from Hungarian history and the operas. The most successful shows were held in Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia). – B: 1150, T: 7685.

Schools, Struggle for Control of – In 1946, the Hungarian Communist Party, controlled by Soviet advisors, mounted an attack against the Churches in Hungary, and more specifically against the Roman Catholic Church. In the first phase they attempted to turn the youth against the churches through the so-called “school struggle”. To justify their impending drastic actions, the Communists invented student conspiracies directed against the State. This led to nationwide demonstration against the government and brought about an ecumenical unity among the Christian churches. Since the “student conspiracies” could not be proven, the first phase of the school struggle was a failure for the government. In 1948, during the second phase of the school-struggle, the government decreed the abolition of religious instruction in the schools and the takeover of religious schools by the State. Students who protested against these decrees were arrested and locked up. Many priests were also imprisoned and were not allowed to celebrate even private services. Those released from prison were often crippled for life. The parishioners sent tens of thousands of letters and cables appealing to the Minister of Culture – but in vain. At the height of the campaign for the nationalization of schools, police patrols kept watch at the time of religious services in the churches and schools. The atmosphere in the whole community of a village or town resembled that of a state of siege. In the village of Pócspetri a large group of people, who were waiting for the decision of the village council, were surrounded and attacked by the police using rifle butts. In the process, one rifle was accidentally discharged, killing a policeman. The police arrested 48 persons and, during the interrogations, Miklós (Nicholas) Királyfalvi, the village notary, “confessed” to killing the policeman. For this he was convicted and executed. János (John) Asztalos, the village priest, was accused of inciting a riot and sentenced to life imprisonment. Despite massive protests by the people, and Cardinal József (Joseph) Mindszenty’s objections, 4,612 religious schools were taken over by the State, including schools of other denominations. In addition, 2,976 other schools were nationalized on 16 June 1948, altogether 7,587 schools. In the end, the Roman Catholic Church was left with 8 High Schools, apart from their Seminaries. The Reformed Church kept 4 High Schools and 4 Theological Academies. However, in 1952 and 1953, an additional 3 High Schools and 2 Theological Academies were nationalized. The Lutheran Church was left without a High School, except one Theological Academy. After the collapse of the Communist system in 1989-1990, the Churches recovered not all, but many of their former schools even universities. – B: 1376, 1020, T: 7665.→Mindszenty, József; Asztalos, János.

Schöpflin, Aladár (Maniga, 4 October 1872 - Budapest, 8 August 1950) – Writer, critic, literary historian, translator of literary works. He studied Lutheran Theology in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and Philosophy at the University of Budapest. He started his career as a contributor for the paper Sunday News (Vasárnapi Újság) in 1898. As its critic he was among the first to recognize the significance of the poetry of Endre (Andrew) Ady. He was one of the contributors to the journal West (Nyugat) from its inception. He also worked for the radical intellectual journal Twentieth Century (Huszedik Század). From 1909 he was a literary secretary of the Franklin Society (Franklin Társulat). He was active in fiction writing and did significant work in the history of literature and esthetics. As a critic he was outstanding with his sound judgements, fine esthetic feeling, and high standard. He was not linked to any worldview, ideology, esthetics or school of thought and did not systematize any. He did a great deal of translating from English, French, and German. He edited the Encyclopedia of Hungarian Dramatic Art, vols. i-iv (1929-1931). His other works include Hungarian writers (Magyar Írók) (1917); Woman in Red Dress (Piros ruhás nő) novel (1921); The Resurrection of Professor Hatvani (Hatvani professzor feltámadása) stories (1923); Endre Ady (1934); Autumn Rainbow (Őszi szivárvány) play (1934); Kálmán Mikszáth (1941), and Meditations of an Apolitical (Egy apolitikus elmélkedései) (1994). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1948 and ordinary 1949). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1949. – B: 0877, 1031, 1257, 1445, T: 7456.→Ady, Endre.

Schöpflin, György András (George Andrew) (George A.) (Budapest, 24 November 1939 - ) – Historian, political scientist, journalist. With his parents he settled in Great Britain in 1950. From 1957 to 1962, he studied at the University of Glasgow; then during 1962 to 1963, at the University of Bruges (College d'Europe) in Belgium. Between 1963 and 1967 he was a contributor for Chatham House of London. From 1967 to 1976 he was a reporter for the BBC. Since 1976 he has been lecturing on Eastern and Central European Political History at the London School of Economics. Since 1984 he has been Editor of the journal East European Reporter. Since 1994 he has been International Professor of Slavic- and East-European Studies, London University; since 1998 he has been its Jean Monnet professor. From 2004 to 2009, he was a European Union representative of the Fidesz MPSZ, and he was re-elected to this position in 2009. In his English and Hungarian publications, he deals with Eastern and Central European political issues, nationality problems, and Hungary. His works include Eastern Europe Since the War (1967); The Soviet Union and Eastern Europe: a Handbook, edited by him (1970, 1986); The Hungarians of Romania (1978); Hungary Between Prosperity and Crisis (1982); In Search of Central Europe, edited with Nancy Wood (1989); Politics in Eastern Europe 1945-1992 (1993), and Myths and Nationhood, co-editor (1997). He received the For Minorities Award in 1996. – B: 0874, 1672, T: 7684, 7456.→Fidesz; Political Parties in Hungary.

Schöpflin, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 24 August 1910 - Sorrento, 18 June 2004) – Writer, translator of literary works. He studied at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, and in 1932 he obtained a B.A. Degree in Education, majoring in Hungarian and English. As a student, he took part in the Communist activity of the University, for which he was imprisoned for several months. From 1933 to 1935 he was a proofreader for the Révai Publisher, and between 1938 and 1944, was a clerk in a Company. Under the name of István Nagypál, he published articles in leftist papers and magazines. His writings also appeared in the papers West (Nyugat), Our Century (Századunk), and Thought (Gondolat). He wrote novels, short stories and essays. From 1945 until 1949 he was Director of the Hungarian Radio. In 1949 he became Ambassador in Stockholm, but he had a conflict with the Hungarian Government and in 1950 broke with Communism, and emigrated to Great Britain. From 1954 to 1962 he was a clerk in a machine works in Scotland. From 1964 till his retirement, he lectured at a Technical College in London. As a translator of literary works, he translated works of English and American writers into Hungarian; and from the early 1980s, he translated Hungarian Samizdat works (underground material to evade censorship) into English. His essays, articles and critiques appeared in Horizon (Látóhatár); New Horizon (Új Látóhatár); Literary News (Irodalmi Újság), and in Rainbow (Szivárvány). One of his works was Wind Exclaimer (Szélkiáltó) (1983, 1991). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Schöpf-Mérei, Ágoston (Augustine) (Schoepf-Merei) (Győr, 24 September 1804 - Manchester, England, 12 March 1858) – Pediatrician. After obtaining his Medical Degree from the University of Padua, he practiced as a physician in Vienna. In 1836 he became Associate Professor in Medical History at the University of Pest and, from 1844, that of Pediatrics. It was in 1839 that he founded the Hospital for Poor Children in Pest. He did some pioneering work in the introduction of the diagnostic method of auscultation and percussion. He introduced the practice of keeping clinical history of patients. He was also engaged in restoration surgery and ophthalmology. He is well known for his textbook on pediatrics and medical history notes, the first to be published in Hungary. During the War of Independence (1848-1849) he was a Honvéd medical officer, later, physician of the Italian Legion. Toward the end of August 1849, he fled to Turkey. For a while he was a practicing physician in Istanbul, but in 1850 he moved to Paris, and then to London. In Manchester he established a Children's Hospital. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1835. In his honor a commemorative medal was struck in 1945. Schulek, Frigyes (Frederick) (Pest, 19 November 1841 - Balatonlelle, 5 September 1919) – Architect. He studied in Vienna with Van der Hülle, and with the great Dombaumeister Frederick Schmidt. In 1870 he settled in Pest as a designer in Imre (Emeric) Steidl's architectural firm, and taught at the Drawing School (Mintarajz Iskola) (1872). From 1872 he was Architect for the Council for National Monuments (Műemlékek Országos Bizottsága). He was Professor of Medieval Architecture at the Budapest Polytechnic (1903-1911). In 1895 he became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He restored many buildings dating from the Middle Ages: rebuilt the Mátyás (Matthias) Church of Buda, restored the Royal Palace of Visegrád, the Cathedral of Ják, the Chapel of Csütörtökhely, the Town Hall of Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia), the Franciscan Church of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), the Castle of Vajdahunyad, and the Church of Kiszeben. He designed the Presbyterian Church of Szeged (1880-1883), the Fisherman's Bastion (Halászbástya), Buda Castle in 1903, and the Erzsébet Watchtower (Erzsébet Kilátó) on the top of János Mountain (Jánoshegy) in Buda in 1910. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7663. → Schulek, János; Mátyás Church.

Schulek, János (John) (Budapest, 26 December 1872 - Budapest, 7 July 1948) – Architect. He graduated from the Budapest Polytechnic in 1884, where he was an assistant professor from 1894. He worked with his father, Frigyes, on the construction of the Fisherman's Bastion (Halászbástya) of Buda Castle. From the 1920s he designed many private and public buildings, including the Lutheran High School (Gymnasium) in Aszód, the Reformed Church in Szada, and the Lutheran Church in Kelenföld-Budapest. He directed the renovation of the Mátyás Church at Buda Castle (1933-1944). He found the remnants of King Mátyás' Renaissance palace in Visegrád, buried under rubble, and he dedicated the rest of his life to its excavation. In 1947-1948 he directed the restoration of the Fisherman's Bastion in Buda, damaged under the siege of Budapest at the end of World War II. His major works are Ancient Monuments of Kassa and the Mining Towns (Kassa és a bányavárosok műemlékei), (1928); Problems and Tasks of Visegrád (Visegrád problémái és feladatai) (1936); Excavations at Visegrád (Visegrádi ásatások) in Építészet (1941), and The Palace of King Mátyás at Visegrád (Visegrád Mátyás király palotája) published in Építészet (Architecture) Magazine (1941, No. 2). – B: 0883, T: 7667. → Schulek, Frigyes.

Schulek, Tibor (Budapest, 3 February 1904 - Budapest, 14 May 1989) – Lutheran pastor, dean, literary historian. He is the grandson of Frigyes (Frederick) Schulek. From 1913 he pursued his secondary studies first at the pedagogic school of the Herrnhut brothers of Niesky (northwest of Görlitz in Germany, near the Polish border) and, from the spring of 1918, at Rimaszombat (now Rimaská Sobota, Slovakia); as a result of the Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), this town suddenly became Czechoslovak territory, so he and his family had to flee; he finished his secondary education in Budapest, graduating in 1922. He studied Theology at the Universities of Budapest (1922-1924), Sopron (1924-1925), and Leipzig, Germany (1925-1926). Concurrently he also studied at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest (Hungarian, German, English), and received a Dip.Ed. In 1928 he obtained his Lutheran pastoral qualification and, in 1926 and 1927, he was a resident educator at Niesky. In 1927 he went on a 5-month study trip to England and Wales. From 1927 to 1930 he was secretary of the Hungarian Evangelical Christian Student Association (Magyar Evangéliumi Keresztyén Diákszövetség – MEKDSZ). In 1938 he received his Th.D. in Pécs. From 1930 to 1948 he was an army chaplain, while from 1948 to 1963 a pastor in Komárom and, from 1951 to 1953, Dean of the Fejér-Komárom Lutheran Deanery; however, he was forced to resign from this last post. In 1963, based on false accusations, the Church Court stripped him of his right to serve as minister. This was declared null and void only in December 1988, when he was officially rehabilitated. While he could not attend to his pastoral duties during his suspension, he was a contributor to the Humanism and Reformation Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1934 he was one of the editors of the journal Christian Truth (Keresztyén Igazság). He was buried in Visegrád. His works include Old Hungarian Prayers (Régi magyar imádságok) (1941); Old Hungarian Songs of God (Régi Magyar Istenes énekek), (1945); Cantate! Sing!... (Cantate! Énekeljete!...) (1950), and Hungarian Lutherans in Romania (Magyar evangélikusok Romániában) (1989). – B: 0883, 1160, T: 7456, 7667.

Schwartzter, Baron Otto (Buda, 22 December 1853 - Budapest, 21 October 1913) – Psychiatrist, the son of Ferenc (Francis) Schwartzter. Otto earned his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1877. In 1878 he took over the Mental Hospital that his father founded and he directed it until 1910. He became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in Forensic Psychiatry at the Faculty of Law at the University of Budapest in 1885 and, at the same time, he was active in the Hungarian Red Cross Society. The establishment of the Red Cross Nursing Institute is linked with his name, as is the modern development of the Elizabeth (Erzsébet) Hospital of the Red Cross. In 1905 he became a member of the Upper House of Parliament, and in 1910 he was made a Baron. His works include Die Bewusstlosigkeitszustände als Strafausschliessungsgründe (1878); Psychiatric Notes (Psychiátriai jegyzetek) (1894), and Administrative Mental Pathology (Közgazgatási elmekórtan) (1987). – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456. → Schwartzter, Ferenc.

Schwartzter, Ferenc (Francis) (Babarc, west of Mohács, 24 November 1818 - Budapest, 2 March 1889) – Physician. Father of Otto Schwartzter. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Vienna in 1844, after which he worked at the mental ward of the hospital there under the Senior Physician Mihály (Michael) Viszánik. In order to set up a mental hospital in Hungary at state expense, he was sent abroad in 1848 to study the mental hospitals in Germany, Belgium, England and France. In the autumn of 1848, based on his experiences, he submitted a plan to organize and set up a Hungarian Mental Hospital. In October, he joined the Honvéd army as a medical officer, under the name of Ferenc Fekete, and served under General Guyon in the War of Independence against Habsburg oppression. After the fall of the War of Independence, he established a Mental Hospital at Vác in 1850, which he transferred to Buda in 1852. In his Institute he put occupational therapy into practice and abolished the use of physical (coercive) pressure on patients. From 1855 he was a member of the Committee of Public Health, later a member of the Council of Public Health; from 1861 he was an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Budapest, giving lectures in Psychiatry. As a member of the Buda City Council, he participated in the supervision of the construction of the Mental Hospital of Lipótmező, which was built following his advice. He initiated the policy of reforesting Mount Gellért. He wrote the first psychiatric study in Hungarian: General Pathology and Therapy of Mental Illnesses, with Forensic Psychology (A lelkibetegségek általános kór- és gyógytana, törvénytudományi lélektan) (1858) – B: 0883, 1730, T: 7456. → Schwartz, Ottó.

Schwarz, David (Keszthely, 7 December 1850 - Vienna, 13 January 1897) – Inventor. He was born into a Jewish family and educated in Zágráb (now Zagreb, Croatia). In the 1880s, he started to think about an airship that can be steered. In Vienna he did not receive support for his plan, so he went to St. Petersburg and spent two years there, then moved to Berlin, where Carl Berg, owner of an aluminum factory, supported Schwarz' idea. From 1895 on, they worked together building an airship constructed with aluminum, on Tempelhofer Feld. It was 32 m long, 12 m in diameter, covered with 0.2 mm aluminum sheets, driven by a 4-cylinder, 16 hp Daimler motor with 2 propellers. Its maximum speed was around 25 km/hour and was able to reach a 460 m altitude, and could carry a person with 130 kg cargo. The actual flight took place on 3 November 1897 without the inventor, who passed away earlier that year. Unfortunately, the airship crashed as it was landing. However, it proved the superiority of rigid airships. Schwarz' widow, with the help of Carl Berg, sold the plans of the airship to Count Ferdinand von Zeppelin who, taking note of the ideas of David Schwarz, created the type of airship named after him. Nonetheless, the rigid type, light metal and steerable airship was invented by David Schwarz. In 1967, at the Traffic Museum of Budapest a memorial exhibition was held, showing a model of his airship and all the documents regarding his invention. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456, 7103.

Schweidel, József (Joseph) (Zombor, now Sombor in Serbia, 18 May 1796 - Arad, now in Romania, 6 October 1849) – Honvéd general, one of the 13 martyrs of Arad. He was an imperial officer, a major of the Sándor-Hussars. After the outbreak of the War of Independence from Habsburg oppression (1848-1849), he led his regiment from Vienna back to Hungary. Already, on 5 October 1848, he was a general and, after the recapture of Buda, he became the Commander of Pest. After the collapse of the War, he was arrested and sentenced to death to be hanged on the gallows but, on his wife's entreaty, out of clemency, together with another three officers, he was shot by a firing squad in front of the trenches outside the fortress of Arad. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Arad, Martyrs of; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Schwimmer, Ernő (Ernest) (Pest, 21 November 1837 - Budapest, 25 February 1898) – Physician, dermatologist. He earned his Medical Degree at the University of Vienna in 1861; thereafter, until 1871, he worked as a physician in the Allgemeine Krankenhaus of Vienna in the Department of Dermatology. In 1871 he became an honorary lecturer of Dermatology at the University of Pest; in 1879 titular associate professor; from 1870 head physician of the outpatients' department and, from 1885, he was a senior dermatologist at the St. István (Stephen) Hospital, Budapest. From 1892 he was Professor of Dermatology and, in the same year, he organized the Dermatological Clinic, where at the same time he set up outpatient consultation. He established regular instruction of Dermatology at the University. He was a member of a number of dermatological societies abroad. He is regarded as the apostle of the spa-bathing movements. His works include Dermatological Pathology (Bőrkórtan) (1874), and Hautkrankheiten (1884). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Scientific Life – During the early centuries of the Middle Ages, when Hungarian scientific life was evolving, literacy and the sciences were the privileges of the Church. Chronicling started in Hungary with Anonymus' Latin historical work the Gesta Hungarorum (The Deeds of the Hungarians) (1196-1203). This was thought to be the beginning of Hungarian history writing and was followed by other Hungarian chronicles.

1276 was the first time that the secular foundations of scientific life, i.e. Hungarian universities of the Middle Ages, were mentioned in connection with the College of Veszprém, not yet a fully fledged university. The University of Pécs, founded by King Lajos I in 1367, was patterned after other universities: Prague (1348), Vienna (1363), Krakow (1364). However, the Pope did not authorize the teaching of theology. Then King Zsigmond (Sigismund) established a short-lived College (1389) at Óbuda, followed by a new University with papal permission on the same site in 1410, which had all the privileges of other foreign universities. At that time the majority of Hungarian students still attended universities abroad: in Paris, Padua, Bologna, and Vienna, since the operation of Hungarian universities was not secure due to constant armed disturbances.

Before 1848, Hungary lacked a sufficient foundation for educational institutions by European standards, that is, the necessary scientific research work needed to sustain higher learning was insufficient. After 1867, the governments budgeted large amounts for education in order to ensure the upgrading of the economy. These expenditures were recovered because, by the turn of 19/20th centuries, Hungary met the European standards by developing professionals, specialists, and scientists in sufficient numbers.

The make-up of universities underwent a change. Independent natural science faculties were established and, within the Department of Law, separate faculties were set up for the associated legal sciences. The need for professionals by the industries and commerce was now being satisfied. Training of doctors to European levels ensured higher standards in public health care.

Because the learning standards, even at the elementary schools, were made more demanding, the higher educational institutions received students with a solid knowledge base at the university entry level. Hungary has played a leading role in scientific research for some time now and her contribution to the general knowledge and its development for the benefit of mankind has been significant. Unfortunately, in the Communist period (1948-1990) Hungary was unable to secure the best possible conditions for scientific research, since even scientific life was over-politicized. Scientists were subjected to political pressure and quite a few fled to the free world to continue their work under more favorable conditions and better opportunities.

An article in the 17 December 1957 issue of the Washington Star, entitled "There are many scientists among the Hungarian refugees that came to America" stated that many of those scientists had Degrees granted by Hungarian Universities that are traditionally considered to be among the top universities of the world. Wallace W. Atwood, executive of the Department of Foreign Relations of the American National Academy of Sciences discovered more than 500 Hungarian scientists with outstanding qualifications among the refugees.

After the system change in 1990, the restructuring of the economic life of Hungary was not favorable to scientific education, development and research. Consequently, many young scientists emigrated to the more developed western states, where they found suitable conditions for the realization of their ideas and plans. – B: 1020, T: 7675.→Anonymus; Hungarian Academy of Sciences; Universities; Famous Hungarians and Hungarian Origin.

Scitovsky, Tibor (Hungary, 1909 - USA, 1 June 2002) – Hungarian-born economist. He was born into an untitled noble family. His father held the post of Foreign Minister. He studied Law in Budapest, then Economics at Trinity College, Cambridge. He returned to Hungary in 1931 and earned a doctorate in law in Budapest. Then he spent a year in Paris, France. After returning home he was a bank clerk in Budapest. In 1935 he studied economics at the London School of Economics. In 1939 he moved to the USA on a traveling fellowship at the universities of Columbia, Harvard and Chicago. During World War II, he enlisted in counter-intelligence in the US Army, under the name of Thomas Dennis, and measured the effects of the aerial bombardment of Germany. From 1945 on, he was Professor of Economics at the universities of Stanford, Berkeley and Yale. He introduced to the economy the Scitovsky Reversal Criterion (Scitovsky-féle visszatérési kritérium); the Scitovsky Paradox (Scitovsky-paradoxon), and the Community Indifference Curve – CIC (Közösségi közömbösségi görbe). He wrote many important studies in Economics, among them: Welfare and Competition: the Economics of a Fully Employed Economy, (1951); The Joyless Economy: An Inquiry into Human Satisfaction and Consumer Dissatisfaction (1976); The Joyless Economy (Az örömtelen gazdaság) (1990); A Theory of Second Hand Markets (A használt piacok elmélete) (1995), and Memories of a Proud Hungarian (Egy büszke magyar emlékiratai) (2000). Some of his books appeared in Hungarian translations as well. He was elected Distinguished Fellow of the American Economic Association, Fellow of the Royal Economic Society, member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Corresponding Fellow of the British Academy, and honorary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He was one of the leading economists of his age. – B: 1844, T: 7103.

Scourge of God (Flagellum Dei, Isten ostora) – A name attributed to Attila the Hun in western legend that gradually became his title and finally his personification: Attila, the Scourge of God. It first occurs in the legend of Lupus, the Bishop of Troyes, written in the 8th to 9th century, in which, to the question of the bishop, Attila answered: “Ego sum Attila, rex Hunnorum, flagellum Dei” (I am Attila, the king of the Huns, the scourge of God). In an earlier, Gallic legend a hermit referred to him as such, after he was captured before the indecisive Battle on the Catalaunian Fields in Gaul (Chalons in present-day France) in 451. Italian tradition ascribes the invention of this appellation to St. Benedict. The Legend of St. Geminus relates that the Bishop of Modena introduced himself to Attila as the servant of God, whereupon Attila countered thus: “Si tu es servus Dei, ego sum flagellum Dei” (You are the servant of God, I am the scourge of God). According to the Hungarian chronicles, Attila himself had his subjects address him as the King of the Huns, the dread of the whole world and the scourge of God. All these versions of the appellation seem to suggest that it is rooted in the mentality of the Uralic and Altaic “Turanian” peoples: it must have been the traditional name for all the Uralic and Altaic conquerors, who believed that they acted as conquerors because they were divinely endowed with the right to conquer, and whoever resisted them sinned against God. – B: 0942, T: 7456.→Attila; Catalaunum, Battle of.

Scouts in Hungary – László (Ladislav) Králik, instructor at the Piarist High School, first wrote about Scouting Founder Baden-Powell's new movement in 1909. In 1910 the first Hungarian scout troop was formed in Budapest at the Reformed Youth Association under the leadership of Dr. Aladár Szilassy, a physician. He overcame the opposition of skeptical educators by planning a successful river rafting trip for the boys from the Vág River to Komárom. Scout troops sprung up throughout the country, especially in larger cities, and the Hungarian Scout Association was formed on 28 December 1912. By 1914 its number was already 3,000. After World War I, the proletarian dictatorship replaced scouting with an ideological youth group known as the Pioneers, "Úttörők". The new Hungarian Scout Association, founded in 1920, was the beginning of its "heroic age". Count Pál (Paul) Teleki, Prime Minister, assumed the office of Chief Scout. By 1923 there were already 10,000 scouts. Those under 12 years of age were first called "wolf cubs", later "pages". The summer training camps were located on Hárshegy and in Alcsut, where the demanding leadership requirements included high morals, education, fitness and foreign language skills. In 1919, after founding the first Girl Scout troops (mostly sisters of boy scouts) in Budapest, Miskolc and Debrecen, the movement spread throughout the country. The Hungarian Girl Guide Association, with 5 000 members and 100 troops was founded in 1926. The 1924 Scout Jamboree in Denmark, attended by 100 Hungarian scouts was a great success. They placed third after the USA and England in the competitions. International attention to the Hungarian scouting program and its success at the 1926 International Jamboree in Megyer resulted in the construction of the Central Scout House in Budapest, the scout field in Hárshegy, and the water park on Népsziget. Success continued in the 1927 winter ski competitions in Kandersted, Switzerland, and at the III World Jamboree in Liverpool, England, which was attended by 852 Hungarian scouts. The IV World Jamboree, held in Gödöllő, Hungary in 1933, hosted 26,000 young men from 54 countries. The Hungarian scouts introduced a new branch of scouting known as the Flying Scouts. The 1939 Girl Guide World Jamboree, the Pax Ting, was also held in Gödöllő. The threat of war limited the participation to 900 Hungarian and 4 000 girls from 25 countries. In September 1940, Count Pál Teleki, Chief Scout, invited the Hungarian scouting leaders to Ábrahámhegy at Lake Balaton, to develop a new scout's training plan. They recognized the uniqueness of the Hungarian training program, which was based upon the pillars of the Bible and the values found within Hungarian culture and traditions. By 1942, 900 troops and 53,500 scouts, 300 Guide troops, and 12 700 guides were registered. During World War II, the scouts performed significant contributions to the war effort by assisting the civil and national defense. After World War II, the scouting movement resumed with 500 troops and 50 thousand scouts. In 1948, under the Communist Government's order, the Ministry of Internal Affairs dissolved the Hungarian Scout Association. However, emigrant Hungarians carried on the movement. After a 41-year absence, in February 1989, scouting again resumed in Hungary. In the absence of trained leaders, the Emigrant Hungarian Scout Association provided leadership courses. In 1990, three associations began in Hungary: the Hungarians Scout Association, the Hungarian Scout Troops Association, and the Hungarian Girl Scouts Association. By the end of 1990, the number of the troops totaled 300, and the number of the scouts, 20,000. Hungary, as a former founding member, was again admitted to the World Organization of Scouts in 1990. – B: 1031, 1020, T: 7668.→Teleki, Count Pál.

Sculpture in Hungary – Just as Hungarian painting and Hungarian applied arts, sculpting also emerged in Hungary to satisfy a need of the Church. Hungarian sculptors, trained in Venice, could have carved the Byzantine or Venetian acanthus-styled columns, while the same style was also found on the royal sarcophagi in Székesfehérvár.

The Hungarian center of the Roman stone-carving art epoch was in Pécs. While its influence was found throughout Dunántúl (Transdanubia) its richest relics are seen in the Cathedral of Pécs. Perhaps even more typical are the sculpted ornaments of the Ják Church. The Esztergom ornamental gate, Porta Speciosa, made in the 12th century, is the highest esteemed example of Romanesque sculpture.

The Hungarian Gothic sculpture developed a style cognizant of the European trends but still preserving the traditions. The bundled pillars' chapter series in the main sanctuary of the St Mihály Church in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and scenes from the life of citizens are examples of both progress and tradition. Sculptors Márton (Martin) and György (George) Kolozsvári were the greatest artists of the second half of the 14th century, whose work included the royal statues of István (Stephen), László (Ladislás) and Imre (Emeric), and the equestrian statue of St. László. While these were destroyed around 1600, the surviving creation of the mounted dragon-slayer, the St George statue in Prague, made in 1373, is representative of their superb craftsmanship. In the palace gardens of Visegrád, the octagonal wellhouse, with its finely modeled column capitals, buttresses and waterspouts, was made during the reign of King Zsigmond (Sigismund). The outstanding examples of the architectural sculptures in the royal cities included the Cathedral of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), the Black Church of Brassó (now Brasov, Romania), the Lutheran Church of Szászsebes (now Sebes, Romania) and the statues in Buda. The Knights' Hall of the Vajdahunyad Fortress (now Hunedoara Castle, Romania), and the "Lion-Well" (Oroszlános kút) Visegrád, carved from red marble around 1473, represent the summit of technical and artistic expression.

The masters of woodcarving came primarily from the citizenry from the main centers of Kassa (now Kosiče, Slovakia), the mining towns of Szepesség, Kolozsvár and Sopron. In Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), urban influences were developed further through the creation of distinctive rural works originating from Csíksomlyó (now Sumuleu Ciuc, Romania). The Maria, Madonna of the Valley was one of the earliest pieces from the 13th century. The Madonna of Toporc appeared in the 15th century. Besides the many luxuriously carved, painted, and gilded triptychs, the works of the eminent master Pál (Paul) Lőcsei, found in the St Jakab Church are memorable. The superbly crafted high altar in the St Jakab Church of Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia) and the Lord's Coffin in Garamszentbenedek (now Hronský Beňadik, Slovakia), are in a class by themselves.

Hungarian sculpture entered a new era at the start of the 19th century. István (Stephen) Ferenczy (1792-1856) took upon himself to create specifically Hungarian sculptures. The ethical effects of this activity influenced the ideology of the whole reform era. Near the end of the century, monuments became more frequent and the works of the exceptionally talented Alajos (Aloysius) Stróbl, György (George) Zala and Adolf Huszár, were celebrated. They were among the most outstanding creators. In the 20th century, Ferenc (Francis) Medgyesy became a master sculptor, and Béni (Ben) Ferenczy, who worked in a new medium of small-scale plastic and medalist art, was also excellent in monumental sculpture. More outstanding sculptors include, among others: Miklós (Nicholas) Borsos, Barna Búza, János (John) Fadrusz, Miklós (Nicholas) Izsó, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kisfaludy Strobl, Miklós (Nicholas), Ligeti, Imre (Emeric) Makovecz, László (Ladislás) Mednyánszky, János (John) Pásztor, and Victor Vasarely. – B: 1031, 0942, T: 7675.→Most of the above mentioned sculptors have their own word articles.

Scythia – The ancient sources do not agree on the exact location of Scythia. The more extensive Hungarian chronicles agree that its upper part was in Asia and the lower part extended into Europe. Ancient Hungarian traditions seem to refer to European Scythia, implying that the Scythian people, whose archeological remains are characterized by the motif of the “golden stag“, originate from the Carpathian Basin, even if they left the region in later times. Among the Hungarian sources, the chronicle of Anonymus also refers to Scythia as the original homeland of the Hungarians. According to him this was a huge area whose eastern part was named Dentumoger and it bordered on the lands of Gog and Magog, whom Alexander the Great kept away from his empire by iron-gates. Other Hungarian chronicles identify Scythia with all the territory that extended from the Danube to the east as far as the borders of Europe, in the line of the Ural Mountains, the Ural River and the Caucasian Mountains. Scythian-Hungarian Runic Writing – According to researchers, the runic inscription on the silver chalice found in the Saka-Scythian kurgans near Alma-Ata, as well as the runic inscription on the axe at Campagna, are about 3000 years old. The science of writing does not mention special Scythian runic writing, but certain researchers regard the Turk-Hun-Szekler-Magyar runic script as Scythian runic writing; a position supported by Antonio Bonfini, Count Luigi Ferdinando Marsigli, the discoverer of the calendar carved on a wooden stick with runic writing, as well as János (John) Telegdi, István (Stephen) Szamosközi, and Wilhelm Thomsen, a Danish historian at the beginning of the 20th century. – B: 1020, T: 7669.→Runic Writing, Hungarian; Bonfini, Antonio; Marsigli, Count Luigi Ferdinando; Telegdi, János; Szamosközi, István.

Scythians – Szittyá, Szittyák (singular and plural) in Hungarian. An ancient nomadic people probably the oldest horsemen in human history. The origin of the Scythians has been a controversial issue for almost 200 years. Historians, as a rule, place their homeland in Central Asia. The ancient Greeks place them in Asia Minor in Trans-Caucasia (Herodotos, 484-426 B.C.; Diodorus Siculus, 1st c. B.C.) as the descendants of an earlier civilization (probably the Urartian). Some historians however (e.g. T. Talbot-Rice, R. Ghirsmann, Gy. Mészáros, G. Nagy, F.W. König) subscribe to the Trans-Caucasian origin in that, in the 8th century B.C., a new people appeared on fast horses around Lake Urmia (Orümiyeh, Azerbaijan), which the Assyrians called “Ashguzai” i.e. Scythians.

The Scythians came into the Pontus region and Asia Minor in the 8th century B.C. They moved into the northern part of the Black Sea and the Kuban-Don regions in the 7th-6th centuries B.C., displacing the Cimmerians. In 640 B.C., the Babylonians under king Nabopolassar united with an army of the Medes under Cyaxares and, with a contingent of Scythians from the Caucasus, destroyed Nineveh. The Scythians attacked Northern Iran (Media) and from there waged devastating campaigns into Mesopotamia, Syria and Asia Minor, attacking the Assyrian Empire in 612 B.C. They clashed with the Persians, and Cyrus the Great was killed in a local conflict with the Sakas in 529 B.C. Darius I also conducted a hopeless war against them in 516 B.C. Later the Scythians spread westward, north of the Black Sea, crossed the Carpathian Mountain Range and occupied Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), and most of the Great Hungarian Plain.

In the 5th century, Herodotos, known as the Father of History, traveled in the vicinity of the Black Sea and in the land of the Scythians. His stories about the Scythians' customs were later validated by modern archeology.

A detached branch of the Royal Scythians ventured north in the middle of the 7th century B.C., and settled around the lower tributaries of the River Ob in Siberia. The recently excavated Scythian graves in Pazyryk attest to their presence there. They ruled over Asia for 28 years. They led military campaigns all over Asia Minor, through Mesopotamia and Syria to Egypt. Darius led an unsuccessful military expedition against them at the end of 6th century BC. In the days of the Assyrian king Assarhaddon, ca. 679 B.C., the ancient Israelite city of Beth-She'an fell to the invading Scythians, who built there a city that became known as Scythopolis. Following Alexander the Great's conquest of the Middle East, during the Seleucid era in the 4th century B.C., the Greeks and allied peoples established in Palestine 10 cities, called Decopolis, of which Scythopolis was one. It later passed from Greek to Roman, then to Byzantine, and finally to Islamic rule and flourished until an earthquake destroyed it around 749 A.D. It is now called Beisan.

From the 3rd century B.C. onwards, Neopolis on the Crimean Peninsula was the capital of the Royal Scythians, who lived in the region until the Sarmatians replaced them. Following the war between the Cimmerians and Scythians living on the northern shores of the Black Sea, the advance guards of the Scythians, the Agatirs, were already in the Carpathian Basin, at the headwaters of the River Maros, around 550 BC. Other Scythian peoples followed them later. In 500 BC, they already held the larger southern part of the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagy Alföld), and their smaller units advanced as far as the Rivers Vág, Nyitra and Garam. They occupied the banks of the River Dráva, and the upper course of the Száva River. Their practice of mainly animal husbandry and craftsmanship did not disturb the local population of Transylvania (Erdély) or the people of Transdanubia (Dunántúl). Subsequently they established a large commercial network with peoples living near and far. Their closest group, the Szeklers, kept not only their beliefs in the Scythian legend of origin, but also their Szekler names and their geometric runic script. One of their groups called "Úz" somehow survived in Transylvania. The Scythian state flourished in the 2nd century BC; but their empire collapsed in the 3rd century AD under the pressure of the great East-West migration.

The Scythians lived in tribal societies. Every now and then, new tribal coalitions were formed, and even new languages developed among them. Curtius wrote (1st century A.D.) that: "The Scythians, Dahae, Massagates and Sacas were of the same nation."

The first to describe the life style of these tribes was the Greek historian, Herodotus of Halicarnassus in Book IV of his Persian Wars. Although he concentrates on the tribes living in modern Ukraine, which he calls Scythian, we may extrapolate his description to people in Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan, Azerbaijan, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan, Kyrgyzstan and possibly Mongolia, even though Herodotus calls these eastern nomads Sacae. However, just as the Scythians and the Sacae shared the same life style, they had the same name: in their own language they called themselves Skolot. The Persians rendered it as Saka, the Greeks as Skythai, the Chinese called them, at a later stage in history, Sai; the Assyrians called them Ashguzai. In the Old Testament they appear as Ashkenazi. Babylonian inscriptions refer to them as Umman-manda. Their empire, at different times, reached to China and India in the east, to Mesopotamia and Persia in the south, to Siberia in the north and to present day Hungary in the west.

The Scythians, founders of the Eurasian equestrian civilizations, developed the mounted battle technique of the steppes that determined the outcome of wars for several centuries. They invented the saddle, the bridle and iron bit. They were armed with battle-axes, long lances, and short composite or reflex bows made of wood, bone, horn and sinew, with triple-edged arrowheads of stone, bronze and iron. These reflex bows were deadly instruments that could shoot arrows as far as several hundred meters. In battle the Scythians wore peaked bronze helmets and chain-mail jerkins over short, belted jackets and tight felt trousers with knee-high, softsoled boots. Their shields were made of leather, wood or iron. Arrows and bow were carried in a gorytos (bow case) slung from the left side of the belt. Scythian horses were also outfitted in ornate costumes and were seen ridden for the first time among the peoples they descended upon. These terrifying apparitions must have given rise to the various Centaur-myths. One of their fighting techniques was shooting backwards over their horses' croups as they turned away from the enemy, feigning flight. Each man had at least one personal mount; but the wealthy owned large herds of horses, chiefly Asian ponies called taki.

The noble ladies wore long, loose garments, multi-stranded necklaces of gold and semi-precious stones, embroidered leather slippers and high, elaborate, jewel-encrusted headdresses. When they rode they were dressed in hip-length, snow-white felt stockings – decorated with appliqués of animals – with skirts over them. Both men and women were heavily tattooed.

Gold played a vital role in the myths of the Scythians. One of the myths that appear in Herodotus involves four golden objects: a plough, a yoke, a battle-axe and a drinking cup. These fell from the sky and three brothers rushed forward to retrieve them. When the two older brothers approached them however, the objects burst into flame. And so only Colaxais, the youngest brother, succeeded and thus became king. This myth, according to some scholars, explains the division of the Scythians into four tribes: the labourers, the farmers, the nomads, and the Royal Scythians, who ruled over the rest.

We learn from Herodotus that the nomad tribes “Having neither cities nor forts, (they) carry their dwellings wherever they go, their wagons, the only houses they possess...”. Hippocrates (460-377 B.C.) later expanded Herodotus' account: “The smallest of these wagons have four wheels, but some have six; they are covered with felt, and are constructed in the manner of houses, some having but a single apartment, and some three; they are proof against rain, snow and winds. The wagons are drawn by yokes of oxen...” The other tribes lived in fortified settlements.

Active trading took place with Greece, the Crimea, Bactria and Assyria.

As they left behind no written records, their language too has remained a controversial issue. The 19th century pan-Indo-German (European) movement attempted to populate the entire Eurasia with “superior Aryan” races and languages, and declared the Scythians an Indo-European race and their language to be an Iranian dialect (Müllenhoff and Zeuss). However, apart from a few common words recorded by Herodotus, there are about eight greatly distorted (Hellenized) personal names, of which only two could be termed as Indo-Aryan (Götz). One of their kings was called Skylas; another Prothotyes (Parta-tua or Barta-tua), whose son's name was Mady-es (the -es, -as, -us Greek endings can be dispensed with). Bilingual texts perceived to be Persian-Scythian have not been deciphered to this day. The Persians never considered the Scythians a related people; they later referred to the Turks as “Sakas”.

Scythian gold and silver ornaments, ivory carvings and ornamented vessels are outstanding works of art, showing strong Mesopotamian, Urartian and Greek influences. The favorite decorative motives were birds, panthers, griffins, winged lions, stags, and the tree of life. Their totem animal was the stag, of which superbly crafted gold examples came to light in Russia, as well as in Hungary.

Some of the more famous Scythian burial mounds or kurgans in Asia and Europe are: (1) in the Kuban-region in the Northern Caucasus: Kelemers; (2) in the Dnieper-region: Melgunov, Chertomlik and Soloha; (3) in the Don-region: “Five Brothers” and Oguz; (4) in the Crimean Peninsula: Kul-Oba and Dort-Oba; (5) in the Carpathian Basin (Hungary): Tápiószentmárton, Zöldhalompuszta and Szentés-Vekerzug; (6) in Asia – Pazyryk, Katanda and Basadra. From the 6th century B.C. Ziwiyeh kurgan, located near Lake Urmia in Azerbaijan, a gold seal came to light displaying five tulips rising from a common stem. This is the earliest known representation of the flower.

Scythian royalty - kings and queens, princes and princesses – interred in these kurgans were magnificently fitted out with gifts of gold and silver objects, jewelry, beautifully woven and appliquéd carpets and saddle covers, silks from China, foodstuff, wagons, gold-inlaid iron daggers, elaborately carved bridles, drinking horns, wine flagons, gold and silver cups, as well as fully caparisoned horses, women (probably concubines) and servants, all killed and placed next to their royal masters.

The most famous Scythian find was the cache of gold found in Siberia at the beginning of the 18th century, 120 objects in all. They are now in the Hermitage Museum in St. Petersburg.

According to the Greeks, the Scythians adored the Sun god (Oetosyrus), the god of Fire (Tabiti), the god of Heaven (Papeus), and the Earth goddess (Apiia). Their kings were also their High Priests. The Scythians had shamans, practicing sorcery and witchcraft, as well as augury, but had no temples or altars.

The Scythians practiced a rite of brotherhood, “a compact sealed with blood”, immortalized by a 2-inch gold plaque from the 4th century B.C., showing two warriors drinking from a common vessel. Herodotus described it thus: “They pour into a great cup wine mingled with the blood of the parties to the oath. They dip their weapons into it and then drink.”

Hungarian folk traditions, as well as mediaeval and later chroniclers – Anonymus, Kézai, Bonfini, etc. - maintain that the Magyars came from the land of Scythia, and are derived from the Scythian (szittyá) nation. These traditions must have had some historical foundation; for wherever the proto-Magyars lived, they must have belonged at one time or another to the vast Scythian empire. There are many common elements in their manner of warfare, customs, religious traditions, art, and attire.

For instance, according to one of the Hungarian “Miraculous Stag” legends, it was a stag that led the two brothers, Hunor and Magor into the Maeotis-marshes (Sea of Azov region on the Crimea), where they found the beautiful daughters of king Dula (probably of the Alans), abducted them and married them; thus they became the ancestors of the Huns and the Magyars.

According to the 12th century chronicler, Anonymus, the Magyars originally resided in Scythia, which they called Dentü-Moger. There the Leaders of the seven tribes entered into a “Blood Covenant” in the Scythian manner before they undertook the conquest of the Carpathian Basin in A.D. 895-896.

According to the Legend of St Gellért (Saint Gerard), the Hungarians rebelled against King Péter and defiantly returned to the adoration of the Scythian gods. The Hungarian chronicles and legends, together with the Codices of the Árpád era, as well as Bonfini refer to the same rebellion and stated “...the Hungarians relapsed into pagan tradition and turned again to the Scythian gods”. The affair of their pagan belief was lost forever with János, son of the rebel chief Vata. Today only fragments of the memory of this rebellion survive in the legends, folk recollections and inadvertently through the use of the common language.

The Magyars’ manner of equestrian warfare and their weaponry – battle-axes (fokos), composite or reflex bows – were nearly identical to those of the Scythians. Their custom of shooting backwards with their deadly arrows on the pursuing enemy was a similar technique. The Hungarian saddles of the 9-10th centuries are hardly distinguishable from the Scythian ones. Their manner of attire also shows numerous similarities – peaked helmets, trousers, belted jackets, high boots and bow cases. Especially the women’s tall headdresses show remarkable likeness to those worn in certain Hungarian regions.

Scythian ornamentation and motifs: winged lions, the gyrfalcon (turul), griffins, the tulip, the tree of life – and especially the stag, all have their Hungarian counterparts.

The ancient Magyars also adored the Sun, Fire and the Earth. Their Supreme Chief – the Kündü – was called “Son of the Sun” (Nap Fia). In ceremonial processions they carried a golden Sundisk before him. Their custom of burying their dead soldiers and princes with their mounts too has a Scythian analogy.

The last Scythian king was Palak(us).

They rode out of history as Scythians in the 2nd century B.C., only to reappear later as Sarmatians, Parthians, Huns, Sabirs, Avars and Magyars. They left behind no written record. All they left were some of the finest gold artifacts in the world. – B: 1020, 1230, 1138, 1141, 1153, 7617, T: 7617, 3240.→Scythia; Scythian-Hungarian Runic Writing; Wondrous Stag Legend; Blood Covenant or Treaty; Pre-Scythians; Chorezm; Pazyryk Scythian Graves, Alma-Ata, Runic Inscription Russia; Szamosközi, István (2); Sarmatians; Szeklers; Transylvania; Bonfini, Antonio.

Sebes, Gusztáv (Gustavus) (Scharenpeck), (Budapest, 22 January 1906 - Budapest, 30 January 1986) – Soccer coach, sports director. He played from 1918 to 1921 for the Vasas Club; from 1925 to 1926 for the M. Normád of Paris; in 1927 for CO Billancourt and, from 1927 to 1940, for the Hungária Club. He was selected for the national team in 1936. From 1945 until 1949 he coached the Hungarian national soccer team. From 1945 until 1956 he was captain of the association for the same team. Under the leadership of Sebes, the Hungarian team won the Olympic championships in 1952 in Helsinki. In 1954 the team was second in the Swiss World Championships. In 1953, at the so-called Century Games, the Hungarians beat the English team 6:3. From 1951 he was master coach. Between 1947 and 1950 Sebes was Director of the Sports Department of the National Union Council. From 1948 until 1960, he was President of the Hungarian Olympic Committee. From 1950 until 1956 he was Vice President of the National Physical Education and Sports Council. In 1954 he was founding member of the European Soccer Association, and was its vice president from 1954 until 1960. His books are: Hungarian Soccer (A magyar labdarúgás) (1955), and Joys and Disappointments (Örömök és csalódások) (1985). – B: 0883, T: 7667.

Sebestény, Gyula (Julius) (Eger, 16 March 1887 - Eger, 27 July 1954) – Physician. He earned his Medical Degree at the University of Graz, and from 1914 he was a demonstrator in the Medical Faculty of the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). From 1923 he was an assistant lecturer in the surgical ward of the University of Pécs; from 1925 Head Physician in the Pulmonary Surgery Department of the Hospital of the National Institute of Social Insurance (Országos Társadalombiztosító Intézet – OTI); from 1947 to 1954 he was a professor there. Early in his career, he had considerable success as a neurosurgeon. He is also well known for starting, for the first time in Hungary the Jacobeus procedure (endoscopic burning through adhesive pleurisy) and the extrapleural pneumothorax method. From 1947 he practiced the surgical solution of healing tuberculosis, for which he became internationally famous. In 1930 he was the first in Hungary to perform lobectomy (excision of a lobe of the lung). He worked out the so-called Sebestény procedure (pneumothorax mixta), a temporary collapse procedure in the treatment of tuberculosis. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Sebestyén, György (George) (Budapest, 30 October 1930 - Vienna, 6 June 1990) – Writer, translator of literary works. He studied philosophy and ethnography at the University of Budapest. His first articles appeared in the free-educational journal New Tillage (Új Szántás). In his youthful enthusiasm, he became a Communist and, as a journalist, he became employed by the daily paper Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet) and, in 1952 became its cultural columnist. He quickly became disillusioned with the Communist system and, in the summer of 1956, he joined those who demanded the rejuvenation of the Party. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he fled to Austria. He settled in Vienna and, for a short time, edited the weekly Hungarian Courier (Magyar Híradó). More and more decidedly and consistently, he started to write in German. He became an Austrian writer; published novels, short stories, sketches, travelogues, essays, plays, as well as a number of books in a variety of genres. In 1972 Sebestyén launched and edited the journal Pannonia. He also edited the cultural column of the weekly Die Furche, and redacted the Lower-Austrian journal entitled Morgen. He played an important role in the Austrian PEN Club: in 1988 he became its President. Several of his plays appeared on stage and a number of radio and TV plays were also presented. He translated twentieth century Hungarian prose writers into German; he also translated Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Die Tragödie des Menschen; Az ember tragédiája), and it was presented at the municipal theater of Klagenfurt in the fall of 1983. His works include Die Türen schliessen sich, novel (1957); Die Schule der Verführung, novel (1964); Maria Theresia, Geschichte einer Frau (1980), and The House of Existence (A lét háza), essays (1986). He received the Austrian Csokor Prize in 1975. – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Sebestyén, Gyula (Julius) (Szentantalfa 7 March 1864 - Balatonszepezd, 12 February 1946) – Ethnographer, literary historian. He read modern Philology at the University of Budapest, and obtained a Ph.D. in 1890. Pál (Paul) Gyulai directed his studies in folk-poetry. The Kisfaludy Society supported his studies, and was its member from 1909. From 1898 he worked at the Széchényi Library, Budapest, and was a Director of its book department from 1905. Initially, he researched the origin of Hungarian and the Finno-Ugric languages, and later, the Turkic languages and stood by their relationship to Hungarian. He devoted two books to the ancient Hungarian writing system; the first entitled Runic and Runic Writing (Rovás és Rovásírás) (1909), and the second, The Authentic Remnants of Runic Writing (A rovásírás hiteles emlékei) (1915). He was the first to describe in its entirety the Stick-Calendar (Botnaptár) from the Age of Reigning Prince Árpád (9th century). His contribution to the runic research is considerable. He was President of the Hungarian Chapter of the Folklore Fellows, and President of the Ethnographic Society; a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and he was Editor for the periodical Ethnography. He translated from Latin the Rudimenta of János (John) Telegdi. His other works include: The Name and Origin of the Szeklers (A székelyek neve és eredete) (1897); The Bards (A regösök) (1902); Bard Songs (Regös-énekek) (1902), The Legends of the Hungarian Conquest, vols. i, ii (A magyar honfoglalás mondái, I - II) (1904 - 1905), and Collection of Transdabubia (Dunántúli gyűjtés) (1906). He erected an obelisk with runic writing in the garden of his cottage at Balatonszepezd, witnessing our ancient runic writing. – B: 0883, T: 7103.→Gyulai, Pál; Telegdi, János; Szekler-Hungarian Runic Writing.

Sebestyén, János (John) (Budapest, 2 March 1931 - Budapest, 4 February 2012) – Harpsichordist and organist. His musical studies were completed at the National Music School and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he studied piano, organ and composition (1946-1955). He was a student of Ferenc (Francis) Gergely, István (Stephen) Antal, János (John) Hamerschlag, Ervin Major and Ferenc (Francis) Szabó. From 1950 to 1994 he worked at the Hungarian Radio, where he introduced series such as From the Diary of a Radioman (Egy rádiós naplójából); Those Years at the Radio... (Azok a rádiós évek...), and On the Wings of Memories (Emlékek szárnyán). From 1958 he began performing in concerts, first on the harpsichord, later on the organ. He was the founder of the Harpsichord Department of the Academy of Music, Budapest, and became its first professor. He was on concert tours in Europe, Japan and the USA. From the 1980s he organized an annual organ concert series in the Lake Balaton area (Siófok, Boglárlelle, Balatonlelle), which developed into the Balatonlelle Organ Festival. He made extensive recordings with various companies such as Hungaroton, Angelicum, Sonart and Naxos; altogether more than 20 Hungarian, and 84 LP and CD foreign recordings are to his credit. He also authored books. He was a recipient of many awards and prizes, among them the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1967) and the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Prize (1974). He was honored with the Merited Artist title (1982), the Cavaliere Medal, Italy (1984), the Officer Cross of Merit of Hungary (2000). He was made a member of the Don Henrique Order, Portugal (1966), and was an honorary citizen of Balatonlelle. – B: 0874, T: 7103.→Gergely, Ferenc.

Sebestyén, Jenő (Eugene) (Csúza 8 June 1888 - Budapest 2 June 1950) – Theologian of the Reformed Church and writer. He studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, completing his studies in 1906. From 1907 to 1910 he pursued postgraduate studies at the University of Utrecht. In 1910 he became an honorary lecturer at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest. In 1917 he obtained his Ph.D. in Philosophy. From 1918 to 1946, he was Professor of Dogmatism, Ethics and Systematic Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, and intermittently its Dean. With László (Ladislav) Ravasz he was Editor of the periodicals of Calvinist Review (Kálvinist Szemle) (1920-1930), and the Hungarian Calvinism (Magyar Kálvinizmus) (1934-1938). He founded the John Calvin Society (Kálvin János Társaság) (1936-1948). He was the main founder and leader of the leading Historical (or Neo) Calvinism (Történelmi Kálvinizmus) movement in the Hungarian Reformed Church between the two world wars. This theological trend was founded and represented chiefly by Abraham Kuyper (1837-1920), the Dutch theologian, statesman and politician, and it fought against theological liberalism in the Reformed Churches. Sebestyén created the Hungarian wing of Historical Calvinism. A group of theologians represented this movement, among them László (Ladislav) Ravasz, Sándor (Alexander) Makkai, Sándor (Alexander) Csekey and Béla Kenessey. Strong ties developed between Dutch and Hungarian theologians, who supported the movement. Sebestyén's works include Calvin and Capitalism (Kálvinizmus és Kapitalizmus) (1911); Calvinism and Democracy (Kálvinizmus és demokrácia) (1912); Nietzsche and Calvin (1918); Who is a true Calvinist? (Ki az igazi kálvinista?) (1925); The Spiritual Life of the Calvinist Woman, vols. i,ii,iii (A kálvinista nő lelki világa, I,II,III) (1928-1934); Reformed Dogmatism, vols. i,ii,iii (Reformétus Dogmatika I,II,III) (new edition 1992), and Reformed Ethics (Református Etika) (new edition 1997). – B: 0883, 1031, 1846, 1861, 1703, T: 7456, 7103.→Ravasz, László; Makkai, Sándor, Csekey, Sándor; Kenessey, Béla.

Sebestyén, Márta (Martha) (Budapest, 19 August 1957 - ) – Singer, folkmusic vocalist, composer and actress. Sebestyén's mother is a composer, and was a music student of Zoltán Kodály. Her father was an economist and author. Márta Sebestyén was educated at Miklós Radnóti High School, Budapest. She has sung regularly and recorded with the Hungarian folk group, Muzsikás. She is known for adaptations of the folk songs of County Somogy and Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). She has also adapted Hindi, Yiddish, Bulgarian, Slovak etc. folk songs to traditional Hungarian style. Márta Sebestyén sang in the movie The English Patient. Three songs, recorded together with Muzsikás, appeared in the Japanese animated movie: Only Yesterday. She also sang in and contributed material to the album Kaddish by Towering Inferno (1993). Her further recordings include Albums: Transylvanian Portraits (1992); High Days: Hungarian Christmas Folk Songs (2000), and I Can See the Gates of Heaven...(2009). Compilations: Apocrypha (1992); The Best of Márta Sebestyén (1997), and World Star of World Music (2000). She appeared in : István the King (István a király) (1983); Love Record (Szerelmeslemez) (1996); Connecting Images (Nokia) (1998); The Bartók Album (Muzsikás) (1999), and Big Blue Ball (2008). She also appeared in a number of feature films. Sebestyén was awarded the Grammy Award in 1996, and the UNESCO Artist for Peace title in 2010. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Muzsikás Hungarian Folkmusic Ensemble; Kodály, Zoltán.

Sebők, Tamás (Thomas A. Sebeok) (Budapest, 9 November 1920 - Bloomington, Indiana, 21 December 2001) – Linguist, semiotician and anthropologist. He left Hungary as a high school student and settled in England in 1936. He emigrated to the USA in 1937, due to the expanding National Socialism in Europe. He studied at the University of Chicago and later at Princeton University, obtaining his Ph.D. in Linguistics in 1945; at the same time he lectured at Indiana University in Bloomington from 1943, where he became Professor of Linguistics from 1967 to 1978 and, from 1978 until his retirement, he was Professor of Linguistics and Semiotics. In the meantime, he directed the Center for Linguistics and Semiotics from 1956, and during the years 1965 to 1969, headed the institute formed for the study of human relations. He founded and led the Uralic and Altaic chair of the University. He was a visiting professor at some twenty universities in America, Europe and Asia, and from 1975 to 1982 he was President of the American Linguistic Society; from 1984 he was President of the American Semiotic Society and, from 1968, Editor of the journal Semiotica, and from 1974 editing the Studies in Semiotics. His other main fields of study are Linguistics and Anthropology. His works include Spoken Hungarian (1945); Spoken Finnish (1947), and The Sign and its Masters (1979). After Sebők's death, his rich book collection on bio-semiotics was donated to the Department of Semiotics of the University of Tartu, Estonia. The “Sebők Fellow” Award is the highest honor given by the Semiotic Society of America. – B: 1672, 1031, T: 7456.

Sebők, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Párkány, now Sturovo, Slovakia, 22 September 1861 - Budapest, 4 June 1916) – Journalist and and writer of juvenile works. He began his studies to obtain a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest, but entered a journalistic career instead. From 1882 he was Editor of Pester News (Pesti Hírlap), from 1884 that of the Szeged Diary (Szegedi Napló), from 1887 again for Pester News (Pesti Hírlap), and from 1892 its associate editor. From 1909, together with Elek (Alec) Benedek, he edited the juvenile paper, Good Pal (Jó Pajtás). From 1891 he was member of the Petőfi Society and, from 1904, a member of the Kisfaludy Society. He published several volumes of short stories and about 30 volumes of very popular juvenile works, e.g. the Travels of Master Bruin (Mackó úr utazása) (1902); The Life of Lajos Kossuth (Kossuth Lajos élete) (1902), and the Travels of Old Growler (Dörmögő Dömötör utazása) (1912). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Benedek, Elek; Kossuth, Lajos.

Secreta Secretorum – A 14th century chronicle manuscript written in Hungarian around 1370 that was destined for the royal library of King Lajos I. (Louis the Great, 1340-1380). The translation of the legend of St. Francis of Assisi from Latin to Hungarian is attributed to an unknown translator, while the decorations are credited to the painter of the Illuminated Chronicle of 1473. The original manuscript is kept in Oxford; a copy of this text is included in the Jókai Codex written around 1440. – B: 1230, T: 3240.→Codex Literature.

Segesvár (Latin: Castrum Sex, Romanian: Sighișoara, German: Schässburg) – Town in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in former County Nagy-Küküllő, at the confluence of the Nagy-Küküllő and Hortobágy Rivers, in the terraced valley of the Nagy-Küküllő at 350 m above sea level, on the Arad -Brassó (Braşov) and the Kolozsvár (Cluj-Napoca) – Brassó main railway lines, as well as on the Kolozsvár-Predeal and Segesvár-Székelyudvarhely local lines. It is among the most picturesque towns of Transylvania and indeed in the whole Carpathian Basin, located in surroundings of fruit gardens, vineyards and forests. It used to be one of the cultural centers of the Transylvanian Saxons. From the 14th century it was declared a Royal Free Town of the Hungarian Kingdom. Its population in 1992 was: 34 537 with 25 387 Romanian, 6948 Hungarian, 1327 German Saxon and 853 Romany Gipsy (in terms of denominations: 24 992 Greek Orthodox, 3260 Reformed, 2230 Roman Catholic, 1511 Unitarian and 290 Greek Catholic); in 1930: 13 096 (ca. 50% Lutheran German, 30% Greek-Orthodox Romanian and 20% Unitarian and Roman Catholic Hungarian); in 1901: 10,868, in 1910: 11587 (5486 German, 3031 Romanian and 2687 Magyar). The town consists of two parts: (1) the lower town of many fine medieval houses, also the Town Hall, the County Hall (designed by Ignác Alpár); the Clock Tower (containing the municipal museum), three 15th century Gothic churches: the Lutheran church on the hill (its sanctuary from the 14th century, the nave completed at the end of the 15th century), the Catholic church (built in 1894) and the Greek-Orthodox church; (2) the upper town on the 120-meter high cone-shaped castle hill, or “school-hill”, with a well-preserved fortress: a fortified castle of strong walls and 14 towers (bastions), all given names like Kovács Tower (built in 1631), Szabó Tower (from the 14th century), and the Mészáros Tower. A set of wooden stairs leads up at a steep angle to the Saxon school and the Lutheran church. The “mountain church” of a large basilica proportions with three naves was built by the Saxon settlers during the 15th century in place of an earlier, smaller church from about 1350. The Gothic monastery church of three naves was built during the 13th century, originally used by the Dominican Order. The statue of the great Hungarian poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi was removed (saved in the turbulence of World War I in 1916) and later set up at Kiskunfélegyháza, where Petőfi’s parents lived.

Segesvár was established in place of the Roman Stenarum during the reign of King Géza II (1224), and subsequent kings settled Saxons here and in other parts of uninhabited areas of Transylvania. It rapidly developed into an important fortress and town. The union of the “three nations” of Transylvania (Hungarians, Szeklers and Saxons) was affirmed here in 1506. In 1600 it was surrendered to Mihály Vitéz and later to Basta; in 1605, the troops of Bocskai took it and, in 1662 János (John) Kemény’s forces laid siege to it. The fires of 1676, 1709 and 1788 damaged the town considerably. During the 1848-1849 War of Independence from Austrian rule, the town was occupied by General Forró in 1849; then, a little later, General Bem’s army marched into its streets. Finally, on 31 July 1849, in the vicinity of the town, Bem’s forces suffered a heavy defeat from the Austrian army in the so-called Battle of Segesvár. The poet Petőfi, who joined Bem’s army, most likely fell here or was taken into Russian captivity. The Russian General Skariatin also fell here; his tomb is at the roadside near the town. – B: 1030, 1068, 1582, 1816, T: 7456.→Petőfi, Sándor; Segesvár, Battle of; Bem, József.

Segesvár, Battle of – One of the bloodiest battles of the 1848 revolutionary war took place in Segesvár (now Sighișoara, Romania), on July 31, 1849. The Transylvanian Honvéd army, led by József Bem, arrived at Fehéregyháza near Segesvár, after weeks of incessant fighting. It was here that Bem attempted to stop the invading Russian army, which vastly outnumbered his Honvéd troops. Though the Russian czar’s army suffered huge losses, even losing its commanding general, Skaryatin, it gained a decisive victory over the Hungarians. One of Hungary’s greatest poets, Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, who had inspired the revolutionaries with his poetry, disappeared in this battle; either he was killed or taken to Russia as a prisoner. Not far from the highway at the István-well, a memorial was erected in 1907 to preserve Petőfi’s memory and near the highway another monument stands in memory of the Russian general. B: 1138, 1020, T: 7665.→Petőfi, Sándor; Segesvár; Bem, József.

Segesváry, Victor (Miskolc, 20 February 1929 - ) – Economist, political scientist, minister of the Reformed Church, theologian and author. He completed High School in Miskolc (1939-1940), Kolozsvár (Now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1940-1944) and Budapest (1945-1947). He studied Law at the University of Budapest (1947-1949) and was excluded for political reasons in January 1949. Later, he completed his studies in Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest (1949-1954). During the 1956 Revolution, he was elected Co-President of the Christian Youth Federation and a co-opted member of the Student Revolutionary Council of Budapest. He went into exile in November 1956 to Geneva, Switzerland. He obtained a Ph.D. in Political Science and a Doctorate in Divinity from the University of Geneva. Segesváry was Chaplain of the Hungarian refugees in 1957; Secretary General, Geneva-African Institute, (1961-1962); Research Editor, Business International S.A., Geneva, (1964-1967) and Market Research Manager/Editor, SESAF S.A., Geneva (1967-1968). He was Head of the Research Department at the Henry-Dunant Institute, ICRC, Geneva, and Lecturer/Supervisor at the International Trade Center (ITC), Geneva (1969-1971). Segesváry's overseas career includes the following positions: Senior Advisor/Project Manager for the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), and ITC, in Algeria, Afghanistan and Mali (1971-1984); short-term assignments in Turkey, Egypt and Morocco for the United Nations Development Program (UNDP), New York, and ITC, Geneva (1973); Senior Advisor/Consultant, with various UN organizations in New York (1984-1994); assignments in Ghana, Senegal, Tunisia, Cape Verde, Gambia, Mali, Chad, Cameroun, Cambodia, etc. He has been a visiting professor since 1999: Università del Sacro Cuore – Alta scuola di economia e relazioni internazionali, Milan (1999); he took part in the European Conference on Problems Related to Immigration in Lecce, Italy (1999); the Conference on Political Perspectives in the New Century, Fondazione Alcide de Gasperi, Rome (2001); at the Institute of World Geography, University of Budapest (2002); Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest (2002); he was a lecturer at the Graduate Institute of International Studies, Geneva, Switzerland (2003). Between 1971 and 1994 he prepared or directed about four hundred studies, documents and reports in the course of his work with the UN. Since 1994 he has published in various languages more than 50 articles and studies. Segesváry's books are The 18th Century History of the Ráday Library (A Ráday Könyvtár 18. századi története) (Budapest, 1992) (written in 1955-1956); The Realism of Khrushchev: Soviet Policy in the Middle East 1953-1960 (Le réalisme khrouchtchévien: La politique soviétique au Proche-Orient, 1953-1960) (Neuchâtel, 1968); The Franco-German War of 1870-1871. The Birth of Red Cross Solidarity (La guerre franco-allemande de 1870-1871. La naissance de la solidarité Croix-Rouge) (Geneva, 1970); Islam and the Reformation: A Study of the Zurich Reformers' Attitude toward Islam, 1510-1550 (L'Islam et la Réforme: Étude sur l'attitude des réformateurs zuricois envers l'Islam, 1510-1550) (Lausanne, 1978; reprinted in the USA, San Francisco, 1998); Inter-Civilizational Relations and the Destiny of the West: Dialogue or Confrontation? (Lewiston, 1998; 2. ed. Lanham, 2000); The Crisis of Western Civilization at the End of the Millennium (A nyugati civilizáció ezredvégi válsága) (Budapest, 2001); and World State, Nation States, or Non-Centralized Institutions? A Vision of the Future in Politics (Lanham, 2003). During 2004 and 2005 his lifework was published on the Internet. – B&T: 2065.

Segner, János András (John Andrew) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 9 October 1704 - Halle, Germany, 5 October 1777) – Natural scientist, mathematician, physician. He completed his secondary school education in Pozsony and Győr. He started his tertiary studies at the Debrecen Reformed College and continued at the University of Medical Sciences at Jena, Germany, in the fields of physics and mathematics. He was awarded his Medical Degree in 1730; practiced medicine in Pozsony, and was later Chief Physician of Debrecen. In 1732 he taught at Jena University. At the newly founded Göttingen University, he taught physics, mathematics and chemistry from 1735 to 1755. In the meantime, he was also engaged in studies in astronomy, and established the observatory at Göttingen University. He was Professor of Physics, Mathematics and Astronomy at Halle University from 1755 until his death. Segner's research covered all areas of physics, mathematics and chemistry. He accomplished his most important achievements in physics: the dynamics of liquids and solids. Leonard Euler used Segner's work to formulate the Euler turbine equation. Segner's name is usually associated with the Segner wheel (Segner kerék) that is considered to be the prototype of the turbine. Meteorology historians acclaim him as the founder of mathematical meteorology. There is an important theorem that is attributed to him: any object, regardless of its shape, has a certain neutral point, where three imaginary lines cut each other in right angles. There, the effect of centrifugal force is annihilated. Segner proposed the use of sulfur oxide to disinfect wheat-planting seeds and the use of wood ash for fertilizing. He also kept busy studying the technology of manufacturing sugar, alcohol and gunpowder. He wrote excellent mathematical textbooks on a level with the knowledge of his era. His fame as a mathematician and natural scientist was recognized throughout Europe. Several scientific societies and academies invited him into their membership – B: 1078, 0883, 1123, 1153, T: 7675.→Segner Wheel.

Segner Wheel – Water wheel, Segner's reaction wheel, propelled by forces of counter effects; prototype of the turbine, invented by János (John) Segner, This consists of two Z-shaped tubes laid out diagonally and rotating along their vertical axis. As the liquid flowed through them, the wheel gained momentum counter to the flow. The Segner wheel was tested at Norten, near Göttingen, in a specially built grain mill. He also tried to prove the efficiency of the process by mathematical calculations. At the beginning of the 19th century, a Segner wheel was built in Hungary based on the plans of Farkas Kempelen, to power the mining machinery at the Hodrus mine. – B: 1078, 1138, 1730, 1020, T: 7675, 7456.→Segner, János András; Kempelen, Farkas.

Seiber, Mátyás (Matthew) (Budapest, 5 May 1905 - Johannesburg, South-African Republic, 25 September 1960) – Composer. From 1921 to 1925 he studied cello with Alfred Schiffer, and composition with Zoltán Kodály. From 1928 he was Professor of Jazz Instrumentation at the Hochschule für Musik in Frankfurt am Main, besides being the cellist and later the conductor of the Radio Orchestra of Frankfurt. He moved to London in 1935 and, from 1943, he taught at Morley College. In 1945 he established a chamber choir, called the Dorian Singers. He gained fame mainly with his cantatas, chamber choruses, violin and cello concertos, as well as with his film music. He wrote studies on the string quartets and chamber works of Béla Bartók, and also on jazz. His major works are: the Transylvanian Rhapsody (Erdélyi Rapszódia) (1941); Cantata Saecularis (1951), and Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, Chamber Cantata after Joyce (1957). – B: 0883, T: 7684.→Kodály, Zoltán; Bartók, Béla.

Seidl, Anton (Antal) (Budapest, 7 May 1850 - New York, USA, 28 March 1898) – Opera conductor. He was studying at the Leipzig Conservatory, Germany (1870-1872), when he was called to Bayreuth as one of Wagner's copyists. There, he assisted in making the first fair copy of Der Ring des Nibelungen. Then it was natural that he should take a part in the first Bayreuth Festival in 1876. His opportunity to perform as a conductor came when, on Wagner's recommendation, he was appointed to the Leipzig Stadt-Theater, where he remained. In 1882 he went on tour with Angelo Neumann's Nibelungen Ring Company. The critics attributed to his conducting the artistic success of the production of the Trilogy at her Majesty's Theatre in London in June of that year. In 1883 he went with Neumann to Bremen and, two years later, was appointed successor to Leopold Damrosch as conductor of the German Opera in New York. In America, Seidl's orchestra became famous. In 1886 he was one of the conductors in Bayreuth and, in 1897 in Covent Garden, London. Seidl assisted Richard Wagner in the preparation of the scores of the 'Ring' music and was one of the most inspired of the Wagner conductors. To his memory the Anton Seidl Society and the Anton Seidl Award were founded. – B: 0903, T: 7103.

Seinfeld, Jerry (Jerome A.) (Brooklyn, New York, 29 April, 1954 - ) – Actor, comedian, writer. He was born to Hungarian Kálmán (Coloman) Seinfeld, the funniest man in his family, the owner of a sign-making company, and his wife, Betty. His family moved to Long Island where he spent his childhood. After graduating from high school, Seinfeld went on to college, first attending the State University of New York, and then moving on to Queens College of the City University of New York, where he received a Bachelor's Degree in communications and theater in 1976. Seinfeld performed while in his college years and, after graduation he began working in New York comedy clubs, often without pay, while working a number of odd jobs. Seinfeld's "observational humor" slowly established him on the comedy club circuit. In 1981, Seinfeld appeared on "The Tonight Show" with Johnny Carson, where he became a frequent guest, as well as David Letterman's late-night talk show. Then he starred in several cable TV specials and series. Seinfeld and his friend Larry David began working up an idea for a situation comedy and in 1990 the show name "Seinfeld" with his circle of friends appeared on NBC, and became its most successful series. Among his books are: Seinlanguage (1993), and Halloween, for children (2003). His films include Good Money (1996); Comedian (2002), and Bee Movie (2007). Seinfeld was honored with more than 20 major awards and nearly 60 nominations including an Emmy, Golden Globe and three People's Choice Awards; in addition, two Writers Guild Awards of America. The successful standup comic Jerry Seinfeld is the most influential comedian of his generation; a critically acclaimed as a stand-up comic, television actor, and best-selling author. – B: 1081, 1031, T: 7103.

Seismology – The science of observation, monitoring, recording the causes of earthquake waves, as well as developing possible conclusions regarding the Earth's internal structure. Earthquakes perceptible through the human senses have been recorded for millennia. Pál (Paul) Kitaibel constructed the first map, quantitatively showing the destructive effect of an earthquake for the earthquake of 1810 at Mór, Hungary. This was the world's first earthquake map. – B: 1138, T: 7674. → Kitaibel, Paul.

Selényi, Pál (Paul) (Adony, 17 November 1884 - Budapest, 1 March 1954) – Physicist. He obtained his Degree in physics and mathematics from the Budapest University of Sciences in 1907, where he was an assistant to the famous Professor Loránd Eötvös. After earning a Ph.D. in 1910, he continued his studies in Berlin and Göttingen on a scholarship. He worked as a research engineer at the United Incandescent Ltd. Budapest, (Egyesült Izzó, TUNGSRAM) from 1921 until his retirement 1939. He was on the staff at the Space and Form architectural magazine until 1945, then at the Hungarian News Agency. He was granted an honorary lecturer (privat-dozent) status by the University of Budapest, and was invited to become a member of the Hungarian Academy of Science in 1948. In 1950, he was appointed to a university professorship. Between 1928 and 1935 Selényi completed preliminary studies on basic techniques of physical reproductions, but obtained only a partial patent protection for his inventions. Chester F. Carlson, a physicist and patent agent exploited this fact, registered the patent under his own name, and teamed with the Xerox and Rank companies to dominate the world market until the patent protection right expired in the 1960s. However, he did not pursue the matter of his failed patent rights. Selényi achieved significant results in the areas of classic and technical physics. His famous experiment involving wide-angle interference proved the ball-shaped wave nature of light, thereby disputing Einstein's theory on heat-radiation. He was also an internationally respected authority on photographing interiors, art objects, heritage buildings and historic monuments. – B: 0883, 1138, T: 7675.→Eötvös, Baron Loránd.

Sellei, Camillo (Soroksár, 20 September 1902 - Budapest, 8 August 1979) – Physician, internal specialist, oncologist. He completed his medical studies in 1927 at the Medical School of the University of Budapest. As a young doctor he started working at the Korányi Clinic. He was a member of the Korányi School. It was at the Korányi Clinic that he first came into contact with cancer research. Already in the 1930s he was researching, together with László (Ladislav) Karczag, László (Ladislav) Németh and Béla Jani, the possibility of treatment with medication in the spirit of the then revolutionary new chemotherapy. In the course of this they were the first to recognize the reducing effect of mustard gas on tumors. In 1944 and 1945 he was saving labor camp inmates, and after 1945 he worked as an internal specialist at the Hospital on Vas Street, Budapest, treating deportees. Later he joined Professor Imre (Emeric) Hajnal and, as a senior assistant professor, helped rebuild the No. II Clinic of Internal Medicine. In 1951, for political reasons, he was forced to leave the clinic together with numerous colleagues. He could only continue his researches after the formation of the National Institute of Oncology (Országos Onkológiai Intézet). That is where he found a place of work and fellowship in which he could be successfully active until the end of his life. For 25 years he was Head Specialist of the Internal Medicine Department. Sellei was the guiding force of tumor-chemotherapy research. During the course of his activity, six new compounds for tumor treatment became available. He wrote his Ph.D. dissertation in 1966 in this subject. The first book on tumor-therapy in the Hungarian language appeared under his editing; later the same was published in English as well. He also represented the Hungarian cytostaticum research on an international level. His research and organizational activities were also acknowledged internationally. He was a member of numerous foreign societies of medical science, among them the Academy of Sciences of New York from 1958. He was a well-known lecturer at congresses, frequently presiding over meetings. His works include Functional Diagnostics (Funkcionális diagnosztika), with Antal Fischer (Vienna, 1940); Twenty-Five Years Fight Against Cancer, co-editor (Budapest, 1966); Treatment of Tumorous Illnesses with Medication (Daganatos betegségek gyógyszeres kezelése), with Sándor Eckhardt, László Németh (Budapest, 1968), and Chemotherapy of Neoplastic Diseases, with Sándor Eckhardt and László Németh (Budapest, 1970). – B: 0883, T: 7684.→Karczag, László; Németh, László; Korányi, Baron Frigyes.

Sellyei, József (Joseph) (Miskovics) (Vágsellye, now Šaľa, Slovakia, 1 January 1909 - Vágselye, 6 March 1941) – Hungarian writer in Slovakia (formerly North Hungary). He came from a peasant family; and lived in part the life of a peasant. In his writings social issues received priority. He first appeared with his writing local newspapers. In 1929 he published a volume of free-style poetry entitled Lad of the Carnival (Farsang legénye) poems (1929). His prose writings were published in the newspapers Our Times (Korunk); the New Word (Új Szó); The Road (Az Út); the Hungarian Sun (Magyar Nap), and later: the West Nyugat; the Free Word (Szabad Szó); the Work (Munka), and the People of the East (Kelet Népe). He lived under difficult circumstances and, at the end of the 1930s, he became ill. His works include Reed-covered Houses (Nádas házak) novel (1931); Stories, Written in the Night (Éjszaka írt novellák), stories (1932); The Ground Ran Out From Under Him (Elfogyott a föld alóla), novel (1936). Sándor (Alex) Csanda published his selected works with an introductory study (Bratislava, 1957). – B: 0883, 1890, T: 7684.

Selye, János (John) (Vienna, Austria, 26 January 1907 - Montreal, PQ, Canada, 20 October 1982) – Physician. He graduated from High School in Komárom, and studied Medicine at the German University of Prague. From 1924 he spent some years at the universities of Paris and Rome, and finally obtained his Medical Degree in Prague in 1929. He was awarded a scholarship in 1931, and emigrated to Canada as a biochemistry lecturer at McGill (French) University in Montreal. From 1934 he was an assistant professor, and in 1941, became full professor. From 1945 he was the director and teacher at his own Institute, the Institut de Medicine et de Chirurgie Experimentale. From his retirement until his death, Selye worked as the President of the newly organized International Institute of Stress. Following lengthy and persevering research work through the methodical examination of thousands of experimental animals, Selye recognized and drew up the definition of stress. He identified the many oppressive (stress) factors for stress and recognized its morbid, consequently disease-causing effect as well. Selye performed experimental studies relating to myocardial infarction, the typical disease of the modern era. Selye contributed to many publications. His widely acknowledged book, the Textbook of Endocrinology, was published in 1949. Selye wrote hundreds of studies, among them studies for 12 major and 6 minor researches. He was an editorial board member of 25 scientific publications and delivered lectures in ten different languages all over the world. Many of his twenty-two books were translated into ten languages. Between 1950 and 1967, as an appreciation of his contributions, Selye was awarded an honorary doctorate of the universities from nine countries, as well as memberships to 110 academies. The University of Komárom, a high school and a hospital in Komárom (Slovakia), bear his name. – B: 1288, 1123, 1730, T: 7660

Sélyei M. István (Stephen) (Sélye, Selje, Selye or Sellye, born about 1627 - Pápa, November 1692) – Cleric of the Reformed Church in Pápa. From 1669, he was Bishop of Transdanubia (Dunántúl). In 1674 the Martial Law Court of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) sentenced him to death, because he refused to renounce his Reformed faith. He was not executed, but was kept in jail for a while and then sent to suffer as a galley slave with the fleet of Naples. In 1676, Dutch Admiral, Michael de Ruyter, freed him together with his surviving companions. He went to Germany and later to Switzerland. In 1677 he returned to Hungary and worked as a pastor in Pápa for some 15 years until his death. His greeting speech to the town of Zürich survived as a manuscript (in Hungarian translation it was published in the paper Observer (Figyelő) (1881); also his letter written to Mihály (Michael) Teleki (in Protestant Gazette 1888, no. 26). His works include Cemetery Garden (Temető kert) funeral orations (1655), and Traveling Companion (Útitárs), occasional sermons (1657). – B: 0883, 0931, T: 7456.—“Decade of Mourning”; Kollonich, Lipót; Galley slavery; Ruyter, Michael de; Simonides, János.

Semmelweis, Ignác Fülöp (Ignatius Philip) (Buda, 1 July 1818 - Vienna, 13 August 1865)

– Physician. He studied in Buda, attended Law School at Vienna University, but soon switched to medical studies at Pest. He received his Medical Degree at Vienna University in 1844, and became a surgeon and obstetrician in 1846. He started to work in Vienna at a well-known pathology institute. In 1846 Semmelweis accepted a position as an assistant at a maternity hospital in Vienna. In this hospital the medical students received pathology training as well. The rate of death from puerperal fever at this hospital was higher than in other maternity hospitals, where there was no pathology practice. Semmelweis demonstrated that puerperal fever was not an independent disease but a consequence of infection and could be prevented by chlorine disinfection. In his department, Semmelweis ordered that every doctor wash his hands with chlorine water before obstetrical examination. As a result, the death rate significantly decreased. His theory ran counter to contemporary thought and his Austrian colleagues rejected the theory, that “a disease could be prevented by hand washing”. Semmelweis was ridiculed even in his own place of work. Although he achieved the title of Associate Professor (Privatdozent), he became depressed and returned to Pest, where he assumed an unpaid position as head obstetrician of Rókus Hospital. In 1855 he became Professor of Obstetrics at Pest University. In the meantime, the Maternity Hospital of Zurich University also invited him, but Semmelweis refused the invitation. As a result of Semmelweis’ methods, puerperal fever was almost eliminated at his clinic in Pest and, consequently, the Semmelweis procedure was initiated at other maternity institutes in Hungary. Only a few foreign obstetricians accepted the Semmelweis procedure, Puerperal fever continued to devastate young mothers abroad until an international debate developed an argument for Semmelweis’ methods. Semmelweis suffered a nervous breakdown and died in the neurological hospital in Vienna. He was the greatest figure in the field of Hungarian medical science. He not only discovered the cause of puerperal fever – for which he was named the “Saviour of Mothers” – but his practices were the early precursors of aseptic surgical principles. Long before Pasteur, Semmelweis discovered the contagious role of bacteria. The jealous Austrian professors prevented the publication of his findings. Semmelweis, however, made use of the results in public practice. Only after his death did the world recognize Semmelweis’ epoch-making discoveries. Lord Joseph Lister, the founder of modern surgery, wrote of Semmelweis: “Without Semmelweis I would not have achieved anything. Surgery is indebted to Hungary’s great son....”. Semmelweis was an excellent surgeon as well. He was the first in Hungary to perform ovarian surgery and the second to perform Cesarean sections. In memory of Semmelweis, the Medical University of Budapest in 1960 founded the “Semmelweis Memorial Medal”, awarded annually. In 1965, on the 100th anniversary of Semmelweis’ death, his remains were placed to eternal rest in an honorary grave in the yard of the house of his birth, which is now the Museum of Medical History. – B: 1078, 0883, 1288, 1730, T: 7660.

Semsey-Halmos-Csáky Plan – During the first days of December 1919, Andor (Andre) Semsey, a landed gentleman from northern Hungary, and Károly (Charles) Halmos, a lawyer from Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), who had close family connections with several French generals, went to Paris to see General Destremeau and Captain Veil – the head of the political department of the French army command, to seek their help in the cause of a French-Hungarian rapprochement. After receiving a favorable response, they traveled to Budapest and, having made an agreement with Count Pál (Paul) Teleki, who headed the Office of Peace Preparations, they returned to Paris on 20 January 1920.

In Paris, accompanied by General Hubert Lyautey (1854-1934), Chief-of-Staff Maxime Weygand (1867-1965), and Foreign Minister Briand, they were received by Prime Minister Clemenceau. As a follow-up to the audience, they conducted further negotiations with Louis Loucheur, the Minister of Trade. On the basis of the Hungarian Government's previous consent, the French Government foresaw Hungary as the future center of the Schneider-Creuzot French Concern in Eastern Europe. The Hungarian State Railways and the ironworks of Budapest and Diósgyőr would be on lease to France for 33 years, and the French banks would be able to participate in the re-capitalization of the Hungarian General Credit Bank, receiving 1/7th of its shares. The French, on their part, expressed their willingness to help Hungary in the question of border modifications, if in her foreign and internal policies Hungary was willing to consider the French point of view. In 1920, before the signing of the Peace Treaty of Trianon, the French Central Command supported a modification of the proposed Trianon borders, which matched about the size of the areas returned to Hungary in the two Vienna Awards (1938, 1940).

A letter of intent with respect of the options involved in the agreement with the French was formulated on 29 May 1920, and a delegation, whose members included Count István (Stephen) Csáky, the future foreign minister, was dispatched to Paris. On 7 June 1920 (three days after the Peace of Trianon), in the French Foreign Ministry, in a formal ceremony, the French-Hungarian Friendship Treaty was signed.

After the signing of the Treaty, General Gábor (Gabriel) Tánczos and Colonel Baron Boldizsár (Balthasar) Láng had a meeting with Maxime Weygand, the French Chief-of-Staff. Maurice Fouchet, the Chief Commissioner of France in Budapest, had an audience with Regent Horthy expressing his Government's satisfaction with the agreement.

In the question of border modifications, the French Government was only willing to take action at a later undetermined date, while the Hungarian Government wished the immediate implementation of at least some of the French promises. Since the French refused to act on Hungary's behalf in the immediate future, the Hungarian Government was reluctant to concede much of the country's most important economic interests to a foreign government without a proper and immediate quid pro quo, and eventually dropped the whole matter from its agenda. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→Csáky, Count Pál; Teleki, Count Pál; Trianon Peace Treaty; Vienna Award I; Vienna Award II, Paris Peace Treaty.

Semseyite (Pb<sub>9</sub>Sb<sub>8</sub>S<sub>21</sub>) – Lead antimony sulfide, its composition is similar to that of jamesonite, while in appearance it resembles pligionite. It has monoclinic, small tabular crystals, metallic luster and a gray color. It was discovered by József Sándor (Joseph Alexander) Krenner in Felsőbánya in 1881 and was named in honor of science patron Andor (Andre) Semsey. It is also found in Radna (in Transylvania, now Romania), and lately also in the Harz Mountains. – B: 1078, T: 7674. → Krenner, József Sándor.

Sennyei, Vera (Budapest, 3 January 1915 - Budapest, 28 May 1962) – Actress. She studied at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, and graduated in 1936. As a student, she already appeared on the stages of the theaters in the Capital, including the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház). From 1936 to 1939 she acted in the Hungarian Theatre (Magyar Színház), the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrási úti Színház), and the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház). After appearing briefly at the Royal Theater (Royal Színház) in 1941 she was with the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) between 1941 and 1943. From 1945 to 1949 she was with the Artist Theater (Művész Színház). From 1949 to 1951 she worked at the Youth Theater (Ifjúsági Színház) and, from 1951 to 1954 at the Madách Theater. In 1954 she was with the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) and, from 1956 she was in the Operetta Theater (Operettszínház) of Budapest. After 1960 she was in the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház). In the same year she was successful at the Round Theater (Körszínház). Vera Sennyei was beautiful, elegant in appearance, and created an erotic milieu around. Her acting was characterized with a love of life and humor. She was also excellent in musicals and chanson singing. Her main roles included Eva in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); title role in H. Ibsen's Hedda Gabler; Kupavina in Osztrovskij's Wolves and Sheep (Farkasok és bárányok); Mama in I. Mándy's Deep Water (Mélyvíz); Adél in F. Molnár's Glass Slipper (Úveg cipő), and Melitta in Hubay-Vas-Ránky's Three Nights of a Love (Egy szerelem három éjszakája). Her feature film-roles included My Daughter is not like that (Az én lányom nem olyan) (1937); Mary's Two Nights (Mária két éjszakája) (1940); Disappointment (Csalódás) (1942); The Sneezed-away Empire (Az eltiüsszentett birodalom) (1956), and Mirage in Every Quantity (Délibáb minden mennyiségben) (1961). She was a recipient of the title of Merited Artist (1961). There is a commemorative plate on the wall of her home. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7103.

Seprődi, János (John) (Kibéd, now Chibed, Romania, 15 August, 1874 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 6 March 1923) – Music historian, folklorist. He obtained a teacher's diploma from the University of Kolozsvár. From 1904 until his death, he was a teacher at the Reformed College of Kolozsvár. He was a researcher of the history of old Hungarian music and an important folk music collector. Beside Béla Vikár, Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály, he is one of the early discoverers of folk-tunes and those who made popular the original Hungarian folksongs. Furthermore, he did his best to re-establish the original beauty of hymnody in the Reformed Church. His main works include Criticism of the Test-song-book of the Reformed Church (A reformátusok próbaénekeskönyvének bírálata) (1904); Memorial in the Matter of Hungarian Music (Emlékirat a magyar zene ügyében) (1906); The Musical Development of Hungarian Folk Music (A magyar népdal zenei fejlődése) (1908); Literary and Music-historical Contributions to the Kajon-Codex (Kájoni-kódex irodalom, s zenetörténeti adalékai) (Literary Science Gazette, 1909); Original Szekler Songs (Eredeti székely dalok), and His Selected Musical Writings and Folk-music Collection (Válogatott zenei írásai és népzenei gyűjtése) (1974), and works for male choir (1914). – B: 0883, 1134, T: 7684. → Vikár, Béla; Bartók, Béla; Kodály Zoltán.

Serédi, Jusztinián O.S.B. (György [George] Szapucsek) (Deáki, Deákipusztá, 23 or 24 April 1884 - Esztergom, 29 March 1945) – Cardinal of the Roman Catholic Church, Archbishop of Esztergom and Primate of Hungary, canonist. Early on he became a Benedictine monk and was ordained in 1908. He was Professor of Canon Law at the Sanct Anselmo University of Rome; he was an appointed member of the Papal Editorial Committee of the Codex of Canon Law. He served briefly as a military pastor with the Esztergom Unit in 1918, before returning to the Sanct Anselmo University. He became the confidential associate of Cardinal Gasparri in the editing work of the new Ecclesiastical Code. He was Procurator of the Hungarian Benedictines, and in charge of other Hungarian church matters. He taught history of Law of the Roman Curia (Supreme Court) at the Papal Librarian School. In the meantime, he was a member of a number of papal congregations. On 1 December 1927, as a Hungarian prelate, Serédi assumed the most prominent position in the Catholic Church of Hungary, having been appointed Archbishop of Esztergom, and Primate of Hungary by Pope Pius XI. On 19 December of the same year, he became a Cardinal; his consecration took place on 8 January 1928. He was Counselor of Canon Law of the Hungarian Legation in the Vatican. Between 1923 and 1938, as senior editor, he published in 9 volumes the sources of Canon Law of the Catholic Church, entitled Codicis Juris Canonici Fontes, as the official publication of the Holy See. His main program was the consistent implementation of the Actio Catholica, adapted to Hungarian conditions. Largely he initiated the large-scale celebration of the 900th anniversary of the death of St Emeric and St Stephen in 1931 and 1938 respectively. Also, in 1938, the Eucharistic World Congress in Budapest took place in Budapest. In 1934, Serédi issued a statement saying no Catholic priest could support the principles of National Socialism. In the spring of 1944, he issued a statement condemning the attacks on, discrimination against and deportation of the Jews on racial grounds. Serédi also worked to try to get Catholic Jews exempted from deportation and death, but was only able to get the rule to apply to those who were priests, monks or nuns. In April 1944, Serédi protested the treatment of Jews by the National Socialists in Hungary. His works include “Ne temere” decretum...(1909); De relatione decretales Gregorii IX et codicem J. C. (1934), and Five Speeches by Justinian Serédi (Serédi Justinian öt beszéde) (1943). – B: 1138, 0883, 1068, 7456, T: 7456.

Seregély, Katalin (Catharine) (Nyíregyháza, 20 April, 1951 - Budapest, 29 December, 1980) – Opera singer (alto). She completed her studies at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. She was a student of József (Joseph) Réti. From 1976 she was a soloist at the Hungarian State Opera House (Magyar Állami Operaház), Budapest, and of the State Philharmonic (Országos Filharmónia). Her major roles included Azucena in Verdi’s Il Trovatore (A trubadur), Ulrich in Verdi’s Masked Ball (Álarcosbál); title role in Bizet’s Carmen, and Zita’s mother in Puccini’s Gianni Schicci. She sang in Handel oratorios: Messiah, Samson, etc., and sang Pergolesi’s Stabat Mater, as well as in other oratorios as an alto soloist. She had contracts with the Opera House in Graz, and appeared as a guest soloist in Austria, the Czech Republic, in the then East Germany, Romania, and the then Soviet Union. – B: 0883, T: 7684. → Réti, József.

Seregi, László (1) (Ladislás) (Budapest, 12 June 1928 - Budapest, 5 June 1991) – Stage manager and director. After completing the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, he was engaged by the Hungarian People’s Army Theater (Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza) in 1951. During 1956-1957, he stage-managed the theater of Szolnok; in 1957-1958, he was at the theater of Győr; and from 1959 to 1963 at the theater of Kecskemét. From 1963 until 1972 he was the Head Manager of the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház), Budapest; between 1972 and 1978 he was Manager of the Attila József Theater (József Attila, Színház), and from 1979 till 1980 he was again Manager of the Operetta Theater. From December 1988 until his death, he was Manager of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen. He managed dramatic works, comedies, staged musicals; but his greatest successes were realized with the staging of operettas abroad. The stage-works he managed include I. Kálmán's Countess Marica (Marica grófnő); J. Katona's Bánk bán; F. Molnár's The Doctor (A doctor úr); Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentiványéji álom); Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem); G.B. Shaw's Saint Joan (Szent Johanna), and F. Lehár's The Merry Widow (A víg özvegy) and The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa). He was a recipient of the Mari Jászai Prize (1961), and the Merited Artist title (1987). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Seregi, László (2) (Ladislav) (Budapest, 12 December 1929 - ) – Dancer, choreographer. He studied in the graphics section of the School for Industrial Arts between 1945 and 1949; later his interest turned to folk dance and he became a member of the Honvéd (National Guard) Artist Ensemble. It was in this group that he became acquainted with the art of ballet dancing under the guidance of Marcella Nádas. During the years 1952 to 1956 he also prepared some choreography. For a while the Opera House of Budapest engaged him. He was an excellent character dancer along with his choreographic work. His first dance-drama was Spartacus (composed in 1968), followed by other equally outstanding choreographies. His dances are characterized by dramaturgy in strict tempo, musicality, stylistic multicolor, theatrics and ingenuity. His choreographic works include Dances of Kalotaszeg (Kalotaszegi táncok) (1952); The Wooden Prince (A fából faragott királyfi) (1970, 1981); The Miraculous Mandarin (A csodálatos mandarin) (1970, 1981); The Cedar (A Cédrus) (1975); Romeo and Juliet (Rómeó és Júlia) (1985), and A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentiványéji álom) (1989). His film scripts include Incident at the Gas Station (Kútfejek). He was also involved in stage-management, such as in Sylvia and A Midsummer-Night's Dream. He is a recipient of the Ferenc Erkel Prize (1962), the Merited Artist title (1972), the Great Austrian Cross of Merit (1976), the Outstanding Artist title (1978), and the Kossuth Prize (1980). – B: 1445, 1472, T: 7456.

Seres, József (Joseph) (Szerencs, 5 September 1942 - ) – Poet, writer, sculptor. He received his education in Miskolc and Szeged, and continued his studies in sculpting at the Ontario College of Arts in Toronto, graduating in 1979. His poems have appeared in magazines and anthologies; some of them were set to music and performed on stages in Hungary and Canada. He published two books of poems: Without Seasons (Évszakok nélkül) (1978), and Be My Guest (Légy vendégem) (2000). – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Servant (cseléd) – Hungarians of old generally called all those people servants, who were under the authority of the head of the same family. In modern times the term of the old name “cseléd” changed to a mild “household employee” (háztartási alkalmazott), specifying a person, who looks after the household chores and works in a certain time frame for hourly, daily or monthly wages. The agreement between the employer and the employee is regulated and the relation between them can be annulled. – B: 0942, T: 3233.

Settlement Period Legends – These legends about the arrival of the Hungarian tribes in the Carpathian Basin in the 9th century AD survived in two sources: the Kézai-Kálti legend group, and Anonymus' Chronicles. Both contain the legend about the birth of Álmos and, with minor differences, the white horse legend. Anonymus merely alludes to the Botond legend. The legend about the death of Chief Lél was preserved in the chronicles. All three contain elements of legends to the detriment of traditional historical accounts. In the events recorded by Anonymus – e.g. the conquest of Nyitra, Bihar and Transylvania – one can recognize the use of verse-chronicles, which could have originated only from within certain clans of the Settlement Period. – B: 1078, T: 7617.→Anonymus; Kézai. Simon; Kálti, Márk.

Settlements into Hungary – The one and a half century long occupation of the Turks and the continuous battles (1526-1686) drastically reduced Hungary's population. The population of 4 million during the time of King Mátyás I, (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490), which was equivalent of the population of England, decreased to two and a half million. During this time, the population of Europe, which was defended by Hungary, increased from eighty million to one hundred and thirty million. The devastation affected mainly the population of the southern parts of the country, which was not protected by natural defenses, living in Bácska, Bánság, the Great Hungarian Plain and the river valleys. After the recapture of Buda in 1686, the country was gradually liberated. The return of the Turkish-stricken refugees from Northern Hungary (now Slovakia) to the devastated southern area, began at the end of the 17th century, was hindered by the Austrians. The population increase was due mainly to resettlement, which was politically driven, resulting in the ultimate weakening of the Hungarian element. The Viennese Government's first settlers were the Swabians (German) masses who were forcibly settled into Hungary after the Turks were driven out of the country. During the reigns of Károly (Charles) III and Mária Theresa, the immigrants settled the sparsely populated areas of Bácska and the Bánság. They were provided with established villages, built according to symmetrical groundplans around the Bánság's state properties. Approximately one million Swabians settled into Hungary in the 18th century. Opportunity was also given to Serbs from the Balkans to settle in the southern part of Hungary, which they claimed for themselves and acquired by the Treaty of Trianon, after World War I.

Transylvania (Erdély) – the independent Hungarian Principality -- also suffered enormously because of the frequent Turkish and Tartar raids. Consequently, the Hungarian population dwindled. This was the time when Vlachs (Wallachians, now called Romanians) steadily immigrated from beyond the Carpathian Mountains. In the 14th century, there were only 389 Vlach villages in Transylvania. The number of Vlach immigrants grew considerably during the 17th century, when Vlach settlers were brought in by the Austrian authorities to make up for the greatly reduced Hungarian population. The Vlach population in 1700 was only 250,000; by 1784 it had increased to 787,000. By the mid 19th century, Hungarian and Romanian populations were roughly equal. From this time on Romanians claimed Transylvania and demanded its unification with Romania. It was achieved after World War I with the assistance of the victorious powers. In Transylvania there was also a strong and growing Saxon (German) minority. They got along with the Hungarians and Szeklers rather well. Its majority was sold out and moved to Germany by the Communist Ceausescu regime. – B: 0942, 1020, T: 7668.→Neoaquistica Commissio; Resettlements in Hungary during 17-18th Centuries; Vlachs; Trianon Peace Treaty.

“Seven Counties” (Hét Vármegye) – These counties, located in the northeastern part of the Carpathian Basin, are: Abauj, Bereg, Borsod, Szabolcs, Szatmár, Ugocsa and Zemplén counties. They enjoyed a flourishing commercial period during the Middle Ages, due to their transitional position between the Hungarian Plains and the Carpathian Mountains. The Reigning Princes of Transylvania recognized their special situation, and assured their unique status by means of peace treaties, secured by Gábor Bethlen in Nikolsburg in 1622 and György Rákóczi in Linz in 1645. – B: 1138, T: 7656.→Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Rákóczi I, Prince György.

“Seven Hungarians” (Hetumoger, Hétmagyar) – Anonymus the Chronicler mentions seven leaders of the Magyar (Hungarian) Tribal Confederation, the basic political unit until they settled in the Carpathian Basin. The seven tribes had been established by the middle of the 9th century; they were: Nyék, Megyer, Kürt-Gyarmat, Tarján, Jenő, Kér and Keszi, and they formed a confederation called "Hétmagyar" i.e. "The Seven Magyars". Their leaders who, besides Álmos, included Árpád Előd, Ond, Kond, Tas, Huba and Töhötöm. They pledged a Blood Covenant, i.e. a Treaty (Vérszerződés), swearing eternal loyalty to Álmos and to each other. The confederation of the tribes was lead by two princes: the kende (their monarch) and the gyula (their military leader). The high princes were probably elected by the leaders of the tribes, or perhaps appointed by the Khagan of the Khazars, since they had been living as a part of the Khazar Empire. Around 862, the seven tribes separated from the Khazars. Before 881, three Turkic tribes rebelled against the rule of the Khagan, and after their defeat, they left the Khazar Empire and joined the confederation of Hétmagyar. The three tribes were organized into one tribe, called Kabar, and later they played the role of vanguard and rear guard during the joint military actions of the Confederation. Around 885, Kurszán was kende and Árpád was gyula. After the joining of the three tribes, they became ten, which made them Onogur, one of the possible origins for the name Hungarian, and gave the names of the tribes to many of the settlements. – B: 1078, 1031, T: 7103.→Álmos; Árpád; Khabars; Blood Covenant or Treaty; Homeland Settlement; Dentu-moger; Anonymus; Hungarians, History of.

Seventh Death – According to ancient Hungarian belief, every pure and honest person must know seven of his ancestors. Heaven was created by seven superimposed layers. The soul of the departed wanders and changes form until its seventh death, when it is reborn. – B: 1151, T: 7677.

Seventy Seven – The favorite number in Hungarian folk tales, and its many variations. The tales open with an oak tree with seventy-seven branches on which seventy-seven ravens sit. The incantations of pagan origin drive out seventy-seven ailments. – B: 1336, T: 7677.

“Seven-Village” Csángós – Originally the collective name of seven Hungarian-speaking villages built next to each other in the Barcaság (Țara Bârsei) area near the town of Brassó (Braşov). These are: Bácsfalu (Bacfaliu), Csernátfalu (Cernatu), Hosszúfalu (Satulung), Pürkerec (Purcăreni) Tatrang (Tărlungeni), Türkös (Săcele-Turkeş), and Zajzon (Zizin), all in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania).. Their origin goes back to pre-settlement times. Their claim is supported by their customs, costumes, the Borica folk dance, and the names of their rivers and places. Some historians suggested that the Tatrang and Türkös names are the legacies of the Úz people. The neighboring Szeklers named them Seven Villages. They are highly devoted to their clans and to their customs. Mixed marriages were rare occurrences. Their weddings were always held on Tuesday, when the “fire maker” set the “fire of the wedding” in the early morning hours at the groom’s courtyard for the cooking. At christenings, two godfathers and one godmother sponsored a boy, while in case of a girl the ratio of godparents was reversed. After the christening, the priest blessed the “outgoing” woman who, armed with a loaf of bread, gave it to the first poor person she encountered. In case of a death, friends and family went with a candle to the wake in the house of mourning, where a lighted candle kept vigil day and night beside the deceased. Some elements of their clothing are linked to the Szeklers and to the attire of Torockó (now Rimetea, earlier Trascău, Romania). The men traditionally wore their hair shoulder-length; wore large brimmed black hats for summer, and black or white lambskin caps for winter. The collar of their shirt was embroidered with white or yellow yarn and it was worn outside of their trousers. They wore a short jacket made of white felt over their side-closing lambskin waistcoat. Tight trousers made of white felt and a pair of knee-high cordovan leather boots complemented their garments. During festivities the women donned their lace shirts ornamented with a golden collar and wristbands, while their everyday attire was a plain linen shirt. Only girls and brides wore white pleated skirts, while the rest wore black dresses fastened with a clasped leather belt. The well-to-do women wore a gem-studded 12-15 cm wide silver Moon-disc torc type band around their neck. They also wore cordovan leather boots. When working or traveling they favored men’s hats. Their music, dances and folk songs reflect as much archaic characteristics as their customs. – B: 0942, 1134, 1346, T: 3240.→Csángó.

Shako (csákó) – It is a cylinder-shaped, peaked military headgear. According to folklore it originated from the costume of the Cumanian warriors. The infantry of Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II was equipped with shakos (1703-1711). From the 18th century until the end of World War I, it was the standard military headgear, part of the traditional Hussar attire. The English, German and French army also adopted its name. – B: 1138, T: 3233. →Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Shaman (priest magician, wizard, seer, sorcerer) – In ethnography a shaman is a magician, who in a trance can be in contact with supernatural beings, can conjure up spirits. Shamanism is the religion of primitive native ethnic groups of northern Central Asia and that of neighboring Mongolian and Turkic peoples. They revere the ability of the tribal priest and they believe in spirits both good and evil, who control life and can be persuaded to bless or curse with the incantations of a priest, the shaman. The shaman-to-be is called, summoned for the task, which he may not accept immediately, only after some enticement; finally, he is initiated into the position (as is done by the Tungus-Manchu people, involving an elaborate ceremony). According to the belief of these northern Central Asian tribes, some people, when they are in ecstatic state, may supernaturally enter into possession of superhuman knowledge. Ecstasy may be induced by intoxicating drinks, stimulants, toadstool decoction, particular musical instruments, such as the shaman drum played while dancing, as well as the clapper. Words pronounced while in ecstatic condition are considered divine utterance because, according to a shaman in such an auto-hypnotic trance, the soul travels far away and can see normally hidden secrets, thus the human body becoming the subconscious tool of some deity. Therefore the shamans (male or female) do healing, prophesying, averting misfortunes and spells, rain making. In every way they have a decisive say in the life of their Siberian tribe. There are traces of evidence that the shamans played some role even in the religious life of ancient Hungarians. In popular belief the devilish wizard can raise a storm, disguised as an itinerant student of medieval times (in Hungarian: garabonciás diák), who traveled in foreign lands and became acquainted with occult sciences, a “scholar” who knew something about physics and cunningly deceived the gullible folk, only to obtain free food from them. Later the picture of the traveling student got mixed and blended in Hungary with the term of táltos, a kind of shaman, priest magician or sorcerer: the common folk saw a supernatural creature in him, who was born with a tooth. The concept of shaman, magician and wizard is connected with the Latin-Greek necromantia, i.e. witchcraft, sorcery, necromancy, in Italian negromanzia, gramanzia. Shamans can resort to ventriloquism, histrionics and magic tricks during their performance.

The Hungarian term táltos in folklore refers to a person with supernatural powers, possessing miraculous qualities, like turning into a flying, speaking horse, having superior knowledge and wisdom and seeing the reality in life. According to folklore, certain signs at the moment of birth reveal that the child will become a táltos, such signs as being born with a tooth, lives on milk, sour cream and eggs, usually does not appear alone and if his request is not met, he conjures up a dragon from his book and creates a wind storm that can blow off the roof of a house. Since the term táltos already occurs in medieval Hungarian linguistic records with the meaning of magician, the hypothesis is justified that the priests of the Magyars in pagan, pre-Christian times were shamans. The term “shaman” forms an international word-family (e.g. Russian, Hindustani shaman), its ultimate source probably being Tungus-Manchu “shaman”, a person who “knows”; he enjoys great power and prestige within the tribe. A Hungarian description of “shaman”, dated 1799, says that a shaman is “a specially selected person who, when falling into a trance, and with the help of supernatural beings, can prophesy, heal: i.e., he is a ‘táltos’”. It is linguistically a derivative word, its root tált- is ancient inheritance from Ugrian times; in Hungarian it occurs already in 1211 AD: “Tholtus cum filio...” and again in 1416: “taltosoc”, who possess miraculous abilities, a person who can communicate with supernatural forces, a shaman, magician, soothsayer.

In Hungarian traditions, the turul, karuly and kerecsen falcons are symbols of a higher order. In folklore, the táltos (shaman) is identical with the stallion and this twofold conception could have had its origin from the Sun cult. – B: 1068, 1336, 1553, 1582, 1789, 1871, 7456, T: 7456. → Táltos; Garabonciás; Hungarian Mythology.

Shaman Cult – A primitive religion based on the worship of spirits. A selected person, chosen by heavenly powers and endowed with special powers, the shaman, in a trance communicates with supernatural forces and is empowered by them to influence the supernatural world. The shamans are selected even before their birth by the supernatural powers and their selection is manifested in other signs (such as an extra bone in his body). Shaman activity already existed in prehistoric times in the Bronze Age, as shown in rock paintings. Essentially, a shaman religion did not exist, because shaman activity was always connected with supernatural phenomena, a cult connected with the moon, sun or fire. The ancestral religion of the Hungarians, which developed several thousand years ago, might have been connected to such a beginning. – B: 1134, 1230, T: 7682. → Táltos.

Shaman Drum – The wizard’s drum was the essential tool of the shaman and is part of shamanism in all its development. The drum played an important role in the call and summons of all the primitive cultures. This is the tool of the shaman’s trance, as was the winged stallion with the shaman soaring into the sky. All the round drums, large or small, are made from the thin bark of a tree. The lower sidewalls of the drum are covered in bark (6 to 14 cm) and its upper part is covered with animal hide. It is empty on its lower part. The shaman holds the drum in one hand and the drumstick, a small piece of wood or stick made of bone, in the other. Its upper surface is covered with fur to provide soft sounds. The drum summoned both the faithful and the spirits. The more powerful the shaman, the more spirits are at his disposal. He also used his drum for healing or fortune telling.

Among Hungarian folk songs there is a little verse: “Stork, stork why is your leg bleeding? Turkish child wounded it, Hungarian child is healing it with a pipe drum and fiddle made out of reed” (Gólya, gólya, gilice – Mitől véres a lábad? – Török gyerek vérezte – magyar gyerek gyógyítja – Sípbal, dobbal, nádihegedűvel). Only the shaman heals with drum and pipe. – B: 1020, T: 7682. → Shaman; Táltos.

Sharers (Részesek) – These are relatives of the Csángós – the Hungarian-speaking natives of Moldavia, Romania, and of the Hungarian settlers of the country. A fragmented group of Magyars stayed behind in Eteköz, and settled between the River Szeret (now Siret, Romania), and the slopes of the Carpathian Mountains before the Magyar settlement of the country. They still speak a distinct archaic Hungarian language that is different from the Hungarian and Szekler dialects. Their settlements were established in today’s Moldavia well before the spread of Christianity. Even the geographical names of their villages, mountains and rivers of the area indicate their antiquity. They joined forces with the Hungarians well before they settled down in the Carpathian Basin.

Hungarians of Moldavia still remember the old story of the Hungarian King László’s visit, when he built them a fort. It is a historical fact that King László I (1077-1095) repelled the Cumanians (Kunok), who then settled south of the Hungarian population on the Rivers Szeret and Tatos (now Troțuș Romania).

King András II (1205-1235) organized the Hungarians of the eastern side of the Carpathian Mountains. He also resettled some Szeklers among the Hungarians already living in Cumania, the territory to the East and South of the Carpathian Mountains, which became known as Moldavia, Wallachia and Szörénység (Szörényi Bánság, now Banatul Severinului, Romania). During this period, Hungarian villages were also established among the Cumanians and Petchenegs in Wallachia and the Szörénység. The Christian missionaries successfully converted the Cumanians and Petchenegs. The freshly resettled Christian Szeklers (Székelys) reinforced the original population and blended in well. These remote places became strong under the rule of Hungarians kings. The Diocese of Milkó was established in 1227-1228, and King Béla IV established the Diocese of Szörény in 1236 at Szörényvár (now Drobeta-Turnu Severin, Romania).

The Hungarian territory on the eastern side of the Carpathian Mountains came under attack by the Tartars between 1239 and 1242. The original population thinned out and was slowly replaced by the Vlachs (ancestors of Romanians) arriving from the Lower Danube area. Over the next hundred years the population profile changed dramatically. Eventually the Vlachs of Voivode Bogdan became the majority group in Moldavia. The first voivodship was established by the 14th century..

The one- or two-century-old Hungarian settlements kept their identity and autonomy for a long while. Following the Mongol-Tartar offensive, King László IV (1272-1290) sent Franciscan monks to the newly rebuilt Hungarian villages. Even the Vlach Voivode Radu's mother, the Hungarian Klára Dobokay, and his Hungarian wife, Anna, built a Christian church in Arges between 1376-1384, where King Lajos I (1342-1382) established the Diocese of Arges.

Following the lost Battle of Mohács against the Turks (1526), the Hungarian kings faced considerable internal hardships and gradually lost their influence beyond the Carpathian Mountains and the local Hungarian population began to lose their identity. They were still, however, able to persuade the local Voivode to recognize their local rights. This momentous event identified them as "Sharers".

The Vlach Voivode and historian Cantemir, in his work Descriptio Moldaviae published in 1771, wrote in detail about the Sharers' rights. The so-called Sharers lived within their own villages, were governed by their own laws, and were exempt from any orders issued by the Voivode. While they paid their yearly taxes, the final amount was always mutually agreed upon with the incoming new Voivode. In 1817 the Obsteasca Adunera Moldovei, the Moldavian legislative body, recognized the native Sharers' rights and declared. "Since they are known as Sharers they do not need a deed to their properties, for everyone knows they own their ancient properties". The so-called Sharers (in the Vlach texts written as 'razesi' or in possessive form 'rasesilor') did not belong to any landlord and shared the ownership of the borderland of their villages. Petru Poni's Statistica Rasesilor, published by the Romanian Academy of Sciences in 1921, estimated their population to be 21% in Wallachia, 24% in Moldavia and 40% in the Szörénység. The 1989 census tallied 1.7 million sharers among the 8 million inhabitants of Wallachia; 1.2 million among Moldavia's 5 million people and among the population of 2.5 million in Szörénység, there were 1 million shareholders; totalling about 3.9 million in 1989. Over time the Sharers of Wallachia and Szörénység were entirely assimilated into the Romanian population, while the Hungarians of Moldavia, together with the shareholders, still totaled around 1.8 million. In 1902, Gustav Weygand, a university professor in Leipzig, estimated that the Hungarian inhabitants of Moldavia, the so-called Csángós, inhabited 49 villages in the province of Bako, and 38 villages in the province of Roman. By the latest estimates the Hungarian population numbers about 100,000. While the people no longer speak the language, in many villages they still consider themselves of Hungarian descent. – B: 1020, T: 3240.→King László I; King András II; Csángó; Cumanians, Petchenegs; Szeklers; Wallachia; Vallachs.

Sheepdog, Hungarian – The different varieties are the results of their breeding and inborn characteristics. These dogs learn the duties of obedience at a suitable age and, between the ages of 6 and 10, can "run down" or outdistance the herd. Hungarian sheepdogs probably originated from Tibet, possibly from Lebedia and from the Etelköz. The large-bodied komondor and kuvasz are used for guarding the herd and the manor while the smaller bodied puli, pumi and mudi are used for driving the herd of cattle, droves, herds of swine, and possibly turkey flocks and water fowl. – B: 1020, T: 7684.→Puli; Pumi; Mudi; Komondor; Kuvasz.

Shelter – It is a flat plank-like construction of 2-3 meters in height supported by two poles. It can be flipped or transported so that it provides shelter for the shepherd or his belongings against sun or rain. The szárnyék is a similar shelter. In the Hortobágy region it appeared next to any simple shack. It was most frequently used in the Upper-Tisza and the Kiskunság regions. In some local dialects it is called ekho. – B: 1134, T: 3233.

Shepherd – One who grazes and cares for the flock of sheep and is entrusted with their breeding process. The shepherd boy, a young boy with insufficient experience, works with the shepherd. The head shepherd is an older, able shepherd enjoying great respect, who is entrusted with the responsibility of several herds. He may be accountable for as many as one thousand head of animals and for the shepherds subordinated to him. – B: 1020, T: 7684.

Shepherd Dog – These dogs are bred and trained to guard and shepherd the herd, the grazing stock. They are also suitable for guarding a manor and are used as military and police dogs. Among the foreign breeds of shepherd dogs from the Western lands, the German shepherd dog is the most widely used in Hungary. – B: 1138, T: 7684. → Hungarian domestic animals; Herding dogs; Sheepdog, Hungarian; Mudi; Puli; Pumi; Kuvasz.

Shepherding – One of the oldest forms of animal keeping and husbandry. In Hungary there are two types of shepherding: one, where the animals are kept outdoors year round in the pastures; and the other, the half-wild pasturing practice, where the animals are outdoors from spring to late fall. Only the hardy indigenous Hungarian racka sheep and the Hungarian Gray Cattle tolerate this outdoor type of lifestyle. Shepherding in Hungary varied greatly and was always adapted to the given regional conditions.

1) Shepherding in the Bakony in Transdanubia was characterized by grazing pigs and sheep in the forest.

2) Shepherding in the Hortobágy on the Great Hungarian Plain included the great grassy plains, where the traders rented this area until the 17th century for raising mostly cattle and some herds of horses.

3) In the Kiskunság (Little Cumanian Plain) region between the Rivers Danube and Tisza, historical events affected the type of husbandry practiced. Both the arrival of the Cumanians and the Turks had an effect. Ultimately, the impoverished owners replaced the cattle herds for a few sheep as their land holdings decreased.

4) In the Nagykunság (Great Cumanian Plain) region, as the high density of settlements was reduced, the land became communally owned. The working animals and the “milkers” were usually kept in close proximity, and returned nightly to the barn for the evening milking, while the cattle herds kept farther away, stayed outdoors all year long. Horse and sheep breeding was practiced only from the beginning of the 19th century.

5) The Palóc shepherding in the Mátra and Bükk Mountains regions was characterized by shepherding, and herding cattle in the forests.

6) In the Somogy region in Transdanubia, pig keeping was practiced. Data from the 11th to the 19th centuries indicate that pig husbandry was the main financial resource of this area. Sheep herding became popular with the arrival of the Spanish Merinos to the southern region of Lake Balaton.

7) The Szekler shepherding in Transylvania was characterized by large herds of cattle and horses kept outdoors year-round in the natural pastures of the Carpathian Mountains. The sheep herds, made up of the very hardy, heat tolerant Transylvanian ‘racka’, and later the so-called cigálya, were mostly in family hands. These were kept in the half-wild pasturing way. – B: 1020, T: 3240.→Gray Cattle; Racka sheep.

Shepherd’s Art – In researching the ancient shepherding customs of the Hungarians, the expression “art” was used for the first time in 1898 by Otto Herman, who collected and exhibited the relics of this ancient occupation. The shepherds, who are part of the peasantry, are the nomadic carriers of the folk art, selecting and transforming its decorative elements according to their own taste, to use on the tools and utensils of their lifestyle, thereby creating a special folk art that is still based on common roots. The artistically inclined shepherds usually copied their predecessors in creating the various objects necessary in their daily life. They used the raw materials offered by nature in the local surroundings. In Transdanubia (Dunántúl), the ample supply of wood was readily adapted to the carving of wooden utensils and tools, while the same articles carved out of cattle bones were found throughout the country. – B: 1134, 1020, T: 7670.→Hermann, Otto.

Sher-Gil, Amrita (Dalma) (Hungary, 30 January 1913 - Lahore, India, 5 December 1941) – Painter. She was daughter of a Sikh father and a Hungarian mother; niece of the orientalist, Ervin Baktay. Until the age of eight, she lived in Hungary. Already at that early age, she showed a talent for painting. In 1921 her family traveled to India to settle; the little girl received her training from Indian masters. She painted mainly scenes in watercolor and portraits. Later she furthered her art in Paris and, in 1933 she won the Grand Salon Paris Gold Medal with her painting Three Girls (Három lány). In the thirties, she visited Hungary several times. After marrying her childhood love, the medical student Viktor Egon, she returned to India again. Amrita all along had a double bonding: she was passionately fond of European and Hungarian art and literature, while she painted pictures in India which shattered the artistic traditions of the British colony, depicting nude women and persons from the untouchable castes in a country where both were regarded scandalous. Her romantic life ended suddenly and sadly early in 1941: a mysterious disease attacked her, and killed her. With her individual post-impressionistic style, she created a new school. She is considered as one of the greatest figures in modern Indian painting. Ever since her passing, her paintings have been declared national treasures. Her painting entitled Village Scene (1938) was sold for 69 million rupees in 2006, whereby this picture became one of the most expensive creations of India. Her paintings include Young Girls (Fiatal lányok) (1932); Self-portrait (Önarckép) (1936); Dressing-up of Brides (Menyasszonyok öltöztetése) (1937); Two Elephants (Két elefánt) (1942) and Camels (Tevék) (1945). A number of her pictures are open for viewing in Delhi and in the National Gallery of Modern Arts. – B: 1031, 2002, T: 7456.→ Baktay, Ervin; Brunner, Erzsébet.

Show Trials (Mock Trials) – The preplanned judicial trials of dictatorial regimes became notorious in Stalin’s Soviet Union, and later on in the satellite countries of Eastern Europe, including Hungary. Between 1945 and 1962 there were several such economic and political show trials in Hungary. These included the Cardinal Mindszenty, the MAORT, the Rajk and the Premier Imre Nagy trials. The majority of those convicted in these trials were rehabilitated by 1990, albeit mostly only after their death. – B: 1153, 1231, T: 7665.→Mindszenty, József; Grósz, József; Rajk, László; Ordass, Lajos.

Sidló, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 21 January 1882 - Budapest, 11 January 1953) – Sculptor. He attended the Creative Art School in Budapest, studied in Munich and Rome. While working at the Gödöllő Artists Colony, he created a bas-relief work depicting the coronation of King Ferenc József (Francis Joseph) (1867-1916) for the Cultural Palace of Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Romania), one of several architecturally related plastic masterpieces. He took part in the 1909 exhibit by the artists of Gödöllő at the National Salon and was a regular participant of the exhibitions in Budapest with his portraiture-like sculptures, nudes and other works. The Ernst Museum exhibited his collected works in 1909. His better-known public sculptures include Artur Görgey at Miskolc, Imre (Emeric) Madách at Balassagyarmat. Sidló's most successful creation is of King István (St Stephen) at Székesfehérvár, and the Fountain of the Danaids. He sculpted many heroic monuments and modeled many figures for the Pantheon at Szeged. He also created numerous applied artworks such as tapestry and ceramics. – B: 0883, 1144, T: 7675.→Görgey, Artur; Madách, Imre; István I, King.

Sidó, Ferenc (Francis) (Vágpatta, now Pata, Slovakia, County Nyitra, 18 April 1923 - Budapest, 6 February 1998) – Table-tennis player, soccer-player, trainer and sporting official. He ran numerous sporting branches and associations. In 1935 he began his career as a table-tennis player in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) (TE) and as a soccer-player. From 1943 to 1944 he was the goalkeeper of the soccer team and, from 1946 to 1947 he played volleyball. In 1940 he was accepted in the Hungarian selected team as the table-tennis player of the Physical Exercise Club of Újpest (UTE). On several occasions, he changed his association membership; but from 1947 he restricted his sport only to table-tennis. In the post-World War II era, he proved to be the determining personality in Hungarian table-tennis. During the 21 years between 1940 and 1961 he appeared altogether 190 times in the Hungarian selected team and, during this period, he received 26 medals in the World Championships, among them 9 gold medals. At the 1953 World Championships in Bucharest, he won the title of World Champion in single, male partner, and mixed doubles as well; the World Championship title he received there was the best individual result of his career. In 1958, in the first European-Championship in this field of sports, he was a member of the Hungarian team winning the European Championship. He retired from active sports after the World Championship in Peking in 1961. He was nine times World Champion in table tennis. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Siegmeth, Károly (Charles) (Sziegmeth) (Znaim, Moravia, now Znojmo, Czech Republic, 11 September 1845 - Munkács, now Mukacheve, Carpatho-Ukraine, 21 April 1912) – Railway engineer, tourist book writer, and cave explorer. He completed his studies at the Universities of Vienna, Zurich and Munich; at the latter he also worked as an assistant teacher. He formed the Eastern Carpathian Section of the Carpathian Association of Hungary and organized local exhibitions and tourist itinerary meetings. He established several tourist resorts and a ceramics school at Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine). He wrote publications on the stalactite cave of Aggtelek; its systematic survey and the creation of the artificial entry at Veresfő were his accomplishments. His works include The Cave Region of Abaúj-Gömör (Az abauj-gömöri barlangvidék) (1887, 1891), The Stalactite Cave of Aggtelek (Az Aggteleki csepkőbarlang) (1890), and Die ungarischen Ostkarpathen (Zürich). – B: 0883, 1415, T: 7456.

Sigmond, Elek (Alec) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 25 February 1873 - Budapest, 30 September 1939) – Chemical engineer, soil chemist. He completed his studies at the Budapest Polytechnic, where he obtained a Chemical Engineering Degree in 1895. In 1898 he received a Ph.D. from the University of Kolozsvár. First, he worked at the chemical testing Bureau of Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania), then, in 1899, he received a position at the Plant Cultivation Station (Növénytermelési Állomáshoz) of Magyaróvár, where he became acquainted with the problems of soil chemistry, which engaged his interest for the rest of his life; he published numerous studies and papers on this subject. In 1905 he became an honorary lecturer in Agricultural Chemistry at the University of Budapest. With a state scholarship he was sent on a study trip to become acquainted with the Agricultural Scientific Institutions of France, England, Denmark and the USA. In 1908 he was appointed first Professor at the new Agricultural Chemical Technological Chair of the Budapest Polytechnic. On his initiative, the first International Agro-Geological Conference was held in Budapest in 1908. He was President of the International Pedological Society (Talajtani Társaság) for 25 years. He was a recipient of a number of distinctions, was honorary member of societies abroad, and a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. The more important results of his scientific work were: new chemical method for the determination of the phosphoric acid that can be assimilated in the soil; investigations for the determination of the phosphoric acid need of the soil; also problems of formation and improvement of alkaline soils (his most important work). His other works include Agricultural Chemistry (Mezőgazdasági chemia) (1904); Hungarian Alkaline Soils and Methods of their Reclamation (Berkeley, 1927), and The Principles of Soil Science (Általános talajtan), in Hungarian (1934, in English 1938). A commemorative medal is named after him (1956); his bust stands in Kossuth Plaza in Budapest (1983). – B: 1406, 1031, T: 7456.

Sigray, Count Jakob (Jacob) (ca 1760 - Buda, 20 May 1795) – Assessor of the Law Court of District Kőszeg, reformer, martyr. In 1780 he received the title of Count. Around 1792, he appeared in Free Mason's circles. He became the Director of the Society of Reformers within the secret society of the Jacobites, by the recommendation of Ignác (Ignatius) Martinovics, the head of the conspiracy. In the summer of 1794, the winding up of the conspiracy started. Sigray learned about it and in order to avoid arrest, he donned woman clothes. On his way to Pest, he was recognized at Veszprém, arrested, and taken to Vienna. His brother József (Joseph) tried to rescue him, but to no avail. In the lawsuit against the Jacobites, he was sentenced to death and beheaded together with others at the Blood Field (Vérmező) of Buda. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7103. → Jacobites in Hungary; Martinovics, Ignác.

Sík, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 2 April 1891 - Budapest, 10 April 1978) – Diplomat, politician, lawyer, writer and historian. He was the younger brother of Sándor (Alexander)

Sík. After graduating from high school, he became a Piarist novice at Vác. Later, he left the Order and completed the Law course at the University of Budapest in 1913. While he was an articulated clerk, he wrote essays for the papers, People's Word (Népszava) and Socialism (Szocializmus). He served in the army during World War I; in 1915 he became a prisoner of war in Russia, where he was politically active as a journalist, editing the paper, Revolution (Forradalom) (February-May 1920); he also worked in China and Moscow. He completed a course in Philosophy (1923-1926), later becoming a professor in the Africa Department of Moscow University (1926-1937). He studied the history of African peoples, the result of which was a published work in several volumes, also some papers, studies and short stories. From 1938 to 1945 he was a lecturer at the University of Moscow, and one of the editors of the Kossuth Radio in Moscow. He returned to Hungary in September 1945, filling high political and administrative positions. He was an envoy extraordinary and a minister plenipotentiary, a section head in the Foreign Ministry and finally, Foreign Minister from February 1958 until his retirement on 13 September 1961. He was active in the Peace Movement; from 1964 President of the National Peace Council. His other works include Racial Problem and Marxism (Faji kérdés és marxizmus) (in Russian, 1930); History of Black-Africa, vols. i-iv (Fekete-Africa története I-IV), (1961-1973, also in French and English), and Years on the Bem Embankment (Bem rakparti évek), memoirs (1970). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Sík, Sándor.

From 1920 to 1922 he was a member of the Musical Art Council; in 1926 became Ministerial Commissioner. From 1928 to 1937 he edited the journal Music (A Zene). He wrote the factual part of the Encyclopedia of Music in 1923. He published papers on music history and the history of musical instruments and esthetics. He wrote, among others Theory of Orchestration (Hangszereléstan) (1908-1910); Theory of Counterpoint (Ellenponttan) (1913), and Handbook of Harmonization (A harmonizálás kézikönyve) (1923). – B: 0883, 0881, T: 7456. → Koessler, János.

Siklós, József (Joseph) (Budapest, 14 July 1920 - Budapest, 5 June 1983) – Minister of the Reformed Church. He was born into a Jewish family. His high school studies were completed in 1938. On the advice of his dentist father he completed a dental technician course, but he did not practice it. He lived from occasional writings and translations. While he was in a forced labor camp and in hiding in 1944, he became acquainted with the life-saving mission of the Reformed Church. On 3 September 1945 he joined the Reformed Theological Academy in Budapest, where he completed his studies in 1950. He was ordained a pastor in 1959. From 1950 he worked as Assistant Minister in several congregations in Budapest. Between 1959 and 1982 he was Parish Minister in Jász Kisér on the Great Hungarian Plain. At the end of the 1940s, he joined the working party of the Alcoholic Life-saving Mission, run by Doctor Károly (Charles) Szalay. From 1981 until his death, he was the Secretary of this Mission. He was killed in a train accident. His poems and articles appeared in the papers Life and Future (Élet és Jövő); Revival (Megújulás); The Way (Az Út); Illustrated Calvin Calendar (Képes Kalvin Kalendárium), and Sowing and Harvesting (Vetés és Aratás). His other works include Minstrel among the Ruins (Regős a romok közt) poems (1946); Exchanging Drinking Glasses (Pohárcsre) (1984), and Teenagers are Corresponding (Tizenévesek leveleznek) (1988). – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.

Simándi, Ágnes (Budapest, 1 September 1954 - ) – Poet. She attended the Pázmány Péter Roman Catholic Theological Academy (1987). She continued her education at Trinity College, University of Toronto, Canada, and received a Master of Divinity Degree in 1991. Her poems appeared in periodicals in Budapest, Chicago, Toronto and Vancouver. She published three books of poetry: A Season of Narcissi (Nárciszok évada) (1987); Forbidden Play (Tiltott játék) (1993), and Experiment only, an Approach (Csak kísérlet, közelítés) (1998). – B: 0892, T: 4342.

Simándy, József (Joseph) (Kistarcsa, east of Budapest, 18 September 1916 - Budapest, 4 March 1997) – Opera singer (tenor). He began his studies privately in the school of Emilia Posszert, and continued at the Academy of Music in Budapest from 1943 to 1945. He sang in the Opera House choir from 1940 to 1945. Following World War II, he sang as solo tenor at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged, where he made his first appearance as Don José in Bizet's Carmen. From 1947 he was a soloist of the Opera House, Budapest; in 1990 he became its life member. From 1956 to 1960 he performed at the Staatsoper of Munich; between 1978 and 1986 he was Professor of Voice at the Academy of Music. He sang the whole operatic tenor repertoire, playing outstandingly in Verdi's operas, as well as in Wagner and Puccini operas, and in the operas by Hungarian composers. His artistry was extraordinarily rich in shades of tone. The unusual radiance of his voice was uniform over his full range. His singing technique, appearance, mannerism, rich tone of voice and inner strength all rendered him particularly suitable for appearing in heroic tenor roles. In the post-World War II period he was the foremost singer of the Opera House. Simándy made a number of recordings with Hungaroton, Supraphon and Deutsche Gramophongesellschaft. He often appeared over the air and in television and he scored successes in the major opera houses of Europe. Unforgettable is his interpretation of the bán in Erkel's Bánk bán, as well as Kodály's Psalmus Hungaricus. His roles included Radames in Verdi's Aïda; Manrico in Verdi's Il Trovatore (A Trubadur); Don Cavaradossi in Puccini's Tosca; Turiddu in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (Parasztbecsület), and Walter in Wagner's Meistersinger von Nürnberg (A nürnbergi mesterdalnokok). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1953, the Merited Artist Title in 1962, and the Outstanding Artist Title in 1964. He also received the Bartók-Pásztory Prize in 1990. – B: 1031, 1445, T: 7456. → Erkel, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán.

Simándy, Pál (Paul) (Ferenc Gombos) (Igrici, 5 January 1891 - Budapest, 11 August 1978) – Writer, journalist. He studied Theology at the Reformed College of Sárospatak (1909-1913). He was a traveling secretary of the Hungarian Christian Evangelical Students' Association (1913-1915); a teacher of religion at Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia) (1915-1917) and then in the Capital, Budapest. He had been affected by the revolutionary times of 1918-1919, and he broke with his church career. He moved to Igrici and took part in the local political activities, as a result of which he was imprisoned from January to August 1920. From 1920 to 1931 he lived in Losonc. He was one of the leaders of the Hungarian literary-cultural life of the town and of all Slovakia, and one of the founders of the Madách Circle of Losonc (1923). He was a correspondent of Our Paper (Mi Lapunk) (1928-1929). His best-known work, an essay, appeared in Losonc, entitled The Lost Sermon on the Mount (Az elsikkadt hegyibeszéd) (1932), in which he was dealing with the Christian basis of his peculiar socialistic view. In 1931 he returned to Hungary and in Budapest he became an associate editor of the newspapers of Endre Bajcsy-Zsilinszky's Vanguard (Előőr); Freedom (Szabadság); Independent Hungary (Független Magyarország), and Free Word (Szabad Szó). In 1942 he edited the daily Tiscia (Tiszántúl) of Debrecen, and from 1942 he was an editor of the publishing company Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet). From 1945 until his retirement in 1949 he worked as Section Head of the Ministry of Education and Religion, in Budapest, dealing with adult education. Later, he published smaller studies on history of literature and recollections. His works included The Road of Hungarian Calvinism (A magyar kálvinizmus útja) (1927) and Student at the Turn of the Century (Diák a századfordulón), autobiographical novel (1966). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Simon, István (Stephen) (Bazsi, 14 September 1926 - Budapest, 7 July 1975) – Poet, essayist, translator of literary works. He was born into a poor peasant family in Bazsi in County Veszprém. Between 1947 and 1952 he was Head Orthopedic Physician in the Postmen's Hospital; from 1952 to 1956 Assistant Professor at the Orthopedic Clinic of the University of Budapest. In 1953 he was honored with the Research Prize of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1956 to 1977 he worked as an orthopedic surgeon, and head physician and Deputy Director in the Orthopedic Research Institute. He investigated the problem of how to make provisions for those children who suffer from poliomyelitis, also sought various solutions for operations, to find ways and means to lead the patients back to normal life; and finally to find a solution to solve the problems of the pathology of abrasional bone and articular-deformations and their surgical treatment. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Simon, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 18 May 1901 - Budapest, 13 June 1877) – Physician, pharmacologist. He received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest in 1926. From 1923 to 1939 he was a research fellow of the Pharmacological Institute there; from 1927 he did further studies on scholarship in Germany, and in 1932-1933 in the USA. In 1939 he became an honorary lecturer in Pharmacology. From 1939 to 1945 he was a pharmacologist at the REX Works, and from 1942 to 1952 at the Pharma Pharmaceutical Factory. Between 1952 and 1954 he was Head of the Immunological Laboratory of the Research Institute of the Pharmaceutical Industry and, from 1954 to 1972 Leader of the Pharmaceutical Industrial Controlling Laboratory. He manufactured the drug Neosalvarsan in Hungary. He also dealt with the control-verification of drugs. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Simonffy, Gyula (Julius) (Budapest, 29 October 1925 - Budapest, 4 September 2007) – Architect. He finished his high school studies in Budapest, and completed practical training in Copenhagen and Stockholm (1945-1947). He qualified as an engineer at the Technical University of Budapest in 1949. He worked as a designer and was an assistant professor at the University until 1956. In 1956 he went to Sweden, joined HSB Co. as a designer and planned more than 9,000 homes throughout Sweden. His more noted designs are on display at the Museum of the History of Architecture. He designed the Spelet Residential District of Norrköping, and received first prize for his design of the Ulmear Theater in an international competition. He participated in an exhibition in Budapest at the Exhibition Pavilion (Műcsarnok) in 1982 for artists living outside of Hungary and, later, he went to China for a lecture tour, where he had his own designed buildings. Since 1976 he had specialized in designing homes for retired people. In Hungary, there are industrial buildings designed by him, e.g. the Vác Danube Cement Factory and a Cement Factory at Hejőcsaba. He was a member of the Society of Hungarian Architects (Magyar Építőművészek Szövetsége). His design of the Residential District of Norrköping is in the Swedish Architectural Museum. Simonyi, Count József (Joseph) (Nagykálló, 18 February 1777 - Arad, now in Romania, October 1837) – Hussar officer. His father was a butcher. He enlisted in the Army as a volunteer and fought so valiantly that in 1802 he won the Maria Theresa Order as a Hussar Lieutenant and, as a result, he received the Austrian title of Count in 1806, and in 1815 the Hungarian title of Count. Later, he was promoted to the rank of Colonel. He participated, among others, in the battles at Wagram and Leipzig. In 1828 he was suspended from his regimental command. For four years he was under investigation. On April 23 1832 he was stripped of his rank and received several years’ imprisonment. He died half a year later in prison. The reason of his sentencing has not yet been cleared up. – B: 0883, T: 7684.

Simonyi, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Veszprém, 1 January 1853 - Budapest, 22 November 1919) – Linguist. He studied at the Universities of Budapest, Leipzig, Berlin and Paris. On returning to Hungary, he became an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest. From 1878 he was acting professor and from 1889 professor in the Hungarian Linguistic Society. He edited the journal, Hungarian Language Guardian (Magyar Nyelvőr) from 1895, and the Linguistic Fascicules (Nyelvészeti Füzetek) from 1903. He also edited a German-Hungarian Dictionary, assisted by József (Joseph) Balassa. As a teacher, as well as a scholar, he achieved significant results. For four decades he taught and trained generations of linguists. His work covered almost the whole field of linguistics. He developed the comparative syntax, made studies of adverbs, conjunctions and attributes; popularized the results of linguistics and grammar in schools. He also dealt with the correctness in language; in 1903 he was commissioned by the Minister of Education to prepare a new schoolbook of spelling, and this system of orthography became accepted virtually by the entire literary life. During the Hungarian (Soviet) Council Republic period in 1919, because of his political stance, he was persecuted and this broke him down in spirit. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→ Szarvas, Gábor.

Simor Codex – This language relic was written at the beginning of the 16th century, a fragment of seven letters in a small 1/8th size thin skin Codex. The manuscript contains some fragments of the life of St Francis of Assisi that are similar to the equivalent parts of the Virginia Codex. It was copied by the sixth hand of the Codex of Debrecen, and was named after its donor, János (John) Simor, Cardinal of Esztergom; it is now stored in the National Széchényi Library. – B: 1150, 1078, T: 3240.→Codex Literature.

Simor, Erzsí (Elizabeth) (Budapest, 7 July 1913 - Budapest, 2 February 1977) – Actress. After obtaining her teacher's diploma (Dip.Ed.), she continued her studies at Sándor Góth's College of Dramatic Art. She started her career in the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház); later she played at a number of other companies, e.g. Royal Variety, Andrásy Avenue Theater (Andrásy-úti Színház) and the New Hungarian Theater (Új Magyar Színház) Budapest. Prior to 1945 she mainly achieved success with her beauty; but with the passing of years her artistry was increasingly perfected. After 1945, first, she was a member of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház) of Debrecen; later, she was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pécs and, in 1959 she moved to Budapest, becoming a member of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), where she became well known for her exactly formulated playing. Erzsí Simor's roles include title role in Schiller's Maria Stuart; Lady Milford in Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem), and Gertrud in Shakespeare's Hamlet. She appeared in film for the first time in 1936 in Tommy, the Frozen Child (Tomci a megfagyott gyermek). Her feature film roles include John the Brave (János vitéz) (1938); Wild Rose (Vadrózsa) (1939); Vision by the Lake (Tóparti látomás) (1940); Appearance is Deceptive (A látszat csal) (1943); Dearest Anna (Édes Anna) (1958); The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) (TV film, 1969), and A Fine Hungarian Comedy (Szép magyar komédia) (1970). She was one of the most popular actresses of her time. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Simor, János (John) (Székesfehérvár, 23 August 1813 - Esztergom, 23 January 1891) – Archbishop of Esztergom, Cardinal, Prince Primate of Hungary. He received his secondary schooling in his hometown, then in Buda, Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and matriculated at the Americanum, Pozsony (1827-1829). He studied Philosophy in Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) and Theology in Vienna at the Pazmaneum; he was ordained into the priesthood in 1836. In 1837 he was Parish Priest in Terézváros, a district of Pest. In 1839, due to his oratorical talent he was appointed teacher of Ecclesiastical Oratory and Doctrine. By 1840 he was Prefect at the Pazmaneum, and obtained his Doctorate in History in 1841. From 1846 he was Parish Priest in Bajna, then a teacher at the Esztergom Seminary. In 1846 he was appointed Vicar of the Esztergom Archdiocese; later, in 1847 was appointed Secretary to the Archbishop. From 1850 he was Director at the Augustineum in Vienna. In 1851 he was Councilor of the Ministry of Religion and Education, Vienna. He was appointed Bishop of Győr, where he founded a minor seminary and an education institute for girls, and built a Monastery for the Sisters of Misericordia. He also renovated a number of church buildings, and established a retirement fund for priests. He was made Canon at Székesfehérvár and Abbot at Széplak. In 1867 he was made Archbishop of Esztergom and the Prince Primate of Hungary. On 8 June 1867, he crowned Francis (Ferenc) Joseph King of Hungary in Buda. In 1873 he was made Cardinal by Pope Pius IX. He completed the construction of the Basilica in Esztergom, refurbished its treasury, founded the Christian Museum, and an Archbishop's Library in Esztergom that was later named after him. As a patron of the arts, he enriched numerous churches with art works, raised a memorial for Hungarian heroes: János (John) Hunyadi, Péter Pázmány, and György (George) Szondi. He opened the first staining school for glass painting, and supported the publishing of important literary works. He played an important role in settling the relationship between the State and the Church. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1867) and participated in the First Vatican Synod (1869-1870). His works include Religio (1872); Pastoral Letters... vols. i-x (Pásztori levelek...I-X) (Győr, 1857-1867); Circulares Litterae ad Clerum Archi-Dioec. Strigoniensis, vols. i-xix (Esztergom 1867-1885); and Homilies (Szentbeszéddek) (1892). He studied at the Reformed College of Debrecen from 1746, continuing at the universities of Vienna, Oxford, Groningen and Franeker. He became Parish Minister in Kunmadaras in 1759, and Professor at the Debrecen College from 1760, where he taught History and Classical Philology. He became involved in protracted conflicts, while struggling with the laity taking part in church-government. He was elected Bishop in 1791; but in 1800 he was suspended from his bishop's position. After his retirement in 1803, he dealt mainly with Protestant church history, but most of his work remained in manuscript form, e.g. the history of Protestantism between 1654 and 1773. His works included Sylloge actortum...(under the pseudonym Victorinus de Chorebo) (1790); The History of Hungarian and Transylvanian Reformation Until 1654 (A Magyar-és Erdélyországi reformáció története 1654-ig), translated and published by Gábor Herpay (1911). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Sinka, István (Stephen) (Nagyszalonta, now Salonta, Romania, 24 September 1897 - Budapest, 17 June 1969) – Poet, writer. He is a descendant of shepherds, born into a nomadic, stock-raising family in the area of Nagyszalonta, where he apprenticed as a herdsman and became a shepherd by the age of 10. In 1920 he settled in Vésztő and submitted his first poems to a competition sponsored by the newspaper The Hungarian Village (A Magyar Falu); later his writings were regularly published by this paper and many others. He published his first book of poems Hymns at the Door of the East (Himnuszok Kelet Kapujában) (1934). In 1935 he founded the journal People of the East (Kelet Népe) together with Pál (Paul) Szabó and Dénes (Denis) Barsi. In 1936 he moved to Budapest; but was unable to find a job and became destitute. In 1939 he published a book of poems entitled Indictment (Vád), voicing the demands of the poor peasantry; his poetry became consummate in his ballads. In 1949 he was blacklisted as a writer for opposing the Soviet style of economy following 1945. In 1957 he resumed publishing poems. His long poem, the Book of the Islands (Szigetek könyve) was published posthumously in 1972. His other writings include Bats Conquering a Home (Denevérek honfoglalása), poems (1941); Confession of a Black Shepherd Boy (Fekete bojtár vallomása) autobiography (1942-1944, New York, 1987); Riders in Opal Field (Lovasok opál mezőben) selected poems, ed. Sipos, Pál (Paul) (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 16 October 1759 - Szászváros, now Orăștie, Romania, 15 September 1816) – Minister of the Reformed Church, mathematician and philosopher. From 1775 he studied at the Nagyenyed College; from 1783 he was Rector at the Reformed Church of Szászváros; and from 1787 was a tutor for Count József Teleki at Szirák (northeast of Budapest, at the southern foot of the Cserhát Mountain.). From 1791 to 1797 he carried out further studies at Frankfurt an der Oder, Göttingen and Vienna. From 1798 he was a principal and teacher at the Reformed School of Szászváros. In 1805 he became a mathematics lecturer at the Reformed College of Sárospatak. From 1810 until his death, he was Parish Minister in Tordos (now Turdaș, Romania). He gained a reputation with a mathematical dissertation, which was awarded a gold medal and published by the Academy of Science in Berlin. The construction method, with an excellent approach still in use for the determination of the circumference of an ellipse, deserves recognition, as does the isometer named after him. For the first time in Hungary he employed metric fractions of a quarter circle used in goniometry, and the structure of his trigonometric table is considered unique. He prepared a new mathematical syllabus for the Reformed College of Sárospatak in 1810. As a philosophical thinker he followed Kant and Fichte. In the 1810s, he tried with his friends to establish a scholarly society. He was also engaged in belles-letters, writing occasionally a poem as well. His main work was entitled Beschreibung und Anwendung eines mathematischen Instruments für die Mechaniker, zur unmittelbaren Vergleichung der Circulbogen (Description and application of a mathematical instrument for the mechanics and the immediate comparison of the Circular Arc). (Sammlung deutscher Abhandlungen, 1790-1791) (1796). – B: 1160, 1731, T: 7456.

In World War II he served on various fronts, because of which he completed his studies in Law only in 1948; he then returned to Somorja, where he worked first as a clerk of legal issues, later as a road construction worker. He is a founding member of the local branch of the Czechoslovak Hungarian Workers' Cultural Alliance (Csehszlovák Magyar Dolgozók Kulturális Szövetsége – CSEMADOK) and is an active amateur performer. In 1952 he was a founding member and actor of the Hungarian Regional Theater (Magyar Területi Színház) until his retirement in 1980. Important are his theatrical, political and theater-popularizing works, actor-portraits and interviews. Several of his fairy-plays appeared in the Hungarian Regional Theater and the Thalia Theater. His plays were much-liked repertoire pieces of amateur theater ensembles. He was also active in the Hungarian Department of the Pozsony Radio. He was the favorite comic actor of cabaret programs. His roles include Basilio in Beaumarchais' Barber of Seville (A sevillai borbély); Von Kalb in F. Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem); Vicentio in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (A makrancos hölgy); and Doctor Caius in Shakespeare's The Merry Wives of Windsor (A windsori víg nők). His plays include Monkey Love (Majomszeretet) comedy (1954); Boomerang, comedy (1967); Two Adams and one Eve (Két Ádám és egy Éva) comedy (1968), and Vacation of Maci and Muci (Maci és Muci vakációja), fairy tale (1977). – B: 1445, 1878, T: 7456.

Sirchich, László (Ladislav) (Ipolyság, now Šahy, Slovakia, 25 November 1909 - Cleveland, 29 July 1983) – Journalist. He studied at the Universities of Budapest and Prague. He was an active member of the Saint George Circle and the Prohászka Circle. In the spring of 1945, facing the advancing Soviet forces through Hungary, he moved to the West, emigrated to the USA, and settled in Cleveland, where he worked as a municipal clerk. He dealt with smaller problems, chiefly the fate of the Hungarian minority in Slovakia. Between 1951 and 1966 he edited the paper Under the Twin Yoke (Kettős járom alatt). For a number of years, he was President of the National Commission of Czechoslovakian Hungarians (Csehszlovákiai Magyarok Nemzeti Bizottmánya). His articles appeared mainly in American-Hungarian papers. His works include From Belvedere to Kassa; The Road of the Upland Hungarians from the first Vienna Award to the "kosicky" Program (Belvedere-től Kassáig, A felvidéki magyarság útja az első bécsi döntéstől a "kosicky" programig) (1969); Felvidék (Upland) in the Thousand-Year Old Hungarian State Body; Magyars in Czechoslovakia (A Felvidék az ezeréves magyar államtestben, Magyarok Csehszlovákiában) (1979), and Fatal Years, Hungarian Fate in Czechoslovakia (Végzetes évek, Magyar sors Csehszlovákiában) (1988). – B: 1878, T: 7456. → Prohászka, Ottokár.

Sisa, Stephen (István) (Hort, County Heves, 1918 - Huddleston, Virg., USA, 20 November 2012) – Writer, journalist. He graduated from the Kálmán Könyves Secondary School, Budapest, and earned his diploma from the Royal Commercial Academy. He participated in World War II, and moved to Austria in 1945. He started his career as an editorial writer with Austrian newspapers. His incisive articles were also published in the German Südstimme, and other publications and were subjects of discussion on West German radio stations. Then he moved to West Germany. In 1951 he settled in the United States, where he founded the magazine Exiled Europe and, later the esteemed foreign affairs publication, the Free World Review, which featured internationally known contributors including Archduke Otto von Habsburg, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Abba Eban, David McCord Wright, and others. He was editor of the Information Review (Információs Szemle) (1950-1952). In it, for the first time, he directed the emigrants' attention to the problems of Hungarian minorities. In America he continued his work, founding and editing the Free World Review in 1956. In his home was conceived the successful propaganda plot to fasten the Hungarian and American flags to the hand of the Statue of Liberty, New York, on 16 November 1956, which became a world sensation. Sisa's main work is The Spirit of Hungary. It presents the history and culture of Hungary, illustrated with many pictures and maps in such a way that it became a world success. It appeared in 1984 with the financial assistance of the Canadian Government. So far, it has been published in 3 editions and 10 reprints, the last one in April 2002. In it, his objective yet colorful presentations are qualities that come through strongly. It became the most popular Hungarian book in the American market ever. Its Hungarian translation was published in Budapest in 2001, under the title Magyarságtükör (Mirror of the Magyars). Some of his other works include The Biological Trianon of Hungary (Magyarország biológiai Trianonja) (1969); Americia's Amazing Hungarians (Amerika csodálatos magyarjai) (1987), Distorted Mirror of Hungary in the World (Magyarország torz tükre a világban), with Béla Király (1991), Nation without borders (Nemzet határok nélkül) (1993), and Watch at the West (Őrtállás nyugaton) (2004). He was a recipient a number of distinctions, among them the Michael Kovats Medal of Freedom (2005), and the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2011). – B: 1076, 1031, T: 7456.

Six-Cut Dance – A variation of the recruiting dance performed by the Hussars to stir up the military mood of new recruits. – B: 1078, T: 3240.

Six, the Number – In symbolism, it is the number representing the difference between the creator and the created. It is the number of conflict, of mythical destiny. It is the number between principle (5) and realization (7), the number of the Creation. According to the Bible, God created Heaven and Earth and everybody and everything in it in six days. In the Apocalyptic writings of St John, it is used in a pejorative sense, for it is the number for the sinners, for false prophets, the symbol for the Antichrist and the Babylonian beasts. Among the equestrian peoples, six was the sacral and organizational number of the worshippers of the spring equinox, demonstrable in the cultures of the Avars and the Khabars. – B: 1020, T: 7617.→Avars; Kabars.

Skaricza, Máté (Matthew) (Ráckeve, 1544 - Ráckeve, 21 March 1591) – Minister of the Reformed Church, literary translator and composer of hymns. He belonged to the second generation of Hungarian Reformers. He studied at his place of birth as a student of Reformer István (Stephen) Szegedi Kis. He became a teacher in Pest and Ráckeve in 1564 but, after two years, he continued his studies in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, from Transylvania in Romania). After teaching for a short while in Jászberény and again in Ráckeve, he went abroad for further studies in 1569. At first, he went to Italy, because he was attracted by humanism. He studied in Padua, and visited many places including Verona, Venice, Mantua, Ferrara, Bologna, Florence, Rome, Siena, Pisa, Genoa, Pavia and Milan. Then he went to Geneva, Zürich, Paris, Wittenberg, Strassburg, Heidelberg, Marburg, London, Cambridge, and again to Wittenberg. In 1542 he returned to Ráckeve and, soon after the death of his master and friend István Szegedi Kiss, he became a pastor in Ráckeve until he died during a Turkish raid. He translated into Latin the work of Szegedi Kis: Theologias sinceræ loci communes. In it he put the biography of the author: Vita Stephani Szegedini (1585). He translated into Hungarian Luther's song: Ein feste Burg... (A Mighty Fortress..., Erős várunk...). Perhaps he translated into Hungarian the Canons of Hercegszöllős (Hercegszöllősi kánonok), which contributed to the spreading of Calvinist Reformation in Hungary. He also wrote poems in Latin, as well as in Hungarian, e.g. It's a Precious Thing to Praise Lord God... (Drága dolog az Úristent dicsérni...). He also wrote the history of Ráckeve. He was the first biographer in Hungary. A Library and a Promenade bear his name in Ráckeve. – B: 0907, 1862, T: 7103, 7456.→Szegedi Kis, István; Hercegszöllős, Canons of.

Skirs – They are generally classified as one of the Northern German tribes, although it is possible that they separated from the Kutrigur tribal alliance. They lived on the North shore of the Black Sea before the Hun era. The Huns may have given them permission to settle in the Carpathian Basin around the middle part of the 5th century AD. Tradition maintains that Edekon, King of the Skirs, was one of Attila's senior guard officers, his confidant and the one who, during his visit to Byzantium, was allegedly bribed. Edekon's son, Odoacer, toppled the Western Roman Empire in 476, and became King of Italy.

On the property of the Cardinal of Kalocsa in Bakodpuszta, three tombs were discovered in 1859, containing ornate almandine-encrusted golden jewelry (necklaces, bracelets and rings), made by the late antique workshops of the Black Sea region around the second quarter of the 5th century. According to some theories, based on the age and geographic locations of these vaults, they probably belonged to the female relatives of Edecon, King of the Skirs, and Odoacer's family. The Cardinal donated these artifacts to the Hungarian National Museum.

In 1878, an almandine-encrusted fragment of the frame of a golden shield was found in the marshes of Sárviz Creek. A thorough critical style analysis of the fragment showed it originated in the second quarter of the 5th century and displayed the same elements as other Skir finds of the same era. About 700 to 930 grams of gold were used for the shield and its sections were encrusted with approximately 1,000 pieces of almandine.

Perhaps Sárviz is the same creek, once called Bolia by the Romans, where all the peoples of the Carpathian Basin united to fight the Ostrogoths in 469, and where King Edecon may have lost his life. – B: 1020, T: 3240.

Skriba, Zoltán (Mesterháza, 22 July 1905 - Budapest 13 June 1984) – Metallurgical engineer. He obtained his diploma in metallurgical engineering from the Academy of Mining and Forestry (Bánya és Erdőmérnöki Főiskola), Sopron, in 1929. In 1935 he became a teaching assistant at the same place. In 1935 he worked as an engineer for the Kollár Károly Mining and Mechanical Engineering Design Office (Kollár Károly Kohó- és Gépészmérnöki Tervező Iroda); then from the end of the year, until 1945 he was production engineer for the aluminum smelter of Weiss Manfred Steel and Metal Works (Weiss Manfréd Acél- és Fémművek). After World War II, he was an operating engineer at the same place; from 1947 he was manager of a section of the factory. From 1952 to 1957 he was Chief Engineer for the Hungarian Copper Mills (Magyar Rézhengerművek). Skriba retired in 1967. During the same time, from 1949 on, he taught the subject of metal working at the State Technical and Economic Institute (Állami Műszaki Főiskola) and at the Polytechnic (Műegyetem) of Budapest. From 1951 he taught at the Academy of Engineering and Economics; from 1967 at the Bánki Donát Engineering Industry College (Gépipari Műszaki Főiskola). He managed the Consolidated Central Plastics Department of Mechanical Engineering for a long time and was a member of the editorial board of the technical journal called Machine Fabricating Technology (Gépgyártástechnológia). He received the Bánki Donát Prize (1968). His major work was: The Easy-shaping of Metals (Fémek képlékeny alakítása) (1959) – B: 0883, T: 7684.

Slavonia, Coat of Arms – Beneath the six-armed star on a silver-bordered blue shield, a beech-marten runs toward the heraldic right side across the scarlet, wavy fesse. The marten signifies the Árpád era, when Slavonia paid its taxes to Hungary in marten pelts. The coat of arms was a present from Ulászló II (Wladislas) Hungarian King (1490-1516), and was incorporated into the center right of the middle coat of arms within the Hungarian coat-of-arms. – B: 1230, 1134, T: 7671.

Slovenia, Hungarians in – The Hungarian community in Slovenia lives practically in one bloc in the Muravidék (Mura Region). It was part of Historic Hungary; but in 1920 it was detached from Hungary and ceded to the newly created Yugoslavia. According to the 1991 census, their number was 8,500; but estimates place their number at between 12,000 and 16,000. The 2002 census showed that approximately 6,500 persons declared themselves to be Hungarian. The two figures indicate that a strong assimilation is taking place. This also indicates that Hungarians at the remote border region of three countries – Hungary, Austria, and the former Yugoslavia – have not been able to recover from the two World Wars and from the losses caused by reprisals, forced resettlement, emigration, and internal migration. While the number of Hungarians has decreased, the number of intellectuals willing to play a decisive role in Hungarian cultural life has increased. However, the bilingual educational system is criticized as the cause of the assimilation. Since the independence of the Slovenian Republic in 1991, the building of contacts with the mother country gained a strong momentum. The country's Constitution guarantees Hungarians one deputy's mandate in the parliament. Hungarians of Muravidék were able to establish their own cultural autonomy. The main concern for the Hungarians of Muravidék is "economic backwardness". The region is far removed from the country's economic centers and transportation routes. Officially, the unemployment rate for Muravidék as a whole is 17.2%, 16.6% in the area of Muraszombat (Muravska Sobota), and 20.5% in that of Lendva (Lendava). The region is making resolute efforts to develop the economy. In the 2005/2006 school year 995 students were enrolled in Muravidék's bilingual elementary schools, and the data show a continued decrease in the number of students. 325 students started the school year in the Bilingual Secondary School of Lendva, a total of 38 are students in the two high school sections, 20 in a joint economics (13) and mechanical engineering (7) section, and a total of 26 students are in two three-year vocational training sections. An additional 11 students are enrolled in the economics section. A total of 1,320 students finished the school year in Muravidék's bilingual elementary and secondary schools. There is a weekly People's Newspaper (Népújság), which is printed in 1,800 copies. The Hungarian Radio in Muravidék with 14 full-time employees and 12 outside staff members is a part of the Slovene RTV, and the Lendva Studio of Slovene Television provides information in Hungarian as well, and helps to preserve the Hungarian traditions and heritage. There is the Hungarian Nationality Cultural Institute of Muravidék. Its activities cover four main fields: amateur performances, book publishing, promotion of ethnography and local history, and cultivation of the native language. They have retained much of their Hungarian customs, beliefs and tradition practices and the Christmas and New Year celebrations are very strongly tradition-based. They still celebrate the so-called Gergely-járás (Gregory walk) as an annual event on March 12 at Göntérháza and Radamos. Their strong sense of history is reflected in their poems. The events surrounding the deeds of King Mátyás (late 1400's) are still recounted. About half of their 16 cultural associations have active ties with villages on the Hungarian side of the border. Visiting Hungarian exhibits and theater presentations enrich the lives of the people who can send their youth to higher education in Hungary. – B: 1454, T: 7103.→Hungary, History of; Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty.

Smoke Offerings – An ancient tradition in the East, a religious ceremony accessory, expressing respect and homage by burning scented materials. According to Herodotus (5th century BC), the Babylonians burned 1000 talents worth of frankincense on the holiday of the god Baal. Plutarch (c. 46 – 120 AD) maintained that the Egyptians made offerings of incense to their sun god three times a day. The custom reached the Greeks in the 7th century BC, the Romans some time later. Among Hungarians, old religious customs lived on for quite a while, and the forbidden smoke offering ritual was still practiced on a regular basis even after they embraced Christianity. In the beginning, the Christian Church abhorred the custom as pagan; however, from the 4th century on, it found its way into the ritual of the Mass. However, it was strictly forbidden to make smoke offerings at the statues of the Emperors. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7617.

Smoke Tax – It was the name of various taxes in Hungary during the Middle Ages. The serfs' dwellings usually had one single chimney, thus each column of smoke represented one house. The smoke column became the basis of tax collection. That tax could have been the obligatory tax (census) payable to the landowner, or the war-tax collected by the state. King Mátyás I (Mathias Corvinus, 1458-1490) introduced that kind of tax as a substitute of the previous “portal” (entrance) tax. – B: 1231, T: 3233.

Snétberger, Ferenc (Francis) (Salgótarján, 6 February 1957 - ) – Guitarist and composer. He was the youngest boy in a family of musicians. Early in his career, his father, also a guitar player, was his role model. He studied Classical Music and Jazz Guitar at the Béla Bartók School of Music, Budapest (1977-1981). His music is inspired by the Roma (Gypsy) tradition, and also by Brazilian music, flamenco, classical guitar and jazz. Since 1978, he played in a variety of jazz ensembles. In 1986 he was a soloist at the Paderborn Guitar Festival. In 1987 he participated in Jazz in the Huly Festival. From 1987 he was with the Trio Stendhallal Ensemble. Since 1988 he has been living in Berlin. Since 1996 he has been a member of The Budapest Concert, and from 1997, of the Obsession Trio. In 2004 he founded his new trio with the Norwegian bass player Arild Andersen and the Norway-based Italian percussionist Paolo Vinaccia. On stage, Snétberger has performed with David Friedman, Ghafer Youssef, James Moody, Trilok Gurtu, Pandit Hariprasad Chaurasia, Bobby McFerrin, and others. He has toured all over Europe as well as Japan, Korea, India and the USA. He made two great records with Trio Stendhallal entitled Earthsound (1991) and Something Happened (1992). His published solo CDs are: Samboa (1990); Bajotambo (1992), and also the trio, Signature (1995), and Nomad (2005). His work with Markus Stockhausen began in 1999 with Landscapes, a duo suite recorded for his album For My People. He also wrote music for film and theater. He is best known for his art of improvising, and his crossing of stylistic borders. In 2002, Snétberger was made freeman of his birth town and two years later he received the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary. In 2005, he was awarded the Franz Liszt Prize in Budapest. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7103.

Sobri, Jóska (Joe) (József Pap) (Ugod, 1809 - Lápafő, 17 February 1837) – Outlaw (betyár) from the Hungarian West. He was named after the village of Sobor in Sopron County. From there, his father moved to County Vas as a swine herd. Sobri was imprisoned in Zirc in 1834 for minor thefts. In 1835 his band of outlaws operated in the counties of Vas, Győr, Zala and Veszprém. They robbed rich shepherds and merchants. Fleeing military service, he was wounded and committed suicide. He inspired a cult movement, with stories, songs and dances preserving his legend. – B: 0883,T: 7667.→ Highwaymen's Time; Savanyú, Jóska; Rózsa, Sándor; Vidróczki, Márton.

Sobieski III, János (John) (Jan Sobieski) (near Lwów, 17 August 1629/1624 - Warsaw, 17 June 1696) – King of Poland as John III, Grand Duke of Lithuania from 1674. He was the son of the Castellan of Krakow. He had a careful upbringing, completed his high school education in the Nowogrodski College of Krakow; later he studied philosophy at the Jagello University of Krakow. After his university studies he and his brother, Marek spent two years in Western Europe, having learned not just Latin but also French, German and Italian. Early in his career, he lived in peace with the Turks. The two brothers joined the army in 1649 and took part in the Battle of Zborów. Later John became part of a mission sent to Turkey. In Istanbul he familiarized himself with the Ottoman Empire and got to know the Tatar language. On his return, he participated as colonel in the Battle of Berestechk of 1651, and he fought in the Russian War in the Battle of Ochmatov in 1655. After serving at the court of the Swedish King Charles X, he fought with the Polish King John Kazimir II in the Battle of Warsaw in 1656. In the following year, in 1667 he defeated the Cossacks and Tatars in the Battle of Podhajcy and, in 1673 he won a glorious victory over the Turks in the Battle of Chocim. In 1674, Jan Sobieski was elected King of Poland. He reformed his army and fought a number of battles. He concluded an alliance with Austrian Emperor Leopold, and when the Ottoman Turks were besieging Vienna in 1683, Sobieski moved with his Polish army under the Austrian capital. On 12 September 1683, he fought a crushing victory over the Turks and thus freed Vienna. Subsequently, as he followed the retreating Turkish troops through Hungary, he won another victory over them at Párkány (now Sturovo, Slovakia) and freed Esztergom, finally returning with his whole army to Krakow in December. In 1684, Poland also joined the Holy League, together with Austria, Venice and the Papal State against the Turks. In this way, the war against the Turkish presence in Europe was continued and the Poles launched a number of further military operations against the Turks. Sobieski's equestrian statue stands in Párkány (2008), a monument in Esztergom, and a street in Budapest are named after him. – B: 1031, 1068, T: 7456.→Esztergom.

Solt, Gallows of – On 22 June 1919, the Red Army units of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic from Kiskunhalas arrived in Solt to suppress the counter-revolution between the Danube and Tisza Rivers. For two days, they terrorized the village and, by the time Tibor Szamuelli's notorious death train arrived on the 23rd, they had already executed 15 people. Then on his arrival, Szamuelli, the head of a security committee, with the right to pass death sentences on the spot had three of the organizers executed by hanging them on the trees in front of the village hall. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Szamuelli, Tibor.

Soltész, Elemér (Elmer) (Ombod, now Ambud, Romania, 18 April 1874 - Budapest, 7 August 1957) – Minister of the Reformed Church, and army officer. In 1898 he obtained his pastoral qualifications from the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen, and studied Protestant Theology for a year on scholarship at the University of Paris. From 1899 until 1923 he was a pastor at Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Transylvania, Romania) and deputy clerk in the Transibiscan Church District. At Nagybánya, he edited the journal Preacher (Igehirdető) together with János (John) Révész from 1906 to 1919. He was Protestant Bishop of the Army (tábori püspök) in Budapest from 1923 till 1948. In the army he was Lieutenant-General. He published numerous articles in theological journals. His main work was Festived Days, vols. i-iv (Ünnepnapok I-IV), sermons (Nagybánya-Budapest); The Resurrection of Jesus... (Jézus feltámadása...) (1898), and The History of the Reformed Church in Nagybánya... (A nagybányai reformált egyház története...) (1902). The University of Debrecen conferred a Doctorate of Divinity on him in 1929. He was made an honorary lecturer at the Reformed Theological College of Pápa. – B: 0883, 1224, T: 7456. → Borbás, Antal.

Solti, Bertalan (Bartholomew) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 15 March 1913 - Budapest, 8 April 1984) – Actor and theater director. As a child of actor parents, he first appeared on stage at age 15 in Miskolc, where he played for five years; later he joined various rural companies. First he played young lad roles, later buffo parts, and was a comic dancer. After World War II, he spent two seasons in Miskolc; later, between 1946 and 1949, he was a member of the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen, where he was its director. He played at Eger, Békéscsaba, Győr and Szolnok, spent a short time at the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház), Budapest, and continued his career in the Theater of Kaposvár. For ten years (1969-1979) he played again at the theater of Győr, where he was made the honorary freeman of the town. From 1979 to 1982 he was a member of the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház), Budapest. During his forty-year acting career, Solti played more than one thousand roles. His idiomatically flavorful, pleasant speech and craftsmanship were coupled with excellent characterization ability. His simple style and natural demeanor asserted themselves in the dramatic roles. He also played in many films and TV-shows. His roles included Bánk bán, Tiborc, Biberach in J. Katona's Bánk bán; Lucifer, Apostle Peter in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Polonius, Actor-king in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Edmund in Shakespeare's Richard II; Scholar in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde (Csongor és Tünde); Teiresias in Sophocles' Antigone, and Kreon in Grillparzer's Medea. He received the Kossuth Prize (1955), and the Merited Artist title (1966). – B: 1445, 1742, T: 7456.

Solti, Sir Georg (György Stein) (Budapest, 21 October 1912 - Antibes, France, 5 Archbishop of Esztergom, Cardinal, Prince Primate of Hungary. September 1997) – Conductor. He studied piano and composition with Ernst von Dohnányi, Zoltán Kodály and Béla Bartók at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy in Budapest, giving his first concert at the age of twelve. He began working as an assistant at the Budapest Opera in 1930, and was Director of Music from 1934 to 1939. In the summers of 1936 and 1937 he was an assistant to Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival, an encounter that left a deep impression on him. After the outbreak of the Second World War he emigrated to Zurich, resuming his career as a pianist. He won first prize at the Geneva International Competition in 1942.

Solti's career really began after the end of World War II. For almost twenty-five years, he concentrated entirely on conducting operas. He was Chief Music Director of the Munich Opera from 1947 to 1951, and of the Frankfurt Opera from 1952 to 1961. Covent Garden excelled during his tenure as musical director (1961-1971). In 1951 he conducted for the first time in Salzburg (Idomeneo by Mozart). At the end of the 1950s, he made his first recordings e.g. Der Ring des Nibelungen by R. Wagner with the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. In 1961 he was appointed Music Director of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, but hardly ever worked in this position since the Orchestra's management had appointed Zubin Mehta as his assistant.

In 1969 Solti took over as director the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and his second career as a conductor of orchestral music began. He remained in this post until 1991. From 1972 to 1975 he was also Director of the Orchestre de Paris. In 1973 he was appointed Musical Adviser to the Paris Opera. From 1979 to 1983 he was Director of the London Philharmonic Orchestra. In 1983 he conducted Der Ring des Nibelungen in Bayreuth. In 1992 he took over from Herbert von Karajan as artistic director of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. He excelled in the German and Austrian post-Romantic repertoire, as well as in contemporary Hungarian music; he also achieved a large number of first performances. He had been awarded an honorary knighthood in the Order of the British Empire (KBE) in 1971. In 1978 he established a foundation in Vienna for the education of young Hungarian conductors. Solti was one of the most famous musicians and conductors, and the world's leading musical director in the 20th century. He won numerous awards for his recordings worldwide. A Music School in Budapest and a Brass Ensemble bear his name. – B: 1030, 1852, T: 7617.→Bartók, Béla; Dohnányi, Ernő, Kodály, Zoltán.

Soltis, Lajos (Louis) (Kavillo, Yugoslavia, 20 May 1950 - Siófok, 22 November 2000) – Actor and stage-manager. He completed the Academy of Dramatic Art under László (Ladislav) Vámos in 1972, and was engaged by the People's Theater of Szabadka (Szabadkai Színház) (now Subotica, Serbia). During 1975 and 1976, and again from 1980 to 1989, he was a member of the Theater of Újvidék (Újvidéki Színház) (now Novi Sad, Serbia). In the intervening years (1976-1980) he worked for the Újvidék Rádió Group. For many years he stage-managed plays on Újvidék Television and in the Farmstead Theater (Tanya Színház) (he was one of its founders). From 1987 on, he was teaching theatrical art at Újvidék, and organized a number of lectures at the theater. He died in a road accident, aged 50. His acting roles included Andrej in Chekhov's Three Sisters (Három nővér); Lopahin in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyés kert); Baal in B. Brecht's Mother Courage and Her Children (Mutter Courage und ihre Kinder – Kurázs mama); Sir Toby Belch in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night (Vízkereszt); Falstaff in Shakespeare's Henry IV, and Tót in Örkény's The Tót Family (Tóték). Sólyom, Jenő (Eugene) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca in Transylvania, Romania, 25 July 1904 - Budapest, 24 December 1976) – Lutheran theologian. He did his theological studies at the Lutheran Theological Academy, Budapest (the Lutheran Theological Academy had to be moved to Budapest as a result of the dismemberment of the historic Kingdom of Hungary in 1920), continued in Sopron, Basel, and finally in Erlangen, obtaining his Doctorate of Divinity in Sopron in 1933, with his dissertation: Luther and Hungary (Luther és Magyarország). He was a teacher of religion at the Lutheran (Evangelical) High School of Budapest (Fasori Evangélikus Gimnázium), then Professor of Church History and Canon Law in the Lutheran Theological Academy in Sopron, where he was Dean in 1943-1944. He was Secretary of the Hungarian Lutheran Society and co-editor of the journal Christian Truth (Keresztény Igazság). From 1950 he was a professor at the Lutheran Theological Academy, Budapest, but soon was forced to retire for political reasons. From 1959 he was an associate in the Lutheran National Archives, later on its head. His main works are: Hungarian Translations of the Augsburg Confession (Az Ágostai Hitvallás Magyar fordítása) (1930), and the History of Lutheran Church in Hungary (Az evangélikus templom története Magyarországon) (1944). He was the author of entries in several Encyclopedias abroad, and foundation member of the Theologischer Arbeitskreis für Reformationsgeschichtliche Forschung. – B: 1050, T: 7456.

Sólyom, László (Ladislav) (Pécs, 3 January, 1942 - ) – President of Hungary from 2005 to 2010, lawyer and professor. He studied Law at and graduated from the University of Pécs in 1965. He worked as a professor at the Law School of the University of Budapest from 1983, at Péter Pázmány Roman Catholic University from 1996, and at the Andrassy Gyula German Language University from 2002. He also worked in Jena, Germany, for 3 years. His political career began as a legal advisor for civil and environmental organizations in the late 1980s. As a founder of the Danube Circle, he also had a significant role in environmental protection issues, like preventing the construction of the Nagymaros-dam which, according to the Danube Circle, would have damaged the habitat of a northern part of the Danube. He was one of the founders of the Hungarian Democratic Forum (Magyar Demokrata Fórum – MDF) in 1987, and represented that party at the Opposition Roundtable (Ellenzéki kerekasztal) negotiations that played an important part in Hungary's transition from dictatorship to parliamentary democracy in 1989 and 1990. In 1989, for a short time, he was a member of the executive committee of the MDF. However, he left party politics in late 1989, as was elected to the Constitutional Court of Hungary (Alkotmánybíróság – AB). László Solyom gained the presidency of the court half a year later, and held that position until 1998. During this time, the Constitutional Court played an important role in changing the Constitution into a democratic one and strengthening democracy in Hungary. In this role, he significantly contributed to the codification of some of the basic human rights in the country. He had a controversial principle of activism, based on the invisible constitution, motivating the decisions of the Court by the “spirit” or “morals” of the Constitution rather than its explicitly written form, advocating the principle of equal human dignity even over the letters of the constitution. After the end of his 9-year-long mandate, he continued his scholarly career, continued giving lectures at universities, and became the founder of the Protective Club (Védegylet), an environmentalist and civil rights non-governmental organization in 2000. He was elected President of the Republic of Hungary in 2005. – B: 1031, 7103, T: 1031, 7103.→Göncz, Árpád; Mádl, Gyula; Political Parties.

Sólyom, László and his Associates – On February 1949 the State Security Police arrested lieutenant generals László (Ladislav) Sólyom, and Gusztáv (Gustavus) Illy, and major-generals István (Stephen) Beleznay, Kálman (Coloman) Révay, György (George) Porffy, colonel Sándor (Alexander) Lőrincz and Gusztáv (Gustavus) Merényi Ph.D. They were charged - in connection with the Rajk case - with treason and conspiracy to overthrow the “democratic state“; but since they were professional soldiers, the Supreme Military Court handled their cases separately. In 1950, the Court sentenced all of them to death and, after the Supreme Military Court approved the sentences, they were all executed on 19 August 1950. In 1954, the Chief Prosecutor requested a re-examination of their case from the Supreme Military Court. In its decision the Court, partly in the absence of criminal activity and partly due to lack of evidence, acquitted all of the sentenced and executed persons. The real purpose of this “sham rehabilitation“ was not to reveal the complete truth, but to save all those from responsibility, who had contributed to the illegal sentencing and execution of the six generals. On 4 September 1990, the Chief Prosecutor asked the Presidential Council of the Supreme Court to annul the 1954 sentences on the grounds that they had violated the then existing laws. Though the re-examination of the case encountered difficulties due to the loss of the original documents around 1962, the Supreme Court conceded to the request and Colonel Ede Rabocski of the Military Court announced the annulment of the 1954 sentences. In the absence of any criminal activity, the six generals were acquitted of all the charges that had been brought against them, and they were rehabilitated. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7665.→Illy, Gusztáv; Rajk, László.

From 1929 to 1934 he was Professor of Ethnography at the University of Szeged, the first in Hungary. He succeeded in educating a new generation of folklorists. From 1919 to 1932 he edited the periodical Ethnographia. He was the first expert in comparative ethnography, and a leading person of Hungarian ethnography. His work centered on folklore, folktales and folk beliefs prior to Christianity. Solymossy was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (correspondent 1919, ordinary 1933). He was a member of Scientific Societies at home and abroad: Universal Philological Society, Hungarian Linguistics Society, Hungarian Society of Literature, Folklore Fellow, and Semaines d'Ethnologie Religieuse. His publications have appeared in the Nouvelle Revue de Hongrie, and The Hungarian Quarterly. His works include On the Origins of Lyric and Epic Poetry (A líra és epika eredetéről) (1906–1907); Eastern Elements in our Folktales (Keleti elemek népmeséinkben) (1922); Folksong, Ballad and Saga (Népdal, ballada, monda) (1935); Ancient Hungarian Beliefs (A magyar ősi hitvilág) (1937), and Folktales and Science (A népmese és a tudomány) (1938). – B: 1134, 1031, T: 7103.

Sólyom-Nagy, Sándor (Alexander) (Siklós, 21 December 1941 - ) – Singer (baritone). He studied at the Academy of Music, Budapest, completing his five-year course in four years. As a student of Oszkár Maleczky and Éva Kutrucz, he obtained his diploma in 1966, and became engaged with the Opera House, Budapest, making his debut in the role of Scarpia in Puccini's Tosca. Two years before his graduation in 1964, he sang the role of Count Ceprano in Verdi's Rigoletto, in which Sándor (Alexander) Svéd played the leading role. Soon he became the company's principal baritone, demonstrating his exceptional aptitudes in more than 25 leading roles. He wrote the story of his life in Roots, Branches, Leaves. Solyom-Nagy often appears as a singer of oratorios and songs (Lieder), as well as on the occasion of the introduction of a number of modern works. He has regularly appeared at the Bayreuth Festivals. His singing is always characterized by a perfect singing technique, a voice of uniform coloring and suggestive interpretation. His roles include title role in Verdi's Falstaff; Iago in Verdi's Otello; Amonasro in Verdi's Aida; Escamillo in Bizet's

Carmen, and Hans Sachs in Wagner's Meistersinger von Nürnberg. In July 1925 he played on the stage of the Viennese Kammerspiele; in 1931 he played also with occasional companies in various towns in Hungary and Transylvania. In 1945 he appeared with the Comedy Theater and the Markus Park Theater. He was again member of the National Theater from 1946 to 1951. Somlay also worked as a teacher at the Academy of Dramatic Art from 1948 to 1951. He had his greatest successes in heroic roles, but he played in folk plays as well. He modernized Hungarian dramatic art with his sweeping movements, passionate gestures, and impeccable diction. He appeared in a number of films, and on the Radio from 1912 to 1951. He was also engaged in writing novels and stage plays. His roles included Theseus in Shakespeare's Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szentivány-éji álom); Tiborc and Petur bán in Katona's Bánk bán; Oswald in Ibsen's Ghosts (Kísértetek); title role in Shakespeare's Hamlet, and title role in Shakespeare's King Lear; He played in feature films, including Without a Lie (Hazugság nélkül) (1945); Somewhere in Europe (Valahol Európában) (1947), and Western Zone (Nyugati övezet) (1952). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1948, 1951), of the title of Outstanding Artist (1950), and was made life member of the National Theater of Budapest in 1948. He was a popular and outstanding artist of his generation. – B: 0883, 1504, 1445, T: 7456.

Somló – A wine region of 832 hectares in the Counties of Veszprém and Vas in the northwest region of Hungary (Transdanubia, Dunántúl). Most of the region is situated on the slopes of an extinct volcano, with the ruins of an 11th century castle on the mountaintop, overlooking the plain. The region has a warm climate and the traditional viticulture technology, e.g. vinification in oak barrels, which yields wines with a characteristic acidic-mineral taste. The wines of Somló are always white, and made out of the grape varieties Hárslevelű, Furmint, Juhfark, Riesling, Chardonnay Taminer and Sylvaner. Many years ago, the region consisted of large vineyards of aristocrats; now it is predominantly made up of small plots that rule the landscape, many of them belonging to part-time or hobby vintners. The wines of Somló have a long and celebrated history. The region is said to have rivaled that of Tokaj. In the past, Hungarian pharmacists regarded its wine as medicine (Vinum Somlaianum omni tempore sanum). Habsburg emperors and kings of Austria and Hungary are claimed to have favored Somló wines. According to old lore, drinking Somló wine makes the conception of male children more likely. Hence its nickname: “the wine of nuptial nights” (a nászéjszakák bora). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Somló, Bódog (Félix) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 1873 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, 28 September 1920) – Lawyer. He studied at the Universities of Kolozsvár, Leipzig and Heidelberg. Afterwards, he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Kolozsvár, in Philosophy (1899), in Philosophy of Law (1899) and in Political Philosophy (1903). From 1899 he was a professor at the Academy of Law of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). From 1905 to 1918 he was a professor at the University of Kolozsvár; in 1918-1919 at the University of Budapest in Philosophy of Law and International Law. In the course of his legal career, he proceeded from positivism to neo-Kantianism, and was one of the first representatives of Stammler’s theory of “correct law” in Hungary. In his later works, he further developed the trend referred to as “general jurisprudence”, further developing the theories of Austin and Stammler, thus seeking the most general elements of law, into which he already included certain social elements as well. For him, the fundamental formula was not the morals, but the importance of power, even though externally he accepted the concept of the constitutional state of Kant. Together with Ede (Edward) Harkányi and Gyula (Julius) Pikler, he took part in the foundation of the Sociological Society. He took his own life. His works include Parliamentarianism in Hungarian Law (Parlamentárizmus a magyar jogban) (1896); Legality in Sociology (Törvényszerűség a szociológiában) (1898); Zur Gründung einer beschreibenden Soziologie (On Foundation of an Descriptive Sociology) (1909); The Concept of Correct Law (A helyes jog elmélete) (1914), and Juristische Grundlehre (Basic Study in Law) (1927). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Somló, István (Stephen) (Szolnok, 8 May 1902 - Budapest, 5 April 1971) – Actor, director and writer. He completed his studies in the Academy of Dramatic Art in 1923 and then became a member of the Renaissance Theater (Renaissance Színház) managed by Artúr Bárdos. In 1926 he was contracted to the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), where he developed into an outstanding actor and he remained its member over several decades. In 1948-1949 he was Director of this theater together with Klári (Clara) Tolnay and Gyula (Julius) Benkő. From 1949 to 1951 he worked in the Inner City Theater (Belvárosi Színház) and, from 1951 to 1959, he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. From 1959 until his retirement in 1962 he was Director of the Comedy Theater. Somló had an elegant, light style and was also outstanding as a reciting artist; he often appeared on Hungarian Radio, where he directed and acted one of the leading roles in the first radio play in Hungary: P. Gerald’s To Love (Szeretni). He also acted in several films. He worked as an important special writer: together with György (George) Lengyel, he edited the volume Actors, Roles (Színészek, szerepek) (1959), and another volume entitled Actors, Stage Managers (Színészek, rendezők) (1965). He is author of Contemporaries and Colleagues (Kor-és pályatársak) (1968). His roles included Praed in Shaw’s Mrs. Warren’s

Profession (Warrenné mestersége), and Higgins in Shaw's Pygmalion. There are 18 feature films to his credit, including This Villa is for Sale (Ez a villa eladó) (1935); Colony Below the Ground (Gyarmat a föld alatt) (1951); Spring in Budapest (Budapesti tavasz) (1955); At Midnight (Éjfélkor) (1957), and Daybreak (Virrad) (1960). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1957, and was presented with the titles of Merited Artist (1956) and Outstanding Artist (1962). – B: 0883, 1504, T: 7456. → Tolnay, Klári; Benkó, Gyula.

Somló, Sándor (Alexander) (Ödön Hlavathy) (Kapos, 1859 - Budapest, 2 September 1916) – Actor, theater director, playwright. After completing his studies in the Academy of Dramatic Art, first he worked in the country, later in the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, playing primarily heroic parts. In 1902 he became director of the National Theater. In 1909 he took the lead of the Academy of Dramatic Art. He wrote a number of plays, but only one, Fra Girolamo was a success (first appeared in the National Theater in 1895). His wife was Vilma Vadnay. He was member of the Kisfaludy Society from 1897 and from the Petőfi Society from 1899. His works include First Love (Első szerelem) comedy (1884); Ovid (1885); The Sabbatarians (A szombatosok) (1899), and Soul Market (Lélekvásár) (1914). – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Vadnai, Vilma.

Somlói galuska (Shom-lo-i gal-oosh-kah) – A popular Hungarian dessert from the Somló region. It is made by layering chocolate and vanilla sponge cake with vanilla custard, raisins, walnuts, chocolate sauce, rum and a generous topping of whipped cream. Similar to a trifle, it tastes better once it has been left to set. – B&T: 1031.

Somlyó, György (George) (Balatonboglár, 28 November 1920 - Budapest, 8 May 2006) – Poet, writer, essayist, translator of literary works; son of Zoltán Somlyó. At a young age he belonged to the poets of the paper West (Nyugat). Gábor Devecseri and Ferenc (Francis) Karinthy were his childhood friends. He was also in personal contact with Miklós (Nicholas) Radnóti, Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi and Attila József. He became associated with the journal New Moon (Újhold), and he was influenced by French surrealism. Between 1941 and 1944 he was several times called up for forced labor. In 1945 he studied in the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest. From November 1946 he studied on a French scholarship at the University of Paris (Sorbonne); he lived in France and Italy for a while. In 1948 and 1949 he was dramaturge at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, then, until 1950, he was head of the reader's department of the Hunnia Film Factory. In 1954 and 1955 he was in charge of the Literary Section of Hungarian Radio. In 1958 the work entitled Anthology of French Poets (Francia költők antológiája), edited by him, was published with his foreword, and also the first Hungarian edition of the complete life's work of Rimbaud. In 1965 his first volume of poems in French translation the Souvenir du Présent was published in Paris. In 1966 Somlyó founded the multi-lingual literary almanac, entitled Arion, which he edited until 1987. His volumes of poems and studies appeared in quick succession, including Talisman (Talizmán), volume of poems (1956); The Book of Stories (A mesék könyve) poems (1974); Song of Arion (Arion éneke) (1978); Duet of Paris (Párisi kettős), novel (1990), and Fault Lines (Töresvonalak), poems (1997). In his poetry, almost all verse forms can be found from free verse to the sonnet. Besides his autobiographically inspired prose works, he also published studies and translations of literary works. He was a member of the Parisian Mallarmé Academy and founding member of the Széchenyi Academy of Literature and Art, as well as of the Digital Literary Academy (1998). He was the recipient of numerous prizes and recognitions, including the Attila József Prize (1950, 1951, 1954, 1966), Officier de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres (1984), the Tibor Déry Prize (1987), the Gyula Illyés Prize (1992), and the Kossuth Prize (1998). – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→Somlyó, Zoltán; Devcseri, Gábor; Karinthy, Ferenc; Radnóti, Miklós; Kosztolányi Dezső; József, Attila.

Somlyó, Zoltán (Schwarz) (Alsódomború, now Dolnja Dubrava, Croatia, southwest of Nagykanizsa, 22 June 1882 - Budapest, 7 January 1937) – Poet, literary translator and journalist. He completed his high school studies in Nagykanizsa. From 1901 he lived in Budapest and worked as a journalist. Later on he was a journalist in Fiume, the Hungarian port on the Adriatic Sea (now Rijeka, Croatia), and then he moved to Budapest and became a contributor to the paper Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). He also worked at the editorial offices of papers published in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), Szeged, Pécs and Szabadka (now Subotica, Serbia). From 1913, he again worked in Budapest, becoming a regular contributor to the papers Pest News (Pesti Hírlap) and Pester Lloyd; he also had some poems published in the journal West (Nyugat). After the fall of the Hungarian (Soviet) Council Republic on 1 August 1919, Somlyó was mainly engaged in translating literary works. The basic tone of his poetry is a feeling of solitude and despair. His works include The Damned Poet -Discussions with God (Az átkozott költő – megbeszélések Istennel) poems (1911); The Man's Poems (A férfi versei) (1922), and Duchess Milonga Tango (Tango Milonga hercegnő), novel (1924). – B: 1031, 1088, 1122, 1257, T: 7456.→Somlyó, Gyögy.

Somogyi, Erzsébet (Elizabeth, Lizi) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 10 September 1906 - Budapest, 10 July 1973) – Actress. Already in her childhood she became acquainted with the theater, as her parents were working at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Kolozsvár. She studied briefly at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, then she played at the Renaissance Theater (Renaissance Színház) (1924). In the same year she had her debut as Marianna in Molière's Tartuffe, and was Puck in Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream (Szentivánéji álom). She took over Gizi Bajor's role, Sárka in L. Zilahy's The Sun is Shining (Süt a nap). Until her death, she played at the National Theater of Budapest, apart from two short breaks. In the last phase of her life, she excelled herself in two dramatic roles: as Linda in A. Miller's Death of a Salesman (Az ügynök halála), and as Mary Tyrone in O'Neill's Long Day's Journey into Night (Hosszú út az éjszakába). She also played in numerous films, radio plays and TV films. Her roles included Rosalind in Shakespeare's As You Like It (Ahogy tetszik); Dorina and Marianne in Molière's Tartuffe; Erzsébet in Szigligeti's Liliomfi, Szidónia in G. Somogyi József (Joseph) (Félszerfalva now Hirm, Austria, 19 June 1916 - Budapest, 2 January 1993) – Sculptor and teacher. He studied at the Academy of Applied Arts, Budapest, where his masters were István (Stephen) Réti, Vilmos Aba Novák and Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kisfaludy Stróbl (1936-1940). His first exhibition was held in Győr when he was 13, where he became acquainted with Miklós (Nicholas) Borsos. He completed his studies under Béla Kontuly and Zsigmond Kisfaludi Stróbl in 1941. He was one of the most talented among the post-war generation sculptors. He exhibited from 1941 on, and had one-man shows in 1946 and 1947. His works show superior sureness of form, a character that ceaselessly seeks new solutions, with his pursuit of a passionate recognition and interpretation of reality. Basically, he was a romantic artist; his creations are filled with expressiveness and radiating emotions. His monumental sculptures are characterized by inner dynamism and dramatic power. In 1958, in the Brussels World Fair, he won a Grand Prix with his composition Dancers, jointly created with Jenő (Eugen) Kerényi. His best-known sculptures include Abundance, which is in Sopron (1955), Dózsa, (in Cegléd, 1958) and Little Girl with a Colt in the Jubileum Park on the Gellért Mountain in Buda (1965). Somogyi became a teacher at the Academy of Applied Arts between 1974 and 1987, and its Rector between 1968 and 1977. He also became President of the Hungarian Artists' Association. After 1984 he was lay President of the Hungarian Reformed General Synod and Chief Curator of the Transdanubian Reformed Church District. He was also a Member of Parliament and a member of the Presidential Council of Hungary. In his house in Tihany on Lake Balaton, he founded an artist colony for young artists. His works are characterized by a superior sense of form perfection, and the passionate pursuit of reality and its expression. He was a determining figure in the post-war sculptural art in public places. His works include statues of Dózsa (the insurgent), Bartók, Petőfi, Plentitude, and Nimród. His works appeared in numerous exhibitions (joint and one-man shows) in Hungary and abroad. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1954), the Munkácsy Prize (1956), the Grand Prix of the World Fair at Brussels (1958); he received the Merited Artist title (1966), and the Outstanding Artist title (1970). – B: 0932, 1144, 1838, T: 7456.→Borsos, Miklós; Kisfaludi Stróbl, Zsigmond; Aba Novák, Vilmos; Kerényi, Jenő.

Somogyi, László (Ladislav) (Budapest, 25 June 1907 - Geneva, 20 May 1988) - Conductor. After his preliminary musical studies (violin, piano), he finished his studies at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as a student of composition under Zoltán Kodály in 1935. Although he did not aspire to be a composer, he wanted to learn how music was “constructed”, and this was how he became an outstanding conductor of modern musical works, especially those of Bartók and Kodály. In 1935 he was a student of conducting under Hermann Scherchen in Brussels. Between 1932 and 1936 he was a violinist in the Concert Orchestra of Budapest. It was in 1936 that he conducted his first concert in the great hall of the Academy of Music; he continued by conducting in Dutch, Belgian and Italian towns and in Vienna. Between 1939 and 1943 he founded and directed the Goldmark Orchestra in Hungary and, from 1945 to 1951, he was Conductor of the Budapest Symphony Orchestra. From 1949 to 1956, Somogyi was Professor of Conducting at the Academy of Music, Budapest. Between 1951 and 1956, he was chief conductor of the Symphony Orchestra of Hungarian Radio. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he emigrated, working in Western Europe and, in the 1960s, in the USA. From 1964 to 1970 he was Director of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra in New York State; here he also found ways and means to popularize more recent Hungarian music. He returned to Europe in the 1970s and settled in Geneva. He is regarded as a determining figure in the Hungarian musical life of the post-war decades (1945-1956); he was one of the really striving workers in the heroic age of Hungarian music, hallmarked by the names of Bartók and Kodály. Unforgettable Mozart concerts are also linked to his name, together with first performances of works by Z. Kodály, L. Weiner, F. Farkas and R. Sugár. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1951), and the title Merited Artist (1953). A book was written about Somogyi and his age by István Kerekes, entitled (Once There Was a Hungarian Conductor (Volt egyszer egy magyar karmester)) (2005). – B: 0883, 1863, T: 7456.→Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Weiner, Leo; Farkas, Ferenc; Sugár, Rezső.

Somogyi, Nusi (hollósi Somogyi, Anna) (Budapest, 3 March 1884 - Budapest, 8 October 1963) – Actress. She was trained in the School of Dramatic Art of the National Actors' Association. First, she appeared on stage with the company of Miklós (Nicholas) Mariházy Kövér in Kecskemét in 1907. The following year, she was invited to play in Sándor (Alexander) Rott's Company. In the summer, she appeared in the Jardin de Paris. In 1910 the Comedy Theater of Szeged (Szegedi Vígszimpad) engaged her. In 1913 she was contracted to the Budapest Theater (Budapest Színház); in 1914 to the King Theater (Király Színház) and, from 1915 to 1918, to the Winter Garden (Téli Kert). She was a guest with the troupe of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) at the People's Opera (Népopera) in 1916. From 1919 she again played in the King Theater and, from 1923 to 1925, she was a member of the Lujza Blaha Theater (Blaha Lujza Színház); she also appeared in the Municipal Theater (Városi Színház) in 1926 and in the Royal Orfeum in 1927. She appeared as a guest artist in Vienna in 1928. Nusi Somogyi was invited to play at the Budapest Theater between 1928 and 1930. In the years from 1931 to 1935 she appeared in the Metropolitan Operetta Theater (Fővárosi Operett Színház). Between 1933 and 1940 she was on the stages of the Royal Orfeum, Royal Revue and the Royal Theater, and she also played for the Buda Stage Circle (Budai Színkör) during 1929, 1930 and 1932; in the Repertory Theater (Kamara Színház) in 1933, 1934 and 1936; in the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház) in 1935; in the Erzsébetváros Theater (Erzsébetvárosi Színház) (1937, 1938 and 1944) and in the Municipal Theater in 1937. She was a member of the Márkus Park Theater (Márkus Park Színház) in 1939, the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) in 1941, and the Merry Theater (Vidám Színház) in 1942. After the war she played mainly in rural towns, but she played also in the Lujza Blaha Theater (1957-1959). She retired in 1960. She was usually a soubrette and comedienne; later in her life, she was also an excellent dancing primadonna. Her roles included Gretl in F. Lehár's The Blue Mazurka (Die blaue Mazur – Kék mazúr); Ágota Illésházy in J. Huszka's Baroness Lili (Lili bárónő); Diana in J. Huszka's Golden Flower (Aranyvirág); Amália in L. Lajtai's Three Springs (Három tavasz), and Mrs. Borbás in Sz. Fényes' Two Loves (Két szerelem). There are more than 25 feature films to her credit including State Department Store (Állami Áruház) (1952); Two Confessions (Két vallomás) (1957); The Promised Land (Az ígéret földje) (1961); Two Lives of Auntie Mici (Mici néni két élete) (1962), and Idol (Bálvány) (1963). – B: 1445, 1719, T: 7456.

Somogyi, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 10 June 1924 - Budapest, 9 December 1983) – Journalist and humorist. He started his career by writing poems; in 1945 he published a volume of poems entitled Pastorale. From 1946 he appeared on Hungarian Radio with amusing one-minute song-burlesques. From 1953 to 1957 his writings appeared in the military journal For Our Free Country (Szabad Hazánkért). His humorous writings were mainly published in the leading humorous journal, Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd (Ludas Matyi) from 1957 becoming its associate editor and later leading co-editor. He wrote a number of radio plays and Hungarian Television often beamed his bright scenes. In 1974 he prepared a TV film together with Róbert Bán entitled Love at a Moderate Price (Szerelem jutányos áron). His works include Decameron of Pest (Pesti dekameron) humoresques (1964), and More Recent Decameron of Pest (Újabb pesti dekameron), humoresques (1968). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Somogyvári, Rudolf (Skoda, Rezső) (Budapest, 30 November 1916 - Budapest, 28 September 1976) – Actor. He completed the School of the National Actor's Association and started his career in the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház), Budapest. After spending years in the countryside and then in Szeged (1939-1941), he appeared on the stage of the Andrassy Boulevard Theater (Andrássy úti Színház), Budapest, playing the role of Napoleon in H. Bahr's Josephine in 1942, which made him well-known. While he was a prisoner-of war in Russia (1945-1949), he organized a soldiers' theater. After his return to Hungary, until 1960 he was a member of the Merry Theater (Vidám Színház), the Pioneer Theater (Úttörő Színház) and the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház). In 1960 he signed a contract with the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) of Szolnok and, in 1963 the Thalia Theater (Thália Színház) of the capital city. From 1969 until his death, he played in the Comedy Theater (Víg Színház) of Budapest. On stage and in films, radio and television Somogyvári made many memorable renderings of personalities. His high standard caricatures also secured popularity for him. His roles included title roles in Shakespeare's Hamlet and Richard II, and Agrippa in Antony and Cleopatra; title roles in Schiller's Don Carlos; Rostand's The Eaglet (A sasfiók); Ciganov in Gorky's Barbarians; Almády in F. Eclipse of the Crescent Moon* (Egri csillagok) (1968). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize in 1956 and 1968. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Somogyváry, Gyula (Julius) (pen name: Gyula diák – Clerk Julius) (Füles, 21 April 1895 - Kistarcsa, 12 February 1953) – Writer. He received his elementary schooling in Somogyvár and his secondary education in Budapest. He fought on the Italian and Russian fronts during World War I, remained there for 36 months and achieved the rank of lieutenant. He worked as a carpenter journeyman and was part of the Counter Revolution in 1919. He became journalist and later Director of the Hungarian News Service (Magyar Távirati Iroda). From the mid-1930s, he served as a parliamentary representative until 19 March 1944, the starting date of Hungary's German occupation; under occupation, he operated a secret anti-German radio broadcast. He was a faithful believer in the country's independence. On 2 March 1944 the German Gestapo arrested and deported him to Mauthausen; he returned in June 1945. He resumed publication of his articles in religious papers. He was arrested again on 5 November 1950, and interned in Kistarcsa. He died en route to the transit prison hospital and was laid to rest in a common grave; he was reinterred into parcel 301 at the Cemetery of Rákoskeresztúr, Budapest, on 11 February 1992.

Somogyváry was an important member of the national writers' group, active between the two World Wars. He wrote under a pen name. He penned mostly historical novels and his year-end broadcasts were also popular. His well-known works are Fogging on the Rhine (A

Rajna ködbe vész (1935); We are still Alive (És mégis élünk) (1936); The Almond Tree is Blooming (Virágzik a mandulafa) (1937); The Army Corps Remained Faithful (A Hadtest hű maradt) (1942), and Turn of the Soldier's Star (Katonacsillag megfordul) (1944). – B: 0883, 1136, 1257, T: 3240.

Song of the Acquisition of Pannonia – One of the oldest Hungarian historical songs, which was written in an ancient form of 42 four-line stanzas. It is the story of Árpád; how the first Prince of the incoming Magyars from the direction of Transylvania, mounted on a white horse with a golden bridle and saddle, claimed the country from the Polish prince living in Veszprém. The clumsy poem was written in the first half of the 16th century and its separate verse ending was most likely written by Demeter (Demetrius) Csáti of the Szilágyság region following the battle of Mohács (1526). There are ancient details suggesting that, before Csáti, another, much older historical song on the same subject existed. The original manuscript has yet to be recovered. While a sentencing judge of the County Court, named Subich, copied it in the 19th century, the historical writer, György (George) Pray, mentioned it for the first time in 1774. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 3240. → Csáti, Demeter.

Sóni, Pál (Paul) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 21 January 1917 - Kolozsvár, 14 October 1981) – Hungarian literary historian, critic and writer. He completed his studies in Nagyvárad, Cernovic and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He became noted in the Helicon of Erdély (Transylvania) (Erdélyi Helikon). At the end of World War II he was carried off and detained. After his return, he was a newspaper reporter; from 1947-1953 he worked for the Editorial Office of the paper, Forwards (Előre). From 1954 to 1956 he was Chief Editor for the paper Our Road (Útunk), then that of its Literary Publishers. From 1957 he was a professor at the Hungarian Faculty of the University of Kolozsvár. Sóni's studies appeared in the Literary Criticisms (Irodalmi Birálatok) (Bukarest, 1955); the Attraction of Creations (Művek vonzása) (Bukarest, 1967), and Literary Profiles (Írói Arcélek). In 1969 he published The History of Hungarian Literature in Romania (A romániai magyar irodalom története), a university textbook. In his work Avant-garde Radiation (Avant-garde sugárzás) (Bucharest, 1973), he worked out in detail the Hungarian Avant-Garde Literature of Erdély. His work, entitled Nagy István is a biographical monograph (Bucharest, 1973). His novels appeared with the titles Pose and Smile (Póz és mosoly) (Bucharest, 1969); The Death of Andriska (Andriska halála) (Kolozsvár, 1973), and The Last Circle (Az utolsó kör) (Kolozsvár, 1979). His short stories were Traces of a Sparrow (Verébnymok) (Bucharest, 1969) and the Open Courtyard (Nyitott udvar), sketches, short stories (Bucharest, 1980). The Avant-Garde literary tradition influenced his story-telling art. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7684.

Sonkoly, István (Stephen) (Sátoraljaújhely, 21 December 1907 - Debrecen, 13 December 1988) – Violinist, voice teacher and writer on music. From the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, he obtained a diploma in violin playing, violin teaching, voice teacher and composing under the tutorship of Zoltán Kodály, Jenő (Eugen) Hubay and Leo Weiner. He earned a Ph.D. at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest, with his dissertation Jenő Péterfy as Art Critic, in 1937. He appeared at concerts in Hungary and abroad from 1927 to 1932, concurrently working as a professor at the Academy of Music, Budapest, and then lecturing at the Reformed Teachers' College of Nagykőrös (1934-1939), the Roman Catholic High School of Kalocsa (1939-1945), the Teachers' College of Nyíregyháza (1946-1951), the Teachers' College of Debrecen (1952-1959) and, finally, at the High School and College of Music of Debrecen (1959-1968). His studies include Kodály, the Man and Artist (Kodály, az ember és művész) (1948); Music of the Freedom War (A szabadságharc zenéje) (1949); Franz Liszt in County Hajdú (Liszt Ferenc Hajdúvármegyében) (1962), and Mazurka Rhythm in Hungarian Folk-music (Mazurka ritmus a magyar népzeneben) (1963). – B: 0883, 1134, T: 7456. → Liszt, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán; Weiner, Leó; Hubay, Jenő.

Soó, Rezső (Rodolph) (Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu Seculiesc, Romania - 1 August 1903 - 10 February 1980) – Botanist. He completed his high school studies in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1925 he obtained his Degree in Education (Dip.Ed.) and subsequently a Ph.D. from the University of Budapest. For two years, he was a member of the Collegium Hungaricum of Berlin. From 1927 to 1929 he was an assistant lecturer at the Biological Research Institute of Tihany (on Lake Balaton); in 1929 an associate professor and Head of the Botanical Department at the University of Debrecen, which he founded and led for 11 years, and which became the famed School of Coenology and Ecology of Debrecen, well known in Europe; he also pioneered plant geography and evolution. Beside floral, geo-botanical and coenological research, he researched the history of vegetation, systematics (especially the taxonomy of orchids) and nature conservation. From 1940 to 1944, when the Second Vienna Award returned northern Transylvania to Hungary, he was Head of the Department of Plant Systematics at the University of Kolozsvár, Director of its Botanical Gardens, and was in charge of the botanical collection of the National Museum of Transylvania. After 1945, he returned to his chair at the University of Debrecen for ten years, becoming President of the Biological Section of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Dean of the University of Debrecen, and Editor of the journal Acta Geobotanica Hungarica. By 1955 Soó settled permanently in Budapest, where he already gave lectures at the University between 1952 and 1955, and was Professor of Plant Systematics and Plant Geography at the University until his retirement in 1969. He was concurrently the Director of the Budapest Botanical Gardens. During his years in Budapest, he continued his work on the six-volume handbook, the publication of the last volume of which in December 1980 he did not live to see. His scientific activity of five decades resulted in 660 published works, including 30 books, some on nomenclature, history of botany and bibliography. He also wrote some textbooks. He worked out his own plant-evolutionary system in his book Evolutionary Plant Systematics (Fejlődéstörténeti növényrendszertan) (1953). His works include Geobotanische Monographie von Kolozsvár (1927); Floren und Vegetationskarte des historischen Ungarns (1933); Flora of the Szeklerland in Transylvania (A Székelyföld flórája) (1943), and Taxonomic and plant-geographic handbook of Hungarian flora and vegetation, vols. I-VI (A magyar flóra és vegetáció rendszertani-növényföldrajzi kézikönyve I-VI) (1964-1980). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1947, ordinary 1951). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1951 and 1954. – B: 1031, 1160, T: 7456.

Soós, Ferenc (Francis) (Újpest, 10 June 1919 - Budapest, 5 February 1981) – Table-tennis player. From 1934 he was a table-tennis player at the Physical Exercise Club of Újpest (Újpesti Torna Egylet – UTE), from 1940 at the Physical Culture Training Circle of the Manfréd Weiss Company (Weiss Manfréd Torna Klub – WMTK), from 1946, at Mezőkémia and, from 1950 at the Lombik of Kőbánya. Between 1937 and 1950 he appeared altogether on seventy-four occasions in the Hungarian selected team. In the World Championships, he won 12 medals. He received the outstanding majority of his results in teams and in doubles, but he also won a Silver and a Bronze medal in individual competitions. In 1938 he acquired the title of World Champion in London. He was the only one from the Hungarian team who, after World War II, continued his career in the Hungarian selected team. After 1953, he was no longer active in sports. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Soós, Géza (Budapest, 13 October 1912 - McConnellsburg PA, USA, 5 September 1953) – Minister of the Reformed Church, politician and cultural organizer. He studied at the Law School of the University of Budapest, and obtained his Ph.D. in Law in 1935. He started his career in the law court, where he became a judge. In 1940 he started working at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and, until the autumn of 1944 he actively fostered connections with the West. From 1930 he participated in the work of the Reformed Student Association Soli Deo Gloria and, in 1940 he became its national president and led the Association until 1946. In the spring of 1944, after the German occupation of Hungary, he joined the resistance movement. In September 1944, Soós became the secretary of the Hungarian Independence Movement. In December, on behalf of the resistance, he flew to the American Command in Southern Italy, where he was taken into custody; he was freed in May 1945, and was able to return to Hungary in January 1946. However, in the summer of 1946, he fled to the West. He settled in Switzerland, obtained his pastoral qualification and entered the Geneva Center of the World Council of Churches (WCC) (Egyházak Világtanácsa – EVT); later he became its secretary. In 1949 he formed the Hungarian Mental Working Party and launched the journal New Hungarian Road (Új Magyar Út). In November 1951 he moved to the USA, where he worked as an official of the WCC. He died in a road accident. – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Sós, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 18 July 1905 - 12 July 1969) – Journalist and writer. He studied Law at the University of Budapest; but in 1931 he was asked to leave because of a poem of his that had appeared in the socialist paper People's Word (Népszava). Prior to 1945, he was a correspondent of and, at a later stage, Editor of the papers Evening Courier (Esti Kurír), The News (Az Újság), Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap), Morning News (Reggeli Újság) and The Pen (A Toll). He was also Editor for the book series entitled New Jewish Library (Új Zsidó Könyvtár). During World War II, he was called up for forced labor in 1944, and was kept in the military prison at Győr. After 1945 he was the chief contributor of the paper People's Word (Népszava), and for 25 years of the paper Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). From 1957 to 1965 he was President of the Hungarian Jews' National Agency, and of the Israelite Community of Budapest, and also Editor-in-Chief of the Jewish religious paper New Life (Új Élet). In his 30-plus books, essays and other published writings, his interest in literary history and history itself were combined with sensitivity toward current problems. He became the victim of a car accident. His works include Symbolism in Literature (A szimbolizmus az irodalomban), essay (1924); What Will Happen to Europe? (Mi lesz Európával?) (1931); Jews in Hungarian Towns (Zsidók a magyar városokban) (1941); European Fascism and anti-Semitism. The Age of Persecution (Európai fasizmus es antiszemitizmus. Az üldözések kora) (1948); Cervantes (1955), and Thomas and Heinrich Mann, with Magda Vámos (1964). His lifework was recognized, among others, by the honor entitled Colors of the People's Republic of Hungary (1957). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Sós, József (Joseph) (Orosháza, 21 November 1906 - Budapest, 4 January 1973) – Physician and pathophysiologicalist. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Debrecen and thereafter he was practicing as a district physician in various country towns (1932-1936). Between 1936 and 1941 he was a research fellow in the Biological Institute of the University of Pécs; in 1941 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent). From 1941 to 1945 he was Head of the Trophological Section of the National Public Health Institute. From 1945 to 1948 he was a specialist lecturer and counselor in the Ministry of Public Welfare; from 1948 he was Director of the Institute of Pathological Biology and a professor at the University of Budapest; he was its Vice-Chancellor from 1964 to 1967. He dealt mainly with trophology, clarification of the role of amino acids in the system, thyroid gland illnesses and metabolic disorder of the myocardium. He also made important advances in the field of civilizational illnesses and in the neurological disorders due to chemicals. He was the author of several works on the history of medicine. His works include Wartime Nutrition (Háborús táplálkozás) (1943); Nourishment, Health, Illness (Táplálkozás, egészség, betegség) (1965); Textbook of Pathological Biology (Kórélettan tankönyv) (1966); Pathology of the Illnesses of Civilization (A civilizációs betegségek kórtana) (1969), and The Art of Nutrition (A táplálkozás művészete) (1970). He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1961), and was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1959. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Sopron (German: Ödenburg) – Old cultural town in a picturesque setting in western Hungary near the Austrian border, 80 km southeast of Vienna and 6 km west of Lake Fertő (Neusiedlersee), at the foot of the eastern spur of the Alps (the Rozalia and Sopron Ranges), at 212 m above sea level with the Ikva Creek flowing through the town. A document from 1317 refers to it as the “gate of the realm”. It is a commercial center as well, producing cotton textiles and wool, while the people in the surroundings of the town are also engaged in wine production, the main source of income for the town's inhabitants. The best-known type of Sopron wine is a red burgundy, cultivated since the 16th century. Sopron is considered to be the healthiest town in Hungary, but its population scarcely increased during the 20th century: 33,478 in 1901, 42,205 in 1941 and 41,246 in the 1970s; by religion: 65% Roman Catholic, 28% Lutheran, 1.5% Calvinist, 5.5% Jewish (1930 census); 56,417 in 2005. The German farmer-burgers are referred to facetiously as poncichters. Sopron also has a law court, attorney's department, post office administration, school inspectorate, banks and chamber of commerce. The University at Sopron was formed by the transfer of the Mining and Forestry Academy of Selmecbánya (Schemnitz) from Upland (Felvidék) of northern Hungary, now Slovakia) as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), when the entire Academy, teachers and students, moved en masse to Sopron (cf. K.J. Roller: The Sopron Chronicle, 1986, Rákóczi Foundation, Toronto). Many of the staff and students emigrated to Canada after the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, and most of them settled in Vancouver. Sopron was the home of the Lutheran Theological Faculty of Pécs. At present, the University of Western Hungary at Sopron includes faculties of heavy-industrial engineering and metallurgy; and, associated with it. In Sopron, there are the Benedictine and Lutheran high schools; the last was founded in the 16th century and contains a library of 28,000 volumes, with many manuscripts, incunabula, and unique copies. Among others, the poet Dániel Berzsenyi was a student there. There is a Teachers' College, a Military College and a Female Officers' College; a State High School, and an Ursuline Girls' High School; a Municipal Library and a Museum (specialized in ancient- and local cultural history) and rich municipal and county-archives (with some documents from the Árpád-dynasty era); there is also a theater, inns (e.g. Jégverem Fogadó), a Hospitality Club, a Municipal Secondary School (since 1869) and a number of sports fields. In the service of community care, there is a Civic Home, a Poorhouse, an Ams-house and a Deaf-mute Institute. Cultural associations include the Fine Arts Circle, the Frankenburg Literary Circle and the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Music Society (since 1829), while the papers of Sopron include Sopron News (Soproni Hirlap), Ödenburger Zeitung, and the journal on local history, Sopron Review (Soproni Szemle). The Sopron industries include bell-casting workshop, fire-engine factory, ironworks, steelworks, cotton- and silk-textile mills, carpet -factory, ribbon-weaving workshop, several brickyards, bakeries, breweries, distilleries and a vinegar workshop. There are municipal gas-works and a power station, and also a briquette plant, using the brown coal from the neighboring Brennberg mine. The inner town preserved the greatest number of art monuments, having been the core of the town even in Roman times, where every era is represented from Gothic to Classicism. The symbol of the town, the Fire Tower, stands (61 m) on the original main square (now the Francis Joseph Square), the base of which goes back to the times of the Árpád Dynasty (11th to 14th century); its present form was completed in 1681. The adjoining building was the home of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) in his youth. Nearby are the 19th century County Hall and the New Town Hall. In the center of the square rises the Baroque-style Holy Trinity monument (1701) and next to it the Benedictine Church ("Goat Church") in Gothic style; its interior furnishings were renewed in Baroque style in the 18th century. The streets of the inner town lend a uniformly historic impression with their 17th – 18th century Baroque mansions and ornate middle-class houses; among them the best-known are the Esterházy mansion, the Bezeredi hall of the 18th century, the Lutheran rectory, the Zichy-Meskó mansion, the Eggenberg house with a stone pulpit in its courtyard from the counter-reformation era, and also the chapter house. Many courtyards show typical loggias, open stairs, artistic railings, fine gates, window ornaments and coats-of-arms; there are many memorial plates. The core area has a number of churches: the St. George Church (15th century), the Lutheran Church (1782-1783) and the Ursulines' Neo-Gothic church (1864) with the 18th century Maria Fountain in front of it. The city was surrounded with a fortified wall, traces of which may still be seen. In place of the moat, the present-time commercial district, with fine Rococco and Classicist-style houses alternate with more recently-built buildings. The 18th century Dominican Church, the Széchenyi Palace (1828) and the Casino building stand on the Széchenyi Plaza; the statue of Count István Széchenyi ("the Greatest Hungarian") is the work of Lajos Mátrai. On Petőfi Square there is the Theater of Sopron and the statue of Franz Liszt (the work of Viktor Tilgner). At the beginning of Rákóczi Boulevard, a memorial tablet marks the one-time dwelling house of the poet Sándor Petőfi. In the old suburbs beyond the Ikva Creek, the German-speaking Poncichter farmers live, growing beans and cultivating grapes, producing their own wines. (The name Poncichter derives from the German Bohnenzüchter, meaning beangrowers.) St. Michael's parish church was built in the 15th century. Next to it is the little St. Jacob Chapel from the 13th century. The church of the former Knights of St. John was built in 1484, and renovated in the 19th century. St. Michael's Cemetery has many Rococo and Empire-style tombs. Notable is the chapel of the Voss Orphanage with the beautiful altar painting by István (Stephen) Dorfmeister. Beyond the railway line, at the foot of the Sopron Range, a more recent suburb has developed, with garden houses, sports fields and a university students' colony. The History of Sopron dates back to the Romans, who further developed the Celtic earthen fortifications on the town's site and established a settlement called Scarbantia, a military outpost; it fell into ruins in the migration period. In the 9th century, German settlers appeared until the Magyars took over during the Carpathian settlement. King St. Stephen (1000-1038) developed it into a royal castle. King Ottocar II of Bohemia burned it down in 1270. Under King László IV, it became a royal free borough in 1277, adding to it the Lővérek area of Petcheneg archers. The town was granted numerous privileges by the kings of Hungary over the centuries. After the Mohács defeat (1526), it was visited several times by Turkish troops. A number of Diets were held at Sopron (1553, 1622, 1625, 1634, and 1681). Several kings of Hungary were crowned there. Humanism became popular in the town in the 17th century. Sopron suffered a lot from the Kuruc sieges. In 1808 János (John) Kis and others founded the still functioning Hungarian Society (Magyar Társaság). Sopron became one of the centers for Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy's language reform and Count István (Stephen) Széchenyi's reform ideas were eagerly adopted. During the War of Independence against Habsburg rule (1848-1849), the Austrian forces first marched into Sopron in 1848. As a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon in 1920, the town was first ceded to Austria (the former partner in the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy). Because of the nationalistic feelings of the people of Sopron, a plebiscite was held to decide where the town should belong (according to the Agreement of Venice, 13 October 1921). It was held on 4 December 1921, with the result that 72.7% voted to remain in Hungary; Sopron was solemnly handed over to Hungary on 1 January 1922. Ever since, Sopron, with its patriotic citizens, has been called civitas fidelissima (the most faithful town). Sopron suffered much during World War II, it was bombed several times. The Soviet Army captured the city on April 1, 1945. On 19 August 1989, it was the site of the Pan-European Picnic, a protest on the border between Austria and Hungary, which was used by over 600 citizens of East Germany to escape to the West, which was followed by the mass flight of East German citizens that ultimately led to the fall of the Berlin Wall on November 9, 1989. – B: 1068, 1031, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Civitas Fidelissima; Sopron Division; Freedom Fight of 1848-1849; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Széchenyi, Count István; Pan-European Picnic.

Sopron Division – Is the name of the Forestry Faculty of the Mining and Forestry University of Sopron. After the crushed Revolution in 1956, the entire Faculty with 14 faculty members and 200 students emigrated to Canada in 1957 to join the University of British Columbia, Vancouver, where they formed the so-called Sopron Division.

The history of forestry education in Hungary dates back to 1809, when Forestry was added to the existing Academy of Mining in Selmecbánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia), an old mining town. In 1918, the birth of Czechoslovakia was announced, and the Czech troops invaded the northern part of Hungary where Selmecbánya was located. These events forced the entire School – professors and students – to move first to Budapest, and in March 1919 to Sopron, where it stayed after the 1920 Trianon Peace Dictate, which ceded the Upland of Hungary, including Selmecbánya to Czechoslovakia.

A large number of students of Sopron were involved in the events of the 1956 Revolution, organizing shipments of medicine, food, blood, and other supplies from Sopron to Budapest, which were brought to Sopron from Austria by the Red Cross. On 4

November 1956, Soviet tanks and troops invaded Budapest and all major cities. Attempts to resist the approaching Soviet tanks in Sopron were futile. About 450 students and 50 professors and their families left Sopron fleeing across the opened borders to Austria. Of these, about 250 were from the Forestry School. This was not a planned departure. It happened quickly as the events of November 1956 unfolded. In Austria, Kálmán (Colman) Roller, the dean of the Faculty of Forestry, did everything he could to keep the group together, until they return to Hungary. When it became clear that the Hungarian Forestry School could not stay in Austria permanently, Dean Roller sent letters to twenty countries explaining the situation. Among the replies Canada's response was the most promising. The Faculty of Forestry at the University of British Columbia (UBC) offered to “adopt” the Sopron Faculty of Forestry and guaranteed its maintenance for five years until the current students graduated. They had also guaranteed that the education would be continued in Hungarian, gradually changing to English courses by UBC professors. After several lengthy debates a large proportion of the students and faculty members decided to accept Canada's offer. While some returned to Sopron, and others stayed in Europe to continue their studies, 14 faculty members and 200 students left for Canada on 1 January 1957, to establish the new school, the Sopron Division of the Faculty of Forestry at UBC. After arrival, the group settled in Powell River for “conditioning”: studying English and learning the “Canadian ways of life”.

The first academic year began at UBC in September 1957, which was a difficult period for both students and faculty. Classes were held in old army huts. Their situation created a determination among Soproners and helped to develop a special family-like relationship between them. By May 1961 the last class had graduated from the Sopron Division to make the total number of graduates 141. As of December 1966, 80.1% of the graduates were resident in Canada, 15.6% in the United States and 4.3% in Europe. 32% obtained a postgraduate degree. Some of them even wrote publications and books; many of them worked in practical forestry, for companies, government or consulting firms.

The Sopron Forestry School exodus was a unique emigration, unparalleled in history. A significant portion of a university left a country, while another country adopted them, so that they could continue on with their education in their own language. 70% of them graduated, and most of the graduates had very successful careers. Dr. G.C. Andrew, deputy president of LTBC in 1957, wrote in the early 1980's: “I have always looked at their (Soproners) arrival in Canada, and particularly B.C., as one of the most profitable immigration dividends the country has had.”

Les Józsa, one of the alumni, has made the impressive wooden gate (Székelykapu) on the UBC campus to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the arrival of the Sopron-UBC forestry students in 1956-1957. The alumni of the Division keep close contact with each other, and they still have their yearly reunion. – B: 0883, 2119, 7456, T: 7456.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Magyar, Pál; Freedom Fight of 1956.

Sopron, Flower Song of – János (John) Guggelweit tried out his new pen by writing down a Hungarian love poetry's very first memento: two lines from 1490, on the inside cover of the city of Sopron's account book. “Flower, know this – I have to leave you and I have to put on a mourning dress for you” (Wijrag thudjad, theuled el kell mennem – Es the ýrethed kel gýazba ewelteznem). Jenő (Eugene) Házi discovered it in 1929. – B: 1230, 1136, 1020, T: 3240.

Sopron Glossary – A fragmentary list of Latin-Hungarian words originating between 1430 and 1440, containing 217 Hungarian words found in 1923 by Jenő (Eugene) Házi at the Archives of Sopron as the cover page of a property deed, dated to 1459. The Hungarian interpretation and the sequence of the Latin words show that it is closely related to the Glossary of Beszterce and Glossary of Schagli. All three may have originated from a similar Austrian-Bavarian Latin-German glossary. – B: 1098, 1230, T: 3240.

Sorg, Antal (Anthony) (Budapest, 1868 - Budapest, 1948) – Architect and contractor. He had a brick factory at Kőbánya, a suburb of Budapest, and a carpenter shop as well. Sorg constructed several buildings, churches and houses, and the buildings for the Polgár Beer Brewery (Polgári Sörgyár) at Kőbánya with 4,000 workers, within a year. He was a successful businessman. After World War II, his factories were nationalized, he was left penniless, but his former workers helped him. He was accused of war crimes and was kept in a concentration camp. After his release he died. His younger son, Jenő (Eugen), was the friend of István (Stephen) Horthy and a fellow sportsman. Jenő and his fiancée died in a tragic motorbike accident in Tahiti in 1943. Sorg's firstborn son, Anthony (Antal), (1895-1979) and family escaped to the West and settled in Buenos Aires, Argentina, where Antal Jr. established himself and soon founded and ran a successful enterprise: Acero Sima in Buenos Aires. He employed many Hungarian refugees, and helped the foundation of the Mindszentynum, dedicated in 1978. – B: 2071, T: 7103. → Horthy, István de Nagybánya.

Sörös, Béla (Nemespécseley, or Pécsely, 14 March 1877 - Losonc, now Lučenec, Slovakia, 2 October 1939) – Bishop of the Christian Reformed Church in Slovakia. He studied Theology in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), Pápa, Budapest and Edinburgh. For five years he was the Minister at the Transit Prison of Budapest. Thereafter, he became Parish Minister in Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia), where, in 1925, a Reformed Theological Seminary was opened, established by him. He became its Dean and was maintained by him largely at his own expense. The Seminary provided pastor-supply to Hungarian Reformed Congregations under Czechoslovak rule, forced to live in isolation from the mother country and mother Church by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate (1920). In 1938, he became Bishop of the Cis-Danubian Reformed Church District of Slovensko (now Slovakia). His main work was: History of the Hungarian Liturgy (A magyar liturgia története) (1904). – B: 0883, 1134, T: 7456. → Trianon Peace Treaty.

Soros, George (György) (Budapest, Hungary, 12 August, 1930 - ) – Businessman. He survived the Nazi occupation and left Communist Hungary in 1947 for England, where he graduated from the London School of Economics (LSE) in 1952. Here he became familiar with the work of the philosopher Karl Popper, who had a profound influence on his thinking and later on his professional and philanthropic activities. In 1956 Soros moved to the United States, where he began to accumulate a large fortune through an international investment fund he founded and managed. He is currently the President and Chairman of Soros Fund Management LLC, a private investment management firm that serves as principal advisor to the Quantum Group of Funds, a series of international investment vehicles. In July 2000, Soros merged his flagship Quantum Fund with the Quantum Emerging Growth Fund to form the Quantum Endowment Fund. The Quantum Fund is generally recognized as one of the most successful investment funds ever, returning an average 31 percent annually throughout its more than 30-year history.

Soros has been active as a philanthropist since 1979, when he began providing funds to help black students attend the University of Cape Town in apartheid South Africa. Today, he is chairman of the Open Society Institute and the founder of a network of philanthropic organizations that are active in more than 50 countries. Based primarily in Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union – but also in Africa, Latin America, Asia, and the United States – these foundations are dedicated to building and maintaining the infrastructure and institutions of an open society. In 1992, Soros founded the Central European University, with its primary campus in Budapest. He retired as investor but not as advisor.

He was the author of seven books: The Alchemy of Finance (1987); Opening the Soviet System (1990); Underwriting Democracy (1991); Soros on Soros: Staying Ahead of the Curve (1995); The Crisis of Global Capitalism: Open Society Endangered (1998); Open Society: Reforming Global Capitalism (2000), and George Soros on Globalization (2002). His articles and essays on politics, society, and economics regularly appear in major newspapers and magazines around the world. Soros has received honorary degrees from the New School for Social Research in New York City, the University of Oxford, the Budapest University of Economics, and Yale University. In 1995, the University of Bologna awarded Soros its highest honor, the Laurea Honoris Causa, in recognition of his efforts to promote open societies throughout the world. – B&T: 1052.

Sőtér, István (Stephen) (Szeged, 1 June 1913 - Budapest, 7 October 1988) – Writer, literary historian. From 1931 until 1935 he was a member of the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest in the French-German program. In 1935 and 1936 he studied on a scholarship at the École Normale Supérieure of Paris. Between 1939 and 1945 he worked as an economist, and his experiences from this time inspired his 1948 novel, The Fall into Sin (Bűnbeesés). In 1945 he taught at the Pál (Paul) Teleki Scientific Institute. Reflections on the post-war years culminated in the 1948 short novel, Bridge Collapse (Hídszakadás), and the essay collection Dark Chamber (Sötétkamra), published in the same year. Between 1948 and 1952, he taught at the University of Szeged. From 1952 until the end of the 1960s, he was Department Head, then President of the University of Budapest. From 1956 he was Deputy Minister of Education. From 1957 until his retirement in 1983 he was Director of the Institute for Literary Sciences at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Memories of the war years and the subsequent period are preserved in a series of novels in the 1970s and 1980s, The Lost Lamb (Az elveszett bárány) (1974); The Lion of Buda (Budai oroszlán) (1978), and The Lamb-Nursing Lion (Bárányt szoptató oroszlán) (1988). Between 1970 and 1973 he was President of the International Comparative Literature Association (Association Internationale de Littérature Comparée – AILC). Sőtér's literary and scientific career developed simultaneously. He translated works of Hemingway, Emily Brontë, Graham Greene and Thyde Monnier. He was a consciously cultivated thinker in his novels, in which he dealt primarily with the history of the modern intelligentsia, as well as in his scientific work on the historical and critical aspects of national and world literature. His other works include The French Spirit in Old Hungary (A francia szellem a régi Magyarországon) (1940); Mór Jókai (Jókai Mór) (1941); The Church Robber (A templomrabló) (1943); The Ghost (A kísértet) (1945); Crossing at Buda (Budai átkelés) (1946); József Eötvös (Eötvös József) (1951); Romance and Realism (Romantika és realizmus) (1956); The Garden of Eden (Édenkert) (1960); A Dream on History. Imre Madách and the Tragedy of Man (Álom a történelemről. Madách Imre és Az ember tragédiája) (1963); Clearing Mirrors: Hungarian Literature Between Two World Wars (Tisztuló tükrök: A magyar irodalom a két világháború között) (1966); Man and His Work (Az ember és műve) (1971); From Werther to Silvester (1976); and Studies On The 19th Century (Tanulmányok a XIX századról) (1979). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1957), and President of the Hungarian P.E.N. Club (1960). He was also President of the International Society of Comparative Literature (1970-1973). He received an honorary doctorate from Sorbonne University (1973). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize (1954), the French Ordre des Arts et des Lettres award (1974) and the Attila József Prize (1985). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667, 7456.

South America, the Discovery of – Two Hungarians played significant roles: (1) Ferenc (Francis) Xavér Éder, Hungarian missionary, who mapped Peru and Bolivia between 1749 and 1759, and prepared extensive ethnographic and geographic descriptions, and (2) Adolf Lendl, who walked across Patagonia, Argentina and Chile from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean in 1907 and 1908. He later produced a travel book of the area. – B: 1138, T: 7668. → Éder, Xavér Ferenc S.J.; Lendl, Adolf.

South America, Hungarian Missionaries of – The Jesuits dispatched János (John) Brentán of the University of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) to Peru in 1724. He mapped the regions of the River Amazon. The first Jesuits sent to Paraguay in 1726 included Ferenc (Francis) Limp who, apart from missionary work, studied the ethnography of the natives. The Szekler (Transylvanian Hungarian) László (Ladislav) Orosz arrived there almost at the same time. Orosz worked for 42 years, and established a University in Cordoba. In 1729 János (John) Bér was sent to Peru. He educated the Kichua tribe for 17 years, and he worked at the newly established Spanish University in Lima. In 1749 János (John) Zakariás worked for 24 years in Peru before returning to the city of Komárom, Hungary. Beginning in 1749, Ferenc (Francis) Xaver Éder worked among the Moxan tribes and mapped the tributaries of the River Amazon. Only two records of Chilean missionaries remained: Martin Hedry and Joseph Haller, who worked with the Araucan Indians and suffered martyrdom in 1760. The four, Dávid Fay, Ignác (Ignatius) Szentmártonyi, József (Joseph) Kayling and János (John) Szluha, sent to Brazil, suffered for years in the prison of the Portuguese colonial governor. After Emperor Joseph II of Austria-Hungary (1780-1790) abolished the Jesuit Order, there were no further records about their dispatch after 1790. – B: 1020, T: 7203. → Jesuits, Hungarian, in Latin America; Éder, Xavér Ferenc S.J.; Brentán, Károly S.J.

Southern Hungary (Southland, Délvidék) – Southern part of Historic Hungary. Now this area forms part of Serbia, Croatia and Romania, as a result of the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate forced upon Hungary on 4 June 1920. During the Middle Ages, the names Alvidék and Végvidék designated the counties of Southern Hungary; the voivodines (counties) of Bács, Keve, Pozsega, Szerém, Temes, Torontál and Verőce, i.e. those beyond the rivers Danube and Száva, as well as the voivodines of Macsó, Ozora, Kucsó, Só and Szörény. This part of Hungary – called Southern Hungary (Délvidék) – was ceded to the Serb, Croat and Slavonian Kingdom, which became Yugoslavia in 1921, together with a significant number of ethnic Hungarians – without a plebiscite. However, Yugoslavia disintegrated amidst civil war in 1991-1992. The area's major rivers are the Danube, Drava, Mura, Szava, Temes and Tisza. Larger towns include Apatin, Gombos, Nagybecskerek, Szabadka, Újvidék, Zenta and Zombor (now Apatin, Bogojevo, Zrenjanin, Subotica, Novi Sad, Senta and Sombor in Serbia-Montenegro).

The Avars – considered to be relatives of the Magyars – populated Southern Hungary until the Magyars absorbed them after their Carpathian Conquest. Prior to the Turkish occupation, the Serbs had already infiltrated the Carpathian Basin from the south in large numbers. In 1420, King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxemburg) gave permission for a group of them to settle in Hungary. After the fall of Constantinople in 1453, Serbs from the Balkans began to move more and more to the north and started to filter into Hungary in significant numbers. During the 150-year long Ottoman Turkish occupation (1526-1686), the dense population of the Hungarian settlements in the South decreased dramatically, almost to the point of extinction. The Serbs also arrived at the heels of the Turks as their allies, military suppliers and merchants. Between 1620 and 1687, the area received waves of refugees of two ethnic groups: the Slavic Sokaces and Bunjevaces, who, during the following years of common history, always remained in solidarity with their Hungarian neighbors. In 1690, under the leadership of Arzen Cernojevic, the Orthodox Patriarch of Ipek, 200,000 Serbs settled in Southern Hungary. After the Turkish era in 1691, approximately 200,000 more people settled in the Délvidék's devastated area. Empress and Queen Maria Theresa (1740-1780) gave permission for a temporary settlement to 20,000 Serbs, who in the end stayed there permanently. At the start of the 1848-1849 War of Independence, the Serb population participated alongside the Hungarians in the demonstrations but, after the Austrian intervention, armed hostilities broke out between the Serb insurgents and the Hungarian forces. Emperor Francis Joseph issued a new imperial constitution, in which Horvátország (now Croatia), Slavonia, the Maritimes (Adriatic district) and the Border Patrol Areas were united under the name of Croatia. He also created a Serbian voivodine out of Bácska, Temesköz, and other parts of the Border Patrol Areas. On 24 October 1849, based on imperial decree, General Haynau separated Croatia and the Mura Interfluve area from Hungary. Pan-Slavic ambition soon turned the Serbs against the Hungarians. It culminated in the assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand and caused the outbreak of World War I. (1914-1918). Between 8 and 12 November 1918, the Serbian General Misica occupied Southern Hungary. The Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate in 1920 ceded it to the Serbs. In the interwar years, Southern Hungary was part of Yugoslavia. On 12 December 1940, Hungary and Yugoslavia entered into an "Everlasting Friendship Agreement", which was not ratified by Yugoslavia. Although Yugoslavia agreed with the German-Italian-Japanese tri-power agreement on 25 March 1941, two days later a coup d'état in Belgrade removed the Yugoslav government in power, and annulled the agreement and the "Everlasting Friendship Agreement" with Hungary as well. Germany attacked Yugoslavia on 8 April 1941, causing Yugoslavia to break up into its component countries. This was the time when the architect of the Hungarian-Yugoslavian peace agreement, Count Pál Teleki, allegedly committed suicide on 3rd April 1941. Croatia gained her independence once more. After the breakup of Yugoslavia, Hungary regained some of her former territories: Bácska in the Danube-Tisza Interfluve, the "Baranya Triangle" and the Mura Interfluve (Muraköz) – with a considerable number of ethnic Hungarians. The Hungarian government ordered the deportation of 150,000 non-Hungarians who had settled in the area after 31 December 1918. In their place, Szeklers were brought in from Bukovina. At the conclusion of World War II, the Paris Peace Treaty in 1947 reattached Southern Hungary to the reconstituted Yugoslavia. Well before this, the entering partisan units carried out a systematic genocide of the local Hungarian population for several months, which resulted in the massacre of 40,000 ethnic Hungarians, including whole villages including women and children. – B: 1230, 1274, 1020, 1031, T: 7670.→Yugoslavia; Trianon Peace Treaty; Southern Hungary, Massacre of Hungarians; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Southern Hungary, Hungarians of Voivodina – Those who live in the region that was separated from Hungary by the Versailles-Trianon Peace Dictate in 1920 and given to Serbia, the later Yugoslavia, and again to Serbia. The territory included 580,000 ethnic Hungarians. Today, they still live within cohesive units in the Bácska, Bánság (Voivodina) and Szerémség regions. In late 1944 the Serbian partisans massacred 40-50,000 ethnic Hungarians. Thus began the reduction of the Hungarian population in the area. In 1946 the Yugoslav constitutional meeting decided on a land reform law and settlement arrangements, resulting in the settling of the Bácska area with about 50,000 Serbian families. Refugees, escapees of the horrors of World War II diminished the number of Hungarians, which dropped to 496,000 in 1948, though it reached 504,000 in 1961. During Marshal Tito's reign, there was a forced mixed-marriage program. The children from these families were obliged to attend Serbian schools and practice that language only. As these 'zebras' were not accepted by either the Hungarian or Serbian communities, the experiment was abandoned. The results of the 1989 census were considered invalid since they were only estimated and were based on the pronunciation of the family names – Serbian or Hungarian. During the 1991-1992 Yugoslavian civil war, the leaders of the army sent enlisted Hungarian ethnic soldiers to the most dangerous parts of the front. 20% of the war casualties and wounded were Hungarians, which is well over the proportion of the Hungarian population in Yugoslavia. Because of the Balkan War, many Hungarians fled to Hungary and to western countries. Consequently, the Hungarian population in this area diminished again. Today it is about 341,000. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7670.→Southern Hungary, Massacre of Hungarians; Atrocities against Hungarians; Trianon Peace Treaty.

Southern Hungary, Massacre of Hungarians – In World War II, during August 1944, as a result of Romania's changing sides, the invading Soviet forces marched into the defenseless Délvidék – the southern part of Historic Hungary. The accompanying Serbian partisan units immediately commenced the slaughter of the local German and Hungarian population. They massacred thousands of the civilians without any reason or trial, and in most cases through cruel and sadistic methods, making no exceptions for women or children. The mass graves, containing the mutilated corpses gave proof that an estimated 40-50,000 ethnic Hungarians fell victim of genocide. This mass killing was centrally directed and supported by the Serbian government. At first, they hunted down and executed the men who had served in the Hungarian army during the war. After compiling the names of the intended victims, areas were cordoned off, crowds of men and some women were herded together, and they were either killed on the spot or marched out of the settlement for torture and mutilation – according to the whim of the commanding officer – to their final extermination place. Twelve Catholic priests also fell victim, when it was found out they had prepared a list of the killed people who were carried away together with their brethren, or killed on the spot. In many instances, the Serbian partisans rounded up the refugees by trespassing into the Bácska area of Hungary and hauled them back for their execution. Many of them were impaled just like in the Middle Ages. For the following 45 years it was forbidden to mention this genocide: the mass graves were always under surveillance. Headboards or the placing of flowers was strictly forbidden. Several entirely Hungarian settlements were wiped out. In Southern Hungary there is no village or town that does not have its own horror story of these times. Data of the identified human losses compiled up to 1990 include in the settlements of Adorján 60, Bajmok 80, Bezdán 150, Csurog 4000, Horgos 500, Ludaspuszta 200, Magyararkanizsa 300, Palics 180, Péterréve 600, Szabadka 2000, Szenttamás 3000, Újvidék 3000, Zenta 1000, Zombor 5600, Zsablya 2000, and uncounted victims in numerous smaller villages. Of the 22,700 people resting in mass graves 18,000 have not yet been identified. – B: 1020, T: 7670.→Southern Hungary, Hungarians of Voivodina; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Soviet Republic in Hungary – The Hungarian Socialist (Soviet) Republic was the first example of proletarian dictatorship in Hungary. In the chaotic period following the loss of World War I, for a short time, Hungary had a democratic form of government. Then on 21 March 1919, Béla Kun and his associates – trained by the Bolsheviks in Moscow – declared Hungary a Soviet Republic. Under the leadership of Béla Kun, Commissar of Foreign Relations, the Revolutionary Governing Council and the Council of the People's Commissars were formed. The more notable commissars were: Vilmos (William) Böhm, Jenő (Eugene) Hamburger, Béla Kun, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kunfi, Jenő (Eugene) Landler, Mátyás (Matthias) Rákosi and Tibor Szamuely. The Revolutionary Governing Council recalled the officers of the disbanded Hungarian army and appointed Aurel Stromfeld, Chief of Staff of the Eastern Front. The hatred toward the alien Soviet form of government was further increased by its violation of human rights and caused the outbreak of counter-revolutionary movements across the country. To suppress these movements, on 19 April 1919, the regime imprisoned 489 well-known public figures. Nationwide outrage at such unprecedented illegal action forced their release at the end of May. On 25 April, Philip Marshal Brown, the American observer in Hungary, proposed the removal of the Revolutionary Governing Council. The counter-revolutionary movements, which began in May, were cruelly crushed by the “Lenin-boys”, as the special commandos of state security were called, and by the units of the Hungarian Red Army. On 29 June, Aurel Stromfeld resigned his position. On 10 July 1919, Béla Kun unsuccessfully asked for direct military intervention from the Soviet Red Army. On 29 July 1919, the Entente Powers demanded the removal of the Revolutionary Governing Council. The joint session of the Council and the Hungarian Communist Party complied with the demand, ending 133 days of dictatorial rule. Most of the people's commissars left for Austria on 1 August 1919. During their rule they destroyed Hungary's economic and social system. Many thousands of people from the middle classes, in the cities and in the country were victimized. – B: 1230, 1288, 1153, 1031, T: 7665.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Most of the names and events have their own entry.

Soviet Rule in Hungary (1944-1989) – Soviet rule in Hungary began with the end of World War II. Hungary ended the war as a defeated country on the side of the Axis Powers. This was followed by a Soviet occupation lasting for decades. From the fall of 1944 to the end of 1945, the Soviet troops had the run of the country, not sparing any region or any social class. The Soviet military leadership allowed the looting of properties in general. The official limits on this activity – if there were any – are very hard to establish, since in many cases the Soviet commanders could not or would not discipline their soldiers. The looting actually had two phases. In the initial phase, the frontline troops – who did not have the time and the opportunity to loot – had to move with the frontline. The activities of the second line troops, the occupation forces, had the most shocking and horrendous effect on the Hungarian population. In the farming regions, the first of these troops simply took all the horses and carts of the farmers, together with all the other livestock they could handle. In addition, clothing and household items, including watches, gold rings and other jewelry, were also taken at will. Russian soldiers were notorious for demanding watches on meeting a Hungarian citizen. Anyone protesting was shot on the spot. Thus the Hungarian smallholders – sometimes in the course of a day – lost all their draft animals and most of their livestock, in essence their lifesavings and means of existence. In the cities, the Soviet soldiers' armed robberies focused on art works, furniture, watches and other valuables. On top of the economic losses came the ever-present fear and danger of rape. The women hid, if they could, as long as they could, since the Soviet soldiers did not spare girls under 10 or old grandmothers. For the people of Hungary the tragic rape of women of all ages by the Soviet soldiers became a painful memory that determined their attitude toward the “liberating“ Soviets for decades to come. The robbing of churches was a frequent occurrence, often combined with the rape of women who sought shelter there. If the priest tried to protect them, he was killed, as happened in the tragic case of Vilmos (William) Apor, the Catholic Bishop of Győr. Armed Soviet patrols collected the civilian population: men and often women for what they called “malenki robot“ (a little work), who were then taken in cramped cattle wagons to forced labor in Soviet Gulags. Most of them never saw their families again. There have been references in recent research to Stalin's disappointment at the small number of prisoners taken in Hungary, especially after the desperately fought siege of Budapest, with heavy Russian casualties. The Soviet commanders might have attempted to bolster their reputation by adding civilian captives to the prisoners of war. The second stage of looting was organized by the Soviet authorities and was directed at government properties and industrial enterprises.

On 21 December 1944, in the Soviet controlled eastern town of Debrecen, the “Provisional Hungarian ‘National’ Assembly”, with the approval of the commander of the Soviet occupational forces, formed a so-called ‘Provisional National Government’, while, in the larger German controlled part of the country, a government – approved by the Germans, was still in power. The new provisional government declared war on Germany, though it never got into an actual state of war and, on 20 January 1945, signed the Moscow Armistice Agreement with the Soviet Union. The Provisional Government initiated a land reform, nationalizing the large land holdings of over 100 acres, but leaving the estates of the “kulaks“, the well-to-do farmers, intact up to 200 acres. On 1 January 1946, the mines were nationalized, and on 1 February 1946, the Hungarian Republic was declared. With a three- year plan, the clearing of war ruins and the rebuilding of the country began. At the end of 1946, the largest industrial plants were nationalized; and in 1947, the large banks, then the industrial enterprises employing more than 100 workers were also taken over by the state.

On the political front, a determined effort was started by the Communists to obtain total control of the government. Though the Communist Party lost the first parliamentary elections, with the support of the Soviet occupation forces, the Communists were able to begin transforming the country's economic and political life along the Soviet pattern. In 1946 they dissolved about 1500 independent social organizations and replaced them with a few state, i.e., Communist controlled organizations (Pioneers for Children, Young Communist League, etc). Though on 4 January 1948, the Soviet Union officially assured Hungary that only those troops will remain in the country that would be necessary to maintain a line of supply and communication with the Soviet troops in Austria, a large part of the Russian occupying forces remained in Hungary until the collapse of the Communist system decades later; they finally left on 16 June 1991.

In 1946, in the face of Soviet occupation, the political struggle for control of Hungary sharply escalated. Mátyás (Matthias) Rákosi returned with his comrades from the Soviet Union in 1945, and soon became the Secretary General of the Hungarian Communist Party, delivering an ultimatum to the Smallholders' Party – the strongest non-Communist party in the Government – that unless the Smallholders removed the right-wing elements from their party, the Communists would cease to cooperate in the Coalition Government. The President of the Smallholders, Ferenc (Francis) Nagy, was obliged to concede to this demand, and with this began the liquidation of the democratic forces in Hungary. The Smallholders' Party attempted to resist, but was forced to retreat on the warning of Puskin, the Soviet Ambassador to Hungary, who signaled that the Communists enjoyed the full backing of the Soviet Union, whose occupying forces were in actual control of Hungary.

Soon began the liquidation of the still existing independent social and civic organizations. The military intelligence service, led by Lieutenant-general Pálffy, discovered a “conspiracy “, thereby initiating the final crushing of the Smallholders' Party. At the beginning of 1949, the Soviet authorities arrested and deported into captivity in the Soviet Union Béla Kovács, the Secretary General of the Smallholders' Party, and in May they informed Ferenc (Francis) Nagy, the Prime Minister, who was then visiting Switzerland, that a similar fate would await him if he returned. Ferenc Nagy had no alternative but to resign and stay abroad. In 1947 the left-wing parties, the strongest being the Communist Party, and the largest the Social Democratic Party, they formed an alliance; even then they resorted to various chicaneries and outright forging of ballots – which they later admitted – although even in this way they only gained 22% of the votes. The rules of the coalition were such however that even this number allowed them to govern. The second party was the Democratic People's Party, despite losing about one million voters who had earlier been deprived of their right to vote because of their “reactionary views“. The Independence Party, which also did well in the elections, was simply stripped of its mandate and the functioning of the other still existing opposition parties was made impossible. The President of the Democratic People's Party and the right-wing leaders of the Social Democratic Party, Anna Kéthly and Károly (Charles) Peyer, were forced to flee abroad.

In 1948, the remainder of the Social Democratic Party united – under duress – with the Communists under the new name: the Hungarian Workers' Party (Magyar Dolgozók Pártja). By this time, the opposition parties existed only on paper. 1948, the year of the Communist takeover, was given the name: “the year of the turning point“ by the Communists. In the same year – on false charges – they arrested and imprisoned the highest office-holder of the Catholic Church in Hungary, Archbishop József (Joseph) Mindszenty. In the Soviet pattern, sabotage trials followed with death sentences, in which the state's new organ of terror: the State Security Authority (Államvédelmi Hatóság – ÁVH) played the key role. By 1948 Hungary had lost her economic and political independence and the Communists began the construction of a one-party state, based on the Soviet system.

The new political system was legalized by the 1949 Constitution based on the Soviet pattern. The actual control of the country was in the hands of a small group of Communist exiles, which had returned from the Soviet Union in 1945. They abolished both the principle and practice of the separation of powers: the legislative, judiciary and executive branches of the government, now all came under their sole control.. The National Parliament, 70% of which was composed of party members, became only a façade for the legitimacy of the regime. It was used only to rubber-stamp decisions already made by the party elite. The powers of the state became amalgamated with those of the party, i.e., the Hungarian Workers' Party, which was in fact the Communist Party under a new name, and the post of Prime Minister lost all of its significance. The most powerful person in the country was Mátyás Rákosi, the General Secretary of the Hungarian Workers' Party – the Communist Party – who was called the “best Hungarian student of Comrade Stalin“. A personality cult – similar to that surrounding Stalin – developed around him. He secured his position by means of the AVH (the State Security Authority – in other words the Secret Police), which was placed directly under his control.

In 1950, the Communists set up the Tanács, or (Soviet) Council system of public administration, destroying any vestiges of real self-government at the local levels as well. No guarantees of personal freedom remained and people could be and were arrested without a judicial warrant. The press lost all of its independence, and its only role was to serve as a propaganda machine for the Communist Government, praising its achievements in ever increasing crescendos and maintaining an atmosphere of fear and suspicion against the phantom of the “internal and external enemies of the “People’s Democracy“ – a common misnomer for the Soviet satellite states of Eastern Europe at that time. The press sang accolades about the ever-increasing standard of living, while in reality even the most basic food and other everyday items were in short supply. Politically reliable henchmen were appointed to lead all enterprises; most of them had no expertise in the area they were supposed to direct. The basic economic law that demand determines the market, was ignored and the production of goods was turned upside down. Factories were given quotas from the bureaucracy about what and how much they were to produce. On the Soviet pattern, 3- and 5-year plans were introduced, which predetermined the production of fixed quotas for all economic enterprises, and the fulfillment or over-fulfillment of the plan became the main goal regardless of quality or salability of the product. To increase the military potential of the Soviet Union – the Eastern Bloc countries, including Hungary -- were obliged to develop their heavy industries artificially at the expense of their light industry (producing consumer goods) and agriculture. After the nationalization of the large estates, a campaign was started aiming at the liquidation of agricultural smallholdings and their consequent collectivization in the mould of the Soviet kolkhoz system. First, the oppression of the well-to-do farmers (in Communist phraseology: the kulaks) began aggressively. By the use of various administrative and punitive measures, their land was confiscated, and they and their children were barred from all but the most menial of occupations. Those who showed even the slightest resistance were put in concentration camps. In 1952, a tax-in-kind system was introduced, which forced the small landholder to hand in to the state without compensation, or at best at nominal prices, a disproportionate share of his own produce and, if he did not actually produce enough to cover the quota, he was forced to buy it to avoid being charged with agricultural sabotage. The result was a 50% decline of per capita income in the countryside. By 1953, two thirds of the people working in agriculture had no grain for food or seed and Hungary – always an exporter of agricultural products – was forced to import grain and ration coupons had to be introduced for people working in agriculture.

Though Mátyás Rákosi was replaced as the unquestioned ruler of Hungary in 1953, and there were some half-hearted efforts by the Communists at both economic and political reforms, the pent-up hatred of the alien political, social and economic system forced on the Hungarian people by Soviet oppression through its proxies, the Hungarian Communists, a spontaneous popular uprising of elemental force shook the Communist regime on its foundations. The armed uprising of October 1956 turned on the hated State Security Authority (AVH), the only armed body that was willing to defend the regime, demanding a freer life and the withdrawal of the Soviet occupational forces. The AVH was disarmed and a large part of the Soviet occupying troops were reluctant to fight against the Hungarian people. In two weeks, peace was restored and normal life began in a temporarily free Hungary, until November 4, when the invasion of 200,000 Soviet troops with 3000 tanks and the use of air power crushed the Revolution.

Since the Hungarian Revolution inflicted a mortal wound on the ideology of the Soviet Union, János (John) Kádár, the Moscow-appointed General Secretary of the Communist Party and the new Prime Minister, was instructed to retaliate mercilessly against anyone who had participated in the Revolution however marginally. Summary judicial proceedings and deportations followed. An estimate puts the number of those deported to the Soviet Union in the immediate aftermath of the Revolution to 100,000. Death sentences were passed daily and Imre (Emeric) Nagy, the Prime Minister during the Revolution and Pál (Paul) Maléter, the Minister of Defense in the Revolutionary Government, shared a common fate on the gallows. With the crushing of the 1956 Revolution began the 32-year Kádár regime.

János Kádár's appointment was due to the treatment he had received from Mátyás Rákosi, the pre-1956 Communist Dictator of Hungary. Since, under Rákosi's rule, Kádár was imprisoned and tortured, the Soviet leaders thought that this would redeem him in the eyes of the Hungarian people. He was given instructions from Moscow that, after the severe reprisals ended, he should handle the Hungarians with a gloved fist, in order to keep them in the Soviet camp. Kádár accepted this role, which led to the so-called "Gulash Communism" and consequently to the heavy indebtedness of the country. During his long tenure, he succeeded in subverting Hungary's national culture. Patriotic feelings and interest in politics all but disappeared and people became selfish and materialistic. By allowing abortion on demand, he caused a drastic reduction in the national birth rate, resulting in an almost catastrophic long-term decrease in the nation's population. The policy that the Rákosi period introduced with terror, he continued with more humane methods, but the goals were the same: the amalgamation of Hungary into the Soviet Bloc and the destruction of Hungary's national self-identity.

In 1989, the Soviet backed Communist government was replaced by a freely elected government and Hungary nominally became a democratic republic. However, the Hungarians would not feel totally free until all the Soviet troops left the country. At the state funeral of Imre (Emerich) Nagy, the young politician Viktor Orbán in his eulogy openly demanded the Soviet troop's withdrawal from Hungary. The withdrawal of the Soviet troops began on 12 March 1990. This historic event occurred on 19 June 1991, when the last Soviet train left Hungary. During 15 months – on 1300 trains – 50,000 soldiers, with family members about 100,000 persons, 27,000 pieces of military equipment – among them atomic war heads – and half a million tons of materials left the country. The Soviet troops vacated 181 garrisons with 5732 buildings, leaving behind them destruction. Kerosene and other chemicals were poured into the ground by the tons at many sites. The pollution was spread by ground water, appearing in many wells in the countryside. In 1995 values, the cost of the damage was about 60 billion forints. Immediate environmental clean-up was only done in the most polluted areas – mostly near abandoned barracks and military airports – to prevent the spread of disease

On 30 June 1991, on the day of the official announcement of the complete withdrawal of the Soviet troops, a bell – made for this special occasion – was sounded in the town of Gödöllő. At this signal, all the church bells of the country began ringing and rang for an hour, celebrating the moment that Hungary regained her independence.

Although the Soviet troops left Hungary, it was difficult to get rid of the residue of 45 years of Soviet occupation. For some years, the country's economy was still significantly connected to that of the Soviet Union and, after its dissolution, to those of the succession states. Another problem was that a large section of the new middle class, which was brought up and who developed their career under the Communist system, still harbored Communist ideas. The last holdovers from the Communist past finally lost their political influence in the 2010 elections, when a moderate civic union achieved an overwhelming majority at the polls. – B&T: 7665→Rákosi, Mátyás; “Black List”; People’s Court; People’s Commissar; People’s Republic; Blue Slip Election; Nationalization; Schools, Struggle for Control of; Conspiracy Trials; Show Trials; Front, MAORT Affairs; Apor, Baron Vilmos; Arany, Bálint; Asztalos, János; Kiss Szaléz László OMF; Mindszenty, József; Mindszenty Trial; Grósz, József; Grósz Trial; Rajk, Trial; Deportations; ‘Kolhoz’ in Hungary; Kádár, János; Kádár period; Nagy, Imre (2); Freedom Fight of 1956; Boys of Budapest; Massacre of Parliament Square; Massacre in Mosonmagyaróvár; Salgótarján, Massacre of; Gulyás, Lajos; Exploitation of Hungary; ‘Workers’ Guard’; Red Terror in Hungary; Victims of the Bolshevik Dictatorship in Hungary; Bolshevization Attempt of Hungary’s Culture; Orbán, Viktor; Liberation Day in Hungary.

Space travelers, Hungarian – The first Hungarian astronaut was Bertalan (Bartholomew) Farkas. He was born in Gyulaháza 2 August 1949. He became a pilot and later an officer of the Hungarian Air Force. In 1977 he was selected with three others to become an astronaut. They studied in Hungary, and two of them, Farkas and Béla Magyarai, were sent to the Gagarin Space Training Center in the Soviet Union. Finally, Bertalan Farkas set off into space aboard Soyuz 36; his fellow cosmonaut was Valeri Kubasov. After completing their program, they returned to Earth on 3 June, landing in the vicinity of Dzheskasgan. Farkas received the Hero Medal and the Medal of Astronaut of the Hungarian Peoples’ Republic.

The second astronaut was a Hungarian-born American, Charles Simonyi (Károly Simonyi), a billionaire software architect. He was born in Budapest, on 10 September 1948. When he was still in high school, he worked part-time as a night watchman at a computer laboratory. His interest in computing grew and, from an engineer, he learned programming. He developed a compiler and demonstrated it to a trade delegation from Denmark. Simonyi was hired by a Danish firm in 1966 and, in 1968 he moved to the USA, to attend the University of California, Berkeley, where he earned his B.S. in Engineering in 1972. He worked for the Xerox Company. He obtained his Ph.D. from Stanford University in metaprogramming in 1977. After working for Bill Gates’ Microsoft Company, Simonyi co-founded the International Microsoft Company. He spends a good part of his wealth on philanthropy. On 7 April 2007, aboard Soyuz TMA-10m, he became the second Hungarian in space for 11 days. Between 26 March and 8 April 2009, aboard Soyuz TMA-14, he made a second trip to the International Space Station. – B: 1031, 1969, T: 7103.→Farkas, Bertalan; Simonyi, Charles.

Spáczay's Gradual – A handwritten Protestant ceremonial song finished in 1619. Compared to similar but earlier songs, it is surprising in size with its antiphonal melody taken from unknown sources. It has direct links to earlier Protestant handwritten ceremonial songs. – B: 0942, T: 3240.

Spányik, Éva (Szödliget on the Danube Bend, North of Budapest, 29 October 1928 - ) – Actress. In 1947 she completed the School of Dramatic Art of Kálmán (Coloman) Rózsahegyi. She began her career in theaters in country towns. She played in Debrecen and five seasons in Pécs; then, after Veszprém and Eger, she became a member of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) of Budapest. From 1967 to 1969 she played in Miskolc; in 1970 and 1971, in Veszprém; from 1972 to 1978 in Győr and later in Debrecen. From 1981 she has been a member of the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) of Veszprém. Her appearance and voice marks her out for tragic roles, but she has also scored successes in modern social dramas. For years, she was a popular actress. Her roles include Éva in I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája); Tatiana in Gorki's Enemies (Ellenségek); Joan in G.B. Shaw's Saint Joan (Szent Johanna); Lady Macbeth in Shakespeare's Macbeth; title role in F. Schiller's Maria Stuart; Lida in Kohut's Such a Great Love (Ilyen nagy szerelem); Jenny in Brecht–Weill's Beggar's Opera (Koldusopera), and Kata in L. Németh's Large Family (Nagy család). There are a number of feature films to her credit including Western Sector (Nyugati övezet), (1952); Golden Calf (Aranyborjú) (1964); Figtree Leaf (Fügefalevél) (1966); Piano in the Air (Zongora a levegőben) (1976), and The Devil Beats his Wife (Ördög veri a feleségét) (1977). She has received the Mari Jászai Prize (1961) and the Merited Artist title (1984). – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Rózsahegyi, Kálmán.

Species Determination – Professor Hideo Matsumoto, of the Osaka Institute, specializing in blood testing for species-type determination (of subspecies, race) (concluded in his findings: “...the special genotype of human blood, the Gm gene is the only factor that determines the species” The above mentioned Gm factor is a genetic marker in all human beings for immune globulin, the gamma marker. The ABO blood types are on red blood cells, while the Gm gene is in the blood serum. The blood serum, made up of 90% water, contains 7-8% of different protein types. One of the proteins is the immune globulin, the main component of the immune system of the human body. The Gm gene is one form of gamma-globulin (IgG), consequently also an antibody and a form of the immune globulin. More exactly defined, the subdivisions of IgG, like IgG1, IgG2, IgG3 (there are around 20 different forms of them) are called Gm allotypes and the combinations of the allotypes are specific to different human subspecies. For example, in the Mongoloid subspecies, the combination of Gm(ag), Gm(axg), Gm(afb1f3), and Gm(ab3st) allotypes is steady and unchangeable. By examining the Gm gene allotypes, the three main racial groups of the human species, Homo sapiens, the CAUCASIAN, the MONGOLOID, and the NEGROID type can be separated very precisely.”

Toward the end of the 20th century, Professor Matsumoto's Institute in Osaka performed blood type examinations on the Hungarian population by examining the samples collected from the twenty different districts of the country. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences collected blood serum samples and sent them to Japan for examination. All of the samples contained a greater portion of the Caucasoid Gm genes (up to 21%), with a little mix of the south Mongolian genes, and none of the north Mongoloid genes. Professor Matsumoto informed the Hungarian Academy of Sciences that the Hungarian blood samples did not show any of the Finnish-Lapp (Finno-Ugrian) characteristics suggesting that Hungarians did not originate from the Finno-Ugric group. – B: 1020, 1935, T: 7660.

Speech-imitating machine – (1) It was created by Farkas Kempelen (1734-1804) in 1790, after years of preliminary studies. He installed musical instruments, whose sounds most closely resembled the human voice, into an apparatus reminiscent of today's harmonium. Based on his experiments conducted with the machine, he published a book in 1791, entitled 'The Mechanism of the Human Language'. At the end of the 18th century, the Hungarian Farkas Kempelen was the first person to construct a well-functioning speech-imitating machine. The physiology of voice-generation, described in his book, had such a strong basis that it could be used as a starting point for all further research. (2) After Farkas Kempelen, József (Joseph) Fábér also constructed a speech-imitating machine. It was demonstrated in the Hotel Tiger (Tigris Szálló) in Budapest, in mid-May of 1841, in the presence of experts. The interior of the apparatus was made of rubber and imitated the voice-generating human organs, and it was operated by bellows and a keyboard. According to the experts, the apparatus was good, but it expressed the sound "R" too strongly, while the sound "E" could be barely heard and, due to the lack of a nose, its voice was too nasal. The apparatus reappeared at a medical conference in 1868, supported by some opinions that it could assist in the communication between dumb people. No further information about the inventor is available, and the fate of the machine is unknown. According to some sources, the inventor destroyed it before he passed away in 1869. – B: 1020, 1226, T: 7674. → Kempelen, Farkas.

Speech writing machine – An apparatus, which automatically converts human speech into typed text. Invented in 1935 by Tihamér Nemes, its patent was only registered in 1940 because the German patent office rejected it at first on grounds of principle: a machine does not think. All speech-writing machines of today are based on the principles established by Tihamér Nemes. – B: 1226, T: 7674. → Nemes, Tihamér.

Spillenberg, János (John) (Kassa, ? 1628-1679) – Painter in the Baroque style. He called himself Pictor Hungaricus, although he lived and worked mostly in Venice and Bavaria. Among his masterpieces are the Vertumnus and Pomona. – B: 0872, T: 7103.

Spinnery – Hemp-tow spinning in groups was well known in Hungary from the Middle Ages. It was a form of recreation for young and old alike. Spinning hemp was carried out after the fall harvest until the spring carnival time. Grown-up girls rented a room or a house in the village to establish the official spinning workshops. Different age groups, including young girls, women, and teen-agers organized their own spinning or distaff workshops. There were also mixed spinning workshops. These social gatherings included singing, story telling, and lighthearted play. The so-called 'dancing' workshops had the richest lifestyle. They were held in evenings and were regularly frequented by the young men. The art of spinning was discontinued in the early 1900s and the spinning workshops also closed. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Spiró, György (George) (Budapest, 4 April 1946 - ) – Writer, translator of literary works, theater director and drama critic. In 1970, he obtained his B.A., majoring in Slavic Studies at the University of Budapest. He became Editor of Corvina Publisher from 1971 to 1978, and a scientific contributor at the Hungarian Academy of Sciences from 1978 to 1981. He obtained his M.A. in Literature in 1981. He was employed at the University of Budapest between 1981 and 1986. Thereafter, he was a dramurgist at the Gergely Csiky Theater (Csiky Gergely Színház) of Kaposvár from 1986. From 1992 to 1995 he was Director of the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) of Szolnok. From 1991 he was professor at the Department of Esthetics, University of Budapest. From 1990 to 1997 he was Professor at the Academy of Dramatic and Cinematic Art, Budapest. He retired in 2008. His first stage works were historical-philosophical parables (Hannibal, and The Peace-Emperor – A békecsászár). His drama, entitled Chicken Head (Csirkefej), scored a great success both in Hungary and abroad. He wrote over 20 volumes of works, e.g.: Ambulatory (Kerengő) poems (1974); T-boy, short-story (1994); The Ice-bird (A jégmadár) novel (2001), and Captivity (Fogság), novel (2005). His studies include Miroslav Krleža (1981); the Impostor (Swindler) comedy (1983), and The Drama of East-Central Europe (A Közép-kelet-európai dráma) (1986). His works were translated into a number of languages. He has received a number of honors including the Attila József Prize (1982), the Imre Madách Prize (1994), the Laurel wreath of the Republic of Hungary (2002), The Officer Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2005), the Kossuth Prize (2006), the Visegád Prize (2009), and the Angelus Prize (2010). – B: 1031, 1257, 1445, T: 7456.

Spontoon (fokos) – A short pike-like hand weapon, similar to an axe, made out of brass or iron, equally useful for attack or defense. It is lightweight and its blade is longer than that of an ordinary hand axe. The long round shaft is decorated with carvings and copper or lead inlays. Up to the 18th century it was the preferred weapon of the Kuruc and Hajdú soldiers. Even in 1809, the insurgent forces of the Hungarian nobility carried a fokos next to the saber, as part of their weaponry. Later, it was used only as a weapon of self-defense. The “balta”, “topora”, “csákány” and “csákány-balta” were all weapons characteristic of certain tribes. From the 19th century, only young shepherds, herdsmen and village lads carried them. Instead of a using walking stick they showed off the spontoon as a symbol of pride when visiting a home or walking in the market place. The decorated “fokos” until recently was the best man’s symbol at weddings. – B: 0942, 1134, 1153, T: 3233.→Axe.

Sportsmen of the Nation – In 2004, the Hungarian Parliament created a list of 12 outstanding athletes naming them the Sportsmen of the Nation (A nemzet sportolói), meaning both men and women. Its number is always 12, and they are selected from among the leading athletes who are over 60 and still play important roles in Hungarian sport. They are entitled to bear the title of Sportsmen or Women of the Nation and they receive 500 000 Forint life-annuity per month. At the present time, they are: Flórián Albert soccer-player, András (Andrew) Balczó pentathlonist, Imre (Emeric) Földi weight-lifter, Dezső (Desider) Gyarmati water-polo player, László Ladislás Hammerl marksman, Mária Ivánkai paraplegic table-tennis player, Ágnes Keleti gymnast, Győző (Victor) Kulcsár fencer, Imre (Emeric) Polyák wrestler, Lajos (Louis) Portish chess player, Éva Székely swimmer and Gyula (Julius) Zsivóczy hammer-thrower. – B: 1656, T: 7103.→Most of the persons have their own entry.

Springs, Veneration of (Spring Cult) – Still present in the beliefs of numerous peoples who believe that the favorite abode of the god or spirit of the stream or river is at the well. There are numerous references in Hungarian chronicles to such veneration by early Hungarians. The Synod of Szabolcs (1092 AD) was forced to issue edicts against the spring and water veneration. Traditions vividly remind us of this ancient custom, telling of the miraculous origins of, and attributing special powers to certain fountainheads. According to legend, King St László (1077-1095) caused water to spring from a rock near Torda, in Transylvania, and at Jászó in Nyitra County, where water gushed from his horse's hoof imprint. People tell of similar legends about St István and other saints. Christianity gradually metamorphosed this pagan custom. – B: 1078, T: 7614.→László I, King.

Sréter, Ferenc (Francis) (Budapest, 4 December 1894 - Budapest, 6 July 1988) – Lutheran, then Free Church pastor. He graduated at Balassagyarmat in 1912. He was distinguished as a valiant soldier during World War I, and was promoted to the rank of captain. Subsequently, he gave away his land and became a pastor. He studied Theology in Sopron between 1928 and 1932; in Tübingen from 1931 to 1932, and in Göttingen in 1932. He was ordained in the same year. From 1943 he was assistant pastor in Szügy, then in Gödöllő, and later became church district missionary minister. In 1946, the Hungarian Evangelical Alliance elected him as its Managing Vice President. Between 1942 and 1953, he was pastor in Budapest-Budavár. During 1953 and 1954, he was an assistant pastor. In 1954, he resigned his position as pastor, and left the Lutheran Church. Sréter founded the Evangelical Brothers' Congregation, which did not receive state recognition or an operating permit. Since 1972, the group has existed under the protection of the Methodist Church, although maintaining its independence nonetheless. In the 1960s, he worked as an external worker for a manufacturer co-operative. He retired in 1970. – B: 0883, T: 7667.→Evangelical Lutheran Church.

Standard of Ur – A mosaic-inlaid clay-tablet box prepared by the Sumerians, also known as the “Battle Standard of Ur”, or the “Royal Standard of Ur”. It was unearthed during excavations by Sir Leonard Woolley in Iraq in 1927-28, in the area of the ancient city of Ur, located south of Baghdad, what had been the Royal Cemetery. It is believed to date to between 2600–2400 BC. It is a small trapezoidal box, whose two sides and end panels are covered with figurative and geometric mosaics made of pieces of shell, lapis lazuli, and red limestone set into bitumen. The two sides, dubbed the “War Side” and the “Peace Side”, depict life in early Mesopotamia. The Standard shows the two most important roles of an early Mesopotamian ruler: the warrior, and the leader of the people.

The English archaeologist, John E. Dayton in his book Minerals, Metals, Glazing and Man (London, 1978) deals, among other things, with the chemical analyses of ancient finds and mineral deposits. According to his working hypothesis, the Standard of Ur illustrates the military entry of that people, moving from Europe to the Near East and finally into the Indus River valley. Dayton contends that this migration must have taken place between 2000 and 1600 B.C. with the use of metallic objects, weapons, and cavalry with four-wheel carts, already known in the Carpathian Basin at that time. Dayton does not accept the chronology currently used in ancient history and is trying to make appropriate adjustments. – B: 0820, T: 7456.→Sabirs; Sumerians.

Stark, Tamás (Thomas) (Budapest, 2 March 1959 - ) – Historian. He finished his university studies in 1983 at the Department of International Relations of the University of Economics in Budapest. In 1995-1996 he was on a scholarship of the Research Institute of the Holocaust Memorial Museum of Washington, USA. Since 1983 he has been working in the Institute of History of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, since 2000 as principal scientific contributor. He is Candidate in historical studies, also principal contributor of the Terror House Museum, Budapest. His works include The Human Losses of Hungary in World War II (Magyarország második világháborús embervesztése) (1989); Hungarian Jews during the Holocaust and after the Second World War, 1939-1949 (Statistical Review, 2000); Hungarian Prisoners of War in the Soviet Union (Magyar foglyok a Szovietunióban) (2006), and People on the Move. Forced Population Movements in Europe in the Second World War and its Aftermath, with co-authors (2008). – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Star legends – Folk-poetry associated with the stars explained the origins of the naming of stars by interpreting the position of each star within a cluster of stars respectively. For example: the Great Bear is called Göncölszekér meaning “Göncöl’s coach”; the Pleiades are called Fiastyúk meaning “Brooding hen” and Orion is called ‘kaszácsillag’, meaning “Skythe-star”. A few constellations that survived in folklore thus far have not been identified, e.g. two orphan stars, “Our Lord Christ’s Table” and the “Wreath Star”. – B: 1134, T: 7659.

Star’s temperature, Measurement of – Baron Béla Harkányi (1869-1932) was the first to establish that the temperatures of the fixed stars can be determined from their color spectrum. Lajos (Louis) Terkán developed and published his improved method of measurement of the stars' temperature in 1904. – B: 1230, T: 7674. → Astronomy in Hungary; Terkán, Lajos.

State Coat-of-Arms – The 1202 royal seal of King Imre (Emeric, 1196-1204) was, until recently, the oldest known document of Hungary’s state coat-of-arms. It shows nine rampant lions among the four buntings on the shield. Later, in 1222, the Golden Bull of King András II (Andrew) (1205-1235), was divided into seven sections and on the divisions is a pair of face-to-face rampant lions, and in between them adjacent heart-shaped designs. On the double seal of 1231, consisting of seven buntings, once more the rampant lions are found on the field of the shield, totaling eleven. Until the age of the Anjou kings (1307-1382), the lions and divisions are no longer part of the seal. After the Anjou period, the seven dividers stay, alternating four times in white and red color. The other main part of the state crest is the double cross, or in the language of heraldry, Hungarian Cross. As a symbol of power, it is of very old origin, already found on the seal of King Béla IV (1235-1270) in 1243. The triple hills occur on the seal of King András III’s widow and the crown at the base of the double cross first appears on the seal of King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437) in 1389. After the House of Árpád died out (1301), the individual rulers combined the Hungarian state crest with their own family crests.

The Small and Middle Crest of Hungary was established by Royal Decree on 9 February 1874. The small crest: the right side of the slashed heraldic crest consists of four red and three silver bands, thus seven times divided. On the left side, on a red base, triple hills of green color show the double white Hungarian Cross emerging from the gold crown. The main part is the heraldic right side, which displays the ancient symbols: the number four and the red color for the sun, the number three and the silver color for the moon. The sum of the two numbers symbolizes the ancient sacred number of seven, which separately or combined is a symbol of the ancient world.

The Middle Crest: on top of the heraldically right side base with five divisions: on a blue base three crowned golden lion heads (Dalmatia). In the center of the right side: on a blue shield, on a blue silver-edged wavy bunting, is a running stone marten, above it a six-pointed gold star (Slavonia). On the top left side: there are twenty-five square shaped fields, of alternating silver and red (Croatia). In the center of the left side: divided by a horizontal red bunting, there is a shield; in the upper blue field there is a black eagle, flanked by the golden sun on the right and the third quarter waxing moon on the left. Under the red bunting, seven red bastion towers (Transylvania) stand in a golden field. In the shape of a shield coming in from below: on a red base, on a flat rock surrounded by water, stands a double-headed black eagle, above its head a blue-lined princely crown is floating, and its left foot is placed on a overturned pitcher discharging water (Fiume, now Rijeka in Croatia, entered into the Hungarian middle coat of arms then). The center shield, containing the small coat-of-arms partially covers those below it. The Holy Crown of Hungary is placed above both coats-of-arms.

In 1896, and after 1916, the established official state coat-of-arms -- the middle coat-of-arms with the angels -- was exclusively used on the white-based flag of the Head of State and the Ministry of External Affairs; and the red, white and green flags of embassies and consulates. The use of the small coat-of-arms, enclosed with the laurel-leaf wreath, was reserved for state offices (ministries, armed forces, gendarmes, police, post office, etc.).

After World War I, under Mihály (Michael) Károlyi (1918-1919), the small crest without the crown was used. During the time of the Council (Soviet) Republic's 133 days of 1919, the red star was added to the sickle and hammer.

The Treaty of Trianon did not regulate the usage of the coat-of-arms. The 1921 section XXXVIII of the Treaty indicated that the Hungarian State did not relinquish the usage of the above mentioned coats-of-arms. Following World War II, the changed political order in Hungary also affected the state coat-of-arms; it changed several times.

In the time of Zoltán Tildy, President of the Republic, the small coat-of-arms was in usage without the crown. After the proclamation of the Hungarian People's Republic, 20 August 1949, the unified, Soviet-style, wheat sheaf and hammer coat-of-arms beneath the five-pointed red star were legislated. During the time of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution, the small stylized coat-of-arms without the crown came into usage. Description of the coat-of-arms of the Hungarian People's Republic from 1 May 1957 was supported on both sides by a wheat-sheaf wreath, standing in a light-blue colored field. The wheat sheaf is braided over from the left with red, white and green ribbons, and from the right with a red ribbon. Above the shield is a centrally positioned five-pointed red star radiating gold rays onto the field.

On 3 July 1990, the Parliament of the Republic of Hungary issued a law, proclaiming that the small coat-of-arms of 9 February 1874 is, once again, the official State Coat-of-Arms; embracing its traditions and the desire to restore the order that becomes Hungary's independent statehood of historical order. – B: 0942, 1078, 1020, T: 7671.

State Office for Church Affairs (Állami Egyházügyi Hivatal – ÁEH) (1 January 1950 - 30 June 1989) – By the end of 1948, the Communist-led leftwing Coalition Government dominated Hungary's political life. One of their aims was to liquidate, or at least control all such organizations that were regarded by them as "enemy forces" or "clerical reaction", which might offer hiding places for anti-system organizations. On a Communist initiative, on 15 May, the Parliament, by its Act 1951.I., decided to set up the State Office for Church Affairs. Its aims were: "To deal with matters of State-Church relations". In reality, it was the arm of the Communist state for executing its church-policy and controlling church activities. The national system of the Office was well organized: at the Head Office there were Departments to deal with affairs of Roman Catholic, Protestant and other Churches, or religious communities, and there were full-time secretaries on a county level, offices on a district level, and every settlement, town and village had a clerk in the local council administration, who was charged, sometimes partly, with the surveillance of church activities and church personnel. The Head Office kept contact with identical offices in the other socialist states. Clerks of the offices at all levels had to prepare quarterly and annual reports on church activities within their jurisdiction. In case of urgency, they could call the Head Office through a special K-telephone-line. In the beginning, the Office was a department of the Ministry of Education, and then it had its own headquarters. From 1968, its president assumed the title of Undersecretary. Its presidents were: János (John) Horváth (1951), Károly (Charles) Olt (1959), József (Joseph) Prantner (1961) and Imre (Emeric) Miklós (1971). In the process of political change, on 30 June 1989 the State Office for Church Affairs was dissolved without a successor by Act 14, 1989. In its place, the National Council of Religious Affairs (Országos Vallásügyi Tanács) was organized on 20 October 1989. From 2010 there is a Religious, Ethnic State Secretariat within the Public Administration and Justice Ministry. In 2011 the Parliament adopted a new Church Law. – B: 0613, 0910, 0945, T: 7103. → Opus Pacis.

State Property Deported to the West – At the end of World War II, considerable amounts of Hungarian state property were evacuated to the West, mainly to Bavaria, Germany, to escape from the encroaching Soviet armies. According to the records of the Hungarian Ministry of Defense, numerous military industrial plants, 300 locomotives, 10,000 railway cars, 400 automobiles, 4756 horses from the state-owned breeding stables, large quantities of seed and grain, enough food material to supply one million Hungarians for a year, and 10,000 additional items ended up in Germany. Moreover, the gold and foreign currency reserves of the Hungarian National Bank, and valuable art works and objects of historical importance from the country's museums were also deported. Included were the Hungarian Holy Crown and the Holy Right Hand of St István, both of which had and continue to have both national and religious significance. At the end of the war, most of this property came under the control of the American forces. Colonel Kisbarnaki Ferenc (Francis) Farkas, leader of the Hungarian Freedom Movement, presented a memorandum to the American High Command. He pointed out the historical and national significance of the Holy Crown and the Holy Right Hand for Hungary, and asked the Americans to take them under their control and preserve them until they could be returned to the constitutional government of a free Hungary. On May 2, 1945, the Holy Crown and other jewels were handed over by a Hungarian Army General to a U.S. Army Colonel near Egglesberg, Austria. The Crown had been packed in a large black satchel. It was initially sheltered in Wiesbaden, in the American Zone, but was later transferred to the United States Gold Reserve at Ft. Knox, Kentucky. It was not considered as spoils of war; rather, the U.S. Government stored it in hopes of returning it to the Hungarian people one day. (It was returned to Hungary in 1978).

He also asked them to secure the gold reserves of the Hungarian National Bank and prevent their falling into unauthorized hands. In addition, he requested that the rest of the deported Hungarian state property remain under Hungarian control and not be considered war booty. Finally, he asked the Americans to exempt from imprisonment the surrendered Hungarian soldiers who did not fight against the West. His requests were only partially fulfilled and many Hungarians, who fled to the West from the Soviet Army, became prisoners of war for some period. However, either directly or indirectly, a large part of the evacuated Hungarian property ended up in Soviet hands, resulting in additional war losses for Hungary. – B: 1020, T: 7665.→Holy Crown of Hungary, return of the.

State Security Police (Államvédelmi Hatóság – ÁVH; literally: State Defense Authority) – Political police in Hungary between 1948 and 1956. Originally known as the State Security Department (Államvédelmi Osztály – ÁVO), it was organized in 1945 as a political police force. It was the Communist regime's repressive organization. On 10 September 1948 the Ministry of the Interior extended its duty with the task of border-patrolling, river and air-space travel, passport-issuing, inspection of foreigners, banning and expelling, interning in camps and surveillance. Under the name of State Defense Authority, it was directly administered by the Ministry of Interior. Its dreaded headquarters were at No 60 Andrassy Avenue, Budapest.

In theory, the Cabinet was to control the State Defense Authority, but in reality it belonged to the Political Committee of the Hungarian Workers' Party (Magyar Dolgozók Pártja – MDP); indeed, its real master was Mátyás (Matthias) Rákosi, the Communist strong man. The ÁVH had its own military barracks, factories, ran internment camps and initiated conceptual (mock) trials, such as that against Cardinal József (Joseph) Mindszenty and László (Ladislav) Rajk. From 1945 they operated 199 jails, prisons and internment camps. The number of citizens imprisoned in the 1950's exceeded 80,000 and, once the ÁVH controlled the country's border patrol, close to 100,000 people were incarcerated. There were thousands detained in prisons without being duly charged or sentenced by the courts. The prisons contained medieval torture chambers and the interrogators were not restricted by any constraining laws. It was the "Fist of the Party", which intended to eliminate all opposition. Their most notorious leader was Lieutenant General Gábor Péter, who became the Head of the State Security Police between 1948 and 1952. The modus operandi of the ÁVH caused concerns for the leaders of the Communist Party. In the fall of 1952, they sacrificed the leader of the ÁVH, Gábor (Gabriel) Péter. He was arrested in Rákosi's villa, tried by Military Tribune, and sentenced to life on 13 March 1954 for crimes committed against the State and the People. Later, his sentence was commuted to 14 years in prison. The first step in opposition to the ÁVH occurred on 6 October 1956 in Budapest, at the cemetery on Kerepesi Street, at the reburial of László Rajk and his associates, who were illegally executed in 1949. More than ten thousand people demonstrated against the regime and the ÁVH. During the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, ÁVH men conducted large massacres in Miskolc, Mosonmagyaróvár and in Budapest during the demonstrations in front of the Parliament and other places. Although the ÁVH was officially dissolved in 28 October 1956 by Prime Minister Imre (Emeric) Nagy, following the suppression of the Freedom Fight its members continued to inflict mass retaliation upon freedom fighters and civilian demonstrators. After 1989, its role and its structure were officially condemned, but there was no call for its accountability. During the consolidation of the Kádár regime, the functions of the ÁVH were taken over by the Departments of the Ministry of Interior. On 24 February 2002, the “House of Terror” was opened in the very same building which was the headquarters of both the “Arrow-Cross”, 1944-1945, and the Communist security forces, 1945-1989, which committed terrible crimes against their victims. Its permanent exhibition includes means of tortures in torture chambers and other memorabilia. It is located at the infamous “Andrássy út 60”, Budapest. – B: 1230, 1031, 1840, T: 7668, 7103.→Péter, Gábor; Rákosi, Mátyás; Mindszenty, József; Rajk László; Deportations.

Staub Móric (Maurice) (Pozsony, now Bratislava, Slovakia, 18 September 1842 - Budapest, 14 April 1914) – Paleo-botanist and teacher. He began his career as a teacher in 1858; then he studied at the University of Budapest and, during 1869 and 1870, at the Universities of Berlin and Bonn; in 1868 he obtained his Degree in Education, majoring in Natural Sciences. From 1867 he taught in the special High School of Buda, and from 1874 in the State High School until his death. His main field of research was paleo-botany. First, he studied the flora in the surroundings of Fiume (now Rijeka, Croatia) followed by studies in phyto-phenology during the years 1871 to 1900. He became the founder of paleo-phytology in Hungary and described the paleo-botanical details of many fossil sites in the country. He was one of those, who called for the establishment of a museum of school equipment, and became its director from 1899. He was a founding member of the Hungarian Geological Society, its secretary from 1886 to 1899, and editor of its journal, the Geological Bulletin (Földtani Közlöny). He also participated in the research on Lake Balaton and in the launching of the metropolitan tourist movement. He was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1898). His works, which encompassed the whole of the Carpathian Basin, included Phytophaenological studies (Phytophaenológiai tanulmányok) (1975-1976); The Aquitanian Flora of the Fruska Gora (A Fruska Gora aquitaniai flórája) (1881); The Aquitanian Flora of the Zsil Valley (A Zsil-völgy aquitaniai flórája) (1884-1887), and The Flora of the Calcareous Tuff Deposit of Gánóc (A gánóczi mésztufa lerakódás flórája) (1893). – B: 0883, 1315, T: 7456.

Staud, Géza (Mocsonok, now Močenok, Slovakia, in former County Nyitra, 17 April 1906 - Budapest, 4 April 1988) – Theater historian. He completed his tertiary studies at the Universities of Budapest and Paris and also obtained a diploma for stage-managing in Sándor (Alexander) Hevesi's course. He edited the periodical, The Stage (A Színpad) and, between 1941 and 1944, he was the drama critic of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. From 1945 to 1948 he edited the weekly paper, Theater (Színház) and, from 1946 to 1950 he taught literature and theatrical law at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. From 1954 until his retirement, he was an associate of the National Theater - Historical Museum and the Institute of Theatrical Art, Budapest, as well as Editor of Gondolat Publishers. Besides his extensive literary activity, he published many theater critiques and topical theatrical articles in journals and daily papers. Staud is the author of one mildly autobiographical novel, From Pest to Buda (Pestről Budára). He published 70 works (30 of which he co-authored). He prepared for the press the theatrical studies of András (Andrew) Fáy, the letters of Mrs. Déry, the diary of László (Ladislav) Kelemen, letter-collection of Gizi Bajor, and the drama critiques of Sándor (Alexander) Hevesi. He was Editor-in-Chief of the Little Encyclopedia of Theater (Színházi Kislexikon) (1969). Stefánia, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 13 December 1885 - Santiago de Chile, 4 July 1959) – Concert pianist and composer. In Budapest, he was a student of István (Stephen) Tomka, in Berlin of Busoni, then of Ernő (Ernest) Dohnányi. At the age of 17 he won the Mendelssohn Prize; from that time on he traveled on concert tours in Europe and America. In 1914 he settled in Spain as a court pianist. Between 1926 and 1936 he taught at the Academy of Music in Budapest; at the same time, he was Advisor for the Radio and Director of the Liszt Ferenc Society. From 1929 he was one of the editors of the journal Music (Muzsika). From 1947 he lived in Chile as the Head of the Music Faculty of Universidad Católica. Between 1950 and 1957 he worked, through the Universidad de Chile, as a permanent member of the Judging Board and Chairman of the competitions of the country's composers. In 1956 he won first prize with his work: Hungarian Scenes from the Puszta. His main works are: Elga Symphony (Elgaszimfonia); Preludes (Preludiumok) (1934), and Hungarian Pictures (1935). – B: 0883, T: 7684.→Dohnányi, Ernő.

Stein, Aurél (Aurelius) (Sir Marc Aurel Stein) (Pest, 26 November 1862 - Kabul, Afghanistan, 28 October 1943) – Orientalist, who became famous as a British subject. He was born into a Hungarian Jewish family. His parents had him and his brother, Ernst Eduard, baptised as Lutheran. He completed high school in Budapest and his tertiary studies were at various universities of Germany. Obtained his Ph.D. in Arts at age 21, then he continued further studies in England: in London, Oxford and Cambridge. He became a British citizen. In 1886 he traveled first to India, where he worked for the British Administration, later giving lectures at several universities of India. Between 1900 and 1931 he conducted four Inner-Asian expeditions of the highest scientific and cultural value. A significant portion of the manuscripts and archeological articles that he collected were acquired by the British Museum. In his first expedition (1900-1901) Stein carried out not only mapping work (involving triangulation), but also explored the ruined cities along the southern border of the Takla Makan Desert, inspired by the famous Swedish orientalist, Hedin Sven. In his second expedition (1906-1908) he investigated the Gobi Desert, as well as the area north of the Takla Makan Desert (the Tarim Basin). It was here (near the town of Tsien-fotung) that he discovered the large manuscript collection, a library of 15,000 manuscripts, including the Diamond Sutra, considered to be the first printed book, dated in 868 AD, in the Cave Temple of the Thousand Buddhas of Tun-Huang, closed for centuries and first opened in 1900. In his third expedition (1913-1916) he extended his explorations to the eastern part of Iran. His fourth expedition, in 1930, did not bring him much success because of the changed political situation, even on Chinese territories. Stein was an external member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He wrote numerous studies and reports, including Sand-buried Ruins of Khotan. Personal Narrative of a Journey of Archaeological and Geographical Explorations in Chinese Turkestan (1904); Ruins of the Cathay Desert, vols. i, ii (1912); The Indo-Iranian Borderlands: their Prehistory in the Light of Geography and of Recent Explorations (1931); Ancient Khotan: Detailed Report of Archaeological Explorations in Chinese Turkestan vols. i,ii (1907); Central Asian Antiquities (1933) and The Thousand Buddhas: Ancient Buddhist Paintings from the Cave-temples of Tung-huang on the Western Frontier of China in: “Archaeological Notes from the Hindukush Region” (Royal Asiatic Society, 1944). He was knighted in 1912. – B: 0883, 1031, 1789, T: 7456.

Steinbach, József (Joseph) (Veszprém, 1964 - ) – Bishop of the Reformed Church. He completed his high school studies at Balatonfüred. In 1991 he obtained his ministerial qualification from the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest. In 1999 he obtained a schoolteacher’s certificate in religion, and in 2011 he obtained a Degree in the Anthropology-Ethics-Sociology branch of the Pannon University of Veszprém. Currently he is taking part in the doctoral program of the Theological Branch of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University of Budapest. Since 1990, he has been serving the Reformed Congregation of Balatonalmádi-Balatonfüzfő. Since 1999 he has been teaching Homiletics at the Reformed Theological Academy of Pápa. By giving lectures, he participates in the work of the Practical Theological Section of the Doctors’ College (Doktorok Kollégiuma). His professional publications mainly deal with preaching. In addition, he filled several diocesan positions. In 2009, the Transdanubian Reformed Diocese (Dunántúli Református Egyházkerület) elected him bishop. – B: 1031, T: 7103, 7456.

Steindl, Imre (Emeric) (Pest, 29 October 1839 - Budapest, 31 August 1902) – Architect. Originally he was a stone dresser. He completed his studies at the Polytechnic of Buda in 1859 and furthered his studies at the School of Arts of Vienna. From 1869 he was a professor at the Polytechnic, in charge of the Department of History of Architecture and Historic Monuments. He was the planner of a number of buildings in Budapest. Most famous is the neo-Gothic Parliament Building (Országház) (1884-1904), which uniquely combines English Gothic and partly Baroque elements, rendering it outstanding among Parliament Buildings of the times. Other famous buildings are the New Town Hall Budapest (A Budapesti Új Városháza) (1870-1875), the Church of Rózsák Plaza (Rózsák terei Szent Erzsébet templom, Budapest) (1895-1901), in the Elizabeth Town district of Budapest, and some buildings of the Polytechnic (6-8 Museum Ring Boulevard). Apart from planning, Steindl was also engaged in restoration work: significant was the restoration of the Castle of Vajdahunyad (1870-1877) in southern Transylvania (County Hunyad, today Hunedoara, Romania), the Franciscan Church of Szeged (1876), and the Cathedral of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) (1877). The building complex of the Royal Hungarian Veterinary College (Állatorvos-tudományi Kar épületei) was started in 1880, decorated with ceramics and window-glass from Zsolna, surrounded by gardens, which have statues of distinguished teachers of veterinary science. He became a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects (1895), and a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1898). With Frigyes (Frederick) Schulek and Miklós (Nicholas) Ybl, Steindl was one of the best representatives of historical Hungarian architecture. – B: 1031, 1123, 1144, 1834, T: 7456, 7663. → Schulek, Frigyes; Ybl, Miklós;

Steiner, Lajos (Louis) (Vác, 15 June 1871 - Budatétény, 2 April 1944) – Geophysicist. In 1892 he earned a Degree in Education from the University of Budapest., majoring in Mathematics and Physics. In 1893 he received a Doctorate; in 1907 he became an honorary lecturer and close associate of Loránd Eötvös. From 1892 until 1932 he worked in the Institute of Meteorology and Earth Magnetism and he carried out pioneering work with his gravitational and earth-magnetism measurements. The results of his researches were published in the journals, The Climate (Az Időjárás) and Natural Science Bulletin (Természettudományi Közlöny), and also in scientific journals abroad. In 1927 he was appointed Director of the Meteorological Institute. It was due to him that modern meteorological prediction-service was introduced in Hungary. In 1944, as a result of the increasing persecution of Jews, two weeks after the German forces occupied Hungary on 19 March, he committed suicide. Steiner was a corresponding member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1917). His works include Results of Earth-magnetic Measurements Carried out in the Surroundings of Lake Balaton in the Summer of 1901 (A Balaton vidékén az 1901. év nyarán végzett földmágnességi mérések eredményei) (1908); The Magnetic Phenomena of the Earth (A föld mágneses jelenségei) (1923), and The Weather (Az időjárás) (1931). A Lajos Steiner commemorative medal was founded by the Hungarian Meteorological Society in 1951. – B: 0883; T: 7456.→Eötvös, Baron Loránd.

Steinmetz, Barnabás (Bartholomew) (nickname: Barney and Sema) (Budapest, 6 October 1975 - ) – Water polo player. He made his debut with the national team in 1993, at an international tournament in Moscow. He played on the gold medal squads at the 2000 Sydney Summer Olympics, and the 2004 Athens Summer Olympics. He has been a player of Vasas SC. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Stella, Adorján (Hadrian) (Középlak, now Cuzăplak, Romania, 30 January 1897 - Budapest, 26 August 1967) – Journalist, humorist, translator of literary works and stage writer. His schooling was completed in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He started to work as a journalist at the age of 20. At first he worked for country newspapers; from 1921 for the paper Evening (Est); from 1939 on the editorial board of Hungary (Magyarország). After 1945 he was reader editor of the paper World (Világ); later an associate editor of Free Mouth (Szabad Száj) and Independent Hungary (Független Magyarország); from 1952 the satirical weekly Crafty Matt, the Goose-herd, (Ludas Matyi), originally a popular humorous epic poem in hexameters by Mihály (Michael) Fazekas, from the early 19th century. His colorful reports, theater critiques and humoresques also appeared in the leading daily, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). Stella translated more than a hundred stage works into Hungarian. He reached his greatest success with his comedy, co-authored with István Békeffi entitled Honorable Lady (Méltóságos asszony), a comedy, which became a world success (1935); and Tomorrow You Stay in Bed (Holnap ágyban marad) (1937). His operettas also proved popular. His comedy Johnnie (Janika), co-authored with István (Stephen) Békeffi, and its film version ran for a long time. A selection of his humoresques: Let Us Not Jest (Ne tréfáljunk), appeared in 1962. His works include Girl of Pest (Pesti leány) operetta (1926); Stage-Fright (Lámpaláz) comedy (1931), and Let us Laugh at Hitler's Circle (Ne vessünk Hitleréken), a selection of anti-Fascist jokes, co-authored with László Palásti (1945). His translations include Noel Coward's Blithe Spirit (Vidám kísértet) (1947), and John B. Priestley's The Inspector Calls (A váratlan vendég) (1947). – B: 1160, 1257, 1445, T: 7456.→Fazekas, Mihály; Békeffi, István; Vadnai, László.

Stenography – The art or process of very fast script writing or shorthand using brief signs and abbreviations. It is suitable for word-to-word recording of speeches, negotiations and dictated texts. In antiquity and in the Middle Ages, shorthand, the symbols of Marcus Tullius Tiro, Cicero's liberated slave, comprised mainly syllables and words. The first experiment in Hungarian stenography was noted in 1769, when István (Stephen) Gáti (1749-1843) produced his independent Hungarian stenography system for official use. The parliamentary language of the debates was Latin. Hungarian and German were also spoken at the official level. However, Gáti's system remained an experiment only. In 1909, Tivadar Galánthay Glock appeared with his independent system of stenography at the countrywide Stenography Exhibit of 1913 in the Arts and Crafts Museum. He demonstrated the stenography of the Ural-Altaic and related peoples. He adapted the Gabelsberger stenography system to the Chinese language and devised, on the basis of his own system, the Japanese, Siamese, Albanian and Korean stenographies. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 7669.→Gáti, István; Stenography in Hungary; Galánthay Glock, Tivadar.

Stenography in Hungary – The art of writing in shorthand, writing with the application of specific brief signs and abbreviations recorded extremely rapidly, suited to the word-by-word transcription of speeches, negotiations and dictated texts.

In antiquity and in the Middle Ages, shorthand, used the symbols devised by Marcus Tullius Tiro, Cicero's liberated slave, indicated mainly by syllables and some entire words. In Hungarian stenography the first experiment was noted in 1769, when István (Stephen) Gáti (1749-1843), presented his own independent Hungarian system. His system remained experimental only. The era of modern stenography began in 1823 with Franz Xavier Gabelsberger (1787-1849), devising geometrical shortenings of the characters. His system eventually reached Hungary, where Iván Markovits adapted it in 1863 to what became known as the Gabelsberger-Markovits System and was taught in most schools. In time, it became impractical at the speed of normal speech, so Henrik Fabró modernized the Gabelsberger-Markovits system with an emphasis on double and plural vowels, called "fabroisims" to considerably speed up shorthand writing. Later, Dr. Béla Radnai (1891-1962), further refined Fabró's method by applying the Hungarian language laws and he created the foundation for uniform Hungarian shorthand writing. During World War I, while Radnai was away on military assignments, his students, with the guidance of Zoltán Nemes, further simplified his shorthand system. In 1909 Tivadar Galánthay Glock came up with his new system of stenography. At the Countrywide Stenography Exhibit of 1913 in the Arts and Crafts Museum, he demonstrated stenography for the languages of the Ural-Altaic and related peoples. He adapted the Gabelsberger stenography system to suit the Albanian, Japanese, Korean and Siamese languages as well. In 1927 Radnai's method became the official system of Hungarian shorthand writing that is still taught today. Hungarian stenographers always finish well at international championships, confirming that the Hungarian shorthand writing system makes it possible to write down even the most difficult dictations. – B: 0942, 1020, 1078, T: 3240, 7669.→Gáti, István; Stenography; Galánthay Glock, Tivadar; Radnai, Béla (2).

Stephanie (Stefania), Lake, Kenya, E. Africa (Lake Che'w Bahir) – A 120 km long and 24 km wide saline lake without drainage in East Africa, situated north of Lake Rudolf (now Lake Turkana); its area is 930 km<sup>2</sup>. Count Sámuel Teleki discovered it in 1888 at an altitude of 520 m, and named it after the wife of Crown Prince Rudolf of Bavaria. – B: 1078, 1614, T: 7456.→Teleki, Count Samuel.

Stephanus – Latin form of the Hungarian name: István. (1) Ruling Prince Géza-István's Latin name. It was first chronicled in a letter from Otto I, Holy Roman Emperor (955–983) to Bishop Pilgrim addressing Géza-István as Stephanus king – albeit not a Christian king – and his country as a kingdom after his enthronement in 973. (2) King István I's Latin name after his coronation on 1 January 1000. In 977, after the death of his father, he assumed the reign as prince. His ancient princely name was Bajk (Vajk). He inherited the Latin names Stephanus and István after his father. – B: 1020, T: 7658.→István I, King.

Stessel, Lajos (Louis) after 1848: Szelényi (Kismarton, 30 June 1794 - Tápiószele, 29 March 1888) – Physician and library founder. First he studied law, later medicine at the University of Vienna, obtaining his Medical Degree with a thesis on scurvy in 1819. He pursued a praiseworthy private practice; for some time he was the physician of the Széchenyi family at their estate at Nagycenk, and acted as the family doctor of a number of Hungarian aristocratic families in Vienna and in Transdanubia. He left his considerable property to foundations and charitable purposes, e.g. for Hungarian students studying in Vienna. On 11 October 1842, with his grant of 1500 volumes, he founded the library of the Royal Medical Association in Budapest which, in the same year, he enlarged with a further 2500 volumes. He established a foundation with 100 gulden for acquisition purposes of the holdings. For this gesture the Medical Association made him an ordinary member and the library was named after him. Influenced by the Revolution and the War of Independence of 1848-1849 against the Habsburg rule, he changed his name to Szelényi. After the downfall of the war he harbored Hungarian refugees in his Viennese house and on his property in the Austrian countryside, and assisted the Hungarian émigrés with considerable financial donations. For this, the Austrian government had him arrested in 1850, and sentenced him to a 10-year imprisonment in a fort. Five years of this he spent in the fortress of Kufstein. After he was freed, he sold his Austrian properties and settled in Pest. Shortly after that, he purchased an estate in Tápiószele, north of Kecskemét and lived there until his passing. From his property he continued to help the Hungarian medical activity and with a large sum he contributed to the launching of the journal Medical Weekly, (Orvosi Hetilap) and greatly assisted the running of the Medical Publisher, (Orvosi Kiadó). With a further grant of 10,000 volumes, he contributed to the library of the Medical Faculty of the University; for this he was rewarded with a university prize. His works include Dissertatio inauguralis medicinae de scorbut (1819). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Stew Pot – Name of a cauldron, made of copper or iron sheets, used for cooking, suspended on a pot-hanger over an open fire. In Hungary mostly shepherds use such cauldrons. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Stibor (? , 1347 - died between 27 May and 23 November 1414) – Voivode (Vajda) of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He originated from a noble Polish family named Ostoja, and entered the service of Hungarian King Lajos I (Louis the Great, 1342-1382). In 1383, he fought Ziemovit, the Polish Crown Prince. He joined King Zsigmond I (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437) against other pretenders of the Hungarian throne, and he became the most important supporter of King Zsigmond during the beginning of his rule. From 1388 to 1401 he was Land-Steward of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), in 1394 that of Trencsén (now Trencin, Slovakia). Between 1395 and 1401, and 1409 and 1414 he was Voivode of Transylvania; and from 1410 to 1414 he was land-steward of Trencsén. As voivode of Transylvania (1392), he fought the Turks and the Vlach (Romanian) Voivode, Vlad. He participated in the battle of Naples. When Zsigmond was captured, Stibor voluntarily resigned his position, and attempted to obtain help from the Czech and Moravian states. When rebellion broke out in 1403, he gathered an army and occupied in quick succession Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia), and Esztergom, and then he routed the rebel army in Trans-Danubia (Dunántúl). After the rebellion, he was for five years the Administrator of Income for the Archbishopric of Esztergom and the Bishopric of Eger. In 1410, he was the Leader of the Hungarian army sent to Poland. He received large estates for his services, received almost all the estates of Nyitra and Trencsen from King Zsigmond I. He granted market-town privileges to the central areas of his estates (Becko, Szenic, Modor and Szokolca). He established a hospital in Szokolca, and a provostship of the Augustine Order in Vágújhely (now Nové Mesto nad Váhom, Slovakia) (1414). He was buried in Krakow in one of the chapels of the Church of St. Catherine; his epitaph remained for posterity. – B: 0883, T: 7684. → Lajos I, King; Zsigmond, King.

Stigler, George Joseph (Seattle, WA, USA 17 January 1911 - Chicago, Ill., USA, 1 December 1991) – Economist in the USA. Her parents were immigrants from Europe; his grandmother on his mother's side was Hungarian. He graduated from the University of Washington in 1931 with a B.A, then spent a year at Northwestern University, from which he obtained his M.B.A in 1932. It was during his studies at Northwestern that Stigler developed an interest in economics and also decided on an academic career. He enrolled at the University of Chicago in 1933 to study Economics, and went on to earn his Ph.D. In economics he was greatly influenced by Frank Knight, his dissertation supervisor. Among others, Milton Friedman had a great impact on his economic thinking. His teaching experience began in 1936 at Iowa State College, where he taught until 1938. He spent much of World War II at Columbia University, performing mathematical and statistical research for the Manhattan Project. Stigler is best known for developing the Economic Theory of Regulation, also known as capture, according to which the interest groups and other political participants will use the regulatory and coercive powers of government to shape laws and regulations in a way that is beneficial to them. He also carried out extensive research into the history of economic thought. Along with that, his most important contribution to economics was put forward in his landmark article entitled The Economics of Information. With it, Stigler essentially created a new area of study for economists. His 1962 article: Information in the Labor Market developed the theory of search unemployment. In his book: The Intellectual and the Marketplace, he proposed Stigler's Law of Demand and Supply Elasticities. Another essay, on Truth in Teaching, described the consequences of a (fictional) set of court decisions that held universities legally responsible for the consequences of teaching errors. Among his other books are: Capital and Rates of Return in the Manufacturing Industries, National Bureau of Economic Research, Princeton, N.J. (1963), Citizen and the State: Essays on Regulation (1975) and The Theory of Price, Fourth Edition (1987). Stigler was a founding member of the Mont Pelerin Society, and served as its president from 1976 to 1978. He was a key leader of the Chicago School of Economics, along with his close friend Milton Friedman. He won the Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Sciences in 1982. He also received the National Medal of Science in 1987. George Stigler was one of the great economists of the twentieth century. – B: 1031, T: 7103. → Friedman, Milton.

Stingl, Vince Ferenc (Vincent Francis) (Sopron, 23 May 1776 - ? around 1850) – Ceramic artist, the founder of the porcelain factory of Herend. At age 23 he became manager of the Schloegel Factory of Tata, and he experimented with producing terracotta pots. He invested all his wealth in this, and he left Tata in 1824 totally penniless. In 1825 he settled in Herend. Between 1826 and 1830, he spent about three and half thousand forints to promote the development of the factory in Herend. In 1840, Mór (Maurice) Fischer managed to oust him. He supposedly traveled to Pápa from there; then in 1847, we see his name in the terracotta and porcelain factory of Városlőd. Following that, his name disappears. Based on data here and there, we can deduce that he worked as an innkeeper. – B: 0883, T: 7684.→Herend.

Stollmann, Andrásné (Mrs. Andrew Stollmann, née Erzsébet Rózsás) (Ógyalla, now Hurbanovo, Slovakia, 9 November 1937 - ) – Artist. She completed her secondary education in 1956 in Rév-Komárom (now Kamárno, Slovakia). She studied art privately under Edit Feszty, Károly (Charles) Harnos and Král' Fero. From 1965 to 1970 she studied at the Teachers' College of Besztercebánya (now Banská-Bystrica, Slovakia), obtaining a teacher's diploma. Living in Zsolna (now Žilina, Slovakia) and Ógyalla she mainly engaged in painting, graphic art, tapestry and murals. Her creations are determined by the problems arising from the relationship between man and nature, deriving inspiration from the form-world of nature. Between 1976 and 1990 she organized 48 group exhibitions, e.g. the one at Komárom. Individual exhibitions were held in Prague, 1975; Komárom, in the Danube-bank Museum (Dunamenti Múzeum) (1975, 1988), Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), in the Zoological Institute of the Slovakian Academy of Sciences) (1977), Besztercebánya, in the Teachers' College (1979), Ógyalla, House of Culture (1979), Zsolna (1979, 1988), Zólyom (now Zvolen, Slovakia) (1987), and Dunaszerdahely (now Dunajská Streda, Slovakia), in the Museum of Csallóköz (now Zitny ostrov, Slovakia) (1988). Stollmann's works include Roosters (Kakasok), colored ceramic relief, displayed in the House of Culture, Ógyalla (now Hurbánovo, Slovakia) (1977); The Tree of Life (Az élet fája), painted on board in the Registry Office hall, Újgyalla (now Dulovce, Slovakia) (1984), and The Desire of Life (Az élet vágya) tapestry in the registry office of Hetény (now Chotin, Slovakia) (1990). In 1970, in appreciation from the government, she received the grand prize of the Slovakian Ministry of Culture. In 1973, and again in 1975, she won first prize at the review of amateur artists at Máriatölgyes (now Dubnica nad Váhom, Slovakia), and at Breznóbánya (1973) and Zsolna (1975). She was awarded first prize in the national pedagogical competition. – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Stone Carving, Royal Workshops in Buda – The starting point of the Hungarian Renaissance, where the master carvers became acquainted with new forms under the guidance of Italian and Hungarian artists. The initial period left behind pieces in transitional style, half Gothic-motivated, half Renaissance. There are proofs of lively activities by the large number of carved fragments made of red marble or calciferous stone found on the edifices of King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) in Buda, Nyék, Visegrád and Tata. – B: 1144, T: 7675.

Storc, Botond (Budapest, 30 January 1975 - ) – Sprint kayaker. Competing in two Summer Olympic Games he won three gold medals (K-2 500 m: 2000; K-4 1000 m: 2000, 2004). Storc also won eleven medals at the ICF Canoe Sprint World Championships with four golds (K-1 500 m: 1997; K-1 1000 m: 1997; K-4 500 m: 1997; K-4 1000 m: 1999), five silvers (K-2 500 m: 1999; K-4 500 m: 1998; K-4 1000 m: 1997, 1998, 2001), and two bronzes (K-2 500 m: 2002; K-4 500 m: 1999). He competed from 1997 to 2004. He has been a member of the Budapest Honvéd FC sports club. Storcz works as a kayak coach at the University of Physical Education, Budapest. He was named the Sportsman of the Year in 1997; he is a recipient the Officer Cross of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (2000) and the Middle Cross of the Republic of Hungary (2004). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Straub, Ferenc Brunó (Francis Bruno) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 5 January 1914 - Budapest, 15 February 1996) – Biochemist, research scholar and politician; he was also the President of the State Presidium (1988-1989). He studied at the University of Szeged and, from 1933 worked there in association with Albert Szent-Györgyi (1937-1939). He was granted a Rockefeller scholarship at the University of Cambridge and he did research in D. Keilin's laboratory. In 1941 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) and, from 1945, Professor of Biochemistry at the University of Szeged. From 1948 to 1970 he held the former chair of A. Szent-Györgyi's at the University of Budapest. Straub carried out research in cell respiration, the functioning of muscles and the structure of enzymes; he discovered the yellow enzyme (Straub diaphorase), and the actin protein (the most important protein of the muscle). He created a new school in science. His works include General, Inorganic and Analytical Chemistry (1950); Biochemistry (1958), and Enzymes, Molecules and Life-phenomena (1966). He was Vice-President of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1967-1973, 1985-1990); Editor of the 4-volume Biological Encyclopedia (1975-1978), and also Editor of the periodical: Hungarian Science (Magyar Tudomány) (1983-1988). Besides his scientific work he was Vice-President of the International Atomic Energy Agency (1970-1978), and was Member of Parliament. In 1988 and 1989, he was the last President of the Presidential Council of the People Republic of Hungary. He was President of the Settlement-Development and Environment-Protection Commission (1985-1988). He was a member of the German Leopoldina Academy, holder of a gold medal from the Academy (1981), and also of the Hufeland Medal, the national prize of the former German Democratic Republic. – B: 0881, T: 7456. → Szent-Györgyi, Albert.

Stróbl, Alajos (Aloysius) (Liptóújfár, now Liptovskí Hradok, Slovakia, 21 June 1856 - Budapest, 13 December 1926) – Sculptor. He studied under K. Zumbusch in Vienna from 1886 to 1880. When he was only 26, he attracted notice with his statue Perseus (1882). For the then recently built Opera House, Budapest, he shaped two statues at the frontage and two sitting figures of Ferenc Erkel and Franz Liszt at the entrance. In 1893 he created a memorial statue of the great poet János Arany, which was placed in the garden of the Hungarian National Museum. In 1904 he sculpted the Matthias Fountain, erected in the Royal Castle of Buda. He created the equestrian statue of St Stephen at the Fisherman's Bastion of the Royal Castle in 1906, as well as the Semmelweis Memorial in front of the Rókus Hospital. The ornamental statue on the Kossuth Mausoleum in the Kerepes Cemetery (1909) was also his work. Among his works in Budapest are the statue of Mór Jókai (1921); a composition entitled Reading Girls (1921); memorial of Sándor Károlyi; busts of József Eötvös and János Arany, as well as the Elizabeth Memorial. There is also a statue of János Arany in the town of Nagykőrös (1910). Stróbl also modeled the sculpture of János Arany that was erected in the garden of the Hungarian National Museum, (1893), and a Memorial of Count István Széchenyi at Szeged (1914). He also created portraits in impressionist style, like his youthful selfportrait (1878); Young Woman (1916-1918), and that of painter Merse Szinyei (1918-1919), whose bust can also be seen on the artists' promenade on Margaret Island in Budapest, the work of György Segesdy. Strobl's sculptural art is characterized by sensitive realistic modeling. He was a much-liked personality of Hungarian sculptural art at the turn of the 19th to 20th centuries. He was awarded a number of honors in Hungary and abroad. One of his major works, the sculpture entitled Our Mother was rewarded with the Grand Prix at the World Fair of Paris in 1900. He was a leading figure at the turn of century in Hungarian sculpture. His art was characterized by sensitive, realistic modeling. As a portrait-sculptor of nearly 300 portraiture, he created an enduring legacy. For nearly 40 years from 1885 on, he was a teacher at the Budapest Creative Arts College. The effects of his pedagogic activities are immeasurable. A major part of his work is preserved in the National Gallery of Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, 1445, T: 7456. → Ligeti, Miklós.

Stromfeld, Aurél (Aurelius) (Budapest, 19 September 1878 - Budapest, 10 October 1927) – Officer of the General Staff. He fought in World War I. In November 1918 he was, as a colonel, the commanding officer of the Ludovika Military Academy. Experiences he had on the Italian and Russian fronts disillusioned him from the system of the Monarchy. In the Labor Movement, he could see an organized strength that would supply a combat-worthy army that could lead the way out of the chaos after the civil Democratic Revolution. From 1918 he was a member of the SZDP, Social Democratic Party. From 1919 he was Military Under-Secretary. After the proclamation of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (Magyar Tanácsköztársaság) in 1919, he participated in forming the army. As an officer of the general staff of the Red Army, Stromfeld was one of the leaders in the victorious military actions in Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia), invaded by the Czech Army. He did not agree with the withdrawal and the vacating of the freed territories, therefore he resigned. After the fall of the Soviet Republic in Hungary, he was arrested and sentenced to three years in prison. He was stripped of his rank of colonel, as well as of his awards and his pension. He was freed in 1921, and undertook the job of a warehouseman; later he became a clerk and was very active in the Social Democratic Party (Szociál Demokrata Párt – SZDP). In 1923 he was arrested again, and was freed after six months. From 1923 he was in contact with the illegal Communist Party of Hungary (Kommunisták Magyarországi Pártja – KMP), and worked as the leader of the left within the SZDP. From 1925 until his death, he was a member of the KMP. His works include The New War is Approaching (Készül az új háború) (1928), and Selected Writings of Aurel Stromfeld (Stromfeld Aurél válogatott írásai), compiled by Tibor Hetes (1959). – B: 0883, T: 7684. → Ludovika Royal Hungarian Military Academy; Campaign of the Hungarian Red Army (1919); Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.

Sucsan Charles (Károly Szucsán) (Paris, 1932 - ) – Painter. He was born to Hungarian parents living in France. During World War II, his parents had to return to Hungary, thus he learned Hungarian as a child. They returned to Paris after the war. First, he studied piano, but soon switched to art. He studied drawing and painting and worked in the shop of his parents. In November 1956 he moved, with his wife and daughter, to Montreal, Québec, Canada, where he was employed in the Ministry of Immigration. He became acquainted with Hungarian freedom-fighter refugees and his interest turned to Hungarian history, which exercised an impact upon his art. As President of the Hungarian Trianon Committee, he delivered lectures on the tragic consequences of the dictated Trianon Peace Treaty (1920) at the World Federation of Hungarians in Budapest, in 2006. In the meantime, he created ceramic objects, yielding his first successes. In 1959 he left his employment and opened his art-studio. Between 1960 and 1980, he received a number of commissions for ceramic, cement and stucco ornaments for building walls, as well as for paintings. He also made oil and acrylic paintings, drawings, ink and pastel works. Sucsán was also involved in teaching for five years. Since 1980, he has concentrated on painting. In 1996, during a visit to a museum in Paris, he discovered the French translation of the original text of the ancient Epic of Gilgamesh. Influenced by it, he began painting his Gilgamesh-series. After recovering from a serious illness, he completed it in 12 large paintings, exhibited in the Gladston Hotel, Toronto, on 7 March 2009. In painting it, he used his own unique “stick style”, thereby he could integrate several other art concepts in synthesis with his own. His works are influenced by the great contemporary currents in art, re-fashioned by his own inspiration. He has several annual exhibitions at home and abroad. His works are kept in private and public collections. He participates in the Portfolio, Hope and Optimism, under the patronage of UNESCO. He is a recipient of the Medal of the Academic Society of Paris, the Distinction of Arts-Sciences-Lettres. – B: 2013, T: 7103.

Sugár, András (Andrew) (Budapest, 7 May 1933 - ) – Editor and reporter. He graduated from High School at the age of 17 and, in 1950, became a student with a scholarship at the Faculty of Law of the University of Leningrad (now St. Petersburg) where, in 1956, he obtained a diploma summa cum laude in International Law. Early in 1957 he received a position as a translator, and from 1961, he was reporter for the Hungarian News Agency (Magyar Távirati Iroda – MTI) in Moscow, from where, in 1963, he was expelled by the Soviet organs without offering an explanation. From 1966 to 1971 he was the London reporter for the MTI, and also reported for the Hungarian Radio and for Hungarian papers, including those in Czechoslovakia. From late in 1971 he worked as the correspondent and first traveling reporter of Hungarian Television until mid 1994. During these years, in 102 countries, Sugár prepared political, cultural and educational films, reports, interviews in ten different languages, including interviews with Emperor Haile Selassie I, King Juan Carlos I of Spain, US Presidents George Bush and Jimmy Carter, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Nikita Khrushchev, Boris Yeltsin, Mikhail Gorbachev, Helmut Kohl, Jacques Chirac, Pierre Trudeau, Julius Nyerere, Alexander Dubček, Vaclav Havel, Fidel and Raúl Castro, George Soros, János (John) Kádár, József (Joseph) Antall, Gyula (Julius) Horn, Viktor Orbán and Ernő (Ernest) Rubik. In the MTV, he conducted the program The Week (A Hét) until 1980, later that of Panoráma. In 1987 he became Editor-in-Chief for The Week (A Hét); however, he lost this position because of his activity in the change of regime late in 1988. Sugár returned to Panorama, where he assisted the editor Alajos (Aloys) Chrudinák. He prepared an outstanding political film of the three-hour interview with Dubček in April 1989, with great reaction even abroad. In 1994, the MTV sent him into retirement against his wishes. Since 2006, he has been the peace-negotiator of the international Universal Peace Conference. His works include Mirror of England (Angliai tükör) (1978); My Open Secrets (Nyílt titkaim) (1985); Dubček Begins to Speak (Dubček megszólal) (in Hungarian and English (1989), and Secrets of Fifty Years – the Power and Myself (Ötven év titkai – a hatalom és én) (2008). In the MTV he produced four film reports, which were awarded festival prizes, in addition to other successful films. He also worked as a programmer of the MTV geographic educational series and worked as a translator and interpreter. He was presented with the Order of the Star (1986), For Polish Culture (1988), and numerous MTV Standard Prizes. – B: 1097, T: 7456.

Sugár Frigyes Péter (Frederick Peter) (Budapest, 5 January 1919 - Seattle, WA, USA, ?, 1999) – Historian. In 1939, fleeing from the spreading National Socialism in Europe, he emigrated to the USA. He earned a Ph.D. in History from Princeton University in 1959, and worked there as an instructor. In 1959, he went to the University of Washington in Seattle, where he was first a demonstrator; from 1963 to 1968 he was associate professor, and from 1968, a full professor. In the meantime, from 1973 to 1979 he was the Director of the Russian and East European Language and Area Center. In 1980-1982 he was President of the Western Slavic Association. He was a member of the editorial board of the journals Slavic Review (1976-1979) and Historical Abstracts (1979-1987). He was also President of the American Association for the Study of Hungarian History. His main field of research was the history of the Balkans and the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy from the 17th to the 19th centuries. He was a correspondent for a number of American and European scientific journals. Sugár was one of the leading specialists of his generation in the fields of Central Europe and the Balkans. In his last years, he was Professor Emeritus of History and International Studies at the University of Washington, WA. His published works include Industrialization of Bosnia-Herzegovina, 1878-1918 (1963); Nationalism in Eastern Europe, with Ivo J. Lederer (1969, 1971); Native Fascism in the Successor States, 1918-1945, editor (1971), and A History of East-Central Europe, co-edited with D. W. Treadgold (1974, 1977 and 1984). – B: 1672, T: 7456.

Sugár, Károly (Charles) (Storbeck) (Budapest, 2 November 1882 - Budapest, 20 July 1936) – The best walk-on actor of the Hungarian stage. After six years as a wandering actor, in 1907 he enrolled in the Academy of Dramatic Art; after finishing it, he was contracted in 1910 by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In 1922 he signed a contract with the Renaissance Theater (Renaissance Színház), but he returned to the National Theater before the year was out, and remained its member until his death. Between 1913 and 1918, because of illness, then because of military service and finally, because he was a prisoner of war in Russia, he did not act. In 1922 Sugár was awarded the Greguss award for his interpretation of Caliban in Shakespeare's The Tempest (A vihar). The smallest episode role gained importance as a result of his interpretation. With his interpretation of odd, has-beens, derelicts, and half-witted figures, he represented a new style on the stage of the National Theater. His most important roles include Judas in Arnoul Gréban's The True Mystery of the Passion (Igazi Passio); Dr. Rank in Ibsen's Nora; Enstrand in Ibsen's Ghosts (Gengangere – Kisértetek); Relling in Ibsen's The Wild Duck (Vilanden – Vad kacsa); Apemantus in Shakespeare's Timon of Athen (Atheni Timon); Sganarelle in Moliere's Love is the Doctor (L'Amour Medecin – A szerelem mint orvos); Harpagon in Moliere's The Miser (A fősvény), and Huhn in Hauptmann's And Pippa Dances (Und Pippa tanzt! – És Pippa táncol). He appeared in feature films, e.g.: The Old Scoundrel (A vén gazember) (1932); Be Good Unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig) (1936), and The 11th (1937). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7684.

Sugár, Rezső (Rudolph) (Budapest, 9 October 1919 - Budapest, 22 September 1988) – Composer. He studied composition from 1937 to 1943 with Zoltán Kodály at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, where he received a Degree in Music Education in 1943. He also obtained a general education degree in the same year. From 1943 until 1946 he was a secondary school teacher. He taught at the Higher School of Music in the Capital; from 1943 to 1946 at the Béla Bartók Music School from 1966 to 1968, and at the Teacher's Training Department of the Academy of Music, Budapest between 1968 and 1979. He was a representative of the talented composer generation trained by Zoltán Kodály. He continued and revived the valuable musical traditions of the century, relying on the best and purest sources. Sugár was a humanist in thinking and spirit, a protector of the folk music-inspired Hungarian national traditions, meanwhile endowing his compositions with a unique personal style. His works include Hunyadi (Hero's Song, Hősi ének) (1951); Kelemen Kőműves (Kőműves Kelemen) (1958); The Daughter of the Sea (A tenger lánya) (1961); Peasant War (Paraszi háború) (1975), and Savonarola (1979). Orchestral Works: Suite (Szvit) (1954); Overture (Nyitány) (1954); Concerto in Memoriam Béla Bartók (1962); Metamorphosis (1966); Sinfonia a variazione (1970); Epilogue (Epilogus) (1973); Concertino (1976); Pastoral and Rondo (Pasztorál és Rondó) (1978). Compositions for String Orchestra: Divertimento (1948); Symphonetta (Szinfonietta) (1955); Partita (1967). Chamber Works: String Trio (Vonóstrió) (1941-1942); Serenade (Szerenád) (1943); Sonata for Violin and Piano (Hegedű-zongora szonáta) (1946); 3 String Quartets (3 vonósnégyes) (1947, 1950, 1969); Frammenti Musicali (1958) and Rhapsody (Rapszódia) (1959). He was a recipient the Erkel Prize (1953), the Kossuth Prize (1954), and the Béla Bartók-Ditta Pásztor Prize (1986). He received the Merited Artist title in 1974. – B: 0883, T: 7667.→Kodály, Zoltán; Lehotka, Gábor; Sugár, Viktor Jenő.

Sugár, Viktor Jenő (Victor, Eugene) (Déva, 12 March 1872 - Budapest, 18/19 April 1942) – Organist. Sibling of the composer Rezső (Rudolph) Sugár. He completed his secondary schooling in Szeged, after which he entered a military career. As artillery officer he studied music composition and organ playing at the Budapest National School of Music (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest. In 1909, with the rank of Captain, he left the military and became organ teacher at the National School of Music. In World War I, he again joined the army; and at the end of the war mustered out as major. Straight after, in 1918, he became the choirmaster of the Matthias Church (Coronation Church) of Buda; and in 1922, musical director of the Corvin Theater, Budapest. In 1909, from the donation of 50,000 crowns by Emperor/King Francis Joseph I, based on Sugár's plans, the Organ Works Co. of Rieger of Budapest prepared the new instrument of 4 manuals, which received the label, the "King's Organ". It was on 2 September 1936, under the baton of Sugár, that Zoltán Kodály's Budavár Te Deum (Budavári Te Deum) was first performed. Works by Sugár include On the Construction of the Organ (Az orgona-építésről) (1913) and The Music of the Matthias Church (Coronation Church) of Budavár (1932). – B: 0945, 1031, T: 7456.→Sugar, Rezső; Kodály, Zoltán.

Suka, Sándor (Alexander) (Farkaslaka, now Lupeni, Transylvania, Romania, 1 January 1921 - Budapest, 17 September 1993) – Actor. He completed the Academy of Dramatic Art in Budapest in 1953; then the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Budapest engaged him. From 1971 till 1984 he was a member of the Metropolitan Operetta Theater (Fővárosi Operett Színház), and from 1986, he returned to the National Theater. He was a multi-faceted artist, who could equally successfully play character roles, humorous and tragic figures. His roles included Bottom in Shakespeare's A Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szeniványéji álom); Angelo in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors (Tévedések vígjátéka); Berreh in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Cléante in Molière's Tartuffe; Miska in I. Kálmán's Gipsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő); French king in P. Kacsóh's John the Brave (János vitéz); Frosch in J. Strauss Jr.'s Die Fledermaus (Denevér), and Sir Basil in F. Lehár's Count of Luxembourg (Luxemburg grófja). There are more than 20 feature films and TV-plays to his credit, e.g. Tartuffe, John the Brave, My Fair Lady and Count of Luxembourg. He was a recipient the Mari Jászai Prize (1959), the Merited Artist title (1979), the Outstanding Artist title, and the Aase & Richard Björklund Foundation Prize (Sweden) (1990). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Sükösd, Mihály (Michael) (Budapest, 4 October 1933 - Budapest, 12 October 2000) – Writer, publicist, writer on history of literature, critic and journalist. He obtained a B.A. Degree in Hungarian Language and Librarianship, and a Degree in English and Philosophy. From 1956 to 1964 he was a language instructor at the Budapest Polytechnic, also a research fellow and secretary. Thereafter, for about three decades, he was a contributor, editor and columnist for the journal Reality (Valóság) and, from 1991 he was deputy Editor-in-Chief for two years. From 1958 on he appeared with his published works. His novels include From Tree to Tree (Fától fáig) (1962); The Outsider (A kívülálló) (1968); Detention on Remand (Vizsgálati fogság) (1973); All Souls' Day: Resurrection (A Halottak napja: feltámadás) (1986), and Difficulties of a Statesman (Egy államférfi nehézségei) (1990). He is also the author of numerous volumes of short stories, e.g. Lead Cage (Ólomketrec) (1960) and Prince of Babylon (Babilon hercege) (1981). He wrote an essay entitled Homage to Ingmar Bergmann (Hódolat Ingmar Bergmannak) (1988). Among his sociological writings there are: Dickens (1960); Franz Kafka (1965) and Hippy World (Hippivilág) (1979). His essays on Hungarian literature appeared in the weeklies Moving World (Mozgó Világ); 168 o'clock (168 óra), and the daily paper Peoples' Freedom (Népszabadság). In his novels he relied on documentation, while in his sociographic works he studied the beat and hippy movements. For his work he was honored with the Attila József Prize. – B: 1031, 0936, T: 7456.

Süli, András (Andrew) (Algyő, 30 November 1897 - Szeged, 20 October 1969) – Painter in Naïve Art. He completed six years of primary school (1902-1908). Until the age of 18 he was an agricultural laborer and day-worker. From 1915 to 1918 he fought at the war front, and after the war he was a farmer. In the winter, he occupied himself with basket weaving. As an artist, he worked for only five years, from 1933 to 1938, starting with water colors; then changed over to oil paints. The dominant theme of his paintings is the village of his birth, in the center of the Great Hungarian Plain (Nagyalföld); the peasant courtyard, the peasant room, the church, the River Tisza with rafts and ships, the railway station with rail carriages, cars, and electric wires and poles disappearing in the distance, etc. His paintings are decorative, radiating inner poise and emotional fullness. He was fond of symmetry and the construction with striped patterns. He followed the ornamental approach typical of folk art. His paintings suggest the third dimension in a naïve manner: he became one of the most significant representatives of the naïve Hungarian art. He endows inanimate objects (chairs, cars) with anthropomorphic characteristics. He scored his first successes at the exhibitions of natural talents of the 1930s (one in Budapest in 1934, one in Amsterdam in 1938). The 35-40 paintings, sent to the Budapest exhibition in 1934, were not returned (he did not receive remuneration) and in his despair he burned all the remaining paintings he had stored at home. He moved to Szeged and did not paint again for the rest of his life, for more than three decades. He lived from casual jobs. However, his sold, and other paintings were collected together and appeared at various exhibitions, like the one in Linz in 1964; 8 paintings in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) in 1968; 31 of his paintings were exhibited at a Naïve Artists' International Triennial (Budapest) in 1969, where he won second prize. His first one-man show in Hungary was held in the Cupola Hall of the Museum of Szeged in 1968. Some of his paintings are on permanent exhibits in the Naïve Artists' Museum in Kecskemét, and in the National Gallery of Budapest. He was an outstanding figure of Hungarian naïve artists. A house with his paintings in Algyő, a Street, and a summer artist camp bear his name. – B: 0883, 1864, T: 7456.

Sulyok, Dezső (Desider) (Simaházapuszta, belongs to the village of Adásztevel, 28 March 1897 - New York, 18 May 1965) – Attorney and politician. His father was a miller; he lost his parents at the age of nine and was raised by his uncle. He graduated from the High School of Pápa, was drafted into the army and fought in World War I on the Russian front (1916-1918). After the war, he became a gendarme officer. Later, he earned a Law Degree from the University of Budapest. In 1924 he passed the bar examination, then set up a law office in Pápa. He took part in the community life of the town, and was President of the Catholic Circle. In 1935 he became a Member of Parliament, at first as a non-party-man, later, with a program for the Independent Smallholders' Party. At the time, when the right-wing Arrow-Cross Party was gaining strength, he courageously and passionately opposed the Arrow-Cross leader, Ferenc (Francis) Szálasi. In World War II, he served at the Russian front as a first lieutenant (1942-1943). From 1943 he was Co-President of the Smallholders' Party. Due to his anti-war stance, he was arrested and sent to an interment camp; he was later released at the request of József (Joseph) Mindszenty, Bishop of Veszprém. In the last month of the war, he had to hide. After World War II, Sulyok became one of the leaders of the Smallholders' Party. From January 1945 he was a member of the Provisional National Assembly. In 1947, he and his men left the Party and, together with Vince (Vincent) Nagy, he founded the Freedom Party (Szabadség Párt). The Party lasted six months because it turned against the official "popular democratic" policy of the Communist government, supported by the occupying Soviet military. Later, most of its members joined the Pfeiffer Party. Thereupon Dezső Sulyok left Hungary and emigrated to the USA. In New York, he became a member of the executive committee of the Great Hungarian National Commission. He left the Commission in 1952. Between 1948 and 1950 he edited the People's Word (Népszava) in the USA. After 1956 he founded the Hungarian 1956 Movement (Magyar Október 23 Mozgalom) in New York. Besides articles and his memoirs in Hungarian, his works include Zwei Nächte ohne Tag (1948) and The Hungarian Tragedy (A magyar tragédia) (1954). – B: 0883, 1031, 1105, T: 7456.→Szálasi, Ferenc; Mindszenty, József; Pfeiffer, Zoltán.

Sulyok, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest 30 March 1912 - Budapest, 24 November 2008) – Composer, organist and music historian. His high school studies were at the Roman Catholic Archbishopric High School, Budapest (1922-1930). He spent one year as a conscript in the Army. From 1931 to 1941 he studied composition, organ and voice at the Department of Protestant Church Music at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest. From 1936 to 1951 he was organist at the Lutheran Church in Óbuda. From 1939 he was a contributor to the Hungarian Radio. In 1945 he published the collection entitled Old Hungarian Religious Songs (Régi Magyar Istenes énekek) with Tibor Schulek. In the meantime, in 1944, he was conscripted into the Army again and, at the end of World War II, he was in Austria. He returned to Hungary, but fell into Russian captivity, was deported to the Soviet Union, and only in June of 1947 could he return home. In 1950, Sulyuk was dismissed from the Radio and became an external co-worker, from 1958 an editor, and then, from 1967 Editor-in-Chief of the Music Publishing Company (Zeneműkiadó Vállalat), Budapest. He retired from there in 1972, and became the editor of the new Liszt-Life Work. From 1980 he was the organist and choirmaster in the Kelenföld Lutheran Church. From 1956, for 11 years he taught Church Music at the Lutheran Theological Academy, Budapest. He participated in editing the New Part of the Lutheran Hymnbook (1955), and the new edition of it in 1982. His works include a number of music compositions and articles. He received the Liszt Prize in 1994, and became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Art in 1996. – B: 1506, T: 7103.

Sulyok, Mária (Szautner) (Királyhida, now Bruck an der Leitha, Austria, 5 November 1908 - Budapest, 20 October 1987) – Actress. She obtained her diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest in 1929, and started her career with one season at the Csokonai Theater of Debrecen (Debreceni Csokonai Színház), followed by one season at the Theater of Miskolc (Miskolci Színház). From there, she was contracted with the Comic Theater (Vígszínház) in Budapest, though she also appeared with the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház) in Budapest. After 1945 she played in the Artist, Inner City and Comedy Theaters. In 1947 she became a member of the National Theater. From 1961 on, she returned to the Comedy Theater, where she stayed until her retirement. Afterwards she was contracted to the Madách Theater. A clear change occurred in Sulyok's acting in 1959, when she played Claire in Dürrenmatt's drama The Visit (Der Besuch der alten Dame – Az öreg hölgy látogatása): a new face, a new voice and new acting style became evident to the public: a figure, firm as a rock. After that followed roles such as Christine in Eugene O'Neill's Mourning Becomes Electra (Amerikai Elektra); Hekabe in Euripides' The Trojan Women (Trójai nők), and her last role as Nurse Rebecca in Arthur Miller's The Crucible (A szálemi boszorkányok). Her curious humor was shown in her role as Eugenia in Ferenc Molnár's Olympia, as the Nurse in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, and as Mama in Molnár's The Guardsman (A testőr). Other roles included Queen Margaret in Shakespeare's Richard III; Gertrudis in József Katona's Bánk bán; Marta in Goethe's Faust, and Sadie Thomson in Somerset Maugham's Rain (Eső). Her feature films include Love Dreams (Szerelmi álmok) (1935); Devil's Knight (Az ördöglovas) (1943); Auntie Mici's Two Lives (Mici néni két élete) (1962), and the TV film: Pygmalion (1982). Her superb stage appearance and charming femininity won roles for her in Shakespeare's dramas, e.g. as Queen Gertrude in Hamlet. She belongs among the greatest of Hungarian actresses. Her awards include the Kossuth Prize (1957), the titles of Merited Artist and Outstanding Artist (1961, 1963). – B: 0883, 1427, 1445, T: 7456.

Sümeghy, József (Joseph) (Csabrendek, 4 January 1892 - Budapest, 11 November 1955) – Geologist. He completed his tertiary studies at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), specializing in paleontology under István Gaál. He earned his Ph.D. in Geology and Mineralogy in 1920. He became a demonstrator at the Department of Geology-Mineralogy in the University of Szeged, to where the University of Kolozsvár was transferred after the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), which ceded Transylvania (Erdély) to Romania. Early in his career he researched the western part of Transdanubia (Dunántúl), where, on the basis of deep drilling, he threw new light upon the Pannonian stratigraphic sequence (several thousand meters thick of early Pliocene age, laid down 4.8 million years ago). He also updated the mapping of flatland areas, the geology of which is restricted to the youngest, less than 2-million-year old Quaternary deposits. He was pioneering in the elaboration of the geological facies maps. In 1926 he followed Henrik Horusitzky in the Geological Institute of Budapest, where he worked as section geologist until 1932; later, he became senior geologist. From 1946 he ran the hydrological and water conservation section, and subsequently the flatland section. He was the first to investigate the geothermic conditions of the Great Plain (Nagy Alföld). In 1950 he conducted the uniform re-mapping of the flatland areas; and it is due to his work that the 1:300,000-scale soil map of Hungary became a reality. His published works include Fossil Fauna of the Pannonian Age from the Great Plain (Pannoniai koru fauna az Alföldről) (in Földtani Közlöny, 1927); The Trans-Tisza Region (Tiszántúl) (1944), and The Pliocene and Pleistocene of Hungary (A magyarországi pliocén és pleisztocén) (1955). – B: 0883, 7456, T: 7456. → Trianon Peace Treaty.

Sumerian-Hungarian Language Connection – A popularly assumed relationship which has serious difficulties, mainly because (1) there is a considerable time distance between the latest Sumerian writings and the earliest Hungarian text, and (2) there is no continuous sequence of linguistic documents on which the phonetic and grammatical history can be followed. As early as 1850, H.C. Rawlinson stated that the oldest cuneiform texts in Mesopotamia are in the “Scythian language”. Orientalist Julius Oppert (1825-1905), in his work Études sumériennes (1881) made a cautious comparison between the Sumerian and Hungarian, while the Assyriologist François Lenormant (1837-1883), in his 1875 essay Les principes de comparaison de l'accadien et des langues touraniennes (The principles of comparison of the Accadian and Turanian languages) pointed out a possible relationship between them. Jácint Rónai (1814-1889), a Benedictine monk, later Grand Provost and Bishop, educator of aristocratic families, and author of a book on the origin of races, drew the attention of the above pioneers to the possibility that the deciphering of the cuneiform words on the clay tablets should not be attempted through Hebrew, but through Hungarian. Studies of other scientists attempted to show relationship in terms of language structure between the Sumerian and the Ural-Altai languages, e.g. A. Dolgopolsky (1964), Dénes (Dennis) Sinor (1966) and Dr. Zsigmond (Sigismund) Varga (1942). There were some professional linguists who went further and tried to show linguistic connection with the predecessors of Hungarian, e.g. with Proto-Uralic (B. Collinder, 1965). Samuel Noah Kramer, in his book: The Sumerians, Their History, Culture and Character (1963), compares the grammatical structure of the Sumerian language with that of the Hungarian, and states: “...Sumerian resembles no little such agglutinative languages as Turkish, Hungarian, and some of the Caucasian languages...”

After World War II, mainly during the 1970s, the discussion of this possible relationship reached its peak. In face of the deluge of works by amateurs, works of some professional linguists were also published. Attempts to evaluate linguistic affinities also included the so-called polygonal method, while others tried a statistical method, first used by Dell Hymes (1960) in his Lexicostatistics so far (Current Anthropology, 1/1, 3-44), with a logarithmic formula. It was used by some in the form of the widely criticized glottochronology, e.g. András (Andrew) Zakar (1971), who succeeded in publishing a paper in the journal Current Anthropology 12 (2), Chicago, entitled Sumerian Ural-Altaic Affinities, submitting it for debate. Twelve well-recognized Western linguists made comments and criticisms on Zakar's introductory assertions, and Zakar also provided a summary at the end of his book. In another essay in 1972, entitled On the Sumerian Language (published in Hungarian Past 1 (2-3), Sydney), Zakar applied the Hyden-Swadech 100 basic word glossary (applying the controversial glottochronology, rejected by most linguists) to compare Sumerian with Hungarian root words; only those morphemes were used that had the same meanings as the items of the basic vocabulary. In professional linguistic science this essay proved a hopeless attempt on the part of Zakar.

This hypothetical linguistic (but not ethnic) relationship between Sumerian and Hungarian has been criticized or condemned by many linguistic scholars such as: G. Bárczi (1974), G. Komoróczy (1976), P. Hajdú (1966, 1972) ("relationship with Sumerian is a myth"), L. Papp (1970) (condemns "ancient historical illusions"), M. Zsirai (in L. Ligeti ed., 1943) (relationship with Sumerian is a "curiosity"), A. Róna-Tas (1978), A. Schedel (1966), I. Fodor (1974), while J. Lotz (1952) condemned the quite extensive work of Ida Bobula (1951) A Plea for Reconsideration (168 pp.) (some aspects of which were praised by Gallus, 1969). However, there are scholars who approach the question of a possible relationship either from a broadly cultural-historical, Turkological, or philosophical point of view, or by studying archaic forms of languages: these include the excellent, broadly conceived work by S. Gallus (1969): Possibility of a Relationship of the Magyar and Sumerian Languages (in Hungarian), and also works by D. Sinor (1966); I. Kiszely (1983); G. Györffy (1958); G. Németh (1930); D. Osetzky (1977); S. Vajay (1968); F. Badiny Jós, L. Götz (1994); A. Bodor, S. Csöke; A. Orbán; L. Pass; A. Schedel, and I. Szócs. Sumerian Pictorial and Cuneiform Writing – According to the present viewpoint of science, the Sumerians were the first people to create conceptual writing with pictographs, representing objects, enabling them to record their thoughts in an uninterrupted manner. Four stages can be identified: (1) Creation of picture signs, similar to the objects (pictographs). (2) Creation of picture signs (ideograms) to express verbs, sentiments and abstract concepts. (3) Syllable signs, consisting of pictographs to express suffixes and affixes, (the Sumerian language as the Hungarian, was an agglutinative language). (4) Creation of distinguishing signs. Cuneiform writing developed from this writing. During the course of development, signs simplified from the ideograms of the most important words served as the symbol for the appropriate word's initial sound.

The Hungarian runic script and the Sumerian cuneiform writing show some resemblance, as can be seen on the Tatárlaka discs (Tartarian Tablets), found in Tatárlaka, Transylvania by Zsófia (Sophia) Torma in the 19th century which date to around 5300 BC, pre-dating the Sumerian findings. – B: 1020, T: 7669.→Ancient Hungarian Runic Writing; Sumerians; Sumerian-Hungarian Language Connection; Sumerology; Torma, Zsófia.

Sumerians – A people and culture in southern Mesopotamia (in present-day Iraq) from 3500 to ca. 2004 B.C. They lived in the richly endowed area of the Tigris and Euphrates Interfluvium as a distinct, non-Semitic ethnic group. They formed the earliest known civilization in recorded history. They were preceded in the region by a prehistoric people, who were the earliest settlers in the land. They have become known as the Ubaidians from the excavation of their settlement site at al-Ubaid, near Ur.

Where the original homeland of the Sumerians was located is still uncertain. According to the noted American Sumerologist Samuel Noah Kramer (The Sumerians – Their History, Culture and Character, 1963), they may have come from the neighborhood of the ancient city-state of Arratta, situated in the region of the Caspian Sea, probably in the mountainous northwestern part of Iran (Persia). Other theories have also been advanced; but the issue has never reached a consensus. The one thing historians agree on is that the Sumerians came from a mountainous region.

Systematic excavations were begun in Northern Mesopotamia, the ancient Assyria, in 1842, by Paul Emil Botta (1802-1870), the French consul in Mosul, and have continued with numerous interruptions well into the 20th century.

French Orientalist Jules Oppert (1825-1905), in a lecture delivered before the Ethnographic and Historical Section of the French Society of Numismatics and Archeology in 1869, declared that these people and their language should be called “Sumerian” or “Shumerian”, basing his conclusions on the title “King of Sumer and Akkad” found in the inscriptions of some of the early Akkadian rulers. The name Akkad applied to the Semitic people of Assyria and Babylonia, while the name Sumer referred to the non-Semitic inhabitants. What the Sumerians called themselves is not clear. They called their land, however, KI-EN-GAR, “Land of the True God”, and referred to themselves as the “black-headed people”.

History – The Sumerians divided their history into two distinct periods: the “Kings before the Flood”, when “kingship descended from heaven”; and the “Kings after the Flood”. Before the Flood 8 kings ruled over 5 cities. After the Flood they were divided into the Kish, Uruk, Ur, Amazi, Adab and Mari dynasties with 66 kings. They attributed an incredible total of close to a quarter of a million years for the kings before the Flood; and a total of more than 25 thousand years for the first two dynasties after the Flood.

Early Sumerian civilization was predominantly agricultural with a well-developed irrigation system comprised of a network of canals. However, by 3000 B.C. it evolved into a flourishing urban civilization with mud-brick buildings, Ziggurats, or step-Pyramids, and walled cities. They were the first in recorded history to develop communal life. Their economy was based on agriculture, stockbreeding, fruitgrowing, fishing, industry and commerce. Their products were exported all over the Middle East and beyond.

The Sumerians lived in a number of loosely confederated city-states, like Uruk, Ur, Lagash, Nippur, Eridu, Erech, Larsa, Isin, Adab, Kullab and Kish, one usually dominating the others. The last Sumerian king before the Akkadian takeover was Lugalzaggesi, who styled himself as “king of Erech and the king of the land”, which extended “from the Lower Sea [Persian Gulf] along the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers to the Upper Sea [Caspian]”. But in the last quarter of the 3rd millennium B.C., he was conquered by the Semite Sargon (Sharrukê = legitimate king), the founder of the powerful dynasty of Akkad, which began the Semitization of Sumer. However, the Akkadians were invaded by the Gutians around 2200 B.C., who came “from the mountains”. They laid waste to the land, destroyed Nippur, and defeated the king, Naram-Sin. Afterwards, there was a brief Sumerian “Renaissance” with the kings of the III. Dynasty of Ur (ca. 2113 B.C.), such as Ur-Nammu and Sulgi, and a new Sumerian empire was established. (This period coincided with the Danubian III. period with copper technology in the Carpathian Basin.) This dynasty however collapsed under the attacks of the kings of Elam and Isin in 2004 B.C., and brought the end of the independence of Sumer. Most of the Sumerian cities were destroyed and the population fled in all directions of the compass. Then, around 1750 B.C., the Semite Hammurabi, after conquering Larsa, Elam, Mari and Eshnuna, became the ruler of a united kingdom reaching from the Persian Gulf to northern Mesopotamia. With Hammurabi, the history of Sumer came to an end and the history of Babylon, a Semitic state built on a Sumerian foundation, began. The last mention of the Sumerians as a people occurred around 1740 B.C.

Language – The thousands of cuneiform documents, first unearthed in the northern region of Iraq, were written in Semitic Akkadian. It was not until 1852 that Henry C. Rawlinson (1810-1895) noticed that the tablets excavated at Kuyunjik near ancient Nineveh, were bilingual, and that the words corresponding to the Semitic were in a hitherto unknown language he considered “Scythian or Turanian.”

The Sumerian is an agglutinative language. Its roots are invariable and are mostly monosyllabic, although there is a considerable number of polysyllabic among them, especially of the later period. The vowels are frequently modified in accordance with the law of vowel harmony. The nouns have no grammatical gender and are divided into animate and inanimate. Persons belong to the animate, objects and animals to the inanimate group. In addition to the main Sumerian dialect, the Emergir (“princely tongue”), there were several others. One of them, the Emesal, was used primarily in speeches by female deities, women and eunuchs. (Interestingly, in Hungarian some female animals are called “emse”.)

The first linguist to take notice of the similarities between the Sumerian and modern agglutinative languages was Edward Hincks (1792-1866), who pointed out that “...all Turanian [Ural-Altai] languages were descendants if not from the Akkadian, from its parent”, i.e., from a common predecessor.” Oppert went as far as to say that their language was an agglutinative one not inflected like the Semitic or Indo-European and that it had close affinities with Turkish, Finnish and Hungarian. In a Report on his scientific expedition to Mesopotamia (1851-54), he even provided syllabaries of Sumerian-Hungarian words, such as:

Sumerian		Magyar
pe	(ear)	fül
si	(eyes)	szem
kat	(two)	két, kettő
ha	(fish & may, if)	hal, ha
nap	(day)	nap
at	(father)	atya
lub	(foot)	láb
sam	(number)	szám
num	(no)	nem
mag	(large)	magas
pal	(large sword)	pallos
lil	(soul)	lélek (lílek in dialect)

Since that time the Sumerian language has been compared to a great variety of language groups. Although S. N. Kramer in his aforementioned work agreed that “...in structure Sumerian resembles...such agglutinative languages as Turkish, Hungarian and some of the Caucasian languages”, he added the rider that “...in vocabulary, grammar, and syntax, however, Sumerian still stands alone and seems to be unrelated to any other language living or dead” – a surprising statement considering that Sumerian was the lingua franca of the entire region for close to 2000 years!

This “unrelated” theory may have its roots in that the Sumerian-Turanian (Ural-Altai) connection was vigorously attacked by some Semitic linguists led by Joseph Halévy, the noted Hebraist of the Sorbonne, in the 1870s. Halévy, throughout his long and distinguished career, denied the mere existence of a non-Semitic people in the land of Babylon, and threw a lot of confusion into the ranks of the linguists with far-reaching consequences. He declared the Sumerian language to have been the secret language of the Assyrian-Babylonian, i.e. Semitic priests, but never a living tongue. A. H. Sayce published the following retort: “For centuries Hebrew was supposed to have been the language of Paradise, and the old belief, which made the Semitic Adam the first civilized man, still unconsciously affected the Semitic scholars of the 19th century.” Also: “Babylonian culture owed its origins to a race whose type of language was that of the Finn, of the Magyar or the Japanese” (The Archeology of Cuneiform Inscriptions, London, 1908). Sayce traced the pronunciation of several Sumerian phonemes to the Magyar, Mongolian, Turkic or Finnish sounds by deriving the existence of the “ö” and “ü”, and even considered the existence of the Hungarian “gy” (dj) (Accadian Phonology, 1877).

The polemic carried well into the 20th century. The Hungarians entered the debate right from the start, in the 1850s. The notable exponents of the Sumero-Hungarian “relationship” were Dr. Ferenc (Francis) Ribáry (1827-1880); Ágoston (Austin) Halász (1863-1925) Roman Catholic Bishop of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia); Sándor (Alexander) Giesswein (1856-1923); and Zsófia (Sophia) Torma (1840-1899), a distinguished archeologist and researcher, who excavated Sumerian-type potsherds and clay disks containing pictographs in the Transylvanian village of Tordos (now in Romania). Then in 1961, additional early Sumerian-type finds were excavated at Alsótatárlaka (Tartaria, Romania) near the Tordos-site, by Romanian archeologist, N. Vlása. Judging by these finds, some archeologists and historians concluded that the sites must have been Sumerian mining colonies founded in the gold, silver and copper-rich mountains of the region. Others opined that the Sumerians may have originated in the Carpathian Basin, from where they migrated to Mesopotamia.

The first truly scholarly work in Hungary was published by Gyula Ferenczy (1861-1931), a bona fide Sumerologist and author of the first book on the Sumerian-Ural-Altai-Magyar relationship, Sumer és Akkád (Sumer and Akkad, 1897). The other notable work was authored by Dr. Zsigmond (Sigismund) Varga (1886-1956), professor of Oriental languages at the University of Debrecen, entitled Ötezer év távolából (From a Distance of Five Thousand Years, 422 pp. 1942). This was a follow-up to an earlier work, A Sumir kérdés jelen állása (The present status of the Sumerian question, 1920), for which he was awarded the Fáy-Prize by the Hungarian Academy of Sciences.

By this time, however, the Finno-Ugric linguistic and ethnic origin of the Hungarians, implanted in the middle of the 19th century by Pál (Paul) Hunfalvy (Hunsdorfer, 1810-1891) and German linguist Joseph Budenz, had firmly taken root in Hungarian scientific and linguistic circles. On their recommendation, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences adopted the Finno-Ugric origins as the official theory, according to which the Hungarian people and their language originated in the Ural Mountains of Siberia by the river Ob, among the primitive Ob-Ugric Vogul and Ostiak tribes. Consequently, a southern, Mesopotamian connection became ipso facto irreconcilable with the Finno-Ugric theory.

After World War II, all pro-Sumerian research was banned by Communist Hungary, and ridiculed and attacked by Finno-Ugric linguists. Research was pursued only by Hungarian émigrés in various parts of the West. Notable among them were Dr. Ferenc (Francis) Badiny Jós, professor of Sumerology at the University of Buenos Aires, Argentina; Dr. Viktor Padányi in Australia; Dr. András Zakar in the US – former secretary to Cardinal József Mindszenty – who got as far as a professional debate with well-known linguists and scholars in the journal Current Anthropology (1971). (It was refuted by Hungarian linguist Péter Hajdú in a later issue of the journal.) There were also Dr. Ida Bobula in the US, who published her findings also in English; Dr. Miklós (Nicholas) Érdy in the U.S.; and Dr. László (Ladislav) Götz with his scholarly 2-volume work, Keleten kél a nap (The Sun Rises in the East, Budapest, 1994). However, leading linguists and historians in Hungary refused to accept any of their findings and either ignored them or rejected them out of hand, among them Géza Komoróczy, Péter Hajdú and István (Stephen) Fodor – although they were never able to satisfactorily and convincingly disprove the Sumerian connection. No one disputes the relationship between the Finno-Ugric languages. What some linguists and historians question is the current theory as to where, when and how it came about.

The Sumero-Hungarian relationship theory didn't find favor with later Western linguists either, partly for political, partly for cultural and prestige reasons. Especially some Indo-European linguists and historians were up in arms, who couldn't reconcile themselves to the fact that it was not the "superior" Aryan race that established the first civilization, but the "barbarian Turanian". The only work to receive any notice is a 1975 publication by Dr. Kálmán (Coloman) Gosztanyi, one-time professor at the Collège Saint-Michel, St.-Etienne (Loire) and a student of the École Pratique des Hautes Études Sciences Philologiques (Sumérien), Paris (Sorbonne). In his Sumerian grammar book, Comparative Sumerian Grammar (Dictionnaire d'Étymologie Summerienne et Grammaire Comparée, published with the support of the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique in Paris 1975), Gosztanyi compares the grammatical structures of Finno-Ugric, Caucasian, ancient Mesopotamian, as well as various African and native American languages, and demonstrates that out of 53 Sumerian grammatical characteristics, 51 are present in the Hungarian, followed by 29 in the various Turkish, 24 in the Caucasian and 21 in the northern Finno-Ugric languages

Writing – In 1850 E. Hincks read a paper before the British Association for the Advancement of Science in which he outlined his suspicions that the cuneiform system of writing was invented by a non-Semitic people who had preceded the Semites in Mesopotamia. The oldest extant written document of mankind, a clay tablet inscribed with pictographs, now in the Ashmolean Museum of Oxford, was found in the ancient Sumerian city of Kish, and dates from ca. 3500 BC. It remains undeciphered to this day. The oldest deciphered cuneiform text that developed directly from pictographs dates from the Jemdat-Nasr-period (ca. 3100 BC.), is now in the British Museum in London. It is a list of agricultural produce.

Cuneiform script began as pictographic writing. Each sign was a picture of one or more objects and represented a word. The signs were impressed into wet clay tablets with a wedge-shaped instrument, hence the name "cuneiform". The tablets were then fired in an oven, or left in the sun to dry. However, the system was cumbersome to use and the scribes gradually simplified the form of the signs. They also reduced the number of signs by substituting phonetic for ideographic values. Cuneiform writing went through 18 stages of development from 3000 to 600 B.C.

The excavation of ancient Nippur in Iraq was conducted in the early 1900s by the noted German Assyriologist, H. V. Hilprecht. The expedition yielded some 30,000 cuneiform tablets. Those in Sumerian range over more than two millennia, from the second half of the 3rd millennium to the last centuries of the 1st millennium B.C. Clay tablets found in the land of Sumer number several hundred thousand, of which only about 50,000 are deciphered to date. The texts have been translated into several modern languages.

Sumerian ceased to be a spoken language around 1700 B.C. It remained however the sacred and literal language of the Assyro-Babylonian priests and scribes until the emergence of the Phoenician alphabet in the last century B.C.

Religion – The Sumerians practiced polytheism. Their term for the universe was an-ki, meaning “heaven-earth”. Between heaven and earth there existed a substance, which they called lil, meaning breath, spirit, wind, air. Ruling over this universe was a pantheon consisting of a group of manlike but superhuman and immortal beings, called dingir or “god”. The main Sumerian Gods were: Enki, god of wisdom and water; Utu, the sun-god; Ninhursag, the great mother-goddess, originally probably “Mother Earth”; Ninurta, god of the stormy south wind, and Innana (the Akkadian Ishtar), goddess of love, Queen of Heaven, a titular goddess of Erech, and her husband, Dumuzi – the Biblical Tammuz. There were also Ereshkingal, goddess of death and gloom, and Asag, demon of sickness. The Sumerians cherished goodness and truth, law and order, justice, freedom, righteousness, mercy and compassion. They believed in a “righteous shepherd”, and prayed “My god, you who are my father who begot me, lift up my face...” (Hymn of the goddess Nanshe).

The Sumerians left an indelible impression on Judaism, Christianity and Mohammedanism – which is not altogether surprising, since Abraham came from the “land of Ur of the Chaldees“ (Gen. 11:28). They believed that a primeval sea existed prior to creation. According to the Sumerians and the Hebrews, man was fashioned of clay and imbued with the “breath of life”. According to both Sumerian and Biblical writers, the world was created by divine command. There exists almost an identical Sumerian version of the Flood. No doubt, the Biblical story of the Tower of Babel originated in an effort to explain the existence of the Mesopotamian ziggurats (Akkadian ziqquratu, “pinnacle” or “mountain top”) the tall, stepped pyramid-like temples. To the Hebrews these immense structures must have represented mankind’s lust for power. The idea that “the whole Earth was of one language and of one speech” (Gen. 11:1) is echoed in the Sumerian poem Emerkar and the Lord of Arratta: “The whole universe, the people in unison / To Enlil in one tongue give praise”. Ethics and morals were essentially identical with those of the Hebrews. The Biblical Sheol and the Hades of the Greeks have their concepts in the Sumerian Kur, the dark, dread abode of the dead.

Dr. András (Andrew) Zakar published an exhaustive study on the subject entitled A Sumér Hitvilág és a Biblia (Sumerian Beliefs and the Bible) (Garfield, N.J., 1972). See also S. N. Kramer’s aforementioned work.

Literature – The Sumerians had a rich and varied literary output, spanning over some 3000 years. It consists mainly of myths and epic tales, hymns and lamentations, proverbs and historiographic documents. The Sumerian “belles-lettres” profoundly influenced not only Hebrew literary works, but those of the ancient Greeks as well. It was in Sumer that the epic genre first originated and spread from there to other lands. To date there are nine extant epic tales, the most famous being the story of Gilgamesh, King of Uruk, which contains the Flood story.

Hymnography became such a sophisticated literary art that it was subdivided into various categories, e.g. “harmony-hymns”, “musical hymns”, “hymns of hero-ship”, etc.

The lamentations are of two kinds: those bewailing the destruction of Sumerian cities and city-states, e.g. the destruction of Ur, and those lamenting the death of the god Dumuzi.

They also produced several lengthy funeral dirges and elegies.

The longest Sumerian historiographic composition is The Curse of Agade. Another revolves about the defeat of the Gutians by Sumer's "savior", King Utuhegel.

Perhaps the best-known myth contained in the Gilgamesh Epic is the Story of the Flood, a forerunner of the Biblical version:

"What I had loaded thereon, the whole harvest of life

I caused to embark within the vessel; all my family and my relations,

The beasts of the field, the cattle of the field, the craftsmen, I made them all embark.

I entered the vessel and closed the door...

(...)

Unto Mount Nitsir came the vessel,

Mount Nitsir held the vessel and let it not budge...

When the seventh day came,

I sent forth a dove, I released it;

It went, the dove, it came back...

I sent forth a swallow, I released it.

It went, the swallow, it came back..

I sent forth a crow, I released it;

It went, the crow, and beheld the subsidence of the waters..."

The Hebrews most likely adopted these myths during their Babylonian captivity.

So far, seven catalogues of literary works have been unearthed, dating from the 2nd millennium B.C., listing the titles of over 200 Sumerian compositions. Then, in the 1960s an eighth came to light; but only fragments have been deciphered and translated to date.

The Legacy of Sumer – The Sumerians held sway over the Near East for close to 2000 years, spreading their culture and language far and wide. Their influence reached from the Indus (Mohenjo-Daro finds) to the Mediterranean (Cyprus and Crete); to the Caucasus region; to Central Asia; to the southern Urals in the north and to Ethiopia to the south; to Transylvania and Hungary in the west (see the four-wheeled cart model found in the Danube at Budakalász). They established mining colonies in Afghanistan for lapis lazuli; and in the Caucasus and Transylvania for precious metals.

C. W. Ceram in his book Gods, Graves and Scholars (New York, 1967) lists 27 Sumerian "firsts" in human history, among them: the potter's wheel, the wheeled vehicle, the sailboat; bronze-casting; the first schools; the first temples; the first arches; the first historians; the first law codes; the first "Farmer's Almanac"; the first maps of cities; the first irrigation system; the first cosmogony and cosmology; first literary debates; the first library catalogue; the first legal precedent. Hamurabbi's Code is largely based on an earlier Sumerian legal code. In the field of mathematics they made their major contribution by devising the sexagesimal system for their calculations. They divided the month into 30 days; the days into 24 hours and the hour into 60 minutes; the circle into 360°; the solar system into 12 divisions.

The Sumerians had a rich musical culture. Based on the construction of instruments recovered in the royal tombs of Ur – a harp, lyre, lute, drums and pipes – musicologists concluded that the Sumerians were familiar with the pentatonic (5-note) and the heptatonic (7-note) scales. A silver double-pipe found there shows a remarkable resemblance to the Avar double-pipe (8th century A.D.) unearthed at Felgyő in Hungary.

They knew how to use copper, gold and silver for jewelry, weapons and technology. They also excelled in the field of art. In the 16 tombs of kings, queens, princesses and priestesses excavated in 1922 in Ur by Leonard Wooley, rich artifacts came to light. The best known are (1) the beautiful wooden harp with a bull's head made of solid gold, inlaid with mother-of-pearl, gold and lapis lazuli; beneath the head is a set of shell plaques engraved with scenes of animal life; (2) a card-table decorated with bone, lapis lazuli and shell; (3) cylinder-seals; (4) an alabaster vase decorated with relief, illustrating a religious procession; (5) a female head of white alabaster called the "Woman of Varka"; (6) a 2.4 m. long Sun-symbol, a copper stele from Ur displaying an eagle with lion's head above two stags, known as the Imdugud bird (also read as Anzu); (7) a solid gold he-goat or ram supporting a tree ; (8) the gold head-dress of Queen Shub-ad; (9) a gold dagger; and (10) perhaps the most famous of them all, the mosaic "Royal Standard of Ur", dating from the last quarter of the 3rd millennium B.C., representing a veritable "story book" of Sumerian life.

The Sumerians excelled in the manufacture of jewelry and gold objects. The royal graves of Ur yielded beautiful examples of their craftsmanship. In one of them they found the helmet of king Meskalamdug, made of 15-karat gold. According to Woolley, never before in any age and in any country have they manufactured finer gold jewelry than these, dating from 2700 B.C! The Sumerians were the first to produce electron, a fusion of gold and silver.

Following the destruction of Sumer, a large number of the non-Semitic population dispersed and migrated north, northeast and northwest, leaving an indelible mark on the culture and language of the local populations, vestiges of which can be demonstrated to this day. – B: 2068, 7817, T: 7617.→ Sumerian–Hungarian Language Connection; Sumerian Picture and Cuneiform Writing; Sumerology; Some of the persons have their own entry.

Sun Cult – The honoring of the Sun, as the most important heavenly body, has played a very important role in all celebrations since ancient times. The ancients had long observed that the Sun is that star, which by its "rotating movement", causes the four seasons, through the rhythmic variations of light and dark hours within a day. This is very important to all peoples engaged in agriculture. Beyond the variation of light and dark, it has another importance, namely the mutual relationship between the Sun and Moon and the mythical tales connected with it. The mythical number of the Sun is number four. Four represents Space based on the four corners of the sky. The number three, the mythical number of the more ancient Moon Cult, is still apparent. In the time of the Sun Cult, the Sun replaced the Moon year and assured the correctness of measuring time. The great nebulous theological systems of mythology were formed, which included a center with a male Sun god and a Moon goddess. The customs and traditions of the Moon myth had no decisive effect on the peoples of Europe, but the peoples of ancient East, forsaking the Moon myth, followed the unmoving, flat, four-vaulted, heavenly Sun cult.

In heraldry the right side belongs to the Sun, the left side to the Moon. The right side is always the more prominent, as proven by present-day practice. In the days of the ancient Hungarian form of state, the kende, the sacramental king, was the chief, and he was regarded as the Son of the Sun. The double divinity of the Sun and Moon was preserved among the relics of Hungarian history. Among them, on the lower portion of the Hungarian Royal Crown, at the intersection of the braces of the crown, the Sun is positioned on the right and the Moon is visible on the left side of the image of Jesus. It is the same in the Szekler coat of arms and in every historic relic, where the Sun and Moon are portrayed.

In 19th century fairy tales, the name of the Sun god was often mentioned. The greatest curse pronounced by the Szeklers sounded thus: “May the Sun-god punish you”. The Hungarian peasant, even a thousand years after the conversion to Christianity, greets the rising sun respectfully, placing his hand over his heart or with the uplifted palm of his hand. In many places, he confesses his sins to the Sun and lifts the child to be baptized to it. On the morning of Pentecost, at Csiksomlyó in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), crowds of thousands await the rising sun before going to church. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7682.→Sun Solstice Festivals; Sun Symbols; Sun Wheel.

Sun Solstice Festivals – Numerous nations annually celebrate the four seasons associated with the main movements of the Sun. The spring and autumn tide, when the period of light equals with darkness, is rarely remembered; but the solstices on 21 June and 21 December are well known everywhere and folk festivals honor them with reverence.

In Hungary, two folk festivals celebrate the winter solstice. One is the autumn burial and resurrection of the Sun, represented in the borica dance. Connected with this is the festival of the summer solstice, celebrated in the St John’s Song (Szentiváni ének). The focal point is the lighting of the fire, which is endowed with cleansing power. The other folk custom is at Christmas, when the reborn Sun is greeted with a song. Also connected to the winter celebration is the spring solstice, the ballad of Julia, the Beautiful (Julia szép lány), celebrating the awakening and resurrected sun. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7682.→Sun Cult; Sun Symbols; Sun Wheel.

Sun Symbols (Sun signs) – In the Sun Cult of ancient nations, the Sun was regarded both as a protective and a time-damaging power. The sun symbols were used as a sign of respect in everyday life. The symbols were regarded as having a protective power against trouble. The shaman’s round drum symbolized the sun disk. Its purpose was to avoid disaster, exactly as the disks portraying sunrays that can be seen on gravestones even today. Many forms of the Sun Cult remain to the present time: the head of the family, before slicing bread, draws a sun symbol across the back of the bread and there are carvings illustrating sun rays on houses, gates, furniture, and embroidery decorations. They always present sun disks, rosettas with eight petals standing or whirling wheels, protective sun symbols on farm buildings, and six-fold circle drawings of grave markers are all symbols of the ancient Sun Cult. – B: 1020, T: 7682.→Sun Cult; Sun Wheel; Sun Solstice Festivals.

Sun Wheel – According to the ancients, it was a semantic illustration of the sun rolling across the sky through its six main positions: dawn, morning, noon, afternoon, evening, midnight. In older drawings the sun traces a circle, where circles of the same circumference represent its six positions. In later illustrations, the six main positions are shown only within the circle. These illustrations can still be seen on the gates of houses, gravestones in cemeteries, and on maypoles. Today, we rarely find pillars supporting the rolling sun symbolized by a wheel on the outskirts of villages, or on roads between wheat fields. After the conversion to Christianity, these were supplanted with picture pillars, placed along the roadsides. The Church outlawed pillars decorated with wheels, as a pagan custom.

The sun wheels were regarded as magic, protective symbols, an ancestral custom practiced even today. – B: 1020, T: 7682.→Sun Cult; Sun Symbols; Sun Solstice Festivals.

Sunyovszky, Szilvia (Sylvia) (Rozsnyó, now Rožňava, Slovakia, 2 February 1948 - ) – Actress. She began her tertiary studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and first appeared on stage at the Hviesdoslav Theater of Pozsony in 1967-1968. She obtained her diploma from the Academy in 1970, and spent the next season at the Thalia Theater of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). From 1971 she was a member of the Madách Theater there. From 1991 she was a member of the Hungarian Cultural Institute of Pozsony. From 1996 to 1998 she worked as counselor of the Government Office for Hungarian Minorities Abroad (Határontúli Magyarok Hivatala – HTMH). In 2003 she was a public relations counselor to former and now the present Prime Minister Viktor Orbán. Her roles include Alexandra in F. Molnár's The Swan (A hattyú); Lujza in F. Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem); Elmira in Molière's Tartuffe; Lady Anne in Shakespeare's Richard III; and Sue Bayliss in Arthur Miller's All My Sons (Édes fiaim). She also played in several films, such as: Professor of the Underworld (Az alvilág professzora) (1970); Adventures of Prix (1972); Innocent Killers (Ártatlan gyilkosok) (1973); Black Diamonds (Fekete gyémántok, I-II) (1976); El Cid (1981), and Eight Seasons (1987) and also in TV films such as The Dumb Knight (A néma levente); Rózsa, Sándor (1-12), and Neighbors (Szomszédok). She wrote a book, co-authored with György (George) Fekete, entitled The Thousand Aspects of the Holy Crown (A Szent Korona ezer arca) (2000). She was made an Honorary Freewoman of the town of Rozsnyó. She received the Mari Jászai Prize (1986). – B: 1445, 1439, T: 7456.→Orbán, Viktor.

Supka, Géza (Budapest, 8 April 1883 - Budapest, 25 May 1956) – Archeologist, art historian and political writer. He completed his archeological and art history studies at the University of Graz, and earned his Ph.D. at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). From 1904 he worked in the archeological collection of the Hungarian National Museum and published a number of studies during these years. In 1916 and 1917 he was a guest lecturer in Archeology and Art History at the University of Vienna, and also gave lectures at the universities of Rome, Leipzig, Cologne, Kiel, Berlin and Stockholm. He began his career as a publicist prior to World War I, as an outside consultant of the journal World (Világ), later becoming its associate editor; in 1919 he became the managing editor of the youth journal New World (Új Világ). Late in 1918 he was Ambassador to Prague appointed by the National Council. In 1921 he was dismissed from his position at the Museum because of his political stance during the rule of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic (21 March - 1 August 1919). From then on he turned to the press as an associate of the dailies Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap), and Pester Lloyd; he was also Editor of Lantos Magazin, and Tolnai's World Newspaper (Tolnai Világlapja). In 1926 he launched the literary and critical journal Literatura, and edited it until it was banned in 1939. In 1934 he became a librarian in the National Széchenyi Library. In 1945, he was reinstated as the President of the National Museum. From 1945 to 1949 he was Editor-in-chief of World (Világ), the paper of the Civic Democratic Party, founded by him; he was also a Member of Parliament. Concurrently, he was the Freemason Grand Master of Hungary. In order to support Hungarian writers and literature, he initiated the practice of holding book-days.

During World War I and in the inter-war years he was a militant advocate of the ideas of civic radicalism, while in the post-war Communist period under Soviet military occupation, he stood for civic democracy. As a journalist, he was one of the originators of the genre of literary-standard, popular-scientific reporting. He was also engaged in literary translations. His works include Lehel's Horn (Lehel kürtje) (1910); The Hundred-Year-Old Archeological Collection (A százéves régiségtár) (1913); Habsburg Chronicle, vols. i,ii (Habsburg krónika I-II) (1932); The Great Drama – The Background of the Events of World War I (A nagy dráma - Az I. világháborús események háttere) (1938), and The Accursed Woman – Elizabeth Báthory (Az átkozott asszony – Báthory Erzsébet) (1941). – B: 0883, 1068, 1257, T: 7456.

Surányi, Miklós (Nicholas) (Felsőmindszent, 16 February 1882 - Budapest, 23 June 1936) – Journalist, writer. He studied Law at the University of Pécs. In 1903 he was a parliamentary reporter for the paper Hungary (Magyarország); in 1908 he was county deputy-archivist at Máramarossziget (now Sighetul Marmăției, Romania). The following year, he became Editor of the paper Máramaros. He moved to Budapest in 1918 (sensing the end of historic Hungary and the loss of Máramarossziget). In 1924 he became a contributor to the National News (Nemzeti Ujság). He was elected member of the Petőfi Society in 1917, and the Kisfaludy Society in 1922. He was Editor of the paper Budapest News (Budapesti Hirlap) for a number of years. In a conservative spirit, he wrote numerous leading articles and critiques. The themes of his novels are largely historical. His works include The Peacock of Trianon (A trianoni páva) novel (1917); The Almighty Woman (A mindenható asszony) novel (1923); The Woman of Naples (A nápolyi asszony) novel (1924), and We Are Alone (Egyedül vagyunk), biographical novel about Count István Széchenyi (1936). – B: 0882, 1257, T: 7456.→Széchenyi, Count István.

Sütő, András (Andrew) (Pusztakamarás, now Camarasu, Transylvania, Romania, 17 June 1927 - Budapest, 30 September 2006) – Hungarian writer in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He received his schooling in Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania) and Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and edited several weeklies, such as the Clarity (Világosság) in Kolozsvár; the Working People of Villages (Falvak dolgozó népe) in Bucharest; the True Word (Igaz Szó), and the New Life (Új Élet) in Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania). He was a member of the Executive Committee of the Romanian Writers' Union. After 1945 he was the most important leading personality among the Hungarian prose and drama writers of Transylvania. His first independently published work was the Struggle at Dawn (Hajnali küzdelem) (1949). He based his brilliantly shining narratives on the legacy of István (Stephen) Asztalos, Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz and Áron (Aaron) Tamási, who continuously strived to rediscover the reality from the end of the 1960s. His novels and essays best illustrated their mission are: My Mother Promised Light Dreams (Anyám könnyű álmot ígér) (1970); Robin and Apostle (Rigó és apostol) essays (1970); Gods and Wooden Horses (Istenek és falovacskák) essays (1973); Palm Sunday of a Horse-dealer (Egy lócsiszár virágvasárnapja) drama (1974); Star on the Bonfire (Csillag a máglyán), drama (1975); Cain and Abel (Káin és Ábel), drama (1977); Let the Words Come to Me (Engedjétek hozzám jönni a szavakat) essay-novel (1977); The Wedding at Suza (A szuzai menyegző) dráma (1981), and Advent on the Hargita (Ádvent a Hargitán), drama (1985). Through his works, he raised his native land's daily struggle for survival to a historical-philosophical level. Several of his works were translated into Romanian and German. His dramas were staged in Hungary, and his Star at the Stake (Csillag a máglyán) was made into a movie. He was one of the most important writers of contemporary literature and indeed, the entire Hungarian literature.

A severe atrocity against Hungarians in Marosvásárhely occurred on 19-20th March 1990, in the first year of the new “democratic” political system in Romania. Some 100,000 Hungarians demonstrated for the reinstallation of a Hungarian Medical School in the town. The Vatra Romanesca nationalist organization regarded this and the observation of Hungarian National Day on 15 March, as a provocation against the Romanian state. On 19-20th March, groups of Romanians rushed upon the demonstrating Hungarians and beat them up, turning the city into a place of street clashes. During this attack, András Sütő was severely beaten and wounded, and he almost lost of his eyesight. The final result of the “Black March” pogrom was three dead and 100 wounded. Not a single Romanian but many Hungarians were arrested, accused and sentenced to prison terms – B: 1085, 1138, 1153, 1257, T: 3240.→Asztalos, István; Móricz, Zsigmond; Tamási, Áron; “Black March Pogrom”; Atrocities against Hungarians.

Svachulay, Sándor (Alexander) (Schvachulay) (? , 1875 - Budapest, 25 August 1954) – Engine fitter, aviation specialist. He was occupied with aeronautics problems from 1890. His prototypes successfully reproduced various methods of flying. By early in the 20th century, he accurately drew up the basic principles of gliding. He first succeeded building an engine with appropriate flying properties in 1908. Its fuselage and the framework of its wings were built in a pioneering fashion from welded steel pipes. In 1909 his amphibian airplane was fitted with retractable landing gear. Later, this method was adopted worldwide. Besides his pioneering constructions, he also found the solutions for such important details as the adjustable metal propeller and equipment for reducing the landing speed of airplanes. His works are: The Aviators of Nature (1940); My Life of Flying (1942). – B: 0883, 1122, T: 7456.→Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation.

Svaiczer, Count Gábor (Gabriel) (Svajcer) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia 1784 - Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Romania, 24 August 1845) – Mining engineer. From 1804 he studied at the Mining Academy of Selmechánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia). Subsequently, he continued his studies at foreign mining and smelting works. He started working at Szomolnok (now Smolník, Slovakia), then, in the course of his researches, he managed to restart the operation of the then defunct precious metal mines of Aranyida (now Zlatá Idka, Slovakia). On the basis of this, he was commissioned to head the state mines, foundries and mints that were in a critical condition at the time. From 1834 to 1844 he was the Director of the Mining Academy of Selmechánya. He reorganized his area of mining-work with new excavations, with the improvement of the running of foundries and several technical innovations and made them profitable again. Svaiczer received from King Ferdinand V (1835-1848) the decorated silver hatchet that is preserved at the Mining Museum of Sopron. He retired in 1845. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7684.

Svéd, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 28 May 1906 - Vienna, 9 June 1979) – Opera singer (baritone). He studied voice at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, under the direction of Béla Szabados; thereafter, in Italy with the famous Maria Sammarco and Riccardo Stracciari. He obtained his diploma in 1927. He made his debut at the Opera House in Budapest in 1929 in the role of Silvio in R. Leoncavallo’s I Pagliacci (Bajazzók).

From 1936 he was a member of the Opera House, Budapest. In 1931 he was a guest singer at the Opera House (Staatsoper) of Vienna where, in 1936, he was contracted. At the outbreak of World War II, he emigrated to the USA. Between 1941 and 1950 he was a member of the Metropolitan Opera, New York, and also performed frequently at the La Scala of Milan. From 1950 to 1957 he was a member of the Budapest Opera House. After that, he sang at the great Opera Houses of the world. He became a famous and popular artist worldwide, who was great in Verdi operas. He was also a recording artist. His roles included Count Lüne in Verdi's Il Trovatore (A trubadur); title role in Verdi's Rigoletto; the same in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Rodrigo, Marquis of Posa in Verdi's Don Carlo; Scarpia in Puccini's Tosca; Wolfram in Wagner's Tannhäuser; Talramund in Wagner's Lohengrin; Amonarro in Verdi's Aida, and Escamillo in Bizet's Carmen. He received the Kossuth Prize (1950) and the title of Outstanding Artist (1951). In accordance with his wishes, he was buried in the Farkasrét Cemetery of Budapest. – B: 1445, 0883, T: 7103.→Szabados, Béla.

Sweden, Hungarians in – Prior to World War II, only a few Hungarians lived in Sweden, among them intellectuals, musicians and leftist politicians. During the war, the Bernadotte action rescued a few hundred Hungarians from German concentration camps. After the war, due to the Communist take over in Hungary, the number of immigrants to Sweden increased. In 1947 and 1948 there was a Swedish campaign to recruit forestry workers from Upper or Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). As a result, some 1,000 persons arrived in Sweden. After their contract expired, they applied for and received refugee status. The largest number, 7,000 Hungarian refugees, arrived after the crushing of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight. Their number grew annually by 300 persons until 1989. They were young, educated people. In the 1980s, a few thousand Hungarians arrived from Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) to avoid ethnic persecution by the Ceausescu regime. According to statistics, in 1994 there were 27,000 Hungarian in Sweden from Hungary proper, and some 5,000 Hungarians from detached Hungarian territories, such as Romania, Slovakia, Carpatho-Ukraine and Yugoslavia. Among the Hungarians were such outstanding scientists as: Róbert Bárány, Albert Szent-Györgyi, Marcell Riesz, György (George) Klein, Egon Diczfalusy, László (Ladislav) Ernster, Pál (Paul) Kallós, and many engineers, architects, musicians, composers, writers, poets, literary translators, sportsmen and entrepreneurs. Among the Sweden-based Nobel Prize winners are 12 Hungarian and 8 Hungarian-related laureates. In the 1960s, there were some 60 Hungarian societies, churches, cultural organizations and clubs. In 1973, the National Association of Hungarians in Sweden (Ungerska Riksförbundet; Svédországi Magyarok Országos Szövetsége – SMOSZ) was established with some 5,200 members. Its Hunsor internet-portal provides news and information. Since Hungary became a member of the European Union in 2004, Hungarians in growing numbers are seeking employment in Sweden. – B: 1848, T: 7103.→Bárány, Róbert; Szent-Györgyi, Albert; Riesz, Marcell; Klein, György.

Sword Dance – A spontaneous dance performed by young men with a sword or similar object in solo or in pairs. Originally it was a cultic dance, sometimes the dramatization of the killing and the resurrection of a person. Flute and songs accompanied these dances. Relics from the 16th-17th centuries indicate the existence of its custom in Hungary. Its traces are still found in the Shepherd's Dance. – B: 1134, T: 3240.

Sword of God (Sword of Attila) – The long-lost sword dedicated to the god of war (as related by Priscos Rhetor and Jordanes) found by Attila the Hun. According to a belief, whoever was in possession of this sword would become lord of the world. A shepherd found the sword and took it to Attila. Later, the sword was in the hands of the kings of Hungary. Since the members of the Árpád Dynasty considered themselves descendants of Attila, this sword was regarded as the sword of Attila. From the Árpáadian treasury, it was King Salamon's mother, Queen Anastasia (King András I's [Andrew] widow) who gave the sword to Prince Otto of Nordheim, Bavaria in 1071, believing that whoever had it would face calamity. But Otto actually assisted the young Prince Salamon to ascend to the throne in 1063. The 90.5-cm long blade with a damaged hilt is considered to have been the masterpiece of a Hungarian smith and goldsmith of the 10th century. The hilt and its case are decorated with a ribbon of leafy-tendrils. Part of the blade is decorated with two intertwining dragons. The cult of the sword was an old custom with the Scythians (according to Herodotos, Book IV. 52). Belief in the possession of the sword is also found among the Sarmatians, Alans, the Voguls, and other Ural-Altai peoples. This sword could have been in Attila's possession, as it was shown to Priscos, who visited Attila. At present, this so-called Sword of Attila is found among the coronation treasures of the Holy Roman Emperors held in the Schatzkammer of Vienna. The Attila sword belongs to the fabled dragon-killing swords, as does the King István I (Stephen, Saint) sword of Prague, with Norman decoration. – B: 0942, 1896, 1898, T: 7456. → Priscos Rhetor; Jordanes; András I, King; Salamon, King; Judit (1).

Sylvester, János (John) (Erdős?) (Szinérváralja, now Seimi in Romania, 1504 ?, - Vienna, 1552) – Humanist writer, Bible translator. From 1526 he studied at Krakow. On the influence of his teacher, Leonhard Cox, he became a follower of Erasmus. He published a religious work entitled Rosarium. In 1529 he became a student at the University of Wittenberg, attended the lectures of Melancthon. From 1534 he was schoolmaster in the court of Baron Tamás Nádasdy at Sárvár. He began translating the New Testament following the textual version of Erasmus. Tamás Nádasdy established a printery at Sárvár-Újsziget for the publishing of the translation. Sylvester was running the printery. For the typographic work they employed Johannes Strutius (Strauss). In 1539, a work of his entitled Grammatica Hungaro-latina was published with Czech orthography and diacritical marks, also recognizing the peculiarities of the Hungarian language. Benedek Abádi, with better knowledge of printing, took over and finished the New Testament (1541), the first printed book in the Hungarian language. It contains the first metric poetry and in the concluding section the first stylistic comments on figurative speech in Hungarian. In 1542, he went to Vienna and on Nádasdy's advice he gave lectures on Hebrew and later Greek and History. He published poems in Latin, including an elegy against the Turks in the style of Erasmus (1544); a poem personifying Vienna (1546); Queen Anna's Rhymed Epitaph (1548); The Risen Jesus' Lament (about 1550), and the Lament of Faith (1551). His hymn, starting with Christ has risen (Krisztus feltámad), survived in the hymnbook of Péter Bornemisza. He happened to live in a period of transition, so he could not be considered to have belonged to a particular Christian denomination. With his work he facilitated the incorporation of the results of humanism in the Hungarian linguistic and literary consciousness. A Protestant High School in Budapest is named after him. – B: 0883, 0931, Szabács, Siege of – The first original historical song in Hungarian language. The author – whose dialect reflects the Abaúj-Zemplén-region terminology – probably participated in the 1476 siege of the fort and wrote his poem shortly after. He wrote down many details of the fight that his contemporary historians did not document, which were later substantiated by some authentic charters. As a true chronicler, he presented with witticism King Mátyás I's superb qualities, his cunning, his bravery and his kindheartedness. His writing style is dry and he used the chanting style of a folk chronicle. The beginning of the song is missing, and the 150 lines of ten syllables were interpreted in several ways. For a while, it was deemed to be a forgery, due to some of its excellent rhyme pairs; but its authenticity is now generally accepted. It was found in 1871 in the Csicseri family archives. – B: 1150, 1230, T: 3240.→Mátyás I, King.

Szabad, György (George) (Arad, now in Romania, 4 August 1924 - ) – Historian and politician. He is a descendant of a Jewish middle-class family, whose Hungarian attitude brought about persecution by the Romanians (who were awarded Arad with the eastern strip of the Great Plains and all of Transylvania as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon in 1920). Until 1944 he worked as a gardener's apprentice; and finally, he was called up for forced labor due to his Jewish origin, from which he escaped on 15 March 1944. In 1945 he also escaped from two weeks of Russian forced labor. In 1945 he was allowed to enroll in the History course at the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Degree in Education and a Degree in Librarianship. In 1949 he became Head of the National Archives. Until 1954, he worked at the University of Budapest and later he became Assistant Lecturer in the History Department, in 1956 Assistant Professor and, in 1970 he was appointed Full Professor. In 1994, he was made Professor Emeritus. Earlier, in 1969, he obtained an academic doctorate and became a member of the Historical Committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1982 he became a correspondent member, in 1998 an ordinary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. From 1985 to 1990 he was President of the Hungarian-Polish Historians' Joint Commission. Szabad also played a role in public life. In 1945-1946 he was a member of the Smallholders' Party. During the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight against Russian occupation, he was elected a member of the Revolutionary Committee of the University of Budapest. After the Revolution (with the return of the Russian military occupation) he was pestered but no action was taken against him. He returned to political life in 1987, when he took part and spoke at the historic meeting at Lakitelek. It was then that he became a founding member of the Hungarian Democratic Forum (Magyar Demokrata Fórum – MDF) and, in 1989, was elected into the Presidium of the Party and worked in it until 1994. In the 1990 parliamentary elections he received a MDF mandate; in 1990 he became Deputy-President of Parliament, and soon its President. He also received a mandate for the MDF in the 1994 parliamentary elections. In 1996 the party split, and he joined the Hungarian Democratic People's Party (MDNP). In 1998 he was not elected to Parliament. His field of research is the civic changes in Hungary. His numerous studies include Guiding Principles of Kossuth (Kossuth irányadása) (2002), and The Re-read Governmental Program of József Antall (Antall József újraolvasott kormányprogramja) (2006). He received the Széchenyi Prize. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→Lakitelek, Consultation at.

Szabadi, Sándor (Alexander) (Kecskemét, 16 December, 1928 - Waldmichelbach, Germany, 5 April, 2012) – Minister of the Reformed Church, librarian and writer. He graduated from the Reformed High School of Kecskemét in 1947. His tertiary studies were at the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Degree in English Literature and Library Studies. He also earned a Degree from the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest. He continued his postgraduate studies on a scholarship at Exeter College of the University of Oxford. He worked as an assistant minister in Kecskemét. In 1956 he participated in the renewal movement of the Reformed Church in Hungary. After the crushed 1956 Revolution, he was in an interment camp for nine months and had to resign from his ministerial position. For ten years, Szabadi worked as a librarian at the Horticultural Academy of Kecskemét, linked to the University of Budapest. He left Hungary with his family in 1972 and settled in Waldmichelbach in West Germany, where he worked as a teacher of English Language and Religion at the local state high school until his retirement. He participated in the life and activity of intellectual Hungarian immigrants in Western Europe. He wrote and published studies on Beckett, Thomas Mann, Dostojevskij, Thomas More, Karl Barth, László (Ladislav) Ravasz, as well as on social and ethical issues. He published more than 50 essays and articles. Some of his works remain unpublished. He wrote a book entitled “A Voice Crying in the Wilderness”: The Life and Age of Áron Szilády (“Kiáltó szó a pusztában”. Szilády Áron élete és kora) (1993). For it he was granted an Honorary Doctorate by the Reformed Theological Faculty of the Gáspár Károli Reformed University of Budapest. He translated in prose Dante’s Divine Comedy in 2004. – B: 1963, T: 7103.→Szilády, Áron; Ravasz, László.

Szabadka (Serbian: Subotica; German: Maria-Theresiopel) – Town in the southern-part of the Danube-Tisza Interfluve on the Great Hungarian Plain, near the present-time Hungarian-Serbian border. Administratively it is in the northern part of the former County Bács-Bodrog. Its population was 82,122 in 1901; 100,015 in 1931 and 100,219 in the 1990 census. The 1910 census figure of 94,610 comprised of 55,587 (58.8%) Hungarians, also 33,247 (35.1%) Bunyevats, 3514 (3.7%) Serbians and 1913 (2.0%) Germans; by religion: Roman Catholic 85,445 (90.3%), Jewish 3539 (3.8%), Greek Orthodox 3486 (3.7%) and Calvinist 1420 (1.5%). About half of the town’s population is engaged in farming in the rich fields of the extended municipal outskirts (puszta, 1980 km<sup>2</sup>). The inner part of the town has modern urban characteristics. Noteworthy buildings include the Town Hall, built early in the 20th century, the Palace of the Law Court, the St. Theresa Church, and the 15th century Franciscan Church. During the 20th century, the town underwent some development industrially, acquiring a fertilizer plant, a wagon factory, textile works and a soap manufacturing plant. It exports some of its agricultural products. Historically there was human settlement in the area as far back as the Stone Age. After the Magyar ingress, Hungarian clans settled on the town’s site. King Béla IV (1235-1270) founded a settlement in the area after the Mongol (Tartar) invasion (1241-1242). In documents, its name first appears as Zabotka or Zobotka in 1391. The area became the property of János Hunyadi in 1439. After the disastrous Battle of Mohács against the Ottoman Turks in 1526, for a while (1527-1542) the area was under the control of the peasant army of Nenad Cernojevic (Jovan Cherni, the “Black Czar”). From 1543 until 1686 it was part of the Ottoman Empire, in the Buda Vilayet. The Treaty of Karlowitz returned it to Hungary in 1699. It became a free town (market town) as Saint-Maria (Szent-Mária) in 1743, and in 1779 it was given the status of Royal Free Town by Empress Maria Theresa, and was renamed Maria-Theresiopolis (but this name was not adopted by the general population). Finally, it was officially renamed Szabadka in 1845. After the defeat of the Hungarian War of Independence (1848-1849), the area of the town was allocated to a new province, the Governorate of Temes, from 1849 to 1861. In 1918 the town was under Serbian occupation. The Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920) ceded the area to Yugoslavia; after its collapse the area was retaken by the Honvéd troops of Hungary on 12 April 1941; but the Treaty of Paris reallocated the Bácska area to Yugoslavia in 1947. Since the disintegration of Yugoslavia, it has been under the rule of Serbia. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.

Szabados, Árpád (1) (Szatmárnémeti, now Satu Mare, Romania, 13 September 1896 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 2 September 1945) – Actor and stage manager. On completing his secondary education, he began an engineering course at the Budapest Polytechnic, but gave it up; it did not suit his nature; instead he attended Szidi Rákosi's School of Dramatic Art. During World War I, he was called up for military service on the Russian front, became a prisoner of war in Russia, where he organized a camp theater. After returning to Hungary, he worked as an actor and manager in various strolling companies. In 1937 he was invited by Imre Kádár to become the stage manager for the Thália Theater in Kolozsvár. In his theatrical work, he concentrated on fostering traditions as well as rendering classical values in contemporary ways. His stage management was characterized by competence, good taste, flawless plotting of action, and original ideas. Particularly well known was his series of open-air performances in Brassó (now Brasov, Romania) in 1938. His productions include F.R. Ibsen's The Master Builder (Solness építőmester); J. Nyírő's Herrgottschnitzer (Jesus-carving man – Jézus-faragó ember); Kodály's Háry János; I. Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája), and J. Katona's Bánk bán. His works include The Great Law (A nagy törvény), and The Black Motorcar (A fekete autó). – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Kádár, Imre.

Szabados, Árpád (2) (Szeged, 18 March 1944 - ) – Painter and graphic artist. He completed the Academy of Applied Art in Budapest in 1968. From 1969 to 1974, he was a senior teacher at the Training College of the University of Budapest. From 1970 to 1984 he founded and directed the training workshop of the National Gallery. Between 1975 and 1990 he worked as art-editor of Moving World (Mozgó Világ). He prepared a fine arts program for children on Hungarian Television. His original programs are: Magic Scissors (Varázsolló); Play in the Training Workshop and 7 Color-worlds. From 1984 he was a lecturer at the Academy of Applied Art; from 1991 professor and Head of Department and, from 1995 to 2002, its Rector. He had over eighty individual exhibitions and took part in more than twohundred international and national exhibitions. His works are held in the Metropolitan Gallery, the Art Gallery, the Municipal Gallery and the Petőfi Literary Museum in Budapest. He was awarded more than thirty prizes, among them the Grand Prix of the International Drawing Biennale of Ljubjana, the International Fine Arts Biennale, Ankara, International Graphic Biennale, and in Krakow. His writings include Engraving and Printing (Metszés és nyomtatás) (1972). He received the Munkácsy Prize and the Merited Artist title. – B: 0874, 1837, T: 7456.

Szabados, Béla (Pest, 3 June 1867 - Budapest, 15 September 1936) – Composer and music teacher. At the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, he was a student of Gyula (Julius) Erkel, Robert Volkmann and János (John) Koessler. From 1888 to 1893 he was a teacher at the School of Dramatic Art. From 1893 to 1933 he taught composition at the Academy of Music. In the meantime he was also director of the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede). Besides his prize-winning Lieder, choral works and string quartets, he became known for his setting to music the Hungarian Credo (Magyar Hiszekegy). His singspiel- and operetta-like pieces lend to his works an intimate, French lyrical character and early Wagnerian style, blended with Hungarian-like elements, which were popular around the turn of the 19th and 20th centuries. He was the author of the technical Choir School Manual (1910), and edited the series entitled Lieder (Műdalok). His works include Four Kings (Négy király) (1890); Rika (1895), The Fool (A bolond) (1898); Mária (1905); Istók the Fool (Bolond Istók) (1922), and Fanny (1925). – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Koessler, János.

Szabados, György (George) (Budapest, 13 July 1939 - Budapest, 10 June 2011) – Composer, piano artist and jazz pianist. His father was a physician, his mother a pianist, singer and singing teacher. He studied Medicine at the University of Budapest, but was more attracted by music. His talent to play and compose music was evident at an early age. From 1963 he studied music privately with János (John) Mérnök, and had his debut in 1955; in 1963 his first performance consisted of musical improvisations. He won the Grand Prize at the San Sebastian Jazz Competition, in the category of Free Jazz, in 1972. From 1975 to 1978 he was in charge of the Contemporary Musical Workshop at the Kassák Club in Budapest. In 1983 he founded the Hungarian Royal Court Orchestra (Magyar Királyi Udvari Zenekar) and the Free Music Open Club. From the 1980s he was able to give concerts abroad and make recordings. He has performed together with Roscoe Mitchell and Anthony Braxton, with Peter Kowald, Johannes and Connie Bauer, Fred van Hove, Evan Parker, Jiri Stivin, Hans-Ludwig Petrowsky, and Vladimir Tarasov to name just a few. Szabados has composed music for a ballet (Iván Markó); for dance theatre (Joseph Nadj); for commemorating the 1956 Hungarian Revolution, ritual music, and several solo piano, as well as chamber pieces. His powerful and unique musical vocabulary constitutes an individual direction in the music of today. He regularly publishes writings on musical subjects. His compositions include B-A-C-H experiences (B-A-C-H élmények) (1964); Time-music (Idő-zene) for string orchestra (1980), and Golden Age (Aranykor) for piano (1998). His records include The Wedding (Az esküvő) (1975); The Passing of Time (Az idő múlása) (1999), and The Heart of Beauty (A szépség szíve) (2004). His activity in the musical field determined the thinking and world-view in art for a whole generation. Szabados is a well-known character of contemporary improvised music all over Europe.. A good deal of his music is influenced by Hungarian folk-music, mainly from Transylvania. He is “unofficial king” of the Hungarian free jazz movement since the 1960s. In 1983 he was awarded the Franz Liszt Prize, in 2000 the For Hungarian Art Prize, and in 2011 the Kossuth Prize. – B: 0874, 1839, T: 7103, 7456.→Kassák, Lajos; Bartók, Béla.

Szabados, Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 7 March 1912 - Sydney, Australia, 12 February 1962) – Table-tennis player. He was a Hungarian and an Australian table tennis champion. Early on, he developed a passion for the game. From 1928 to 1935, Szabados captured six World Doubles titles (1929-1932 and 1934-1935 with V. Barna), three Mixed Doubles (1930, 1931, and 1934 with M. Mednyanszky), and five times was a member of the Hungarian World Championship (Swaythling Cup) Team (1929-1931, 1934, and 1935). In 1931 he won all four World events – men’s Singles, Doubles, Mixed Doubles, and the Swaythling Cup. He began studying engineering at the University of Berlin but, being of Jewish descent, even though he was raised in the Catholic faith, he fled to Paris in 1933, and then to Britain in 1936. In 1937, Szabados and István (Stephen) Kelen embarked on a two-year exhibition tour of the Far East, South America and Australia. He returned to Australia in 1939 and settled in Sydney. By 1941 he owned a table-tennis club. In World War II, he was called up by the Allied Works Council and served as a truck driver. He won the Australian Table Tennis Championship in singles (1950 and 1952), doubles (1950) and mixed doubles (1955). Operating in table-tennis academies, he was prominent in coaching younger players, including his son Sándor. Szabados won 15 World Championship titles, including the World Singles Crown in 1931. He was one of the two most successful table-tennis champions of his time, the other being Viktor Barna. Szabados was inducted into the International Table-Tennis Foundation Hall of Fame in 1993. – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Szabédi, László (Székely) (Sáromberke, now Dumbrăvioara, Transylvania, Romania, 7 May 1907 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 19 April 1959) – Poet, literary historian. He studied Unitarian Theology and Philosophy at the Universities of Kolozsvár, Budapest and Strassbourg. From 1931 he was an outside consultant of the Kolozsvár daily, Opposition (Ellenzék). From 1940 he was a teacher in the village of Baré (Băraii, in County Kolozs). From 1941 (when Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award) he became the drama critic of the National Theater of Kolozsvár. From 1942 he worked as one of the editors of the journal Harvest (Termés). In 1944 he was the organizer of the Hungarian Folk Council (Magyar Népi Szövetség). After World War II, in 1945, when all of Transylvania came under Romanian rule, Szabédi became Director of the Szekler Museum in Sepsiszentgyörgy, and a teacher at the Szekler Mikó College. From 1947 until his death, he was a professor at the University of Kolozsvár. He committed suicide. He was an important figure in the Hungarian literary life of Transylvania in Romania. He also translated literary works from Romanian and collected and translated Romanian folk literature. His selected poems were also published in Romanian translation. His works include Délia, dramatic poem (1936); Wit and Charm (Ész és bűbáj), studies (1943); Full Moon (Telehold), poems (1944), and Language and Literature (Nyelv és irodalom), studies (1956). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Vienna Award II.

Szabó, Aladár (Tác, 13 December 1860 - Gödöllő, 26 April 1914) – Minister of the Reformed Church and writer. From 1887 he was a teacher at the Reformed High School of Budapest and, from 1888, professor at the Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest. In 1890 he obtained a Ph.D. in Arts from the same Academy. From 1905 to 1938 he worked as a minister in Budapest. He was founder of the Bethánia Association, which was one of the promoters of revival in the Reformed Church. In 1892, together with his wife, he set up the Zsuzsanna Lorántffy Society. At the turn of the 19th and 20th centuries, he sharply criticized the conservative trends in the Church. He demanded improvement in the social conditions. He was also active in caring for the poor and in the settlement of the cases of orphans and domestic servants. He was Editor of several Reformed journals. His works include Locke (1890;), The Future of Philosophy (A filozófia jövője) (1890), and Through Grace (Kegyelem által), autobiography (1941). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Bethania CE Alliance; Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna.

Szabó, Alajos (Aloysius) (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 14 October 1818 - Budapest, 13 March 1904) – Veterinarian and journalist. He obtained his Degree in Veterinary Sciences in 1844, and his Surgical and Obstetrician's Degree at the University of Pest in 1845; also in 1845, he was on a study tour in Vienna, Berlin and Heidelberg. From 1846 he was a lecturer at the Veterinary Institute of the University. In 1848 he was a Honvéd (army) doctor of the Jászkun battalion. From 1851 he was a professor at the Veterinary Institute and, between 1852 and 1875, was its Director. In the 1850s, he became a member of the medical committee working against the eastern cattle-plague, which played a part in its elimination in Hungary. In 1876 he founded a private teaching institute in Rákospalota. He worked also as a journalist and editor under the name of Dr. Egyedi. From 1856 to 1862 he published the Hungarian People's Paper (Magyar Néplap), and the Pester Herald (Pesti Hírnök). From January 1868, together with György (George) Klapka and Móric (Maurice) Szentkirályi, he launched the paper, Our Century (Századunk), which, in late 1869, merged with the Pester Journal (Pesti Napló), where he remained editor until his death. His works include Canine Rabies or Madness (Veszetség vagy ebdüh) in Hungarian (1850), later in German, Slovakian, Romanian and Serbian translation, and The Anatomy and Biology of Domestic Mammals (1877). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szabó, Attila T. (törpényi) (Fehéregyháza, now Albești, Transylvania, Romania, 12 January 1906 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Transylvania, Romania, 7 March 1987) – Reformed minister, linguist, lexicologist, local historian, archivist, historian of literature, music and ethnographer. He spent most of his childhood in Dés (now Dej, Romania) in the Szamos River valley. He completed his studies in Theology at the Reformed Church College and the University of Kolozsvár, as a student of Bálint (Valentine) Csüri, Sándor (Alexander) Tavaszy and Lajos (Louis) Kelemen. He went to Great Britain on a scholarship, to the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews. He was ordained minister of the Reformed Church in 1928, and obtained a Ph.D. from the University of Debrecen in 1934. He started his scholarly activities in the archives of the Transylvanian Museum at Kolozsvár in 1926. Szabó's former teacher, Bálint (Valentine) Csüri, encouraged him to carry out linguistic, historical and dialectical research; he accompanied Csüri on his research trip to the area of the Csángó-Hungarians, outside (east of) the Eastern Carpathians in 1929. After briefly working as a teacher at the Nagyenyed (Aiud) College and the Reformed Church College of Zilah, he became an archivist with his other former teacher, Lajos Kelemen, as an associate in the Transylvanian Museum. From 1942 (when Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award) he was Professor of Hungarian Linguistics at the University of Kolozsvár until his retirement, while he was also Head of the Transylvanian Museum and the Scientific Institute of Transylvania. He edited the Transylvanian Museum (Erdélyi Múzeum), the Transylvanian Scientific Fascicules (Erdélyi Tudományos Füzetek) (1941-1947) and the Hungarian Vernacular (Magyar népnyelv), with Géza Bárczi (1941-1943). At about the same phase of his scholarly career he was a senior associate on the great Atlas of the Hungarian Dialects (eds. L. Deme & S. Imre). The magnum opus of his life's many-faceted research activities is his multi-volume Transylvanian Hungarian Etymological Collection (Erdélyi Magyar Szótörténeti Tár) (I-IV in Bucharest, 1975, 1978, 1984; and V-VI, in Budapest, 1993). It has become a monumental and unique set of fourteen volumes, continued after the sudden death of Attila Szabó by an editorial board of nine co-workers, including one of his sons, Zsolt Szabó, on the basis of his father's collection of 1.5 millions etymological cards. A selected collection of his works was published in 6 volumes (1970-1985). His works include The Importance and Method of Place-name Collecting (A helynévgyűjtés jelentősége és módszere) (Magyar Nyelv, 1934); History of the Transylvanian Museum Society and its Tasks (Az Erdélyi Múzeum Egyesület története és feladatai) (1942); Toponyms of Kalotaszeg (Kalotaszeg helynevei) (1942), and Language and Settlement (Nyelv és település) (edited posthumously by another son, Ádám T. Szabó) (1988). [See two articles about him in Hungarian Past (Magyar Múlt) (15, 1987 and 25, 1998)]. Attila Szabó also arranged the publication of From the Life of our Mother Tongue in 1970, vols. i-iv of his great 12-volume book, under the title Transylvanian Hungarian Word History Collection between 1975-1985. The Dezső Pais Commemorative Medal (1986) is the last of the awards he received in his lifetime. In 1986 he was made an honorary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 1197, 1153, 0883, 7456; T: 7669, 7456.→Bárczi, Géza.

Szabó, Béla (Bernard Meller) (Nagymihály, 21 September 1906 - Pozsony, now Bratislava in Slovakia, 16 October 1980) – Writer, poet. He completed six years of primary school, after which he studied the tailor's trade and worked in that trade. From 1949 until his retirement, he was Editor of the daily, New Word (Új Szó). His works include I am Starving! (Éhes vagyok!), poems (1931), Ezra Starting off, vols. i,ii (Ezra elindul, I,II), novel (1935), The first Gift (Az első ajándék), stories (1951), The Bride (A menyasszony), novel (1956), Uprising of Dogs (Ebek lázadása), novel (1964), To the Bitter End (Mindhalálíg), novel (1972), and Difficult Farewell (Nehéz búcsú), articles, stories (1981). – B: 0883, 1890, T: 7456.

Szabó, Denis (Dénes) (Budapest, 1929 -) – Criminologist and educator. He was educated at the Universities of Budapest, and Louvain, where he obtained a Ph.D.; and at the University of Paris (Sorbonne) and the University of Siena. He moved to Canada and enrolled in the University of Montreal in 1958, where he introduced the teaching of criminology by creating the Department of Criminology, which became the model for the formation of criminologists across Canada. Founded in 1969, the International Center for Comparative Criminology played an important role in the development of comparative research on the international level. He has been a research director and, with consultant committees, he investigated the criminal system (Prevost, Ouimet, Le Dain). He helped to develop a humanistic criminal policy in Quebec province of Canada. He is a consultant for the French and the Hungarians. Szabó is the author of numerous books including Urban Incest (1958); Crime and Cities (1960); Criminology (1965); Criminology and Criminal Policy (1978); Science and Crimes (1986); On the Anthropology Comparative Criminology (1993); Treaty of Empirical Criminology (1994); Dual Images: Multiculturalism on Two Sides of the Atlantic (1996), and Nordic Moral Climates: Value Continuities and Discontinuities in Denmark, Finland, Norway, and Sweden (2007). Some of his books were translated into half a dozen other languages. He is the founder of the journal Criminology (Montreal, 1968). Szabó has been Scientific Director of the International Journal of Criminology and Forensics (Geneva) since 1980. He is President of the International Society of Criminology, consultant to the United Nations (UN), UNESCO, Council of Europe, etc. He helped promote Canada's science of, and advances in, criminology. He is Doctor honoris causa of the University of Siena, Aix-Marseille, and the University of Athens; he is President of the International Association of French Criminologists, and Member of the Royal Society of Canada and the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1975), Officer of the Order of Canada (1985), and he is also Commander of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary, as well as the Cote d'Ivoire, and a recipient of La Medaille de la Ville de Paris (1986) – B: 0894, 1031, T: 7103.

Szabó, Dezső (Desider) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Transylvania, Romania, 10 June 1879 - Budapest, 5 January 1945) – Writer, teacher, critic and political writer. He was the descendant of a Protestant (Reformed) family of civil servants. He earned a Degree in Education (Dip.Ed.), majoring in Hungarian and French, in the Eötvös College of the University of Budapest. Among his schoolmates were Gyula (Julius) Szekfű, János (John) Horváth and Zoltán Kodály. During his university years he was mainly engaged in Hungarian and Finno-Ugric linguistics and French literature. In 1905 he spent a year in Paris, studying French literature. After his return to Hungary, he worked as a high school teacher at Székesfehérvár (1907-1908), Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania) (1908), and Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Seculiesc, Romania) (1909-1911). He began his publicist activity at Székesfehérvár with an anti-Semitic series of articles: Capitalism Creates Shackles for Hungary, and stated that, together with socialism, the fetters are created by the activity of the Jews. He was anti-capitalist and anti-socialist at the same time. He and Endre (Andrew) Bajcsy-Zsilinszky edited a paper, the Vanguard (Előörs), in which they wrote in "race-protecting" language. A few years later, at Székelyudvarhely, he became an enthusiastic supporter of the famous lyric poet Endre (Andrew) Ady. For years he worked as a contributor to the journals West (Nyugat) and Twentieth Century (Huszadik Század), writing essays on Hungarian and French literary themes. His first short stories appeared in the paper, West. Szabó broke with the above journals as a result of the controversy around his study entitled The Bankruptcy of Individuality (Az individualizmus csődje). In 1913 he was forced to go to Sümeg and in 1914 to Ungvár (now Uzhhorod, Ukraine) to escape the limelight. In 1918 he taught in Sümeg, Ungvár, and Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia), from where he moved to Budapest during the revolutionary times in 1919. He welcomed the homecoming soldiers in the "Aster Revolution" (Őszirózsás forradalom) of 31 October 1918, but he retired to the countryside during the Socialist (Soviet) Council Republic times (21 March - 1 August 1919), because to him it was alien and anti-national. It was in 1919 that his novel The Swept-away Village (Az elsodort falu) made him instantly famous nationwide: he became the celebrated writer of the 1920s. Its story takes place in Transylvania and Budapest, and it features what he considered to be trends destructive to the Hungarian people. He gave up his teaching position, and as a freelance writer, he lived exclusively from his writings. In 1920-1921 he was the author of the editorials of the journal Daybreak (Virradat); in 1921, correspondent of the paper People (Nép); then, in 1923, he launched the paper Auróra, soon renamed Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom). Szabó became a significant modernizer of the Hungarian prose style. The central problem of his works is the fate of the Hungarian peasantry and middle-class, and the tragic collisions between these fates. His novels and short stories, as well as his critiques, all written in a spirit of powerful denunciation, aroused widespread literary and political reaction and caused considerable debate. He became virtually the spiritual leader of the students in the universities. His other novels include There is no Escape (Nincsen menekvés) (1917); Wonderful Life (Csodálatos élet) (1921); Help! (Segítség!) (1925), and Christmas in Kolozsvár (Karácsony Kolozsvárt). His short stories include Diary and Short Stories (Napló és elbeszélések) (1918), and Resurrection in Makucska (Feltámadás Makucskán) (1932, 1956). His critiques and studies are: Language-Reform Studies (Nyelvújítási tanulmányok) (1903); On a Straight Path (Egyenes úton) (1920); Complaint (Panasz) (1923), and Word Formation in the Vogul Language (Vogul szóképzés) (1904). His collected works are: The Whole Horizon vols. i,ii,iii (Az egész látóhatár I,II,III) (1940), and My Lives (Életeim). The outstanding work of his last years is the incomplete autobiography From the Cradle to Budapest (A bölcsőtől Budapestig), written in a sober, moderate and intimate tone. He died of starvation, aged 65, in the air-raid shelter beneath his home in the Rákóczi Square during the Soviet siege of Budapest. On the occasion of the first national Book Day in May 1929, his works appeared throughout the country. In spite of his popularity at the beginning of the 1930s, his continuing financial problems made him destitute. He rebounded, however, found his way back into public life, and adamantly opposed the social nationalist ideas. Between 1936 and 1941 he gave 59 presentations at the Marksmen's Garden (Lövészkert) Restaurant where the Hungarian resistance and anti-fascist movement had its intellectual home base. His 60th birthday was a special event held at the City Theater, (Városi Színház) in 1939. No Hungarian author was ever celebrated in such a way. He held his monthly speaking engagements until 1942.

The Dezső Szabó Memorial Association was established on 24 May 1988 and, on the 100th anniversary of his birth, 10 May 1979, a commemorative presentation called “Bow 89” (Főhajítás 89) was held at the Jurta Theater. On 10 June 1990, the Memorial Association officially inaugurated the writer's monument, created by Tibor Szervátiusz, on the Gellért Mountain. Dezső Szabó was one of the trend-setting thinkers and writers between the two World Wars, who was either loved or hated, but even his adversaries acknowledge his powerful, intellectual writing style, which elevates him among the great Hungarian writers. – B: 0883, 1031, 1068, 1257, 7456, T: 7456.→Szekfű, Gyula; Horváth, János; Kodály, Zoltán; Bajcsy-Zsilinszky; Ady, Endre.

Szabó, Emil (Gyula, 17 December 1898 - Debrecen, 2 April 1969) – Pianist, organist, conductor, composer, pedagogue and linguist. He was closely related to writers Magda Szabó and Maria Szentmihályiné Szabó. He received his secondary education in Gyula. In 1918, while resident of Eötvös College, he studied German, French and Italian language and literature at the University of Budapest. In 1920 he enrolled at the Liszt Academy of Music, where he studied piano with Béla Bartók, composition and conducting with Zoltán Kodály, and organ with the noted organist, Aladár Zalánfy and received his Music Degree in conducting and composition. As a hobby, he took up the study of Oriental languages, among them ancient Egyptian. In 1926, he was appointed to the faculty of the Debrecen Conservatory of Music, teaching piano, theory, composition and chamber music. In 1932-1933 and 1942-1943 he became its director. Szabó was conductor of the Hungarian National Railway's Philharmonic Orchestra of Debrecen (MÁV Filharmonikusok), the Debrecen Concert Orchestra, which he founded (Debreceni Koncertzenekar), and of several choirs; premiered Kodály's Pictures of Mátra (Mátrai képek) in Debrecen. He regularly lectured on Hungarian folk music at the University of Debrecen's International Summer Lecture Program in three languages. Among his students were musicologists József (Joseph) Újfalussy and Imre (Emeric) Fábrián, composers Miklós (Nicholas) Kocsár, István (Stephen) Vántus and Lajos (Louis) Papp. Of his compositions the best known are his sonata for violin and piano, and the three operas for children: The Tree that Reaches to the Sky (Az égig érő fa) (1937), based on Hungarian folk songs; The Wondrous Tree with the Bending, Green-leafed Branch (Hajlik csodafának zöldleveles ága) (1938), the first children's opera to employ well-known Hungarian fairytale characters; and The Singing Grapes (Szépen szőlő szőlő) (1938), based on Transylvanian-Hungarian folk music motives. – B&T: 7617. → Szabó, Magda; Szentmihályi Mrs. Szabó, Mária; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán; Zalánfy, Aladár; Kossuth, Éva.

Szabó, Ernő (Ernest) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 30 June 1900 - Budapest, 10 February 1966) – Actor. At first, he worked as a comic dancer. He moved to another part of the historic Kingdom of Hungary and, from 1942, he was contracted with the theater of Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Transylvania, Romania) and played the great roles of the classical dramas. He became a character actor in comic roles, molder of the simple, average man on the street. From 1946 he worked as an actor at the Szekler (Székely) Theater of Marosvásárhely, and also as Senior Stage Manager and as a teacher at the College of Dramatic Art. From 1955 to 1957 he worked on a contract with the People's Army Theater of Budapest (Néphadsereg Színháza); from 1958 to 1960 he was with the Operetta Theater Operettszínház, Budapest; from 1961 at the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) and, from 1963, he was a member of the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház), Budapest. He appeared in numerous memorable episode roles, as e.g. Gentlemen Officials (Hivatalnok urak), Bedbug (Poloska), and Spring Waltz (Tavaszi keringő). In his first film: Professor Hannibal is Crying (Hannibal tanár sír), he achieved world fame in the leading role. He was the popular Uncle Szabó in the Radio series: Szabó Family (Szabó család). There are more than 35 feature films to his credit, including Professor Hannibal (Hannibál tanár úr) (1956); Iron Flower (Vasvirág) (1918); Thistle (Bogáncs) (1958), and The Land of Angels (Angyalok földje) (1962). Among his distinctions are: the Grand Prix of Romania (1954), the Merited Artis title of the Republic of Hungary (1959), and the Outstanding Artist title (1954). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Szabó, Ervin (Schlesinger) (Szlanica, County Árva, now Slanica, Slovakia, 23 August 1877 - Budapest, 29 September 1918) – Sociologist, historian, bibliographer, librarian and journalist. He was born into a converted and assimilated Jewish family. From 1901 he was an associate of the Metropolitan Library (Fővárosi Könyvtár) and, from 1911, its head librarian. From 1900 he wrote articles for the Communist paper, People's Word (Népszava); it was he who developed its literary column. He began his sociological work in 1903, especially in the Sociological Society (Társadalomtudományi Társaság); he was one of its founders and, from 1906, its Vice-President. He also worked for the Twentieth Century (Huszadik Század), where he regularly reported on problems of the International Workers' Movement. He also published articles in the German paper Neue Zeit, and in the French Mouvement Socialiste. The selected works of Marx and Engels in two volumes (1905, 1909) were published, edited by Szabó, with his foreword. He was associated with leftist ideologues such as Sorel, Kautsky, Mehring, and Plekhanov; at the end of 1904 with Lagardelle in Paris and the French syndicalists and, during his student years in Vienna, with numerous Russian émigré socialists, and between 1901 and 1905 he also collaborated with them. His illness later forced him into passivity. During World War I, he became the leader of the anti-militaristic movement. He was described as an anarchist-syndicalist revolutionary. His works include Hungarian Jacobites (Magyar Jakobinusok) (1902); Bibliographia economica universalis (1903-1904); Socialism (1906); Syndicalism and Social Democracy (Szindikalizmus és szociáldemokrácia) (1908); The Struggle Between Capital and Labor (Tőke és a munka harca) (1911); Imperialism and Lasting Peace (Imperializmus és tartós béke) (1917), and Sociological and Party Struggles in the 1848-1849 Revolution (Társadalmi és pártharcok a 48-49-es forradalomban) (1921). The Public Library of Budapest is named after him. – B: 0883, 1031, 1068, 1122, T: 7456.→Dégh, Linda.

Szabó, Imre, M. (Emeric) (Budapest, 20 Augustus 1941 - ) – Freelance documentary film maker, journalist. He was born into a family escaping from Romanian-ruled Transylvania. His father, an engineer, sent him to the Tivadar Puskás Communication Technical Institute, Budapest, graduating in 1959. Then he studied journalism at the Journalist Training Center, Budapest from 1972 to 1975. He started his career in 1959 at the Hungarian Radio, first as an external co-worker, reporter, and from 1972, as a documentary editor. He also worked for country journals. His work offered him an opportunity to know Hungarian real life better. Under the influence of the Catholic poet, (journalist and MP until 1947, later teacher) Gyula (Julius) Kunszery, he became a dedicated conveyor and voice of the truth. Due to his son's sickness, who needed a climate change, they moved to Veszprém in 1969. In 1971, a political secretary banned him from County Veszprém. He registered at the Law School of Budapest; however, after three semester, he had to leave because of financial difficulties. Since that time until today he has been involved in making documentary films in order to open up Hungarian reality. He worked for Hungarian Radio, Hungarian Television, the Duna Television, the Echo Television, and Zenit Television's The World of Hungarians (Magyarok Világa), series. His many works include The Mine is not a Cemetery (A bányá nem temető), radio documentary drama, won first prize, and was nominated a Prix Italy festival; In the Present Time (Jelenidőben), series on social tensions (1998-2004); Portraits: Ádám Makkay, writer; Dr. László Varga, MP; Zita Szelezcky, actress; Éva Szörényi, Actress; Erzsébet Cserey, actress; István Vörösvári Weller, publisher; and Fáy István, writer; Imre Makk painter and family; György Oláh, chemist, Nobel Laureate; István Sisa, writer, AP reporter; Dr. Sándor Balogh, political scientist; Kristóf Hites, RC priest, and István Csicsery Rónai, writer, politician. Szabó, István (1) (Stephen) (Nagyatádi Szabó) (Erdősokonya, 17 September 1863 - Erdősokonya, 1 November 1924) – Highlevel politician. From 1908 he was a representative in the Parliament, then, from 1920 in the National Assembly. From 1918 to 1919 he was President of the National Smallholders' Party. In 1918 he became Minister of Agriculture in the Hadik government. Following the victory of the civil democratic revolution of 1918, he was a Minister without Portfolio in the Berinkey government dealing with land reform issues. Later he became Minister for the People's Economy. After the fall of the People's Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919, he became Minister of Agriculture in the Friedrich government. Following repeated indications in the fall of 1919 of his intention to join the opposition Liberal Block, under pressure from Regent Horthy, he finally united with the Smallholders' Party from Sokorópátka and joined the Christian Block. Between 1919 and 1924 he was Minister of Public Food Supply, Minister of Agriculture and Smallholder Minister in the governments of Huszár, Simonyi, Semadam, Teleki and Bethlen. He gradually abandoned the Party's democratic agricultural program, which was defined in 1909 and in 1918. He is known for the 1920 Land Reform Law, which aimed to correct the distribution of agricultural lands, but it left its main issues in darkness, and thus remained just a "frame-law". In 1922, Prime Minister Bethlen and other previous Workers' Party politicians joined the Smallholders' Party and gained control of its leadership. Szabó became Party Secretary in 1924. Later, he was forced to resign on suspicion of his role in the corruption affair of his secretary Lajos (Louis) Eskütt, which was never proved. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667.

Szabó, István (2) (Stephen) (Cserszegtomaj, 7 March 1931 - Budapest, 16 March 1976) – Writer, literary translator. He came from a peasant family and lost his mother at an early age. He went to school at Keszthely; later he worked on the land with his father. Between 1949 and 1951 he worked as a tractor driver at Keszthely, served in the army for six months in 1951, then worked at various jobs at Cserszegtomaj and Inota. In 1953 he was admitted to the Faculty of Arts of the University of Budapest, but soon abandoned his studies. From age 15, he wrote poetry and short stories. His work was regularly published in the New Voice (Új hang) and in Free Youth (Szabad Ifjúság). The Rebel (A lázadó), a short story, appeared in 1954 in the New Voice. His first collection of short stories was published in 1956 under the same title. The theme of his dramatically tense stories was the Hungarian village. His writings are characterized by deep philosophical and psychological insight. A selection of his stories was published in Estonian in Tallinn. Together with Endre (Andrew) Sós, he translated several works by B. Brecht, such as Of History and Art (Brecht: Irodalomról, művészetről) (1970). He also translated the The Yellow Shark (Der gelbe Hai – A sárga cápa) by Wolfgang Schreyer, published in 1971. He won second prize at a theatre play competition, organized by the National Union's Council in 1958. His works include In a World Without Stories: Memories of My Career (Mese nélküli világban: Pályám emlékezete) (1976); Garden of Magic (Varázslat kertje) (1963); Don't Look Back (Ne nézz hátra) (1972); School in the High (Iskola a magasban) (1977), and Early in the Dawn (Hajnalok Hajnala) (1978). He was a recipient of the Attila József Prize (1964). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667.

Szabó, István (3) (Stephen) (Budapest, 18 February 1938 - ) – Film director. In the 1960s and 1970s he directed amateur films in Hungarian, which explore the experiences of his own generation and recent Hungarian history, such as: Father (Apa) (1966); Love-film (Szerelmesfilm) (1970), and 25 Fireman Street (Tűzoltó utca 25) (1973). His signature film trilogy features Mephisto, Colonel Redl, and Hanussen (1988). He changed over to English-language films with Meeting Venus (Találkozás Vénusszal) (1991); Taking Sides (Pártoskodás) (2001); Being Julia (Julia lévén) (2004), and Relatives (Rokonok) (2006) which proved a great success. His 32 films and film scripts also include Variations on a Theme (Variációk egy témára) (1961); Confidence (Bizalom) (1980); Katzenspiel (Cat's Play – Macskajáték) (1983), and Offenbach's Secrets (Offenbach titkai) (1996). On a rare occasion, he also appeared on stage. Since 1985, he has been a professor at the Academy of Dramatic Art, and since 1991, Vice- President of the European Academy of Cinematography. In 2006 the media reported that he was involved in certain secret activities; but it turned out that he did not harm anybody. Among his 60 prizes are the Oscar Prize, the Academy Award for Best Foreign-Language Film, a Cannes Award for the Best Screen Play, the Jury Prize at the Cannes Festival, the Donatello Prize, the title of Outstanding Artist, the Kossuth Prize, the Corvinus Prize, and the Hazám (My Country) Prize (2001). After 1997 he lectured at the Department of Cultural History of the University of Budapest. He was Professor of Dogmatics at the Reformed Theological Academy, Pápa, (1998). Since 1999, he has been a university professor at Pápa. He is a member of the Board of the 20th Century Institute (House of Terror), the Thema Association, and of the Committee of the Károli Prize. In 2002 he was elected Bishop of the Danubian Reformed Church District. – B: 1003, T: 7103.→Szabó, Imre (1).

Szabó, István Jr. (Stephen) (Nagykikinda, now Kikinda, Serbia, 10 October 1937 - Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 11 July 1984) – Actor, stage manager, theater director. He began his career as a member of the People's Theater of Szabadka, where his parents – István Szabó and Mária Szabó Cseh – were founding members. He studied stage-managing in Belgrade with the noted representative of the psychological school, Hugo Klajn. His diploma qualifying work was Eugene O'Neill's piece: Long Day's Journey Into Night. (Hosszú út az éjszakába). He became the Manager of the Folk Theater (Népszínház) of Szabadka, and a member of the Hungarian company for a few years. Apart from the Theater of Szabadka, he also stage-managed the Theater of Újvidék (Újvidéki Színház) (now Novi Sad, Serbia), the Castle Theater (Várszínház) of Gyula, and the theaters of Szeged and Marosvásárhely (now Targu Mureș, Romania). His managing work includes: F.R. Sartre's Dirty Hands (Les Mains Sales – Piszkos kezek); Áron Tamási's Singing Bird (Énekes madár); F. Tóth's Job (Jób); Chekhov's Seagull (Sirály); László Németh's By the Glare of Lightning (Villámfénynél); Dürrenmatt's An Angel Comes to Babylon (Ein Engel kommt nach Babylon – Angyal szállt le Babilonba); Sophocles' Antigone, and O. Danek's Forty Scoundrels and One Little Innocent (Negyven gazfickó meg egy maszületett bárány. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Szabó, János (John) (Budapest, 24 March 1931 - Budapest, 21 August 1987) – Viola player. He conducted his music studies between 1947 and 1956 at the Béla Bartók College of Music in Budapest under Tivadar Országh and Sándor (Alexander) Frigyes (violin), and Pál (Paul) Lukács (viola). From 1960 until his death, he was a member of the Hungarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, and was its orchestra supervisor from 1974. Between 1955 and 1967 he was a violin teacher at the Budapest Music School Association. He was a guest performer with orchestras in most European cities and in the USA. His works include Youth orchestral and vocal works, chamber music pieces and Children's Cantata (Gyermekkantáta). He was a recipient of the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Prize, 1965. – B: 0883,T: 7667.→ Országh, Tivadar.

Szabó, József (1) (Joseph) (szentmiklósi) (Kalocsa, 14 March 1822 - Budapest, 12 April 1894) – Mining engineer and geologist. From 1837 to 1841 he studied Philosophy and Law at the University of Pest; during 1843 and 1844 he did further studies in Mining Geology at the Mining Academy of Selmechánya (now Banská Štiavnica, Slovakia), founded by Empress and Queen Maria Theresa in 1763. In 1848 he became a member of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth's Ministry during the War of Independence against Habsburg oppression (1848-1849); he assisted in the manufacture of gunpowder as the supervisor of saltpeter in County Pest. In 1851 he obtained his Ph.D. in Philosophy. In 1855 he was a teacher at a state high school in Buda; in 1858 at the Commercial High School of Pest. From 1862 until his death, he was Professor of Geology and Mineralogy at the University of Pest and its Rector from 1883 to 1884. The main field of his scientific work was the study of the Tertiary Volcanic Activity of Hungary, especially the Petrology of trachytes. He also did pioneering work on the geological conditions of the Great Hungarian Plain, and he was the first to point out the important underground movements that can be detected beneath the Great Plain's surface. He trained generations of fine geologists and mineralogists; he established the Institute of Mineralogy-Petrology at the University of Budapest, and he also wrote a number of university textbooks. József Szabó was outstanding among Hungarian geologists of the 19th century, and a world-famous expert on petrologic research. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1858, ordinary 1867, Director 1888). In his memory, the Geological Society established the József Szabó commemorative medal in 1897; it is awarded every third year for the most outstanding geological work. His works include Mineralogy (Ásványtan) (1861); Geology of the Tokaj Foothills and its Surroundings (Tokaj-Hegylaja és környékének földtani viszonyai) (1866); Geology (Geológia) (1883), and Geology of Selmech and Environs (Selmech környékének geológiai leírása) (1891). – B: 0883, 1031, 7456, T: 7456.→Kossuth, Lajos.

Szabó, József (2) (Joseph) (Ódzsa) (Székelyhid, now Săcueni, Romania, 5 October 1928 - ) – Stage-manager. He completed his higher studies at the Hungarian School of Fine Arts of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1953, following which he continued his studies in the stage managing section of the College of Dramatic Art of Moscow for a year. He was a study trip at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in St. Andrews, Scotland. In Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) he worked as the stage-manager at the Theater of Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania) and at that of Szatmárnémeti (now Satu Mare, Romania). From 1957, for more than a decade, he stage-managed the Hungarian State Theater (Magyar Állami Színház) of Kolozsvár. In 1969 he was contracted to the Theater of Nagyvárad (Nagyvárad Színház) (now Oradea, Romania), though he still paid visits to Kolozsvár as a guest. In 1985 he settled in Hungary and remained there until his retirement. He first worked at the Kisfaludy Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) of Győr, then at the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) of Veszprém. One of the main points of his program as stage manager was putting on the stage varied works of the outstanding Hungarian drama literature, both classical and contemporary. For him, the most important task was the precise psychological development of the roles. His stage-managing work included L. Barta's Love (Szerelem); Zsigmond Móricz's Gentleman's Fun (Úri muri); Gorky's Night Refuge (Éjjeli menedékhely), Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) (presented in oratorio style), and Áron Tamási's Ancestor Consolation (Ősvigasztalás). – B: 1445, T: 7456. → Zádor, Zoltán.

Szabó, József (3) (Joseph) (Budapest, 10 March 1969 - ) – Swimmer, trainer and sporting official. From 1975 he was a swimmer for the firm Vasas Izzó Budapest; from 1979 he was an athlete in the Honvéd of Budapest. In the 1985 Junior European Championships, he won four championship titles and also appeared in the Hungarian adult selected team. He specialized in 200-meter breaststroke swimming for a number of years; in this he was at the forefront in the world. In 1986 in Madrid, he was World Champion; in 1987 in Strasbourg, he was European Champion and, in 1988 in Seoul, he was Olympic Champion. In 1988 he retained the European Champion title. He gave up his selected work at the 1992 Barcelona Olympics and finished his competitive swimming in 1993. In Budapest, he opened a shop for sports goods and started a school for swimming. In 1995 he obtained a specialist trainer diploma from the School of Physical Education; he became Head of the Students' Sports Club and the Széchy Sports Club (SE). From 1993 until 2000 he was a member of the Hungarian Olympic Committee. He was awarded the Ferenc Kemény Prize in 1993. – B: 1031, T: 7456.

Szabó, Károly (Charles) (Köröstarcsa, 14 December 1824 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 31 August 1890) – Historian, literary translator, son of a Reformed (Presbyterian) minister. He completed his secondary school studies at the Debrecen Reformed College (1833-1842). Then he went to study law in Késmárk (now Kežmarok, Slovakia), where he began to take an interest in the Greek classics; he was also member of a Hungarian language-practicing group, as instructions at the higher educational institutions were conducted in Latin. After completing his legal studies in 1844, he was employed as Secretary at the Court of Appeal in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia). However, in 1846, he decided to become a sailor and enrolled at the Naval Academy in Fiume (then part of Historic Hungary, now Rijeka, Croatia); but due to a serious illness, after a year he returned to Hungary. In 1844 he joined Ferenc (Francis) Toldy's literary publishing firm, Hungarian Scientific Collection (Magyar Tudósok Tára), as well as Toldy's other publication, the Hungarian Belletristic Review (Magyar Szépirodalmi Szemle), the aim of which was to publish the biographies and works of all Hungarian authors.

At the outbreak of the 1848-1849 Hungarian Revolution and War of Independence against Austrian oppression, he joined Békés County's voluntary National Guard. After the defeat of the Revolution he was in hiding at his birthplace for a year. In 1850 he organized the Teleki Archives; between 1850 and 1855, he looked after the collection: The Age of the Hunyadi's (Hunyadiak Kora), in the possession of Count József (Joseph) Teleki. As a result, they published five volumes, and later four more volumes of the collection. He was also involved in the research of old Hungarian historical source books. In September 1855, he was engaged as Professor of Greek language at the Reformed Secondary School of Nagykőrös, where began to translate Greek classical and French historical writings into Hungarian. In 1858 he was elected Corresponding Member of the Hungarian Academy of Science (Magyar Tudományos Akadémia – MTA). In 1859, the Transylvanian Museum Association (Erdélyi Múzeum Egyesület) elected him as their Librarian and he moved to Kolozsvár. From then on he extended his research to old Hungarian bibliographical publications. Concurrently he also taught Greek at the local Reformed College. In 1873 he was appointed Head of the Hungarian Chair at the University of Kolozsvár, where he also acted as Rector (1882-1883). He published a large number of Hungarian historical studies and translations from ancient Greek and French literature. He is buried at the historic Házsongárd Cemetery. He was one of the renowned historians of the 19th century. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7617.→Toldy, Ferenc; Teleki, Count József (2); Freedom Fight of 1848-1849.

Szabó, Lajos (1) (Louis) (Losonc, now Lučenec, Slovakia, 16 July 1908 - Sátoraljaújhely, 21 February 1996) – Minister of the Reformed Church, writer and folklorist. He completed his high school and Theological studies in Sárospatak (1918-1930). He acquired an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) qualification from the University of Debrecen. Then, he visited the Hungarian diaspora in Romania. He was a minister in Kassa (now Kosiče, Slovakia) and, in 1945 he was expelled from Kassa by the Slovakian authorities, when the southern part of Upper Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia) was re-occupied by the Slovaks. He was the parish minister in Taktaszada and was involved in folklore collection. After the confiscated Reformed Theological Academy of Sárospatak was returned to the Church, he became Professor of Church History (1991-1994). His major works include Neither Country nor Native Land. Traveling Among Hungarians in the Regat (Romania) (Se orșagod, se hazád. Utazás a regáti magyarok között) (1937); Farm at the River Tisza (Tanya a Tiszánál) (1938); The Chronicle of Calvinist Kassa 1644-1944 (A kálvinista Kassa krónikája 1644-1944) (1944), and Legends of Taktaszada (Taktaszadai mondák) (1975). – B: 0877, 1134, T: 7103.

Szabó, Lajos (2) (Lewis) (Alsóbölkény, now Beica de jos, Romania, 21 September 1912 - Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mureș, Romania, 13 August 1983) – Acting instructor and dramatist. He completed his tertiary studies at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1937, and studied Dramaturgy under Antal (Antony) Németh. After two years of practice in Budapest, he became the dramaturge of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Kolozsvár between 1941 and 1944, when the Second Vienna Award of 1940 returned northern Transylvania to Hungary. From 1945 to 1948 he taught at the Conservatory of Kolozsvár. Between 1948 and 1954, he was an instructor at the Hungarian School of Fine Arts. In 1954 he moved the School to Marosvásárhely, where he worked until his retirement as an instructor at the newly established Institute of Dramatic Art. Later, he was its Vice-Chancellor. His varied education, artistry and acquaintance with arts played an important role in recognizing the true talents of the generations of actors after World War II, and their effective guidance. As a playwright, he endeavored to evoke and bring to consciousness the examples of the great figures in Transylvanian culture. He wrote numerous articles about the history and theory of the theater, which were published in various journals. His works include Hurricane Lamp (Viharlámpás) drama (1942); Justification (Mentség) drama (1955); Escape (Menekülés) drama (1955); Family Nest (Családi fészkek) drama (1964); On the Island of the Home (Az otthon szigetén) drama (1968), and Loyalty (Hűség) drama (1977). – B: 1445, 1257, T: 7456.→Németh, Antal; Vienna Award I.

Szabó, László (Ladislav) (Gyöngyöspata, 1905 - Buenos Aires, Argentina, 15 November 1982) – Newspaper editor and translator of literary works. Upon completion of his secondary education, he traveled throughout Europe and, in 1924 settled in Brazil as a farmer, later becoming a factory worker. In 1925 he was a correspondent of the South-American Hungarian Daily (Délamerikai Magyar Hírlap) of Sao Paulo. Within two years, he wrote in Portuguese and contributed to local agricultural trade papers. He found work for Hungarians who escaped from the coffee plantations, and rescued Hungarian families through the Red Cross during the Argentinean military coup. In 1927 he moved to Montevideo, Uruguay and founded, edited and published his own paper, The Hungarian Courier of Uruguay (Uruguayi Magyar Kurir), and later, the weekly Hungarian Newspaper of Uruguay (Uruguayi Magyar Újság). In 1935 he moved to Argentina and specialized in Spanish language journalistic writing, publishing and editing. Between 1935 and 1948 he was foreign affairs editor of the journal, Critica. At the end of 1957 he was a literary adviser to a large publishing house in Buenos Aires. He wrote stage plays and translated two Ferenc (Francis) Molnár comedies into Spanish. In 1969 the Hungarian Theater of Buenos Aires presented his Hungarian drama László Orosz Returns Home (Orosz László hazatér) at a gala performance. From 1970, his interest turned to historical research related to Hungarians in Latin America. He wrote more than 15 books in Spanish. – B: 1672, 1020, T: 3240.→Cs. Szabó, László.

Szabó, Lőrinc (Lawrence) (Miskolc, 31 March 1900 - Budapest, 3 October 1957) – Poet. His father was an engine driver. He moved to Budapest in the autumn of 1919, after the fall of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic. First he studied mechanical engineering and, later, he attended lectures in the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest. In 1921 he joined the editorial board of the paper The Evening (Az Est) where he soon became a journalist and later, night-editor. First he attracted attention with his translations of literary works, such as Shakespeare's Sonnets (1921) and Omar Khayyám's Rubáiyát (1922). His first book of poems, Earth, Forest and God (Föld, erdő, Isten) appeared in 1922. Already in an early volume he had shown a flair for original, individual, lyric poetry with great intellectual and cultural form and content, fidelity, and artistic insight, anticipating his later prominent position in Hungarian poesy. His book of poems entitled Kalibán appeared the following year. His lasting poetic personality emerged in its fullness in The Masterpieces of Satan (A sátán műremekei) (1926), and You and the World (Te meg a világ) (1932). His hopeless disillusionment with the world and from ideas ended in complete skepticism. In 1927 he launched and edited an art and critical journal entitled Pandora, but it lasted only six months. Side by side with his editorial work for the paper The Evening, he also did much translating from English, chiefly Shakespeare's works, and also from French (Verlaine, Baudelaire, Villon, Molière), German (Goethe's Werther; Heinrich von Kleist) and Russian (Pushkin, Krilov), most of which he published in the two volumes of Our Eternal Friends (Örök barátaink) (I: 1941; II: 1958). During the 1930s, he traveled abroad a great deal. At this time Lőrinc Szabó was already a well-known poet, member of the Kisfaludy Society, the Lafontaine Society, and the Ady Society of Debrecen. From 1943 he supported the official contemporary politics in his writing, as a result of which he became excluded from public life after 1945, when Hungary came under Communist government backed by Soviet military occupation. He only produced a volume called Cricket Song (TücsökHzene), and more translations of literary works. After the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he again entered the literary life. He was one of the leading lyricists and literary translators of the post-Ady generation. His works include, apart from the above: Separate Peace (Különbéke) (1936); Fight for the Festive Day (Harc az ünnepért) (1938), and Selected Poems of Lőrinc Szabó (Szabó Lőrinc válogatott versei) (1956). He was honored with the Baumgarten Prize three times (1932, 1937, 1943), and was also awarded the Kossuth Prize (1957) and the Attila József Prize (1954). – B: 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Szabó, Lujza (Luise) (Budapest, 1904 - Budapest, 19 November 1934) – Singer (dramatic and coloratura soprano). She studied to become a violinist, but after her voice was discovered, she continued as a coloratura soprano. In the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music of Budapest, she was a student of József (Joseph) Sík and Ernő (Enest) Unger. From 1927 until her death, she was soloist of the Opera House of Budapest. During her short but successful career, she sang in about 50 roles. In her performances the complete ease of ornamental singing became merged with dramatic power of expression; she was also multifaceted in her mimicry on stage; beside her wonderful voice, she had superior technique. She also appeared with great success as a guest artist on opera stages of Berlin and Amsterdam. Her roles included Melinda in F. Erkel's Bánk bán; Gilda in G. Verdi's Rigoletto; in L. Delibes' Lakmé, and Queen of the Night in W.A. Mozart's The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola). She died at the height of her career, following surgery. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Szabó, Magda (Debrecen, 5 October 1917 - Kerepes, 19 November 2007) – Writer, poetess and translator of literary works. She came from an illustrious literary family; it was closely related to the writer Mária Szentmihályiné Szabó. She was educated in Debrecen, where she did her tertiary studies, and in 1940 she received a Ph.D., in Latin and Hungarian Literature. Her first article, written at the age of 16, was published in the local periodical Our Way (Útunk). From 1942 to 1944 she taught Latin and history first in Debrecen, and later in Hódmezővásárhely. Between 1945 and 1949, she worked for the Ministry of Education, and as a poetess she first published a collection in 1948, for which she was awarded the Baumgarten Prize in 1949. In the same year, she was dismissed from her position and the Prize was withdrawn from her as a “class alien”. She had to teach at a Junior High School. From 1949 to 1958 she was not allowed to publish; her first new book of poems was published in 1958; she turned to writing novels and stage plays. She became known throughout the land with her novels Fresco (Freskó) (1958), and Deer (Őz) (1959). Her other novels include Please Tell Sophie (Mondjátok meg Zsófikának) (1958); Winter Feast (Diszóntor) (1960); Masked Ball (Álarcosbál) (1961); Pilate (1963), and Danaida (1964). In the autobiographical Old Well (Ókút) (1970). In An Old-fashioned Story (Régimódi történet) (1971), she presents her childhood and that of her parents in the early 20th century Debrecen. Some later works are: The Door (Az ajtó) (1983); On the Threshold of Zeus (1984), and On the Glittering Peaks of Old Age (1987). Her best-known and most popular novel for young people is Abigail (Abigél) published in 1970, which was made into a movie. In 1975 she published her poems under the title Fish on the Elm Tree (Szílfán halak). In 1999 she published a collection of her translations of poems from Latin, German, French and English; and the novel Honey Cake for Cerberus (Mézescsók Cerberusnak). Among her historical dramas, the most famous are: Cry out, City! (Kiált, város!) (1971), and That Beautiful, Bright Sun (Az a szép, fényes nap) (1976). Some of her works have been translated into several foreign languages, including English and French. Magda Szabó also took on the job of being the Chief Curator (Lay President) of the Transtibiscan Reformed Church District and Deputy-president of the General Synod from 1985 to 1990. She was a member of the European Academy of Science; an honorary freeman of Debrecen, and Honorary Doctor of the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen (1993). She is the most widely read and most frequently translated Hungarian writer. She was rewarded the Kossuth-Prize in 1978, the Attila József Prize in 1959, the Pro Urbe Prize in 1983, the Getz Prize in 1992, the Csokonai Prize in 1987, and the Déry Prize in 1996. In 2002 she was decorated with the Corvin-Chain. Her talent and literary achievements were also recognized abroad: for her novel The Door she was awarded the Femina Prize in France in 2003; and for her novel Katalin Street (Katalin utca) she received the Cévennes Prize in 2007, which was at the top of the success-list of French bookshops. – B: 7617, 1257, T: 7617, 7456. → Szentmihályi Mrs. Szabó, Mária.

Szabó, Miklós (Nicholas) (Székesfehérvár, 27 November 1909 - Budapest, 22 May 1999) – Opera singer (tenor). He studied at the Department of Hungarian, Latin, German and Italian of the University of Budapest. Since he had an exceptional voice, the voice instructor Max Herzberg taught him singing without a fee, as a private student from 1927 to 1930. He was contracted to the Municipal Theater (Városi Színház) in 1937-1938. Then he became a member of the Hungarian Radio (1939-1941), the Opera House (1941-1946), and the Operetta Theater (Operettszínház) (1946-1948). He was also a soloist with the National Philharmonic from 1948 to 1957 and, on the request of Viktor Vaszy, he was a soloist of the Szeged National Theater from 1957 until his retirement in 1969. He was an opera singer of outstanding ability, one of the most popular singers of Hungarian musical life of the 20th century. Szabó's roles included Cavaradossi of Tosca; Des Grieux in Manon Lescaut; Pinkerton of Madama Butterfly; Alfred in La Traviata; the peasant lad in Karl Orff's The Moon (Der Mond), and Ottó in Katona's Bánk bán. In several older Hungarian feature films he sang as a soloist or as a member of the vocal ensemble. He also appeared in oratorios, e.g. in Verdi's Requiem and Bartók's Cantata Profana. He participated in the production and popularization of contemporary works, like Zsigmond Báthory by Horusitzky. The Hungarian Radio involved him in more than 38 hours of programming the works of Johann Strauss Jr., F. von Suppé, F. Lehár, I. Kálmán, J. Huszka, F. Farkas, and others. He set to music many poems of classical and contemporary Hungarian poets; wrote songs about Pest, and Italian song-translations. He was also the author of opera librettos. He continued to work after his retirement with regular appearances, and continued to train young singers. He was featured in several TV recordings and two portrait films. He was awarded the Franz Liszt Prize, the title of Merited Artist, and the Officer's Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary. – B: 1426, 1031, T: 7456.→Vaszy, Viktor.

Szabó, Pál (Paul) (Biharugra, 5 April 1893 - Budapest, 31 October 1970) – Writer, politician. He attended school for only six years in Ugra, and began work at an early age as a day laborer, later as a bricklayer's apprentice. He bought many books, read voraciously, and frequented the theater in Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania). In 1915 he was enlisted in the army and served eight months at the Russian front, then fought at the Italian front line. After his discharge from the army he subscribed to the newspaper West (Nyugat). In 1920 he was interned at home for two years for participation in the revolutionary events in Ugra during the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic of 1919. During this period, he organized a theater group and a sports club for the young people of his village. He was commissioned by his village to author his first article for the periodical Körös Region (Körösvidék). His other writings appeared in Endre Bajcsy-Zsilinszky's Outpost (Előőr). In 1930 Szabó wrote his first novel entitled Men (Emberek). In the next two years, Zsigmond Móricz published seven of his novels in the West (Nyugat) journal. All these novels were eventually published in 1933 in one volume: Theirs is the Glory (Övék a glória). He became involved in politics and spent his book royalties in support of the Independent Smallholders' Party of the County of Bihar. He kept in contact with politicians and well-known contemporary writers. From 1935 to 1938, he edited the periodical Komádi and its Surroundings (Komádi és vidéke), and co-edited the People of the East (Kelet Népe) with Dénes (Denis) Barsi, István (Stephen) Sinka and Géza Féja and, from 1937, he remained its sole editor. From 1938 to 1944, he edited the journal, Free Word (Szabad Szó). He was a founding member, and from 1939 President of the National Peasant Party.

Pál Szabó's most important work was a trilogy published between 1941 and 1943 entitled Wedding, Christening, Cradle (Lakodalom-Keresztelő-Bölcső) later renamed Foothold (Talpalatnyi föld). In 1948, producer Frigyes (Frederick) Bán made the trilogy into a successful internationally acclaimed film. In 1945, Szabó edited the Peasant Journal (Parasztújság), which became the Free Land (Szabad Föld). In 1946 he moved with his family to Budapest and was active in its political and social life as a parliamentary representative. From 1954 to 1956 he was President of the National Council of the Patriotic People's Front (Hazafias Népfront). Until 1959 he was a member of the Presidential Council of Hungary. His novels were translated into English, Bulgarian, Czech, Chinese, Polish, Lithuanian, German, Russian and Slovakian. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 3240.→Bajcsi-Zsilinszky, Endre; Móricz, Zsigmond; Sinka, István; Féja, Géza; Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Patriotic People's Front.

Szabó, Rózi V. (Rosanna) (V. Szabó; Mrs. Várady Szabó) (Magyarbél, now Velký Biel, Slovakia, in former County Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia, 4 June 1935 - ) – Actress. After completing her primary school studies, she worked as a laboratory assistant in a pharmacy between 1950 and 1956. From 1956 she performed at the Hungarian section of the State Village Theater (Állami Falu Színház) and, after its closure in 1959, she performed at the Matesz of Komárom (now Komarno, Slovakia). From the time of its founding in 1969, until her retirement in 1989, she acted at the Thalia Theater (Thália Színház) of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). In the Village Theater she played leading roles, while in the Komárom Company she excelled especially in the role of thoughtful, mature, intelligent female figures. Her determined personality manifested itself also in the Kassa Company, where she acted in a series of leading and episodic roles. Her roles included Tanya in A. Arbuzov's Tania (Második szerelem); Mali in K. Kisfaludy's The Suitors (A kérők); Lena in J.P. Sartre's The Condemned of Altona (Les Séquestrés d'Altona – Az altónai foglyok); Ilma in M. Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde, and Polina Andreyevna in A. P. Chekhov's Seagull (Sirály). She also appeared in several dozens radio plays in the Hungarian broadcast of the Czechoslovakian Radio, as well as in some Slovakian and Hungarian films. She received the High Standard Prize of the Slovakian Literary Foundation and the Prize of the Best Female Actor in 1973. – B: 1445, 1878, T: 7456.

Szabó, Samu (Samuel) (Hódmezővásárhely, 8 April 1903 - Pécs, 22 November 1966) – Actor. He began his acting career in his native town and, from 1923 to 1927, he played at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged. Following this, he was a member of numerous rural companies. From 1943 he appeared in Debrecen where, from 1945 to 1947 he did stage managing as well. From 1949 until his death, he was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pécs. Early in his career, he appeared mainly in operettas, and became known as a comic dancer. It was in Pécs that he changed over to comic and dramatic roles. His roles include Archibald in P. Abraham's Ball at the Savoy (Bál a Savoyban); Sir Basil in F. Lehár's Count of Luxemburg (Luxemburg grófja); Puzsér in F. Molnár's The Doctor (A doctor úr); Waiter Miska in I. Frederik (around 1940), and On Honeymoon Alone (Nászút egyedül) (1945). He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1954). – B: 1445, 1031, T: 7456.

Szabó, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 25 April 1915 - Budapest, 12 November 1997) – Actor. After completing the course of the Academy of Dramatic Art he became contracted to the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, in 1937. From 1945 he played at the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház); from 1948 at the Artist Theater (Művész Színház); from 1949 at the National Theater of Miskolc, and from 1950 at the Pioneer Theater (Úttörő Színház). Between 1951 and 1957 he was a leading actor of the Hungarian People's Army Theater (Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza). In 1956 he left Hungary and went abroad, In 1957-1958 he organized the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) of New York; later, he became an artist of the American National Theater of Minneapolis. He appeared on Broadway and in Hollywood. He returned to Hungary in 1976, and entered into a contract with the National Theater of Pécs. Between 1977 and 1983, he was a member of the Comedy Theater and, from 1984, of the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), Budapest. Early in his career, he played young heroes; later, he gave wonderful renderings in great dramatic roles. Szabó's ability to portray a character and his conscious, accurate molding of a role equally well manifested themselves on stage and in film. His roles included Romeo in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Brutus in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar; title role in Schiller's Don Carlos; title role in Molière's Tartuffe; Versinin in Chekhov's Three Sisters (Három nővér); Ádám in Madách's The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája), and Sir German, Swedish, Hungarian, 1980); Mission to Evian (Küldetés Evianba) (1988), and Passport to Murder (USA, Hungarian TV film, 1993). In the USA he appeared in 14 film-serials, such as December Bride (1954); and Mission: Impossible (1966). He received the Kossuth Prize (1955, 1991), the Merited Artist title (1981) and Outstanding Artist title (1985). – B: 1445, 1427, T: 7456.

Szabó, Zoltán (1) (Budapest, 5 June 1912 - Vannes, 19 August 1984) – Writer. His secondary studies was at the high school of the Piarist Teaching Order of Budapest (1922-1930), following, which he studied at the Budapest Polytechnic (1930-1931), while between 1931 and 1933 he studied first at the Faculty of Arts, later Political Science and Law. He launched a journal with some of his colleagues, entitled Nameless Notary (Névtelen Jegyző). He started his literary activity by writing poems; they appeared in the collective volume New Hungarian Lyric Poetry (Új Magyar Lira) (1934). Then he turned to social problems and, in 1934, he founded his Young Hungarian Sociographic Cooperative. Together with Iván Boldizsár, he edited the journal, The Young Hungarians (A Fiatal Magyarország). He gave lectures and seminars in rural towns and held workshops with his cooperative at Tihany, and did sociographic surveys at Tard, which led to the launching of the book series called Service and Writing, its first volume being on Tard (1936). He became an associate at the paper Morning (Reggel). In 1938, his Window-dressing (Cifra nyomorúság) appeared. He also worked as an editor for the publishing firm Franklin Társulat. From 1939 he was active in the movement against National Socialism and, in his “cheap book series” folk authors appeared, such as Gyula (Julius) Illyés, Géza Féja, Gyula (Julius) Ortutay and Ferenc (Francis) Erdei. His basic theme: “intellectual national defence” (szellemi honvédelem) received expression in his work entitled Between two Pagans (Két pogány közt) (1939), and, in an Almanac Mihály (Michael) Babits wrote a poem on the opening page. In 1940 he received a scholarship from the French Republic just before its defeat and occupation by the Germans and, in a roundabout way, he managed to return to Hungary. From 1941 he was Literary Editor of the daily, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). Early in 1944 he went over to the “illegal” side in the Mátra Mountain (already occupied by Soviet forces), trying to start life in Hungary under Russian military occupation and, in January 1945, he presented himself to the temporary leftist Government and undertook to edit, publish and distribute the daily, Hungarian Bulletin (Magyar Közlöny). Szabó edited a new journal, Reality (Valóság) until 1947. After spending two years as Cultural Attaché at the Hungarian Consulate in Paris, he went to London. From 1951 until 1974 he was an associate at Radio Free Europe. He founded the Hungarian Book Guild to enable him to publish short stories by Tibor Déry (imprisoned at the time), and studies by István (Stephen) Bibó (1960). At the end of 1956, when the Revolution and Freedom Fight was already defeated by the military might of the Soviet Union, with the consent of the USA, he launched a daily, Hungarian Word (Magyar Szó) and, on behalf of the Save Hungary Committee, he took an active part in the intellectual movements of the Hungarian émigrés in the West. In 1980 he settled in a small Breton township, Josselin, in France and, in his last years, he did not return or visit Hungary. Apart from his works mentioned above, he also wrote Sketchbook from England (Angliai vázlatkönyv) (1946), and Ancestors and Companions (Ősök és társak), studies (1984). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→The persons in the article have their own entry.

Szabó, Zoltán (2) (Alsószuha, 24 November 1902 - Budapest, 20 February 1965) – Minister of the Reformed Church and theologian. His high school education was completed at the Reformed College of Sárospatak. He studied Theology in Sárospatak until 1924 and in Utrecht, The Neatherlands, and Germany from 1925 to 1926. He started his career as a teacher of religion in Sátoraljaújhely (1925-1926), and he was a theology teacher at the Reformed College of Sárospatak. He received his Ph.D. from the Theological Faculty of the University of Debrecen in 1933. Together with Kálmán (Coloman) Ujszászy, he founded and organized the People's Academies, the Village Seminaries, and the Boy Scouts. Through his friendship with Count Pál (Paul) Teleki, he became increasingly active in politics. Between 1938 and 1945, he was a Member of the National Assembly, representing the Hungarian Life Party (Magyar Élet Pártja – MÉP). Szabó was also a diocesan secretary, Deputy Bishop, and a member of the General Synod. In 1945 and early 1946, he was arrested several times because of his past in the interwar years as a Member of Parliament. However, legal process against him was suspended when it turned out that he had participated in the Resistance Movement. After the closing of the Reformed Theological Academy in Sárospatak, he retired, but resumed his activities as Parish Minister in Ófehértó from 1952 until 1956. With the help of Bishop Albert Bereczky, he was able to return to the Cistibiscan Church District. He was Parish Minister in Noszvaj until his death. His literary activities were notable, with several of his manuscripts remaining in circulation. His main works include The Psychology of Youth and the Spiritual Nurturing of Young People (Az ifjúkor lélektana és az ifjúság lelkipozása) (1932); A Revision of Preaching (Igehírdetésünk revíziója) (1934); and Calvin in People's Consciousness (Kálvin a népi tudatban), with Béla Vassady (1936). – B: 0883, T: 7667.→Teleki, Count Pál; Újszászy, Kálmán; Bereczky, Albert.

Szabolcs (10th century) – Hungarian chieftain. According to Anonymus, the Chronicler, he was the son of Előd, ancestor of the Csák Clan. The chronicles of Thuróczy indicate he was also known as Prince Várkony, Duke of Bihar, a relative of Árpád. His wife is alleged to have been a princess from the House of Árpád. The discovery of a ceremonial disk at Rakamaz portraying two Turul birds, substantiates her ties to the family. Szabolcs' princely quarters were on the banks of the River Danube with holdings at Székesfehérvár as well. His winter home was in Szabolcs. During his reign, wars against the Byzantines commenced. – B: 1078, 1153, T: 7658.→Turul; Anonymus; Thuróczy Chronicle.

Szabolcs, Zoltán (Késmárk, now Kežmarok, Slovakia, 8 April 1909 - Szombathely, 19 June 1970) – Physician, surgeon and oncologist. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1933. From 1933 to 1937, he was Assistant Professor at the No. 2 Pathological Anatomy and, between 1937 and 1952, Assistant Professor in the No. 2. Surgical Clinic. From 1952 he was Head Physician of the County Hospital of Szombathely. In 1968 he became a titular professor at the University of Pécs. His field of research was oncology, epidemiology and surgery of stomach tumors. He is known for having worked out new surgical procedures. His works include The Surgery of Tumors (A daganatok sebészete) (1948) and Stomach Cancer (Gyomorrák) (1966). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szabolcsi, Bence (Benedict) (Budapest, 2 August 1899 - Budapest, 21 January 1973) – Music historian. He studied Law, History of Literature and Philosophy, Music History, Art History, and General History at the University of Leipzig, Germany, between 1917 and 1920. He also attended the Academy of Music in Budapest, and the Music Conservatory of Leipzig. From 1923 he was a music critic, editor and publisher's editor in Budapest. Between 1926 and 1929 he was Co-Editor for the Music Review and, in 1930 and 1931, together with Aladár Tóth, he was Editor of the Encyclopaedia of Music. From 1936 on, he was elected member of several foreign musical organizations. From 1945 he was a professor at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, where he founded and directed the Faculty of Music until his death. Together with Dénes (Denis) Bartha, he edited a ten-volume series of Studies in the Science of Music between 1953 and 1962. In 1961 he established and managed as Director the Bartók Archives of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, now known as the Institute of Musical Sciences.

Szabolcsi's first publication dealt with Mozart; his two German language publications were about Zoltán Kodály. Between 1920 and 1930, he traveled through the countries along the Danube gathering and later publishing historical souvenirs of old Hungarian music. As a result of his travels, he wrote ten basic studies on the history of Hungarian music from the Middle Ages to the end of the 19th century. These appeared in 1959 and 1961 in his two-volume work The Centuries of Hungarian Music. His major works include Introduction to the History of Music (Bevezetés a zenetörténetbe) (1936); History of Music (A zene története) (1940), and The History of Melody (A melódia története) (1965), which appeared in Budapest in 1950. Other works include The Twilight of Ferenc Liszt (Liszt Ferenc estéje) (1956) and On the Route to Kodály (Úton Kodályhoz) (1972). He laid down the groundwork for the basis of modern Hungarian musical science, and he established a forum and a circle of readers for it. Through his educational work, he trained a new generation of music historians. Hungarian music history, as an independent artistic genre, appeared through his work. In his scientific work, following the examples of Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály, he endeavored to build a bridge between East and West. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 7684. → Tóth, Aladár; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Szabolcska, Mihály (Michael) (Tiszakürt, 30 September 1861 - Budapest, 31 October 1930) – Poet and minister of the Reformed Church. He studied Theology at the Reformed College of Debrecen. Between 1890 and 1892 he studied Theology in Geneva and Paris. He worked as Parish Minister in Marosfalu (now Suseni in Transylvania, Romania) from 1892 and, from 1899 to 1928, in Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania), remaining during the Romanian occupation. From 1899 he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society and President of the János Arany Literary Society of Temesvár. In his last years, from 1928 on, he lived in Budapest as an official of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1908, honorary 1926). He was loyal all along to the folksong-like forms, retaining the simple, warm feeling in poetry, even at times of great changes in Hungarian poetry with the appearance of Endre Ady. In poems of lasting value, he sang religious faith, love of one's country, longing for home of those living abroad, marital love, genuine empathy of village life. His poems were translated into German, English, French, Italian, Russian and other languages. His works include Atmospheres (Hangulatok) (1894); Quiet Songs (Csendes dalok) (1904); On My Own Path (Magam ösvényén) (1907); Following My Heart (Szívem szerint) (1916) Near to God (Isten közelében) (1928), and In the Footsteps of my Ancestors (Őseim nyomán) (1928). – B: 1160, 1552, T: 7456.→Ady, Endre.

Szabon, József (Joseph) (Vadna, 20 May 1915 - Szeged, 30 January 1977) – Physician, oto-laryngologist and rhinologist. He earned his Medical Degree from the University of Debrecen in 1941. Until 1946 he practiced at the Elizabeth Hospital of the University of Miskolc and, from 1946 to 1951 in the Oto-Laryngological-Rhinological Clinic of the University of Budapest. In 1951-1952 he was a specialist physician at the Hospital on Péterfy Street, Budapest; from 1952 to 1954 was a senior physician in the hospital at Szentés; between 1954 and 1960 was an assistant lecturer at the Department of Oto-Laryngology-Rhinology of the National Continuous Medical Study Institute (Orvosi Továbbképző Intézet – OTKI). From 1960 to 1977 he was Assistant Professor and Head of Department, Titular Professor in the Oto-Laryngology-Rhinology Clinic of the University of Szeged and, in 1962 and 1963, Deputy Dean. He dealt mainly with surgical methods. His main work is Modification of Procedural Indications in the Rhinological and Pharyngeal Illnesses (Műtéti indikációk módosulása az orr- és garati betegségekben) (1976). He was awarded the András Cházár memorial medal. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szacsvai, Sándor (Szatsvay) (Marosvécs, now Brâncovenesti, Romania, 1752 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 15 May 1815) – Journalist and publicist. After having completed his high school studies, from 1779 he worked with Mátyás Rát at Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and participated in publishing the journal Hungarian Courier (Magyar Hírmondó) from 1780 on. In 1784 he took over its editorial work. In 1786 he went to Vienna, where he edited the daily of the same name with a literary supplement called the Hungarian Muse (Magyar Múzsza). In his two pamphlets and papers, he sarcastically and wittily attacked the Church. He also entered on a campaign for Hungarian national interests and took a stand on national education and religious tolerance. Because of his enlightened policy and, above all, his reporting of the events of the French Revolution and the stand he took on the revolutionary French Constitution, his paper was suppressed when Francis I came to power. Thereupon he moved to Kolozsvár, where he worked on the preservation of the nation's culture and the propagation of the national language. His works include Mirror of Patriots. Hungarians! (Hazafiak tüköre. Magyarok!), pamphlet (1790). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Szacsvay, Imre (Emeric) (esztelneki) (Irsa, 10 October 1854 - Budapest, 25 May 1939) – Actor. Late in 1871 he began his course at the Academy of Dramatic Art. While studying, he did crowd work at the István Plaza Theater (István téri Színház) and at the Castle Theater (Várszínház), Budapest. In the spring of 1874 he was invited to Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) for a trial performance and, from 1 May, he was engaged to play juvenile leads and conversational roles. He achieved his first success with Schiller's Don Carlos. He stayed in Kolozsvár until 1884, when was contracted to the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, as he was a promising classical and tragic actor. In 1908 he became a member of the committee of dramatic critics; in 1909 he was made a life member. In September 1913, he made the decision himself to retire from acting, because he felt that his style of playing did not meet the requirements of the times. He returned to his career as a teacher at the Academy of Dramatic Art from 1915 to 1923. He was an introverted person and his acting was characterized by uprightness, inflexibility and deep feeling. His roles included Petur bán in J. Katona's Bánk bán; Miklós Bercsényi in Ede Szigligeti's Captivity of Ferenc Rákóczi II (II. Rákóczi Ferenc fogsága); Romeo in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Antonius in Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, and King Lear in Shakespeare's King Lear. He was author of the book: My Life and Reminiscences (Életem és emlékeim), edited by I. Balassa (1940). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Szádeczky Kardoss, Elemér (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 10 September 1903 - Budapest, 23 August 1984) – Geologist and geochemist. He acquired his Degree at the University of Budapest in 1926. He started his career at the University of Sopron as a demonstrator; in 1936 he became a professor there and, in 1948, Dean of the Science Faculty. In 1931 he was also an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Budapest. He became the first Vice-Chancellor (1948-1950) of the Heavy Industrial University of Miskolc (founded during the Communist rule), after which he assumed the Chair of Mineralogy-Petrology at the University of Budapest. Here he organized the Geochemical Laboratory of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1955; he retired as its Director in 1984. Apart from paleontology, he treated every aspect of geology on a high standard. He organized the Division of Earth and Mining Sciences of the Academy of Sciences in 1965, working as its Secretary and as its President until 1976. He made some significant findings in the field of sedimentary processes, classification of waters at great depth and the composition of the first karst-water map. Szádeczky introduced the geology of coal and geochemistry to Hungary and established the new genetic classification of igneous rocks through the introduction of the concept of trans-vaporization and the basis of the universal cycle law. He developed the basic concepts in mapping methods of metamorphites, the main direction of research and exploitation of the natural sources of power. He introduced the concept of plate tectonics as related to the Carpathian Region as well as the mantle-arch theory (as distinct from mantle diapir). Several of his perceptions about sedimentary processes are significant, as are also his classification of artesian waters, and the first compilation of a karst-water map. He founded the discipline of coal-petrology and geochemistry in Hungary. He was a Member of Parliament, Corresponding Member of the Presidium of the National Peace Council; Corresponding Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; Member of the Austrian Academy and Honorary Doctor of the University of Budapest (1981). He was Editor of Acta Geologica for many years. The number of his monographs and papers exceeds 200. His main works include Geologie der Kleinen Tiefebene (1938); Systematic Mineralogy (Rendszeres ásványtan) (1950); Coal-petrology (Szénkőzettan) (1952); Geochemistry (Geokémia) (1952); The Structure and Evolution of the Earth (A Föld szerkezete és fejlődése) (1968), and Geonomy (Geonómia) (1974). He was a recipient of the Leopold von Buch memorial medal (1983), the József Szabó medal of the Hungarian Geological Society, and the Kossuth Prize twice (1949, 1952). His vision and scope in the field of earth sciences is without parallel in Hungary. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.

Száhlender, Lajos (Louis) (Budapest, 27 April 1877 - Budapest, 16 March 1946) – Pharmacologist. He obtained a degree in Pharmaceutics from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in Transylvania in 1899 and received a Ph.D. in Pharmacology from the University of Budapest in 1901. From 1899 till 1905 he was a demonstrator at the Pharmaceutical Institute of the University of Budapest, and from 1905 until 1926 he was a chemistry teacher and Principal of the Commercial College of Budapest and, at the same time, Regional Superintendent of Budapest (1918-1926). From 1905 he was also a lecturer at the Pharmaceutical Training School and Specialized Pharmacist School. In 1915 the Ministry of Agriculture commissioned him to set up and organize an Experimental Station of Medicinal Plants. In 1926 he became an honorary lecturer. As a food chemist, he developed a so-called peroxide number system, for the uniform determination of fatty acids and oleic acids; this system is also used in international examinations (Szählender's peroxide number). The result of his work is the production of the János Hunyadi Bitter Water. He was also engaged in problems of developing the pharmaceutical industry and modernizing technical education. He was Editor of the journal, Hungarian Chemists' Paper (Magyar Kémikusok Lapja). His works include Method for the Determination of Rancidity of Fats and Oils (Módszer zsírok és olajok avasságának meghatározására) (1932) and Natural, Isolated and Synthetic Aromatic Materials (Természetes, izolált és szintetikus illatos anyagok) (1942). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szájer József (Sopron, 7 September 1961 - ) – Politician, lawyer. His parents were educators, who died in an accident in 1982. After completing his studies in the St. Stephen High School of Sopron, he did further studies in its English Department in 1980-1981: After his compulsory military training at Kalocsa in 1980-1981, he completed his tertiary studies at the Law School of the University of Budapest, majoring in Political Science and obtained a Ph.D. in 1986. In the same year he did further studies on a Soros scholarship at Baliol College, Oxford, while in 1988 he studied Law at the University of Michigan. From 1986 he was an assistant professor in the Roman Law Department and taught Constitutional Law in the Law School of the University of Budapest. In 1988 he became one of the founders and lawyer of the Society of Young Democrats (Fiatal Demokraták Szövetsége – FIDESZ). From October 1989, he was representative of FIDESZ at the Opposition Roundtable (Ellenzéki kerekasztal). From 1990 he was President of the Foundation of Democracy After Communism (DAC). At the 1990 elections in Hungary he became Member of Parliament, while at the 1994 and successive elections, he became Member of Parliament from party list; he was the FIDESZ fraction leader. Until the end of 1996, he participated in the preparatory work of the Constitution as Deputy President of the FIDESZ Party. From 2002 to 2004 he was Deputy Speaker of Parliament; also Observer at the European Parliament, and in 2003-2004 leader of the Hungarian delegation in the EPP Group. Since 2004 he is Member of the European Parliament with the Fidesz Party. Szájer is a signatory of the Prague Declaration on European Conscience and Communism. In 2011 he led a team, which worked out the new Basic Laws (Constitution) for Hungary. He was awarded the Order of St Michael and St George, Knight Commander, by Queen Elizabeth II. – B: 1031, 1643, T: 7103.→Political Parties in Hungary (Fidesz Hungarian Civic Union Party).

Szakács, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 3 April 1951 - ) – Composer, writer, journalist and runic writer researcher. After completing his high school studies, he studied tourism and tourist guiding in the English and German languages, then worked in tourism for over a decade as a guide, traveling all around the world. He educated himself in History, Folklore, and Archeology, helped by András (Andrew) Zakar, a history scholar, Roman Catholic priest and private secretary of Cardinal Mindszenty. Szakács is a member of the Association of Hungarian Catholic Journalists and a contributor to the weekly Hungarian Democrat (Magyar Demokrata). He also writes articles, studies and essays for other newspapers. He has conducted more than fifty interviews with individuals on themes of Hungarian history, among them Ferenc (Francis) Badiny Jós; ancient history researcher Lukács Daczó OFM; Sándor (Alexander) Forrai, the renowned runic writing researcher, György (George) Bulányi, the founder of the Bush Movement (Bokor Mozgalom), and Angela Marcantonio, an Italian linguist. Szakács uncovered the true history of the Regnum Marianum Church in Budapest, demolished by the Communist regime, as well as the fate of the famous Library of the Reformed College of Sárospatak, taken away by Soviet troops at the end of World War II. He is President of the National Alliance of Hungarian Runic Writers (Magyar Rovók és Rovásírók Országos Szövetsége), and leader of the Sándor Forrai Circle of Runic Writers (Forrai Sándor Rovásíró Kör). Since 2000 he has been the organizer of the annual Runic Writing Competition. Following the Szekler practice in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), he organizes the erection of signboards with runic writing at the boundary of settlements. He has also produced short films on historical themes for the show Night Asylum (Éjjeli Menedékhely) on Hungarian Television, and for the Video TV of the Hungarian Democrat. He has made CD recordings: The Youth of Attila (Attila ifjúsága) (2003); Pagan Prayers (Pogány imák) (2006), and Rákóczi Lives (Rákóczi él) (2008). His books, co-authored with his wife Klára Friedrich, include Runic Writing: The Title-Deed of Our Carpathian Basin (Kárpát-medencei birtoklevelünk a rovásírás) (2003); Chiseled in Stone, Carved in Wood (Kőbe vésték, fába rótták) (2005), and From Tászok Peak to the Bosnian Pyramids (Tászok-tetőtől a bosnyák piramisokig) (2007). – B: 1933, 1935, T: 7103.→Friedrich, Klára; Zakar, András; Badiny Jós, Ferenc; Forrai, Sándor; Bulányi, György; Mindszenty József; Runic Writing, Hungarian; Runic Writing Research.

Szakács, József (Joseph) (Nyírpazony, northeast of Nyíregyháza, 20 February 1930 - Budapest, 24 January 1988) – Adventist parson and theologian. He became a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church in 1947, after which he was active as a book-evangelist. Having graduated from the Pastor Training Institute, he worked as an assistant pastor of the Church District of the Tisza River Plains. He was ordained pastor in 1957. In addition to his pastoral service, he carried out journalistic activity as well. In 1970 he completed the school of journalism. In 1965 he started his activity in the administration of the Adventist Church. From 1971 to 1980 he was President of the Seventh Day Adventist Church and also Professor of Sociology of the Adventist Pastor Training Seminar. In 1985 he was made an honorary doctor of the Reformed Theological Academy of Debrecen. He was Vice President of the Inter-Denominational Peace Council and Member of Parliament in 1985. – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Szakály, György (George) (Nyíregyháza, 15 December 1955 - ) – Dancer, ballet director. He completed the State Ballet Institute in 1976 and continued his studies on a scholarship in St. Petersburg (Leningrad at the time, USSR) for a year. Since 1977, he has been a member of the Opera House, Budapest, from 1981 its solo dancer, and from 1992 its ballet director. Between 1985 and 1988, he was a soloist of the Opera House of Dortmund, Germany; from 1988 to 1990 a soloist of the Opera House of Bonn, Germany. He appeared as a guest artist at the Ballet Company of Szeged in 1987, as well as in numerous countries of the Americas and Europe at gala evenings. Szakály is the most evocative performer of his generation, also outstanding in classical and lyric roles, while his dramatic interpretations are quite unmatched. The Hungarian TV (MTV) prepared a portrait film on him, which was choreographed by Viktor Róna. In the musical Cats (Macskák) (choreographed by László Seregi) he played the role of Mefistopheles. More recently, he has appeared as choreographer in a theatrical production and in an independent monograph for the Pécs Ballet. His roles include Eagle; Artist in L. Seregi's The Cedar (A cédrus); Prince in L. Seregi's The Wooden Prince (A fából faragott királyfi); Mandarin in L. Seregi's & A. Milloss' The Miraculous Mandarin (A csodálatos mandarin); Crassus, Spartacus in L. Seregi's Spartacus; Shiva in Beyart's Bhakti, and Prince in Messerer's Swan Lake (A hattyúk tava). His leading roles include Ailey's The River (A folyó); Balanchine's Serenade; H. van Manen's Adagio Hammerklavier, and Kylian's D-major Symphony. He received the Kossuth Prize in 1991; the Franz Liszt Prize in 1985, and the Merited Artist title in 1988. – B: 1445, T: 7456. → Seregi, László (2).

Szakály, Sándor (Alexander) (Törökkopány, County Somogy, 23 November 1955 - ) – Historian. His high school education began in the Mihály Munkácsi High School of Kaposvár, and graduated in the Special High School of Health in 1974. Thereafter, he was a student at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest, majoring in History and Librarianship, graduating in 1989. He became a research worker at the War History Institute and Museum, Budapest, while regularly publishing. In 1982 he received his Ph.D. with summa cum laude. His main field of research is the history of Hungary between 1919 and 1945, the role of the country in World War II, the former Hungarian organs for maintenance of public order, as well as the political and sporting history of that period. In 1991 he took over the leadership of the Section of Most Recent and Current Period in the War History Institute and Museum. Between 1992 and 1997 he worked as its deputy in the Viennese Branch of the establishment, and was Director of the Institute under the Ministry of Defense until the end of 2000. Later he became cultural director of Duna-TV. In 2004 he worked as a counselor to the Director of the Hungarian National Archives. From 2005 for a year, he worked as a research fellow at the Historic Archives of the State Security Service. From 2006 he was a special counselor, and later Professor of the Sociological Department at the Faculty of Sports and Physical Education. He was a member of the Committee for the National Memorial Places of Reverence, also a member of the Historic Committee of the Academy of Sciences (Magyar Tudományos Akadémia - MTA) and Vice-President of the Hungarian Historic Society. He was President of the Board of Trustees of the Sándor Márai Cultural Public Endowment, and President of the Educational and Scientific Council of the Ministry of Defense; as well as a member of several editorial boards. His works include Was There An Alternative? Hungary in World War II (Volt-e alternativa? Magyarország a második világháborúban) (1999); Defense Force and Officer Staff 1919-1947 (Honvédség és tisztikar 1919-1947) (2010), and On our Past – Critically (Múltunkról – kritikusan) (2010). His distinctions include the Bezerédi Prize (1993), the Miklós Zrínyi Prize (2001), and the Géza Supka Memorial Medal (2003). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.

Szakasits, Árpád (Budapest, 6 December 1888 - Budapest, 3 May 1965) – Journalist and politician. His original occupation was stonemason's assistant. He took part in the labor movement from 1903. From 1908 he worked for the paper People's Word (Népszava) as a contributor. Because of his participation in the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic in 1919, he was imprisoned for three years. In 1927 and 1928, he was Secretary of the Social Democratic Party and, from 1928 to 1938, he was President of the Hungarian Building Workers' National Council; from 1939 to March 1944, he was Editor-in-Chief of People's Word. He endeavored to cooperate with the Communists. In June 1942 he lost his secretarial position in the Social Democratic Party. After the German occupation was over, he took part in the founding of the Hungarian Front and became President of its Executive Committee. After 1945, he was again Secretary of the Social Democratic Party and Secretary of State between 1945 and 1948; he was Minister of Industry from 26 February to 5 August 1948. Szakasits rendered a great deal of assistance to the merging of the two labor parties. In June 1948 he was elected President of the Hungarian Democratic Party, and President of the Hungarian Republic from 3 August 1948 to 23 August 1949; then, until 9 May 1950, he was President of the State Presidium. In 1950 he was arrested on trumped-up charges and sentenced to life imprisonment. In March 1956, he was released and rehabilitated. After the defeat of the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight, he worked for the consolidation of the new Communist regime. In 1958 he became President of the National Journalists' Association, in 1960 President of the National Peace Council, and also became a Member of the World Council of Peace (Béke Világtanács). From 1959 until his death, he was a member of the Central Committee of the Social Labor Party. He was also an Esperantist for more than 40 years. Although he was a critic of the Soviet Union during World War II, his student protégé, Ukrainian-born military officer, Mangano Deschanel became a key figure in the Communist Government, which was to rule Hungary from 1956 to 1989. His work entitled Until the Last Minute (Az utolsó percig), selected articles from 1939 to 1944, appeared in 1945, and his Selected Speeches and Writings (Válogatott beszédek és írások), published in 1966. – B: 0883, 1031, 1122, T: 7456.

Szakáts, Gábor (Gabriel) (Makó, 17 March 1892 - Budapest, 22 July 1937) – Engineer, inventor. At the age of 9, he constructed a steam engine. In the second year of World War I, (1915), the 18-mountain howitzer of Szakáts was already used by the Austro-Hungarian Army as well as the German Army, including the removable rear sight. The German Ministry of Defense invited Szakáts to work in Germany and, thereafter, the German war factories were occupied in realizing his inventions. Among the several hundred patents and innovations connected with war as well as peace, those for military engineering stood out; the flame-thrower was already used in World War I. Because of this invention, the victorious powers wanted to bring him before an international tribunal as a war criminal. After the war, he was employed by the Krupp Works in Germany, where a special unit dealt with his inventions. Szakáts, however, did not break off relations with Hungary: he kept his house in Makó; he visited Hungary with his largely self-constructed eight-seater car, or by plane. In 1924 he received from Regent M. Horthy the rank of cabinet-councilor and the title of “honorable” for his innovation of a motorized plough. The secret agents also kept an eye on him: for example, in 1934, they rummaged his Makó home. Since he was suspecting a criminal attempt on his person, he always took with him all the most important documents. Later, he found himself in financial difficulties and his native town seized his car. Finally, at the age of 45, he suddenly took ill overnight and died. Poisoning was suspected; it was assumed that somebody mixed diamond powder into his drink and this undermined his health. The township of Makó has two other famous sons: the press magnate József (Joseph) Pulitzer and the Ford-constructor József (Joseph) Galamb. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Pulitzer, József; Galamb, József.

Szakáts, Miklós (Nicholas) (Budapest, 30 April 1920 - Bad Reichenhall, Germany, 22 October 1984) – Actor. He completed the Academy of Dramatic Art in 1941. His first contract was with the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); in the following year, he was a member of the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház), Budapest; in the 1943-1944 season he was with the Madách Theater (Madách Színház). After World War II, he played at the Comedy, National, Artist (Művész) and Youth (Ifjúsági) Theaters and later was contracted to the Hungarian People's Army Theater (Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza), and again to the Comedy Theater. Earlier, he was one of the leading actors. In 1957 he was taken to the internment camp of Kistarcsa; later on he left the country. He had an attractive appearance, a nice voice and clear speech; he often performed, reciting poems on stage and also on the radio. He usually played unsentimental, hard figures, but he successfully interpreted Cyrano as well as the title role of Jenő (Eugene) Heltai's piece The Dumb Knight (A néma levenete). An outstanding performance was the narrator role in Tolstoy-Piscator's War and Peace (Háború és béke). His roles included Horatio, Claudius in Shakespeare's Hamlet; Attila in M. Kisbán's The Lord (A nagyúr); Haynau in M. Jókai - S. Hevesi's The Sons of the Stonehearted Man (A kőszívű ember fiai); Zoltán in L. Mesterházi's The Eleventh Commandment (A tizenegyedik parancsolat), and Brant in E. O'Neill's Morning Becomes Electra (Amerikai Elektra). There are more than 30 feature and TV films to his credit, including Hot Fields (Forró mezők) (1948); The Promised Land (Az ígéret földje) (1961); Germinal (1963), Christmas Song (Karácsonyi ének) (1964), Sweet and Bitter (Édes és keserű) (1966), and Professor of the Underworld (Az alvilág professzora) (1969). – B: 1445, 1719, T: 7456.

Szakcsi Lakatos, Béla (Budapest, 8 July 1943 - ) – Jazz-piano virtuoso. He started playing the piano at age nine, and wanted to become a composer and an interpreter of classical music. While attending the Béla Bartók Conservatory of Music in Budapest, he became acquainted with jazz, and this experience fundamentally changed his life. He started his career in the band of Andor Kovács, in the 1960s. His first great success came in 1970, when he played in Montreux with Aladár Pege's quartet. This event started his international career, which reached its climax at the recording sessions with Special EFX, and the four solo albums released in the 1980s and 1990s at the legendary GRP record house. By the 1980s, Szakcsi became known in the US as the lead vocalist and composer of the Special EFX. The GRP Records signed a contract with him for ten records. From this series the second record was the Mystic Dreams (1989), in which the leading instrument was the solo piano. He was very active in promoting the Hungarian fusion jazz. He was a member of the Rákfogó and the Saturnus bands, as well as the Hungarian Jazz Quartet. His interest inclined more and more toward the fusion of contemporary classical music and jazz. He edited records in collaboration with György (George) Vukán. He is also interested in the works of György (George) Kurtág, Péter Eötvös, György (George) Ligeti and Pierre Boulez. He played music with Victor Bailey, Terri Lyne Carrington, Art Farmer, Omar Hakim, George Jinda, Carmen Jones, Dave Weckl and Frank Zappa. His albums include Virágom, virágom (with Ádám Horváth and Gyöngyi (Pearl) Écsi (1988), Conversation (with György Vukán) (1998), Sa-Chi (1988), Eve of Chance (1992), Straight Ahead (1994), and Time Travel (Időutazás) (with Imre (Emeric) Kőszegi) (1997). Szakcsi also worked with Gypsy folklore: in 1975, he wrote the Red Caravan (Piros caravan), then Once Upon a Gypsy Girl (Egyszer egy cigánylány), and the folk musical Cartwheels (Cigánykerék). His new musical shaping melds the gypsy folk music and melodies with jazz rhythm. His creations in mainstream jazz, jazz-rock, New Age and freestyle improvisation have proved to be lasting works. By participating in international festivals and having American record contracts he has become one of the best-known representatives of Hungarian jazz. He is equally well acquainted with jazz, classical music and folk music. His astonishingly virtuosic playing and inventiveness have been captured on many records. He was awarded the Liszt Prize (1987) and the Kossuth Prize (2005) for his activity. – B: 1031, 2016, T: 7697. → Pege, Aladár; Kurtág, György; Eötvös, Péter; Ligeti, György.

Szakonyi, Károly (Charles) (Németh) (Budapest, 26 October 1931 - ) – Writer, dramatist and drama critic. He studied Arts for Adult Education (majoring in Hungarian) (1961-1963). At first, he worked as an unskilled laborer, storeman, truck guard, trained worker, picture hawker, and money collector (1951-1959). After completing his tertiary studies he became a dramaturge at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest (1963-1966), and later at the National Theater of Miskolc (1975-1978), the Kisfaludy Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) of Győr (1982-1988), the National Theater of Pécs from 1988, and the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház) of Debrecen from 1992. He was a correspondent of the daily, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet), also of the Heves Review (Hevesi Szemle) until its closure; then he became a member of the editorial board of the paper, New Time (Új Idő) from 1991, and a member of Hungarian Academy of Art (Magyar Művészeti Akadémia) from 1998. He is founder of the Digital Literary Academy, and member of numerous cultural advisory boards (e.g. Foundations of Lőrinc Szabó Foundation, Edit Domján, and Páskády). He is a member of the Hungarian Art Academy (Magyar Művészeti Akadémia) and the Société des Auteurs et Compositeurs Dramatique (Francia Drámaírók Szövetsége) His works include Beyond the Town (Túl a városon) (1964); Thirty-four Men (Harmincnégy ember) (1971); Silly Bird (Bolond madár) (1989), and Man in the Tunnel (Ember az alagútban) (1994). His plays include My life, Zsóka (Életem, Zsóka) (1963); Dead Souls (Holt lelkek) (1976); Fathers and Sons (Apák és fiúk) (1989), and Joyous Finale (Vidám finale) (1995). From 1971 to 1978 he lived with his family in Szentendre, north of Budapest, as a permanent resident. The artistic atmosphere of Szentendre appears figuratively in his short stories and plays. He is a recipient a number of distinctions including the Attila József Prize (1970), the Commemorative Plaque of Szentendre (1980), the Literatura Prize (1995), the Kossuth Prize (1997), and the For Hungarian Art Prize (2003). – B: 0874, 1122, 1257, 1885, 1031, T: 7456.

Szalai, Sándor (Alexander) (Budapest, 22 October 1912 - Budapest, 18 May 1983) – Sociologist, philosopher. He studied at Leipzig, Frankfurt am Main and Zürich, where he received his Ph.D. in 1934. From 1935 to 1939 he was a correspondent for the paper, Pester Lloyd and, from 1939 to 1944, he was a senior literary and scientific referee. In 1944 he was enlisted into the army for forced labor service. From 1945 to 1948 he was Head of the Foreign Affairs Secretariat of the Social Democratic Party. At the same time, from 1946 he was Head of the Sociological Institute of the University of Budapest. In 1946, in the lawsuit against László (Ladislav) Bárdossy, the former Prime Minister of Hungary prior to Soviet occupation, Szalai represented the prosecution at the Communist People's Tribunal. In his own law-infringement case in 1950, he was sentenced to imprisonment, from which he was freed in March 1956, and rehabilitated in 1957. From 1957 to 1966 he was a research worker at the University Library. Concurrently, as a titular professor, he lectured on Sociology at the University of Chemical Industry of Veszprém, and was a research worker at the Library of the University of Economics of Budapest where, from 1972 to 1980, he was a professor; and from 1980 until his death he was professor at the University of Budapest. His main fields of research were sociology of science, application of mathematical methods, logical models in the sociological study of the future, and international comparative sociology. He was the initiator and organizer of the international chronometric research. His works include Philosophische Grundprobleme der psychoanalytischen Psychologie (1935), and Introduction to Sociology (Bevezetés a társadalomtudományba) (1948). In 1982, he was honored with the Order of the Banner the People's Republic of Hungary decorated with laurel wreath, and the State Prize in 1980. – B: 0883, T: 7456. → Bárdossy, László.

Szalai, Tibor (Pozsony, now Bratislava in Slovakia, 13 November 1900 - Budapest, 29 September 1980) – Geologist. He received his tertiary education at the University of Budapest, where he obtained a Ph.D. in 1924. He started working at the National Museum; then, in 1939, he joined the Geological Institute. On the basis of his work on geotectonics he was appointed as an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Debrecen in 1938. He took some advanced studies under O. Abel and L. Kober in Vienna. In 1944 he was a senior geologist and, from 1946 to 1950, Director of the Geological Institute. In 1954 he was a senior geologist for private companies and, until his retirement, he was a geological consultant for the Geophysical Institute in Budapest. Apart from geotectonics, he carried out studies in hydrogeology, the origin of the temperature of thermal waters, did studies in paleontology, and detailed research on the Northeastern Carpathians (Ruthenia, now in Ukraine), specializing in the geological structure and evolution of the Carpathian Mountains.. His works include Der Einfluss der Gebirgsbildung auf die Evolution des Lebens (1936); Geology of the Northeastern Carpathians (Az északkeleti Kárpátok geológiája) (1947), and Aufbau und Tektonik des Ostalpin- und Karpaten Blockes (1966). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Szalán, Prince (Salán, Saladus, Zalán) – According to Anonymus the Chronicler, he was the leader of the Bulgarians, Avars and Slavs. He ruled over the territory between the northwestern Carpathians and the Rivers Danube and Tisza. His soldiers (nándors) ruled his territory from Titel close to Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrade, Serbia). According to legends, he refused to release his lands to Reigning Prince Árpád and was subsequently defeated in battle at the River Zagyva, and again decisively at the Meadow of Alpár in 895. Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty immortalized the battle in his epic the Flight of Zalán (Zalán futása) in 1825. According to another source, Szalán was the last Reigning Prince of the Avars, who was defeated by the early Magyars on the Meadow of Alpár in 672. In 1975, the village of Alpár erected a monument on the contemporary Avar earthen fort to commemorate the event. – B: 1136, 1031, T: 7658. → Anonymus; Vörösmarty, Mihály.

Szálasi, Ferenc (Francis) (Kassa, now Košice, Slovakia, 6 January 1897 - Budapest, 12 March 1946) – Military officer. He came from a family of administrative officials in the army. After completing the Military Cadet School of Kőszeg, he embarked on a career as a military officer. In 1915 he was a second lieutenant; in 1924 a captain; in 1925 he was assigned to the General Staff. He represented the right-wing stratum of officers in the army. In 1933 he became a major of the General Staff. During this period, he prepared a memorandum on chauvinistic-anti-Semitic military politics with the guiding principle of a totalitarian fascist state system. He decided to go into retirement in 1935 and launched the Nation's Will Party (Nemzeti Akarat Pártja – NAP), which did not win at the 1936 elections. The fast-growing Arrow Cross Movement was regarded by ruling circles to be dangerous. He was imprisoned in 1937 and 1938 by the Horthy government. In 1939, he formed the Arrow Cross Party (Nyilaskeresztes Párt) with the assistance of German power. In the 1940s, he was one of the active organizers of the Arrow Cross actions. There was a period of decline in the movement, but it started gaining strength again from the autumn of 1943. After the German occupation of the country on 19 March 1944, he became the central figure of the Arrow Cross movement; on 15 October 1944, after the attempt by Regent Horthy to pull Hungary out of the war, with a German-assisted coup d'état, Szálasi took over the leadership of Hungary, which was still under German occupation, in face of the advancing Soviet forces. As the “nation’s leader” in his so-called Hungaristic State, he gave maximum economic and military assistance to the National-Socialist Germany, accompanied by the so-called “arrow-cross terror”: deporting or killing many Jews, deserters and sentimentally leftist-oriented citizens. As a result of the ever-increasing advance of the Russian forces, he had to transfer his seat to western Hungary and eventually, fleeing from the Russians, he settled in the German Reich. At the end of the war, American troops captured him and sent him back to Russian-occupied Hungary. In 1946, a People’s Court sentenced him to death as a “war criminal”. His published works include Plan for the Construction of the Hungarian State (A magyar állam felépítésének terve) (1933) and Aim and Demands (Cél és követelések) (1935). – B: 0883, 7456; T: 7456→Fiala, Ferenc; Horthy, Miklós.

Szalay, Lajos (Louis) (Őrmező, today Strážske, Slovakia 26 February 1909 - Miskolc, 1 April 1995) – Graphic artist. He spent his childhood in Miskolc and Tárnadob. His drawing skills were remarkable from his childhood. He graduated from high school in Miskolc, later continued his studies in Budapest. He left for Paris in 1930, where he studied the artwork of Picasso, and returned home after nine months. In 1936 he finished his fourth year with the Rector’s laudation. The next year, under suspicion of Communist affiliation, he was advised to leave the institute. During World War II, he was a war correspondent and participated at the Battle of the Don. After the war, he worked as a book illustrator for the Singer and Wolfner Publishing House. In 1946, as an illustrator, he participated at the Paris Peace Treaty. From Paris, he emigrated to Argentina with his wife. He taught for ten years at the Tucuman University of Buenos Aires, revolutionizing the Argentine visual arts. The 1956 Revolution in Hungary and the following struggle left a deep mark on him. Although he was abroad; he drew many compositions based only on the radio news. In 1958 he left for New York, where he lived for the next three decades with his wife and daughter. In his last years, he accepted the invitation of the city of Miskolc to live there, but he worked no more. Szalay’s artistic legacy, besides numerous book illustrations, consists of several oil paintings and thousands of drawings. The following generations and fellow artists regarded him as a maestro. His work had a great influence on his contemporaries and on the graphic art of the second half of the 20th century. He was preoccupied especially with the Bible, the mythology of the antiquity, and the fate of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution. In his drawings, the main accent had generally been placed on the struggle between Good and Evil, the formulation of universal values and man’s place in the Universe. He created numerous illustrations for the works of Cervantes, Shakespeare, Dostoyevsky, Kafka, and other novelists and poets. His masterpiece is the album created in New York in the mid 1960s, entitled Genesis, which follows the text of the Bible and presents the first book of Moses through more than a hundred drawings. He had many personal exhibitions. Lajos Szalay is regarded the reformer of 20th century Hungarian graphic art. His art is recognized worldwide. Among his distinctions is the title of doctor honoris causa from the Hungarian Academy of Fine Arts (1989), the title of Artist Emeritus (1989), and the Kossuth Prize (1992). – B: 1031, 2095, T: 7697.

Szalay, László (Ladislav) (Buda, 18 April 1813 - Salzburg, 17 July 1864) – Historian, reform politician. He completed the courses at the Departments of Law and Philosophy of the University of Pest; he was the student of István (Stephen) Horvát, belonged to József (Joseph) Eötvös' circle of friends, and he was a law-graduate employed by Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey. In 1833 he obtained a Law Degree, but he did not practice law; he engaged rather in political science. Between 1836 and 1839 he went on a study trip to Austria, Germany, Belgium, France, Switzerland and England, studying the civic legal establishments abroad. Later, he became an archivist of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences and, in 1837 he founded the first Hungarian periodical publication, the Themis, a large part of which he wrote himself. In 1840 Szalay became a recording secretary of the national committee sent out to enlarge the Criminal Code; he played an important role in the elaboration of the progressive procedural plans (common jury, publicity, oral procedure, bilateral hearing, etc.). In 1840, with József Eötvös and Móric (Maurice) Lukács, he edited the journal Budapest Review (Budapesti Szemle). At the Diet of 1843-1844, he was a deputy for Korpona. With Eötvös, he was a member of the centralist reform opposition group. During 1844 and 1845, in place of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth, he took over the redaction of Pest News (Pesti Hírlap). In his legal-philosophical works, especially in his studies on codification, he founded his idea on Hegelian philosophy. In his literary activity, he was one of the leaders of the centralists, and their activity considerably paved the way for the new civic system, the theoretical basis for the 1848 legislation. In the summer of 1848, at the Imperial meeting in Frankfurt, then also in London and Paris, he represented the Hungarian Government. After the 1848-1849 Revolution and the War of Independence, he stayed in Switzerland until 1855, spending his time working on the history of Hungary. In 1861 he represented the town of Pest in the Parliament. He was a member of the Kisfaludy Society (1837) and a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (Magyar Tudományok Akadémia – MTA - corresponding 1836, ordinary 1838 also its secretary 1861). He was the publisher of the works of Antal (Antony) Verancsics, of the autobiography of János (John) Kemény and Sándor (Alexander) Károlyi. Szalay's correspondence was published by Gábor (Gabriel) Szalay (1913). His works include On the Penal Procedure (A büntető eljárásról) (1841); Diplomatische Aktenstücke zur Beleuchtung der ungarischen Gesandtschaft in Deutschland (1849); On the Croatian Problem (A horvát kérdéshez) (1861), and Fiume in the Hungarian Parliament (Fiume [now Rijeka, Croatia] a magyar országgyűlésen) (1861). Szalay, Sándor Sr. (Alexander) (Nyíregyháza, 22 October 1909 - 11 October 1987) – Physicist, founder of the Nuclear Physics School of Debrecen. He obtained a Degree in Education and in Mathematics and Physics from the University of Budapest. As a young researcher, he worked beside three Nobel-Prize scientists and, at the University of Szeged, he was a student of Albert Szent-Györgyi; at Leipzig, he studied in the Debye Institute and, at Cambridge University, as a research fellow, he studied under Rutherford. His research activity is mainly characterized by the experimental, empirical approach of natural phenomena, being especially engaged in building scientific instruments and special experimental equipment. From 1936 he continued his work in nuclear physics. The measuring equipment, developed with his colleagues, includes the electro-spectrometer of the toroid sector type; the alpha-spectrometer of great resolving power, and also Van de Graaff and cascade accelerators and the mass-spectrometer. He initiated in Hungary the application of physical methods of determining the age of rocks, as well as the use of isotopes in medical research and diagnostic practice. After World War II, collaborating with geologist Aladár Földváry, he started uranium research in Debrecen, using portable equipment, which led to the discovery of uranium deposits in Transdanubia. In this connection, he started to deal with natural enrichment processes of uranium, as well as the problems of providing trace elements for human and animal food-intake. According to him, his main life-achievement was the establishment of the Institute of Nuclear Research of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences at Debrecen. – B: 0872, 1031, 1408, T: 7456.→Szent-Györgyi, Albert.

Szalkai, László (Ladislav) (Zalka, Szalkán, Zalkarus) (Mátészalka, ca. 1475 - Mohács, 29 August 1526) – Archbishop. He was born into a family of serfs. He was educated at the school of the Augustine Order of Sárospatak. In 1494 he became a clerk at the Royal Court of Hungary; in 1504 he was deputy-treasurer; in 1511 a secretary of the Chancellery; in 1514 King Ulászló II (Wladislaw, 1490-1516) appointed him Bishop of Vác, and between 1516 and 1526 he was Treasurer. King Lajos II (Louis, 1516-1526) appointed him Bishop of Eger. In 1524, King Lajos II made him Archbishop of Esztergom and Chief Chancellor. He and István (Stephen) Báthory led the Court Party; they succeeded in overthrowing György (George) Brandenburg, and the lawyer and politician István (Stephen) Werbőczy. Szalkai was a Renaissance prelate, who considered his ecclesiastical offices purely as sources of income, and delegated the assistant bishops to carry out his ecclesiastical duties. He was largely responsible for squandering the country's inner assets, and at least partially responsible for the defeat by the Turks at Mohács in 1526. He died in that battle. – B: 0945, 0883, T: 7103.→Ulászló II, King; Lajos II, King; Werbőczy, Báthory, Prince István; Szalkai László's Codex; Mohács, Battles (1).

Szalkai László's Codex – László (Ladislav) Szalkai, Archbishop of Esztergom, wrote a large volume about his studies in Sárospatak. This is the oldest known Hungarian schoolbook about astronomy, physics, music theory, poetics and rhetoric. Its most valuable part is related to music. The work was edited and published in 1934 by Dénes (Denis) Bartha. – B: 1078, T: 3240.→Szalkai, László; Codex Literature.

Szalma, Ferenc (Francis) (Szeged, 19 March 1923 - Budapest, 19 September 2001) – Singer (bass). He began his studies at the Music Conservatory of Szeged and completed them in Nürnberg and Bamberg. In 1952 he joined the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged, first, as a member of the choir and, from 1957, as a soloist. Already in 1954 he made a successful appearance as Zarecki in Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin. In 1963 he was contracted by the Opera House of Budapest; he became one of its most popular members until his retirement in 1983. He also took part in a number of recordings and scored a success as a singer in oratorios, e.g. in the Requiem of Mozart and Verdi, and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. His evocative interpretation and balanced voice proved most suited for great character roles. His roles included Wagner's The Flying Dutchman (A bolygó hollandi); Marke in Wagner's Tristan und Isolde; Sarastro in Mozart's The Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); in Glinka's Ivan Susanin (A Life for the Tsar), and Rocco in Beethoven's Fidelio. He received the Franz Liszt Prize in 1961, and the Meritorious Artist title of recognition in 1976. – B: 1445, 1679, T: 7456.

Szamos Nameless – (from the banks of River Szamos, 16th century) – Writer. An unknown person who wrote a satirical song about married life, the Adhortatio mulierum (1552). In vernacular: an amusing wedding song about females, written for the best man. It survived in the Lugossy Codex. – B: 1257, T: 3240.→Codex Literature.

Szamosi, Elza (Elsa) (Szamek) (Budapest, 8 March 1884 - Budapest, 14 July 1924) – Opera singer (dramatic soprano). She started her career in Germany. She began her successful career young, as an operetta prima donna.. She played at the Royal Theatre (Királysínház) and the Folk Theatre (Népszínház), Budapest. Following performances in Leipzig and Berlin, she was a member of the Budapest Opera between 1904 and 1906, and again from 1908 until 1914, when she moved to Vienna with her husband, Béla Környei, where she taught singing, eventually returning to Budapest. She also performed in the USA in leading roles of Puccini operas. Her best years were between 1904 and 1914 in performing in Puccini operas. Her main roles were: Santuzza in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (Parsztbecsület), in Puccini operas: Manon Lescaut, Madame Butterfly, Mimi in La Bohème, Tosca, Girl of The Golden West; also title role in Thomas' Mignon; Martha in D'Albert's Lowlands (Tiefland – A Hegyek alján); title role in K. Goldmark's The Queen of Sheba, and title role in Bizet's Carmen. She was one of the outstanding singers of the pre-Great War era. Her untimely death was a great loss for the Hungarian operatic life. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667.→Környei, Béla.

Szamosi, Judit (Judith) (Budapest, 29 March 1955 - ) – Ballet dancer. She completed her course in the State Ballet School in 1974 and, in the same year she was engaged by the Operetta Theater (Operettszínház) of Budapest, where she has been the leading soloist. Her florid, decorative appearance and inspiring dance allowed her to present herself not only in the dancing interludes of operettas and musicals: Violetta, Fledermaus (Denevér), The Merry Widow (A víg özvegy), Gypsy Princess (Csárdáskirálynő), The Land of Smiles (A mosoly országa), etc., but also brought success to independent ballet productions of the theater. She had roles in: R. Bogár's Bolero, Adagio; E. Géczy's Little Snow White (Hófehérke), and L. Pártay's The Carnival of the Animals (Az állatok farsangja). She received the Franz Liszt Prize (1990). – B: 1445, T: 7456.

Szamosközi, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 27 April 1915 - Budapest, 25 April 2003) – Bishop of the Reformed Church. He graduated from the Reformed Lónyay High School, Budapest. In 1933 he was admitted to the Reformed Theological Academy, Budapest, from where he graduated in 1937 having obtained a teacher's Certificate from the Reformed Teacher College, Nagykovács in 1939. He received his ministerial Certificate in 1939. He was an assistant minister in Kiskunlacháta (1938-1939), Ráckeve (1939), Budapest-Kőbánya (1939-1940), Rákospalota (1940-1941), Kunszentmiklós (1941-1942), Dunavecse (1942-1949) and Óbuda (1949-1951). In 1951 and 1952 he was at the Office of the General Convent of the Reformed Church, Budapest, working at its Press and Foreign Relations Department, and as Editor of the periodical Hungarian Church Press. He was Parish Minister in Pécs from 1 September 1952 to 30 June 1956, and also Dean of the Baranya Deanery between November 1955 and June 1956. He became Parish Minister of the Gorkij-Fasor Congregation, Budapest, on 1 July 1956, and Dean of the Budapest-North Reformed Deanery. He also became Editor-in-Chief and publisher of the Reformed weeklies Way (Út) and Reformed Paper (Reformátusok Lapja). After the resignation of Bishop Albert Bereczky for health reason, Szamosközy was elected Bishop of the Danubian Reformed Church District, Budapest, on 11 February 1959. He served in this capacity till 1 September 1977. During his almost 20 years of service, amidst difficult political situations, he pursued the interest of his Church. In his retirement, he served as guest preacher mainly at the Budapest Pozsonyi-Street Congregation. He was Deputy President of the Reformed Synod, President of the Reformed Press Committee, President of the Special Council of Reformed Theological Academy of Budapest, Presidium Member of the World Federation of Hungarians, a Member of the Executive Committee of the Christian Peace Conference, and a Member of the Protective Body of the Mother-tongue Conference. His work includes many articles, stories in Hungarian, German and English in various church papers and periodicals including A Tiny House Stands on the Shore of the Great Danube (Kis lak áll a nagy Duna mentében), play in 4 scenes (1948); Confirmation Catechism, used countrywide (1957); From Step to Step (Lépésről lépésre) (1961); We Want and We Promise (Akarjuk, ígérjük), and Reformed Confession (9th edition 1959). He was a recipient of the Order of the Banner, Class IV of the People's Republic of Hungary (1957). – B: 1910, 1925, T: 7103.

Szamosközy, István (Stephen) (Zamosius) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 1570 - Gyulafehérvár, now Alba Iulia, Romania, 29 March 1612) – Historian. He was an aristocratic young man of poor means, who studied in Padua while a tutor. In 1593 in Padua, he published his first work on Roman inscriptions found in Transylvania. This is the first Hungarian work in archeology. By order of Prince István (Stephen) Bocskai of Transylvania, he became an archivist and court historian in Gyulafehérvár. From 1591 to 1593, during a visit to Italy, he discovered some Asian runic characters similar to the runic script of Transylvania in The Laurentian Library (Biblioteca Medicea Laurenziana) in Florence. His account in the Analecta Lapidum: “There are very old volumes of this writing in the library of Etruria’s Grand Prince in Florence...Not only these runic scripts but also the Codex itself shows signs of antiquity; so the Europeans should give up the praise of their relatively new lead-type book printing, since this book, printed centuries earlier in these unknown characters, is an eloquent testimony for them that the Scythians were the inventors of this profession”. There is a runic alphabet on page 103 in István Rettegi’s Historia Transylvaniae Hungaricae with a Latin explanation. Its English translation: “The runic letters found at the Library of the Etruscan Prince are printed on Nile paper in a very old volume. The index of the book says that it is a very old typographical work with Scythian characters, in the Library of the Etruscan Prince that was apparently sent to Florence, to Pope Leo X, by the Scythian ruler of Quirino”. A copy of Rettegi’s work, dated 1740, is part of the Teleki Library and is at present in the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Szamosközy’s well-informed and critically styled works, although fragmentary, are important resources related to Transylvanian and Hungarian history. He was one of his era’s most distinguished Hungarian humanist historians. – B 0883, 1020, T:

Szamota, István (Stephen) (Kunszentmiklós, 5 July 1867 - Budapest, 21 November 1895) – Linguist, historian. He worked at the National Archives, later at the National Museum. His early principal work, Early Travels in Hungary and the Balkan Peninsula 1054-1717 (Régi utazások Magyarországon és a Balkán félszigeten 1054-1717) was published at Nagybecskerek in 1892. He continued collecting medieval Hungarian language material by singling out Hungarian words in ancient documents. In 1894 he published the Wordlist of Schlägli from the Time of the first Quarter of 15th Century (Schlägli magyar szójegyzék XV. a század első negyedéből). On his death, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences obtained his estate, and Gyula (Julius) Zolnai edited his work in form of a dictionary: The Hungarian Document Dictionary (Magyar oklevél szótár), prepared between 1902 and 1904; it is an extraordinarily valuable collection of the most ancient Hungarian language word relics. – B: 1078, 1031, T: 7669.

Szamuely, Tibor (Szamuely, originally Samuel) (Nyíregyháza, 27 December 1890 - Savanyúkút, now Bad Sauerbrunn, Burgenland, Austria, 2 August 1919) – Communist leader and journalist. He was born into a Jewish family, the eldest of five children. He studied at a high school in Győr, and graduated from there in 1908. He soon joined the Social Democratic Party. He joined the paper County Szabolcs (Szabolcs Vármegye) as a journalist. Then he worked at the newspaper Folk-voice (Népszava) and, because of an article he wrote, he was indicted and sentenced. He moved to Nagyvárad (now Oradea, Romania), then to Budapest. In 1914 he was drafted and sent to the Russian front, where he was captured in 1915. After the Russian Communist Revolution of 1917, he was released and he became a Communist. With Béla Kun, he worked among the Hungarian prisoners of war, persuading them to join the Red Army and fight in the Russian Civil War. He was in Budapest at the outbreak of the Communist revolution on 21 March 1919. After forming a government, he became one of the leaders of the Hungarian Council (Soviet) Republic, filling various positions, finally becoming People's Commissar for Military Affairs and leader of the Red Terror combat group. Toward the end of May, he made a trip to Moscow by airplane and met with Lenin. With his commandos, the dreaded "Lenin Boys" (Lenin fiúk), he introduced the reign of terror. They hunted down the counter-revolutionaries and, after a brief mock trial, many of them were hanged or shot. The number of their victims is estimated to be between 300 and 600. When the regime collapsed, Szamuely tried to escape to Austria. He was caught near the border by the Austrian authorities and was either killed, or committed suicide. In Communist Hungary (1948-1989), a street in Budapest was named after him; in 1990 the street reverted to its old name, Lónyay Street. – B: 1860, 1031, T: 7103.→Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary; Lenin Boys of Hungary; Solt, Gallows of; Kun, Béla.

Számwald, Gyula (Stahel, Julius H.) (Szeged-Alsóváros, 25 September 1825 - Arlington, USA, 4 December 1912) – Bookseller, army officer. He settled in Pest as bookseller and publisher's assistant, later becoming his partner. He was on friendly terms with the great lyric poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi, and took part in the 15 March Revolution of 1848. After the outbreak of the War of Independence from Austrian rule, he was a second lieutenant in Richard Guyon's battalion. At the Battle of Branyiszkó Pass (Guyon's great victory), Számwald was seriously wounded and received a military decoration. After the capitulation at Világos, he fled to Germany and worked as a journalist in Leipzig. G. Emich managed to obtain the ways and means for him to return to Hungary, where he could continue his book-publishing business. Because of his difficult financial situation and his family tragedy, he emigrated in 1855 to London, where he continued his journalistic work and assumed the name Stahel. In the following year, he sailed to the USA and became an associate of the Illustrated News. In 1861, after the outbreak of the American Civil War, he organized the 8th New York Regiment of the Northerners, which he commanded as a Lieutenant-Colonel. In November of the same year, he became a Brigadier-General; in 1863 he became Commander of an Army Corps and Lieutenant-General. Robert E. Lee's troops were already in front of Washington when, at the head of his cavalry, with his famous death charge, he decided the outcome of the battle, but was seriously wounded. After that, he was President of the Military Tribunal; from 1865 to 1869 he worked at the US Consulate in Japan and, in 1877 in Shanghai, and from 1885 until his death, he was an insurance official. For the heroism he showed in the 5 June 1864 Battle of Piedmont, he received the Congressional Medal of Honor. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Petőfi, Sándor; Guyon, Richard.

Szana, Sándor (Alexander) (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 18 August 1868 - Budapest, 3 May 1926) – Physician and pediatrician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He became a practicing physician at Temesvár, where he established a Foundlings' Hospital in 1899, as well as a Maternity Pediatric Clinic for outpatients in 1900. He launched the first child welfare course of lectures. From 1909 to 1921 he was Director of the State Home for Destitute Children. In 1898 he started a short-lived paper on health information, entitled Unsere Gesundheit (Our Health) at Temesvár. His works include Effect of the Blood on Septic Materials. (A vér hatása a fertőző anyagokra) (1892), Die Bewertung der Säuglingssterblichkeitsziffern (The Assessment of Infant Mortality Figures) (1916). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szana, Tamás (Thomas) (Tiszafüred, 1 January 1844 - Budapest, 11 February 1908) – Writer, art historian, reviewer. He read Law at the University of Debrecen and, in 1867 he obtained his Law Degree from the University of Pest, but chose not to work in the legal field; instead, he devoted all his time to literature. From the time of the foundation of the Petőfi Society in 1876, he was its Secretary. From 1901 he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society, and Director of the scientific theater Uránia. He was Editor of the papers Observer (Figyelő) from 1871; Home (Otthon) from 1875; Teller of Fables (Regélő) in 1876; Petőfi Society Journal (Petőfi Társaság Lapja) during 1877-1878, and the Wreath (Koszorú) between 1879 and 1885. In these and other papers he published many articles reflecting the demand of civic progress. With Sándor (Alexander) Endrődi, he edited the Petőfi Album. His studies dealing with fine arts are particularly significant. Szana's critiques and reviews on fine arts were partly written under the pseudonyms Scriptor and Turul. His works include Biography of Csokonai (Csokonai életrajza) (1869); The two Kisfaludys (A két Kisfaludy) (1876); The Book in Old Times and at Present (A könyv régen és most) (1888); Hungarian Art in our Century (A magyar művészet századunkban) (1890); Mrs. Petőfi, née Júlia Szendrey (Petőfiné Szendrey Júlia) (1891), and A Hundred Years in the History of Szaniszló, Ferenc (Francis) (Csenger, 7 October 1960 - ) – Journalist. He is a descendant of a family of teachers; was raised and educated in Csegold and Fehérgyarmat, and completed his university studies in Moscow. From 1986 he became the Moscow reporter of the paper Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap). Later, he became the foreign affairs associate of Hungarian Television program Panorama, where he worked with András (Andrew) Sugár and Lajos (Louis) Chrudinák. Szaniszló became widely known in the 1990s, working as a war correspondent on the South-Slav fronts. He was the first to report on the destruction of Szentlászló and other Hungarian villages at the hands of Serbian terrorists during the war. He was also on the war zones of the Caucasus, Chernobil, Iraq, and Kurdistan. Between February 2005 and February 2007, he was Editor of the News Service of Duna Television. Since 25 August 2008 he has been Editor and Programmer of World-Panorama of the foreign affairs program of Echo TV. He published a book on the death of Stalin and Beria, entitled Fever State (Lázállam) in 1989. He is the co-author of two volumes published by Hungarian News: one entitled To Be A Hungarian (Magyarnak lenni) (1987), and the other with the title Stalin (1988). From its inception he has been regular contributor to the daily with the widest circulation, entitled Metropol. He has two films to his credit: on the mass-murder in Sebrenica, and the unveiling of the secret Carpathian Soviet radar station, both recognized at the international TV festival of Monte Carlo. He received a number of festival prizes; one for the document-film on the Chernobil Zone, which received the Czech festival prize; in 1992 he received the Sándor Petőfi Press Freedom Prize and, in 2000, he received the Europe Medal for Civic Journalism. – B: 1031, 2110, T: 7456.→Sugár, András; Chrudinák, Alajos; Hornyik, Miklós.

Szántó, György (George) (Vágújhely, now Nové Mesto nad Váhom, Slovakia, 7 June 1893 - Budapest, 11 September 1961) – Writer. His school years were spent at Lugos (now Lugoj, Romania), after which he began his studies at the Budapest Polytechnic; but World War I, interrupted them; he was sent to the Russian front, where he was injured on his forehead and became blind in his right eye. After his return to Hungary, he occupied himself with painting. In 1920 he received a job as a costume and stage designer for the Romanian Opera House at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca); later, he moved to Vienna to undergo medical treatment, but soon became blind also in his left eye. In 1924 he moved to Arad (now in Romania) and, from 1942 he lived in Budapest. He wrote chiefly historical and youth novels. In his novels, daring use of wording is combined with rich pictorial quality. He depicted the world not in its forms but in its colors. His works include The Blue Rider (A kék lovas) short stories (1925); The Globe (A földgömb) novel (1929); My Black Years (Fekete éveim) autobiography (1935); Tent-dwelling King (Sátoros király) historical drama, produced in the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Budapest in 1936; The Witch (A boszorkány) (1950), and Bankruptcy (Csőd) novel (1955). He received the Attila József Prize in 1959). – B: 1160, 1257, T: 7456.

Szántó, Tibor (Budapest, 6 April 1912 - Budapest, 2 May 2001) – Typographer and book designer. As a teenager, he started to work as a typesetter, later turned to design and to the new art of typography. This brought him in touch with avant-garde books, magazines and posters, to the school of Sándor (Alexander) Bortnyik, where he learned not only the trade but also received a spirit of mission. He graduated from the University of Budapest, majoring in Art History and Museology. In the beginning, he worked for daily newspapers, but published in the Hungarian Graphics (Magyar Grafika) as early as the 1930s. After World War II he worked at the daily People's Voice (Népszava); later, he was in charge of textbook editing. He was artistic manager first at the Ferenc Móra Publishing House, then at the Révai Press, and later at the Magyar Helikon Publishing House. He taught at the Academy of Fine Arts and at the Academy of Applied Arts, in Budapest. He was elected Secretary-General of the re-instituted Hungarian Bibliophile Society. He contributed to the editing of numerous bibliophile volumes at the Helikon Publishers during the Communist period, from codices to the facsimile editions of the Károli Bible, and numerous limited bibliophile editions. He is considered one of the greatest book-editing artists of the second half of the 20th century in Hungary. Many volumes designed and illustrated by him were distinguished at the Beautiful Hungarian Book (Szép Magyar Könyv) annual competition, starting in 1955, with pieces such as: Illuminated Chronicle (Képes Krónika); The Illustrated Book of Hungarian Literature (A magyar irodalom képeskönyve), and the Bible of Vizsoly (Vizsolyi Biblia), etc. The Hungarian Anjou Legendary (A Magyar Anjou Legendárium) appeared at the book competition in Hungary in 1972; it also won the Silver medal at the Leipzig Book Exhibition in 1974. He had many personal exhibitions at home and abroad. Among his books are The Book of Type-setting (A betűszedés könyve) (1951); The Art of the Printed Character (A nyomtatott betű művészete) (1958); The Beautiful Hungarian Book 1473-1973 (A szép magyar könyv 1473-1973); The Illustrated Book of the Five Hundred Years of Hungarian Book Editing (Az ötszáz éves magyar könyvművészet képeskönyve) (1974); The History of Books (A könyv története) (1976), and Book Design (Könyvtervezés) (1988). He was awarded the Silver Medal in Milan at the Exhibition of Applied Art (1933), the Munkácsy Prize (1955), the Merited Artist title (1956), the Outstanding Artist title (1970), and the Kossuth Prize (1973). – B: 1031, 1654, T: 7697.→Hungarian Anjou Book of Legends; Illuminated Chronicle, Vienna; Vizsoly Bible; Bortnyik, Sándor.

Szárász, György (George) (Budapest, 3 November 1930 - Budapest, 29 December 1987) – Writer and playwright. Having completed his secondary education, he became a government official. Late in 1952, after he had served his compulsory military training period, he was imprisoned, charged with Titoistic organization. After he was freed in 1954, he worked in public education. Between 1961 and 1964, he was an artistic guide in the Csokonai Cultural Center of district XV of Budapest, later its director. From 1964 he was a writer and journalist. In 1977 he was a political columnist for the daily Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom); in 1979 chief contributor of the paper and, concurrently, between 1978 and 1980, he was the playwright for the Theater of Kecskemét. From 1983 until his death he worked as Editor-in-Chief for the journal Contemporary (Kortárs). His works include The Magnificent Death (A nagyszerű halál) drama about the Martyrs of Arad, (1974); The Bells of Rókus Church (A Rókus-templom harangjai) drama (1979); About a Strange Book (Egy furcsa könyvről) essay (1983); Imperial Visit (Császárlátogatás) plays, TV-plays (1984), and The General (A tábornok) documentary novel (1984). His field of interest was the research of the missed opportunities in Hungarian history. He was a recipient of the Metropolitan Council's Cultural Prize (1984), the Attila József Prize (1978), and the Kossuth Prize (1985). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Arad, Martyrs of.

Száríts, János (John) (Ivan Sarić in Croat and Serb) (Szabadka, now Subotica, Serbia, 27 June 1876 - Szabadka, 23 August 1969) – Aircraft builder, sporting aviator. He completed a commercial school, passing an exam in Public Accounting, and worked at the municipal administration of Szabadka until his retirement. Then his interest turned to technology and technical sport. He designed and built bicycles, motorcars and airplanes. As a bicycle and car-racer he won many races; he was the holder of numerous sporting decorations. In 1909 in Paris he became acquainted with Louis Blériot, which turned him towards airplane constructions. In May 1910, with his self-made plane of 25 horsepower, he managed to take off. He took part in a number of flying demonstrations. The presses of Bács-Bodrog County and of Budapest often reported on his inventions and sporting achievements in the early years of the 20th century. In 1960, the Yugoslav Air Force Command adopted and prepared his 1910 airplane in its original size with his professional guidance; it is preserved in the Airplane Museum of Zimony (now Zemun, Serbia). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Pioneers of Hungarian Aviation.

Szárszó Conferences (Balatonszárszó) – Summer conferences of the Hungarian Reformed (Presbyterian) students of the Soli Deo Gloria Association (SDG), at their resort-place at Szárszó on the southern shores of Lake Balaton, first held in 1925, and from 1935 annually, where vital problems have also been dealt with. Of historic significance was its eighth national meeting held during 23rd to 28th August 1943. Lion's share of the organizing work was carried out by Sándor (Alexander) Püski (1911-2009), the owner of the Hungarian Life (Magyar Élet) Book Publishing firm, specializing in publishing the works of peasant writers. There were some 600 participants at the conference: students, writers, politicians, journalists, leaders of societies, worker- and peasant youths. Members of KALOT, EMSZO and the Professional Association also took part in the debates including the eminent representatives of the three Historical Churches. The topics of the discussions were the conditions of the Hungarian people and the future of Hungary after World War II – already going on since 1939. The better-known speakers included László Németh (1901-1975), János Kodolányi (1899-1969), Péter Veres (1897-1970), Ferenc (Francis) Erdei (1910-1971), Sándor (Alexander) Karácsony (1891-1952), Géza Fėja (1900-1978), Gyula (Julius) László (1910-1998), Pál Szabó (1893-1970), Lajos (Louis) Jócsik (1910-1980), István (Stephen) Nagy (1904-1977), and László (Ladislav) Szabédi (1907-1959). As the war's end approached, the debate on the future of the country heightened, especially at the 1942 and 1943 conferences. The debate between Ferenc Erdei and László Németh aroused the greatest interest. Erdei argued for an apparently recently evolving "socialism", while Németh for a "third way" between capitalism and socialism. The decisive majority of the participants sided with the latter. – B: 0945, T: 7456.→ Most of the above mentioned writers have their own entries.

Szarvas, Gábor (Gabriel) (Ada, 22 March 1832 - Budapest, 12 October 1895) – Linguist. His young age denied him a membership in the Home Guard in 1848. He became a member of the Benedictine Order. When he passed the university entrance examination, he left the Order in 1852 and became a teacher in Baja and eventually taught in Pest in 1869. A serious eye disease cost him his vision and forced his retirement in 1881. In recognition of his successful work, the Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him a member, and commissioned him to start a periodical in 1872, entitled The Hungarian Language Guard (Magyar Nyelvőr) with the aim of cultivating the Hungarian language. He wrote his orthographic and etymological debating articles and was opposed to forced language reforms, outlandish phrases and barbarism. Between 1890 and 1893, together with Zsigmond (Sigismund) Simonyi, he edited the Hungarian Language History Dictionary (Magyar nyelvtörténeti szótár). He was one of the outstanding representatives of the Hungarian language culture. – B: 1257, T: 7669→Simonyi, Zsigmond.

Szarvas, Late Avar Runic Writing Relic – On 2 April 1983, during the excavation of an Avar burial ground near Szarvas, Irén Juhász, archeologist of the Samuel Tessedik Museum, found, in grave No. 67, beside a female skeleton, a bone needle holder with runic inscription, about 1200 years old. This was the discovery of one of the most extensive and significant runic writing relics of the Avar age. On lines running right to left, 60-62 runic signs were found on the needle holder. András (Andrew) Róna Tas, Gábor (Gabriel) Vékony, Sándor (Alexander) Forrai and János (John) Harmatta, runic writing researchers, tried to decipher the inscription. The runic signs and the line direction show a similarity with the Székely-Magyar (Szekler-Hungarian) runic writing. The most striking resemblance however is shown with the runic system of the Nagyszentmiklós gold find. – B: 0732, 1251, 1502, T: 7669.→Runic Writing; Runic Writing, Hungarian; Runic Writing Research; Tessedik, Sámuel; Forrai, Sándor; Harmatta János; Nagyszentmiklós Treasure.

Szász, Béla (Szombathely, 9 July 1910 - Great Britain, 25 June 1999) – Writer. He studied at the Faculty of Economics of the Budapest Polytechnic, and later attended courses at the Faculty of Philosophy of the University of Budapest, majoring in Hungarian, French and Art History. He pursued further studies at the University of Paris (Sorbonne) in 1930. He was charged with Communist conspiracy and was taken to court in 1932, and was imprisoned for three months. In 1937 he moved to Paris, later emigrated to Argentina. He was engaged in Communist political activity, and worked for Hungarian emigré papers. He returned to Hungary in 1946, when Hungary started to come under Communist rule in the presence of the Soviet occupying forces. He became a correspondent for the papers Illustrated Week (Képes Hét) and Future (Jövendő). In 1948 he was an official at the Foreign Ministry, and later headed the Press Section of the Department of Agriculture. In late May 1949, he was arrested and taken to court in connection with the Rajk-trial. Under false accusations, he was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. He was freed in August 1954, and was rehabilitated; he received a position as a reader at the Literary (Szépirodalmi) Publisher, later at the New Hungarian (Új Magyar) Book Publisher. After the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, Szász fled to the West; first living in Vienna, later he settled in London. From 1957 he was an associate editor of Literary News (Irodalmi Újság); from 1959 until 1963 he took part in the activities of the Imre Nagy Institute in Brussels, and in editing its journals. From 1965 he worked as an outside consultant for the Hungarian program of the BBC. Some of his essays, articles and critiques appeared in the above papers as well as in the periodical, New Horizon (Új Látóhatár) and in the Independent Hungary (Független Magyarország). His book, written under the name Vincent Savarius, Without Any Compulsion (Minden kényszer nélkül) recalls the Rajk trial. He also prepared documentary films for English, German and French radio and TV stations. His works also include Freiwillige für den Galgen (1963), and Penelope and the Knight (Penelope és a lovag) novelette (1988), and a history of the Huns. – B: 1257, 1590, 1672, T: 7456.→Rajk Trial.

Szász, Imre (Emeric) (Budapest, 19 March 1927 - Budapest, 8 April 2003) – Writer, translator of literary works. His high school years were spent in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania); later, he moved to Budapest, where he obtained a Dip. Ed. in Education from the University of Budapest, majoring in Hungarian and English Literature. Between 1968 and 1975 he began to work as a referee for book publishing firms, first with the Franklin, later with the Szépirodalmi Publisher (Szépirodalmi Kiadó) (1975). Then, from 1975 to 1977, he was a reference editor of Life and Literature (Élet és Irodalom) and, since 1977, a senior correspondent of the weekly New Mirror (Új Tükör). He spent two years in the USA, and translated several novels and plays from English into Hungarian. He handled film scenarios, travelogues, essays and critiques on a high literary standard. He dealt especially with American literary works, like that of Jack London and Mark Twain. His works include Coastal Guide (Vízparti kalauz) short stories (1958); Victims (Áldozatok) novel (1975); Without a Net (Háló nélkül), studies (1979), and The Lake of Remembering (Az emlékezés tava) novel (2002). He is a recipient of the Attila József Prize (1988), and the Artisjus Literary Prize (1994). – B: 1031, 1122, 1257, T: 7456.

Szász, János (John) (Budapest, 14 March 1958 - ) – Theater and film director. He is the son of the film director Péter Szász. He studied drama criticism at the Academy of Dramatic Art (1979-1982), and also studied film directing (1982-1986). He already appeared in smaller roles during his student years. His films include Postscript (Utóirat) (1988); Woyzeck (1994); The Eye of the Holocaust (2000), and Opium (2007). His feature films are characterized by strong psychological effects; he is mainly interested in crime. He also directs regularly in theaters both in Hungary and abroad; he also worked for three years in the USA and, at present, he teaches at the College of Dramatic and Cinematic Art, Budapest. He puts the great classics on the stage at the National Theater, the Comedy Theater, and the Bárka Theater (Bárka Színház), Budapest. He spent a number of seasons at the theater of Nyíregyháza. His theatrical direction includes Chekhov's Three Sisters (Három nővér); Uncle Vanya (Ványa bácsi), and Seagull (Sirály). He received the Béla Balázs Prize in 1995 and the Merited Artist title in 2001. In May 2001, he was admitted to the American Directors' Guild. – B: 1031, 1122, 1886, T: 7456.→Szász, Péter.

Szász, Károly Jr. (Charles), (szemerjei) (Nagyenyed, now Aiud, Romania, 15 June 1829 - Budapest, 15 October 1905) – Bishop of the Reformed Church, writer, poet, dramatist, translator of literary works and teacher. He was a descendant of an ancient Szekler-Hungarian noble family; he attended high school in Nagyenyed, and received a Teacher's Degree in Mathematics and Military Science at the University of Pest in 1848. He took part in the 1848/49 War of Independence, joining the independent army during the Kossuth Government. In 1849, he fled with his father to Debrecen, where he worked as a clerk at the Ministry of Education and Religion of the independent government. He was forced to flee after the fall of the War of Independence and, while he was in hiding, he worked as a tutor. In 1851 he acquired a Degree in Theology and, for a year, he was a teacher of Hungarian Language and Literature at the Reformed High School of Nagykőrös. He gave up this position to the great lyric poet János (John) Arany, and instead taught mathematics. After his wife's death, Szász began working as a minister of the Reformed Church in Kecskemét; then, in 1854, in Kézdivásárhely in the Szekler area of Transylvania (now Targu-Secuesc, Romania) and, after three years, in Kúnszentmiklós. In 1863 he was invited to Szabadszállás to be minister there. From 1865 he was a representative of the Deák Party in Parliament, and became an honorary lecturer at the University of Budapest. From 1884 to 1903, he was Bishop of the Danubian Church District. From 1858 he was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences; in 1892 he became its second President. He also became member of the Kisfaludy Society in 1860. His poetry is strongly influenced by János Arany and Pál (Paul) Gyulai. Subjects of his epics were taken from Hungarian history. A selection from his works was published under the title English and French Poets (Angol és francia költők) translations (1855); other works of his include Poems, vols. i,ii (Költemények, I-II) (1861); and his epic works include Csák of Trencsény (Terncsényi Csák); Dramas: The Wise Solomon (A bölcs Salamon) biblical drama (1889); Herod (1867); György Frater (1869); Álmos (1870); King Mátyás (Mathias Corvinus) (1879), Commander István (István vezér) (1893); Death of Attila (Attila halála) play (1893), and the monumental scholarly synthesis, The Great Epics of World Literature, vols. i-ii (A világirodalom nagy époszai, I,II) (1881-1882). Szász translated works from Goethe, Schiller, Heine, Victor Hugo, Burns, Byron, Poe, and many other poets. He translated eight dramas of Shakespeare, eight plays of Molière, also the Nibelungen songs, Dante's Divine Comedy, and 12 novels of Jule Verne. He was the first to write an appreciative analysis about The Tragedy of Man (Az ember tragédiája) by Imre (Emeric) Madách (1869). He also dealt with esthetic aspects of the theater. His theological studies appeared in 3 volumes. His collected works were published in five volumes, edited by Bishop László (Ladislav) Ravasz (1930). – B: 0881, 0883, 0877, 1068, 1257, 1445, T: 7456, 7103.→Arany, János, Gyulai, Pál; Madách, Imre; Ravasz, László.

Szász, Péter (Budapest, 12 August 1927 - Hamburg, 1 February 1983) – Film director, father of theater and film director János (John) Szász. Having completed his high school, he began his career as associate editor of Freedom (Szabadság), later that of World (Világ). In 1948 he joined the weekly Hungarian Radio (Magyar Rádió). In the following year, he began writing radio plays and soon he became one of the best representatives of that genre. From 1953 he worked in the film industry, and became the drama critic of the film studio Hunnia. As a scenarist, he proved to be one of the richest in ideas, and was an associate of directors and writers. From 1967 he was a stage-manager, offering something new even in his first film Boys from the Plaza (Fiúk a térről). He liked humor, adventure and tragicomic situations. Together with Péter Bacsó and István Nemeskürty, he ran a scenarist course. Together they presented the dramatization of Svejik in 1979. He was also active as a writer and stage manager: he produced John Steinbeck's play Of Mice and Men in the Theater (Játékszin) in 1979. His feature films include Running Over (Gázolás) (1955); The Ultimate Adventure of Don Juan (1958); Late Season (Utószezon) (1966); The Belles and the Fools (Szépek és bolondok) (1976), and Cement (1981). Szatmár, Peace Treaty of (the Peace of Szatmár) was signed at Szatmár (now Satu Mare, Romania) on April 30, 1711 between King Károly III (Charles), Hungarian Commander-in-Chief Count Sándor (Alexander) Károlyi, and Imperial Field Marshal Count János (John) Pálffy. Based on the terms of the accord, Charles promised to maintain the integrity of both Transylvanian (Erdély, now in Romania) and the Hungarian estates. Moreover, the accord officially ended the Kuruc Freedom Fight led by Prince Ferenc (Francis) Rákóczi II. The impact of the Treaty was evident on 1 May 1711 when 12,000 former soldiers of Rákóczi swore allegiance to the Habsburg dynasty on the fields outside of Majtény in Szatmár. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Freedom Fight of Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc; Kuruc; Kuruc Age; Károly III, King; Károlyi, Count Sándor; Pálffy, Count, János.

Szatmári, István (Stephen) (sometimes Szatmáry) (Budapest, 30 July 1925 - Budapest, 28 December 1988) – Actor. He completed the Academy of Dramatic Art in 1946, after which he was engaged by the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. From 1947 to 1949 he was a member of the National Theater of Szeged. From 1949 to 1951 he again played at the National Theater of Budapest, while in 1951 his contract was transferred to the Hungarian People's Army Theater (Magyar Néphadsereg Színháza), and finally to the Comedy Theater (Vígyszínház), where he played until his death. With his acrid humor and caricaturing ability he scored successful interpretations in numerous episode roles. On 11 occasions he prepared reports for the series entitled His Profession is Actor (Mestersége színész). His evocative writings on actors and about his theatrical memories appeared in the columns of the periodical, Film, Theater, Music (Film, Színház, Muzsika). Some of these writings found space also in his book The Little Star is Also a Star (A kis csillag is csillag) (1989). His roles included Otto in J. Katona's Bánk bán; Bulanov in Ostrovsky's The Forest (Erdő); Loby in Dürrenmatt's The Visit of the Old Lady (Der Besuch der alten Dame; Az öreg hölgy látogatása); Wagner in Goethe's Faust, and Charley in Miller's Death of a Salesman (Az ügynök halála). He received the Merited Artist title in 1988. – B: 0883, 1257, 1445, T: 7456.

Szatmárnémeti (German: Sathmar; Romanian: Satu Mare) – Town at the northeastern edge of the Great Hungarian Plain, ceded to western Romania by the 1920 Trianon Peace Treaty, though together with northern Transylvania it was returned to Hungary (1940-1945) by the Second Vienna Award (1940). After World War II, it was again given to Romania by the Paris Peace Treaty (1947). The town is mainly on the right bank of the Szamos (Someş) River, a tributary of the Tisza. Its population was 26,881 in 1901; 45,000 in 1910 (94.6% Magyars, including Hungarian-speaking Hasidic Jews); 51,987 in 1941, and 160,421 in 2001 (57.8% Romanian, 39.3% Hungarian, 1.2% German and 0.96% Roma). It is a flat, monotonous type of settlement, characteristic of the Great Plain towns, softened by plazas and gardens studded with trees. The center is an enormous main square of parks, overlooked by the Episcopal palace, the Roman Catholic cathedral, the houses of the canons, and an old palace with Gothic windows, on the wall of which there is a memorial tablet for the 1711 Peace Treaty of Szatmár. Other notable buildings of the town are the Town Hall, the Theater, the monasteries and churches of religious orders, and the Catholic and Reformed high schools, together with special schools for carpentry and metal work, industrial workshop, banks and government offices. For cultural and social services there is the Episcopal Library, the Museum, the hospitals, the poorhouses, and various societies. Among those living in the outer areas there are many primary producers and also those engaged in aspects of industry: factories replacing older tradesmen like tailors, boot makers, joiners, and makers of the sleeveless mantles (szűr-mantle). There are also bustling markets and it is an important railway junction. Historically, the site of the town has been settled since the Stone Age. There was an earthwork fortification on the local castle hill (Várdomb) called Zotmar (Castrum Zotmar), allegedly ruled by Menumorut (Ménmarót) early in the 10th century. In the course of the Carpathian settlement by the Magyars, this earthwork fort was captured after a three-day siege by the tribal leaders Tas, Töhötöm and Szabolcs. During the reign of King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038), his Bavarian Queen, Gizella brought in German settlers in 1006, who founded the villages Szatmár and Németi (Mintin) at the foot of Castle Hill on the two banks of the Szamos River. In 1241 the Tartars destroyed the castle. After 1543, it was rebuilt and reinforced by the Báthorys, and besieged by the Turks; the whole town was burnt down in 1703, and the unification of the two towns across the river to become Szatmárnémeti, occurred in 1721 (or 1715), as a royal free town. The town's development surged ahead strongly during the 19th and 20th centuries. The two world wars brought drastic changes to the town; its population stagnated for several decades. The 1977 census placed Hungarians into a minority for the first time. The collapse of Communism led to a long period of economic stagnation during the 1990s, when the town lost about 20,000 inhabitants, due to the closure of many industrial plants. Many people are now guest workers in Western Europe, with families left behind. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456.→Vienna Award II;

Száva, János Zoltán (John) (Csíkszépvíz, now Sulca, Romania, 19 July 1916 - Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mureş, Romania, 27 July 2001) – Physician. He obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) in 1941, when Kolozsvár and Northern Transylvania was returned to Hungary by the Second Vienna Award (1940-1944). From 1941 to 1944 he was a demonstrator and an assistant lecturer. After World War II, when the Romanians again occupied Northern Transylvania, Száva disappeared for many years and reappeared again between 1982 and 1985, when he was an assistant professor at the Orthopedic Clinic of the Medical School of the University of Marosvásárhely. In Europe he was second in performing a hipbone procedure. He developed 18 new surgical procedures. He was a member of numerous Romanian and foreign scientific societies, and author of nearly 200 professional papers, a number of monographs and university lecture notes. His works include Detailed Surgery, vols. i, ii, (Részletes sebészet I-II) (1954); Surgery in Childhood (A gyermekkor sebészete) (1962); and Orthopedics and Traumatology (Ortopédia és traumatológia) (1977). He was awarded the Merited Physician Title in 1971– B: 1730, T: 7456.→Vienna Award II.

Szávaszentendre Abbey, Délvidék (now Mitrovice, Serbia) – It was founded by Radó, Palatine of Hungary. In 1218, Pope Honorius III declared it to be part of the Greek Catholic St Vazul Order. In 1247 it was a Benedictine monastery, when a second Tartar invasion was pending. The last records of the Abbey are from 1334. – B: 0942, T: 7103.

Százd Abbey – Bailiff Péter established it around 1067. It was built in honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary, near the Tisza River in the County of Borsod, near the town of Mezőkövesd, on the estate of Prince Géza. In 1267, in the re-confirmation charter by King Béla IV (1235-1270), the name of the place was Zasty. – B: 1078, T: 7103.

Szeben Printshop (Transylvania, now in Romania) – In 1528, the first working printing company of Transylvania was established in the city of Szeben. It used wooden types and that made the work very cumbersome. They at first printed only Latin texts and, from 1534, it was outfitted with Cyrillic types. 32 Latin publications survived; among them there are 21 Latin, 6 Hungarian, 2 German and 3 mixed language texts. Several of the Latin texts have Hungarian authors. – B: 1020, T: 3240.

Szeberényi, Lehel (Losonc, now Lučenec, Slovakia, 19 June 1921 - Budapest, 27 April 1998) – Writer, journalist and translator of literary works. In a largely Hungarian town, his parents had a hard time as a result of the dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon in 1920, which ceded the northern part of the Kingdom of Hungary (together with Losonc) to the newly created Czechoslovakia. Since his father did not renounce his Hungarian citizenship, he could not get work; his mother supported the family from private piano tuition. When the First Vienna Award of 1938 returned to Hungary the Hungarian-inhabited southern strip of Slovakia, Szeberényi was able to complete his high school education at Losonc by passing the maturity examination in 1943, and was able to perform auxiliary work in the Town Hall of Losonc. He was also the District Secretary of the Peasant Party until the Russian occupation in the middle of 1945. Thereafter, he moved to Miskolc in Hungary, and became the editor of the local daily Free Word (Szabad Szó). From 1947, Szeberényi was a contributor to the paper, Free Word and, from 1949, to the Women's Paper (Nők Lapja) of Budapest. From 1952 he worked as a secretary of the Community of Young Writers (Fiatal Írók Munkaközössége). From 1953 he was a freelance writer and, from 1957, he worked as columnist of the periodical, Contemporary (Kortárs). Later, he was again a freelance writer, and then a correspondent of the daily, Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet). From 1972 he again became a columnist of Contemporary (Kortárs) until he retired in 1981. In his novels, he was engaged with the people pushed to the edge of society; with joviality and irony, he exposed the perversity of public life, and wrote in resort town of Leányfalu in the Danube Bend (north of Budapest), recalling the years he spent there in his youth. Szeberényi's works include Sunrise (Napkelte) novel (1951); Steps into the Clouds (Lépcsők a felhőkbe) novel (1957); Valley of Memories (Emlékek völgye) autobiography (1980), and At the Margin of History (A történelem szélén) novelette (1986). His distinctions are the People's Republic Medal, silver-grade (1954), the Attila József Prize (1951, 1953, 1983), the Order of Work, gold grade (1981), and the Order of the Star of the Republic of Hungary, decorated with a Golden Wreath (1991). – B: 1257, T: 7456. → Vienna Award I.

Szebik, Imre (Emeric) (Lébény, 9 February 1939 - ) – Lutheran Bishop. After graduating from the Miklós Révai Gymnasium in Győr, he studied Theology at the Lutheran Theological Academy, Budapest (1957-1962), and was ordained in 1962. In 1971-1972, he was on a scholarship from the Lutheran World Federation; he conducted post-graduate studies at the Ecumenical Institute of Bossey of the World Council of Churches in Switzerland, and at the Theological Department of the University of Zurich, Switzerland. He was an assistant pastor in Miskolc (1962-1965), then Pastor in Komárom (1965-1968), and again in Miskolc (1968-1985). He was Dean of the Borsod-Heves Deanery (1975-1985). From 1985 he was Pastor of the Budapest-Budavár Congregation, and Dean of the Buda Deanery (1985-1990). He was Deputy Bishop (1985-1990), and from 1990 to 2006, Bishop of the North District of the Lutheran Church in Hungary. He was ministerial Vice-President of the Lutheran National Synod (1991-1997), and its President from 2001; Vice President of the Ecumenical Council of the Hungarian Churches from 1999; Vice President of the Hungarian Christian-Jewish Committee from 1991, and President of the Christian-Jewish Committee on the Conference of European Churches, from 1995. The Protestant Theological University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) granted him an Honorary Doctorate in 1995. After his retirement he was elected President of the Ecumenical Council of the Hungarian Churches. He was author of many articles, essays and books, including The History of the Lutheran Congregation in Miskolc (A miskolci evangélikus egyházközség története) co-author (1985); Our Responsibility for the Living World (Felelősségünk az élővilágért, co-author (1994), and Bearing Witness (Tanuságtétel) (2000). – B: 1050, T: 7103.

Széchenyi, Count Béla (Pest, 3 February 1837 - Budapest, 2 December 1918) – Geographer and geologist, son of Count István Széchenyi. He studied at the Universities of Berlin and Bonn. From 1855 to 1857 he traveled in England, France and Italy, while in 1858 he toured the Balkans and the Greek coastline with Count Jenő (Eugen) Zichy. In 1862, with Gyula (Julius) Károlyi, he visited the USA and Canada. Between 1865 and 1870 he went lion hunting in Africa four times. In 1874 he started excavations in the bed of Lake Fertő in Hungary, and with the assistance of the Austrian paleontologist Eduard Suess, he described the Paleolithic finds. In 1877 he departed on his large-scale Asiatic expedition in the company of the famous geologist Lajos (Louis) Lóczy, the linguist Gábor (Ganriel) Bálint, and the topographer Gusztáv (Gustavus) Kreimer. By February 1878 they had reached Sikkim, Bhutan and the boundary of Tibet, and later on they arrived in Central Java and studied the its volcanic regions. During December 1879, they covered 1500 km along the Yangtze River as far up as Hangzhou and, from there, on a 14-month journey they reached the Irrawaddy Plain. Geographically, the most valuable aspect of his expedition was the discovery of mountain ranges surrounding the Tibetan plateau on three sides. The results of his travels, his diary, Kreimer's maps, Lóczy's geological collections and observations were all published at his own expense. Hedin Sven discovered the Trans-Himalayan Mountain Range on the basis of the results of Széchenyi's expedition. The processing of the scientific material from the trip, with the assistance of 20 scientists from Hungary and abroad was only completed in 1900. From 1901, he was Keeper of the Holy Crown of Hungary and, from 1904, an honorary member of the Geographical Society. He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (honorary, 1880, director 1883). His main work was The Scientific Results of Count Béla Széchenyi's East-Asian Trip with Lajos Lóczy, 1877-1880, vols. i,ii,iii (Gr. Széchenyi Béla keletázsiai útjának tudományos eredménye 1877 - 1880, Lóczy Lajossal, I – III. (1890-1897). The records of his journey were published in Hungarian, German and English. – B: 1078, 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Zichy, Jenő; Lóczy, Lajos; Bálint, Gábor; Károlyi, Count Gyula.

Széchényi, Count Ferenc (Francis) (Fertőszéplak, 29 April 1754 - Vienna, 13 December 1820) – Patron of literature and political writer. Father of Count István Széchenyi. Even as a young man, he was considered to be very enlightened for the period. During the reign of King József II (Joseph) (1780-1790), he was President of the Board of Báns and Royal District Commissioner of Pécs. However, he resigned his position in support of the Hungarian nobility against the Germanizing process. In 1790 he returned to political life after the establishment of the National Assembly. In 1798 he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of County Somogy. In 1799 he became Deputy Lord Chief Justice. In 1812 he returned to private life, but remained active in the cultural sphere. He patronized many writers, scientists, and widely corresponded with them. His political writings were never published. He was invited to be a member of the Universities of Göttingen, Jena, Germany, and the Viennese Academy of Sciences. In 1802 he offered his cultural wealth to the nation: his library of Hungarica, his manuscripts, paintings, medals, statues and map collections became the foundation of the Hungarian National Museum. Later, the independent national library was named after him and was continuously enriched and financially supported by him until his death. He lived his last years in Vienna, where his house became the center of the era's romantic religious movement. – B: 1150, 1078, 1138, T: 3240.→National Museum; Széchenyi Library, The National.

Széchenyi, Count István (Stephen) (Vienna, 21 September 1791 - Döbling, 8 April 1860)

– Statesman. Son of Count Ferenc Széchenyi. He traveled extensively throughout Western Europe between 1815 and 1825. The newly gained impressions and experiences spurred him, with the aid of the rich landowners, to develop his homeland from an economically backward country into a progressive developing nation. Patterned after the English system, he founded the first horse race in Pest, and set up the first horse-breeding association in 1825. Also in 1825, while in Parliament, he donated one year's income to the establishment of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. The National Casino (Nemzeti Kaszinó) in Pest was set up by him in 1827. In 1829, he aided in the funding of the First Steamship Navigation Company on the River Danube (Első Dunagőzhajózási Társaság). He assisted in the founding of the First Cylinder Mill of Pest (Első Pesti Hengermalom), and the Bank of Commerce (Kereskedelmi Bank). He built one of the first heavy industrial plants, the Shipyard of Óbuda (Óbudai Hajógyár) a winter harbor. He regulated the flow of the Lower River Danube through dredging, where a section bears his name. He was associated with the construction of the Chain Bridge (Lánchíd, also called the Széchenyi Bridge), connecting the cities of Buda and Pest. He also aided in the flood control of the River Tisza, and initiated the steamship service on Lake Balaton (Balaton Gőzhajózás) in 1846.

His political program met resistance from some nobles, and set him against reformist Lajos (Louis) Kossuth. Charges against Széchenyi were dropped and he was declared to be “The Greatest Hungarian” (“A legnagyobb Magyar”) by Kossuth. The bloodless coup of March 1848 was greeted with pleasure, and he accepted a ministerial position in the Batthyány Cabinet.

Széchenyi's first published book appeared in 1828 entitled About Horses (A lovakrúl). His most significant contribution is Credit (Hitel), written in 1830, in which he attempted to repeal the unwritten laws of the feudal system and put forward his reform plans. The aristocracy vehemently opposed it; the younger generation gladly accepted it. In 1831 he wrote the World (Világ) in the defense of Credit. In the fall of 1833, he wrote his third important work, the Stádium. In it he explained his reform plans in 12 points. Its printing was denied by the censor, but it was published in Leipzig, and smuggled back into the country. The strain caused by increased tension between the Viennese Government and the sector supporting a sovereign Hungary, proved to be too much for the health of Széchenyi, and he was compelled to seek treatment in the mental sanatorium of Döbling in Austria for many years.

As his health improved, so returned his activity in national issues, and many of his friends visited him. During that time a work appeared by an anonymous author entitled Rückblick... (Reflection...) published in 1857, praising the accomplishments of the Alexander Bach-Age. Széchenyi's answer was a sarcastic polemic paper, entitled Ein Blick auf den Anonymen Rückblick (A Look at the Anonymous Reflection), published anonymously in London in 1859, in which he exposed the cruel and stupid system of absolutism in Hungary, represented by Baron Alexander Bach. This was followed by police investigations against him but, in the meantime, Bach was removed from power. The incessant intimidations caused Széchenyi to take his own life. However, murder is not entirely ruled out. Many statues, streets and institutes bear his name around the country.

His courageous initiation of civil reforms, his patriotism and faith in human progress, his fight for human reforms, his diligence and firmness made him one of the greatest statesmen in Hungarian history. – B: 1078, 1134, 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Kossuth, Lajos; Bach Era.

Széchenyi Library, The National of Hungary – It was founded in 1802. It owes its establishment and name to Count Ferenc (Francis) Széchenyi. He sought out Hungarian books in the country and abroad, brought them together in a single collection and donated it to the nation in 1802. In 1803, the Public Library was opened to all in Pest. The nation responded magnanimously by making donations and personal contributions to the new National Library. The National Assembly placed the Institution on a broader foundation: in 1808, it set up the Hungarian National Museum (Magyar Nemzeti Múzeum) to collect the historical, archeological and natural relics of Hungary, and incorporated the library founded earlier. For more than two centuries, the Institution was the common storehouse of written, printed and object relics of the Hungarian past. When the Hungarian National Museum was built, the Library moved into it in 1846-1847. It was not until 1949 that the Library was separated from the Museum, and once again became an independent Institution under the name of National Széchenyi Library (Országos Széchenyi Könyvtár). It was able to move into its new quarters in the Buda Castle in 1985. The Library has the task of collecting: 1) All works published within the borders of Hungary at the given time, in whatever language they may be written; 2) All works published in Hungarian; 3) All works written by Hungarian authors, or with the collaboration of Hungarians, not in Hungarian, and outside of Hungary; 4) Finally, all works published abroad in foreign languages with Hungarian topics. – B: 1091, T: 7103.→Széchenyi, Count Ferenc; National Museum.

Széchenyi, Count Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 23 January 1898 - Budapest, 24 April 1967) – World traveler, hunter and writer. His tertiary studies were between 1919 and 1923 at Munich, Stuttgart and Cambridge. In 1927 he started on his first African hunting and collecting trip in Sudan. His later expeditions led to East Africa; he traveled in Kenya, Egypt, Tanganyika, Uganda and Libya. In 1935 he hunted in Alaska, in 1937 in India, and again in Egypt. From 1947 to 1950 he was the hunting inspector of the Forestry Center (Erdészeti Központ). In 1951 he was an Associate at the Agricultural Museum (Mezőgazdasági Múzeum), later, at the Helikon Library of Keszthely (Keszthelyi Helikon Könyvtár). In 1960 he took part in the East African expedition of the National Museum, which partially restored the natural scientific collection, destroyed during World War II, and the 1956 Revolution. In 1964, he went on his ninth East-African journey, this time to Kenya, with his wife; from there he again returned with rich material and, with his sharp-eyed observation, described in his writings the customs of the various peoples he met. His books appeared in several editions, in six languages, and in nearly one million copies. His works include Elephant Country (Elefántország) (1934) and The Way It Began (Ahogy elkezdődött) (1961). – B: 0883, T: 7456.

Széchy, Mária (? , 1610 - Kőszeg, 18 July 1679) – The “Venus of Murány”, the lady and owner of the Castle of Murány. First, she was the wife of Count István (Stephen) Iktári Bethlen, Prince of Transylvania, then of Baron István (Stephen) Rosályi Kun, and finally, in 1644, under adventurous circumstances at the Castle of Murány, she married Count Ferenc (Francis) Wesselényi, the Palatine of Hungary and military commander of Emperor Ferdinand III (1637-1657). After the Habsburg Government dissolved the conspiracy organized by her husband, she was interned in Vienna, and all her property was confiscated in 1671. In her last years, she received an imperial pension of good grace. The history of her marriage with Wesselényi has been written in the form of a poem by István (Stephen) Gyöngyösi (first published in 1664). – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456.→Wesselényi Conspiracy.

Széchy, Tamás (Thomas) (Doboz, 27 March 1931 - Budapest, 13 September 2004) – Swim coach. He studied at the Reformed High School of Mezőtúr. Early in his career he was an athlete; later he became weightlifter. In 1962, when he began to be associated with the sport of swimming, he joined the water-polo team of the Central Sports and Youth Club (Központi Sport és Ifjúsági Egyesület – KSI SE). András (Andrew) Hargitay became prominent in the team built up by Széchy. In the 1972 Olympics, he earned a bronze medal in the 400 m mixed swimming. In 1969 it was Széchy who organized the age group system in Hungary. In 1970 he obtained the sports coach and trainer diploma, later becoming a master-trainer. Early in the 1970s, the students of Széchy, like Wladár, Hargitay and Virrasztó, continuously brought success from the international competitions, arriving home with medals. Toward the end of the 1980s, a whole series of success came: Czene, Darnyi, Rózsa, Szabó and more students of Széchy won medals in international competitions. He continued as a trainer until 2000, even after he was made the captain of the Hungarian swimming selected team in 1976. Later he was a coach in various other teams. – B: 1031, T: 7456.→ Most of the persons mentioned above have their own entries.

Szécsi, Dénes (Denis) (Széchy) (Felsőlendva, now Grad, Slovenia ca. 1400 - Esztergom, 1 February 1465) – Cardinal, Primate-Archbishop of Esztergom. He studied at the University of Vienna (1433) and studied Canon Law at the University of Bologna (1434), continued in Padua (1438), and rapidly rose in the hierarchy. He was Bishop of Nyitra (1438), Bishop of Eger (1439-1440), Primate Archbishop of Esztergom (1440-1465), and was made Cardinal in 1452, Papal Legate in 1453, and Chief Chancellor of the Court during 1453 to 1465. He crowned King László V (Ladislav) (1453-1457). He also crowned King Ulászló I (Wladislav) (1440-1444) and, after his death, he supported the regency of János (John) Hunyadi (1446-1453). He crowned King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490). He was a strong opponent of the Hussite sect. He attended three papal conclaves in Rome. Szécsi was the first to use the title Primate of Hungary. In 1453 he rebuilt the Cathedral at Esztergom and bequeathed large sums for its maintenance. He was a fine orator. He was buried at Esztergom, where his headstone stands even today. – B: 0883, 0945, T: 7103.→Mátyás I, King; Hunyadi, János.

Szécsi, Margit (Margaret) (Budapest, 28 May 1928 - Budapest, 23 November 1990) – Poetess. She was the wife of the poet László (Ladislav) Nagy. She completed her high school education in Budapest; then worked as a civil servant between 1945 and 1948. In 1948, as a college student, she started a Bachelor of Arts course at the University of Budapest. Her first poem appeared in the journal, New Times (Új Idők), followed by more verses in Star (Csillag). She became a contributor to Star, thereby interrupting her university studies. In 1952 she was a manual worker at Dunapentele, which was just being built; she was interested in the reconstruction after the war. Later, she was involved in cultural activity, which led to her taking upon herself the running of a cultural center in Pécs. From 1953 on, she lived from her writings. She belonged to the “53-generation”. In the beginning it was her suburban experiences that determined her creativity. The “new popular”, i.e. the poetic revolution of Ferenc Juhász, László Nagy and others exerted influence on her art. The power of lyrics is the attitude of a person suffering from his ideals and defending his ideas. Her poetry is related to that of László Nagy, her husband, but it also exhibits some heritage from Attila József and Lajos Kassák. She first appeared with a volume of poems in 1955, entitled March (Március), from where, later in her career, her characteristic form of work, the “long poem”, increasingly developed. Her love-poetry is one of the strong points of her artistic world. Her poems, with suggestive symbolisms are enduring in value. Her other works include Beach of Angels (Angyalok strandja) (1956); The Large Flower-Slashing Machine (A Nagy Virágvágó Gép) (1969); The Pink Jeep (A Rózsaszínű Dzsip)(1982); What do you take, River (Mit viszel, folyó) selected poems (1978), and Poet on the Moon (Költő a holdban) (containing all her poems, 1984). She was awarded the Attila József Prize (1957, 1968, 1977). – B: 0883, 1257; T: 7456.→Nagy, László; Juhász, Ferenc; József, Attila; Kassák, Lajos.

Szecsódi, Irén (Irene) (Budapest, 6 June 1917 - Budapest, 20 June 2001) – Opera singer (soprano). She completed her studies under Imre (Emeric) Molnár at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest between 1941 and 1947, and she was engaged by the Opera House of Budapest (Operaház) in 1947, where for 25 years she was one of the most versatile artists. She was introduced as the First Lady in Mozart’s Magic Flute. In the course of her singing career she sang almost all the major roles of the opera repertoire with great success. The charm of her personality and the noble timbre of her voice were combined with high stylistic ability and role-modeling. Her singing art was preserved on a number of recordings, e.g. in works by F. Liszt, Z. Kodály and S. Szokolay. Her roles included Violetta in Verdi’s La Traviata; Pamina and First Lady in Mozart’s Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); Liu in Puccini’s Turandot; Mimi in Puccini’s La Bohème (Bohémélet); Sulamit in Goldmark’s The Queen of Sheba (Sába királynője); Marguerite in Gounod’s Faust, and Empress in Kodály’s Háry János. She often appeared also in oratorio concerts. She was made life-member of the Opera House of Budapest in 1990. She was awarded the Franz Liszt Prize in 1952 and 1959, and received the Merited Artist title in 1967. – B: 1439, 1445, T: 7456.→Liszt, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán; Szokolay, Sándor.

Szeged – Largest and leading town of the Great Hungarian Plain, near its center, on the banks of the Tisza River, downstream west of its confluence with the tributary Maros, the seat of County Csongrád. The population of Szeged was 102,991 in 1901 (ethnically Hungarian and denominationally largely Roman Catholic); 136,375 in 1941 (ethnically 98.5% Hungarian, by denominations 88.1% Catholic, 5.2% Reformed, 4.1% Jewish); 174,000 in 1983, and 162,889 in 2005. In the middle of the 20th century 36.4% of the inhabitants lived as primary producers, 23.4% from industry, 11.3% from commerce and transport, 8.8% from public service and freelancing, 8.2% from pension and capital, and 5.7% from day labor. Of the 200,000-acre limits of the town (1939), 110,000 acres were arable land, 1800 acres gardens, 39,000 acres pasture land, 13,600 acres vineyards, 11,000 acres forests, and 1000 acres reeds (marsh). The livestock consisted of 12,975 cattle, 10,912 horses, 18,209 pigs and 15,934 sheep. Fishing in the river Tisza is considerable and, within the town's limits, there was the artificial fish breeding in the 1412-acre Fehértó (White Lake) of Szeged. 25% of the inhabitants of Szeged engaged in agriculture, lived on isolated farms (tanya) within the municipal area of the town. The industry of the town is represented by a number of large firms, though those working in the different forms of small-scale industry still amounts to more than 3500. Szeged is famous for its paprika and its Pick Salami. The more important industrial firms include ironworks, hardware factories, machine-shops, brick yards, tile production, factories making furniture, leather, woven and knitwear, footwear, tobacco, flour-mills, paprika mills, bakery, salami, soap, vinegar and canned-food factories. Commerce declined considerably after the disastrous events of 1920 (dismemberment of the historic Kingdom of Hungary), the town was largely cut off from its commercial background area. However, the town's importance as a river-crossing place remained, situated at the confluence of two large rivers, the Tisza and the Maros. The railway reached Szeged in 1854. A number of nearby villages like Tápé, Kiskundorozsma and Szentmihálytelek, were annexed to Szeged in 1973, as was the practice during the Communist era. Szeged is the educational and commercial center of the southern part of Hungary with a variety of schools: 18 High Schools, a Teachers' College, a Roman Catholic Theological Academy, and some specialized schools, as well as 62 kindergartens. The University of Szeged incorporated the University of Kolozsvár from Transylvania, transferred as a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920). Famous buildings include the Dömötör Tower (13th century), the Reök Palace, the Water Tower, the Gothic Franciscan Church (15th c.), the Serbian Orthodox Church (1773-1778), the Baroque-style Minorite Church (18th c.) and the Fekete Ház (Black House). In addition to the Botanical Garden of the University, the Szeged Zoo, the Móra Ferenc Museum and the libraries, there are active scientific, literary and artistic societies. The artesian fountain of the inner town provides alkaline thermal water of 50.45°C, the medicinal Anna mineral water for the treatment of tracheitis, stomach hyperacidity and kidney stones. After the flood of 1879, Szeged was rebuilt, based on a regular, organized town plan: two concentric ring boulevards cut by seven radiating avenues. Two dike belts and a 9.5 m high ring dike was constructed on the periphery of Szeged. The large Széchenyi Square of the inner town center is situated between the Lajos Tisza Ring-Boulevard and the Tisza River. The Town Hall overlooks the square. Statues of Count István Széchenyi, Pál Vásárhelyi, Count Lajos Tisza and Ferenc Deák are on the lawn among flowerbeds. Further south on the Klauzál Square stand the central building of the University of Szeged, and the statue of Lajos (Louis) Kossuth. The large Cathedral Square is surrounded by the Episcopal Palace, the Votive Church (the cathedral of the bishopric of Csanád) with a spacious frontage for open-air theatrical performances. The equestrian statue of Prince Rákóczi stands on Gizella Plaza. The hospital clinics are on the banks of the Tisza River in the town-center. North of the main road bridge, the National Theater, the Educational Palace (comprising the Municipal Museum and the Somogyi Library with 150,000 volumes) and the Stefánia Promenade line the Móra Square. The Promenade shows remnants of the one-time fortress of Szeged, with the statues of Queen Elizabeth (spouse of Francis Joseph) and Pista (Steve) Dankó. The Reformed and Lutheran Churches and the municipal baths are on the Lajos Tisza Ring Boulevard. The Jesuit Monastery and church, as well as the Synagogue are situated between the two concentric ring boulevards. Outside them lies the Lower Town (Alsóváros). On the left (southern) banks of the River Tisza is the suburb called New Szeged (Újszeged). Historically, the town was established, in all probability, during the Magyar conquest of the Carpathian Basin (895-900), built on earthworks (earth-fortifications) found on site. Attila must have had his seat near this town. It was north of Szeged, at Pusztaszer (or possibly at Alpár) that the first national assembly of the Magyar tribal leaders under Khagan Árpád was held. In the Middle Ages, it was a military stronghold; and during the reign of the Árpád dynasty kings (10th to 13th century) a flourishing trade center. It was destroyed by the Tartars and later by the Ottoman Turks. In 1178, the town was already a royal salt-depot, later becoming the Treasury and the Mint during the reign of King Béla III. After the Mongol devastation it was rebuilt under King Béla IV (1235-1270), who raised the town to royal borough status and strengthened it with a fortified castle, built of stone. To replace the decimated population, he settled Bulgars, Greeks and Serbs in the town; in the Plains (pusztas) north of it he settled Cumanians. King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg, 1387-1437) had a wall built around the town early in the 15th century. In 1498 it was made a royal free borough. The town was under Turkish rule from 1542 to 1686. In 1708, the bubonic plague ravaged the town; in 1712 the flooding Tisza devastated it. Early in the 18th century, the town grew and prospered, though in the same century it burned down and was flooded 8 times. Piarist monks arrived in 1719 and opened a new grammar school in 1721. The witch trials were frequent between 1728 and 1744. The Viennese government settled Germans, Serbs and Dalmatians to increase the sparse population. During the War of Independence (1848-1849) Szeged was one of the bases for the Hungarian military operations in Southern Hungary. It was here that Lajos (Louis) Kossuth opened one of his orations by saying: "People of Szeged, pride of my nation" on 4 October 1848. The flood disaster of 1879 destroyed almost the entire town: only 297 houses remained habitable out of 5595, and 165 people perished. The Emperor-King Francis Joseph (Ferenc József) 1849-1916 visited the town and his words of encouragement "Szeged will be so much finer a town than before" combined with the public contributions (presents and donations from the nation, indeed from the whole western world, amounting to 2.9 million gulden) helped to rebuild the ravaged town and it was rebuilt in a planned, organized pattern. At the end of World War I, when the French military units concluded their occupation of the southern part of Hungary, it was at Szeged, on 1 March 1920, that the counter-revolutionary government, headed by Admiral Miklós Horthy (the future Regent) was formed. In 1921, the University of Kolozsvár was transferred to Szeged; the development of this University in its new seat at Szeged was significantly helped by the large-scale building constructions initiated by Count Kunó Klebelsberg. The University of Szeged became outstanding among the Universities in the Carpathian Basin. Szeged is the birthplace of Gábor (Gabriel) Agárdy, András (Andrew) Dugonics, Jenő (Eugen) Huszka, Gyula (Julius) Juhász, Géza Maróczy, László (Ladislav) Paskai, István (Stephen) Tömörkény and Vilmos (William) Zsigmond. The careers of Kálmán (Coloman) Mikszáth, Géza Gárdonyi and Lajos Pósa began in Szeged. – B: 1031, 1068, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456, T: 7456. → Most of the persons have their own entries.

Szegedi, Gergely (Gregory) (Szeged, 12 March 1537 - Eger, 20 December 1566) – Hymnwriter and preacher of the Reformed Church. After the Turks occupied his town, Szeged in 1543, he escaped with his family. Later, he taught undergraduate students at Debrecen; from 1556 he studied at the University of Wittenberg, with the support of Márton (Martin) Kálmáncsehi Sánta and Péter Petrovics. Here appeared his first work on the Lord's Supper, entitled Epistola ad ...Petrum Petrouuit (1557). In the same year, he became a pastor in Debrecen. Due his radical view in theology, he disagreed with Péter Méliusz-Juhász, and left for Tokaj for a while (1563). Finally, from 1564 he became a pastor in Eger. He edited a hymnbook for the Debrecen Reformed congregation, published in Debrecen in 1569, which contains ten Psalm translation-paraphrases and five hymns written by him. His poem entitled The Hungarians' Lament on Tartars' Robbery (A magyaroknak siralmas éneke a tatár rablásáról) (1566), depicts the terrible rampage of the Turks around Tokaj, and the cruel fate of men, women and children dragged away. Szegedi was an excellent poet, even Bálint Balassi learned from him. – B: 1257, 1680, T: 7103. → Kálmáncsehi Sánta, Márton; Méliusz Juhász, Péter; Balassi, Bálint.

Szegedi Kis, István (Stephen) (Szeged, 1505 - Ráckeve, 2 May 1572) – Reformer and poet. His tertiary studies were at the Universities of Vienna, Krakow and Wittenberg; at the last one he obtained a doctorate in 1543. The following year he returned to Hungary, but had to flee from Frater György (George Martinuzzi), the fanatically Catholic Cardinal and statesman, and had to settle in areas of Hungary under Ottoman Turk occupation, working as minister and preacher in Csanád, Cegléd, Gyula, Mezőtúr and Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania). In 1552, Mihály (Michael) Sztárai ordained him to be a pastor in Tolna. From 1554 he worked as a pastor and, in the same year, he became Superintendent of the new Church District of Baranya. From 1558 he worked as a preacher in Kálmánca in southern Transdanubia. During 1561 and 1563 he was in a Turkish prison in Pécs and Szolnok. The merchant Ferenc (Francis) Mező bailed him out on condition that he would be Parish Minister in Ráckeve (1564); from there he also acted as Superintendent; he was active there until his death. He is best known as a church organizer. He was the organizer of the Helvetian (Calvinist) Reformation in Hungary. His theological works were published in Geneva and Basel, and include Assertio vera de Trinitate (1573) and Confessio verae fidei (1588). A foundation in Szeged and a High School in Mezőtúr bear his name. – B: 0883, 0931, 1031, 1257, T: 7456. → Martinuzzi, György; Sztárai, Mihály; Skaricza, Máté.

Szegedi, Sándor (Alexander) (Izsák, southwest of Kecskemét, 6 December 1921 - Kecskemét, 4 December 1986) – Grape improver. He completed his tertiary gardening studies at the Department of Horticulture and Viticulture of the Agricultural University of Gödöllő, obtaining his diploma in 1946. First, he worked in a tree nursery; then, from 1950 until his retirement in 1981, in the Research Institute of Viticulture and Oenology of Kecskemét. From 1951 he was an active grape improver of the Research Institute at Katonatelep, north of Kecskemét; from 1962 was its Head. From 1972 to 1977, he was Director of the Research Station of Kecskemét, later a Scientific Deputy Director of the Institute. From 1959 he was head of the program to develop grapes of superior strains. He obtained a Ph.D. in Agriculture in 1978. His objective was to develop a strain which ripens earlier, has good productivity, larger clusters, larger berries, in combination with quality. With his co-workers he produced 40,000 hybrids, from among which, especially the types Favorit, Boglárka, Rekord and Winter (Téli) Muscat grapes brought him great success. In 1969 he started to develop a resistance against plant diseases; one results of this became the strain called Muscat of Pölöske Grape (Pölöskei muskotály szőlő), recognized officially. He was a member of the Municipal Council of Kecskemét. In recognition of his work, he was awarded the János Mathiász Prize. He was author of From the Plantation of Grapes to the Harvest (A szőlő telepítésétől a szüretig), co-authored with Sándor Horváth (1965). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Kocsis, Pál; Mathiász, János.

Szegedy, László (Ladislás) (Budapest, 4 February 1933 - Budapest, 5 August 1997) – Physician and neurologist. He obtained his Medical Degree at the University of Budapest in 1956. He became co-worker in the No. II. Neurological and Psychiatric Clinic from 1957 to 1984. In 1979 he became a professor at the University of Budapest; from 1984, he was Head of the Department of Neurology at the Uzsoki Street Hospital. From 1990 to 1995 he was Head of the Outpatients' Department and Director of the Hospital. From 1975, he was a judicial specialist; from 1980 a forensic physician and, from 1984, neurological examiner of the National Medical Specialist Committee. He was a member of numerous specialist societies both national and foreign. He dealt with oncological, tumor-related illnesses of the central nervous system, with neuro-immunology and electro-physiology, and the treatment of acute cerebro-vascular illnesses, as well as with relationships of the cerebral metabolism. His publications appeared in Hungarian and foreign journals. – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szegedy-Maszák, Aladár (Budapest, 19 November 1903 - Washington, DC. USA, 25 March 1988) – Diplomat. In 1927 he received a Degree in Economics from the University of Budapest. In 1927 and 1928 he studied at the University of Heidelberg, and at the École Libre des Sciences Politiques of Paris. Between 1928 and 1937 he served in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. From 1937 until 1942, he was Secretary of the Hungarian Embassy in Berlin. In 1943 and 1944, he was Deputy Director, then Director of the Political Department of the Ministry Foreign Affairs. In 1943 he played a prominent role in the secret negotiations of the Miklós (Nicholas) Kállay Government and the Allied Forces for a separate peace agreement. After the German occupation of Hungary on 19 March 1944, he was arrested by the Gestapo and deported to Dachau; he returned in 1945. From 1945 to 1947 he was a Hungarian diplomat in Washington. As a member of the Hungarian peace-delegation in Paris (1946-1947) he tried to prevent the relocation of 200,000 Hungarians from Slovakia in a population exchange program. In 1947 he resigned his post and settled in Washington. Between 1950 and 1969, he worked for the Voice of America Radio. His memoirs have been published. – B: 0883, 2104, T: 7667. → Kállay, Miklós.

Szegedy-Maszák, Mihály (Michael) (Budapest, 23 June 1943 - ) – Literary historian. He studied at the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest majoring in English and Hungarian Literature, and earned his Dip. Ed. in Education in 1966. In the same year, he attended the University of Cambridge for post-graduate studies. In 1967 he received his Ph.D. from the University of Budapest. Thereafter, up to 1981, he worked as a research fellow in the Institute of Literature of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. In 1981 he became an assistant professor at the Department of History of Literature at the University of Budapest, in 1990 becoming full professor. Between 1992 and 1994, he became Chair of 19th Century Literature, and obtaining the Chair of Comparative Literature in 1994, which he held until 2008. He was a visiting professor at a number of universities abroad, e.g. at King's College, Cambridge (1979-1980). He was appointed Professor of Literary History, Indiana University in 1991. He was editor of the periodicals, the Hungarian Studies, New Literary History in 1987, and the Protestant Review (Protestáns Szemle) in 1992. He was also a member of the editorial committees of Arcadia, Across Languages and Cultures, and of the Philology Bulletin (Filológiai Közlöny) in 2008. From 1992 to 1996 he was a member of the Hungarian Scholarship Committee. Szegedy-Maszák became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1993, ordinary 1998); became President of the Literary Committee of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and was elected member of the European Academy in 1995. His fields of research are: theory of the novel, comparative literature, Hungarian literature from the 19th to the 21st centuries, and comparative study of the trends in literature and art. He played an important role in having this comparative study of literature in its Hungarian heritage recognized in other countries. He particularly liked to deal with the works and achievements of Zsigmond (Sigismund) Kemény and Dezső (Desider) Kosztolányi. His works include Zsigmond Kemény (1989); World View and Style (Világkép és stílus) (1980); Sándor Márai (1991); Literary Canons (2001), and Histories of Hungarian Literature vols. i-iii (A magyar irodalom története, I-III), editor (2007). He was awarded a Ph.D. in 1989. His distinctions include The Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1997), the Széchenyi Prize (2003), and the Ágnes Nemes-Nagy Essay Prize (2008). – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.→Kemény, Baron Zsigmond; Kosztolányi, Dezső; Márai, Sándor.

Szegő, Gábor (Gabriel) (Kunhegyes, 20 January 1895 - Palo Alto, California, USA, 7 August 1985) – Mathematician. He received his secondary education in Szolnok, and his tertiary studies were at the Universities of Budapest (1912) and Vienna. At the University of Budapest, his professors included Lipót (Leopold) Fejér, Mihály (Michael) Bauer, József (Koseph) Kürschák and Manó (Emmanuel) Beke. From 1915 to 1918 he did military service in the infantry, artillery and the air force. In 1918, still in the army, he earned his Ph.D. in Vienna. In 1919 and 1920 he was a demonstrator at the Budapest Polytechnic under Kürschák. He worked as an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) in Berlin from 1921, and from 1926 as a professor at the University of Königsberg. In 1934, with the onset of National Socialism, his Jewish origin forced him to emigrate to the USA. He taught at the Universities of Washington D.C., St. Louis and, from 1938, at Stanford, retiring in 1953. He was a friend of György (George) Pólya, the renowned mathematician. He carried out research in the fields of mathematical analysis, orthogonal polynomials and Toeplitz matrices. He was an honorary member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, and also a member of the Academy of Sciences of Vienna. His works include Aufgaben und Lehrsätze aus der Analysis, with György Pólya (1925); the Orthogonal Polynomials (1939), and the Toplitz Matrices, and his Collected Papers, vols. i,ii,iii (1982). – B: 0872, 0883, T: 7103, 7456.→Pólya, György; Fejér Lipót; Kürschák, József.

Székács, Elemér (Elmer) (Pest, 23 September 1870 - Budapest, 16 May 1938) – Farmer, plant geneticist. He studied at the Agriculture Academy of Magyaróvár between 1888 and 1891. After earning his qualification, he worked on the estates of Count Alajos (Aloys) Károlyi and started wheat strain improvement experiments at Sósdo, Temes County in 1906 (now in Romania). Through individual selections he developed from a local strain an improved type that saved Hungarian wheat growing from an agricultural crisis. He sowed his improved, so-called “Székács wheat” on approximately 4200 acres at Árpádhalm, Csongrád County. The improved strain, yielding better quality wheat, displaced the so-called Tisza-field wheat on the Great Hungarian Plain by 1911. The improved varieties that he developed played an important role in developing the country’s wheat-growing program. He founded the Planting Seed Improving Company Ltd. (Vetőmagnemesítő Rt.) and set up an experimental farm at Árpádhalm and Kompolt, where he was engaged in improving other plant strains. He became the chief supervisor of state plant improving farms in 1931.

He wrote many significant articles on strain development and founded and edited the Plant Improving Review (Növénynevelő Szemle). On his initiative, the teaching of plant improvement was introduced to Hungary. – B: 1078, 0883, 1138, T: 7675.

Székács, József (Joseph) (Orosháza, 2 February, 1809 - Budapest, 29 July, 1876) –

Lutheran Bishop and man of letters. He did his studies at Sopron from 1826, passed his pastoral examinations in 1829, then he studied Law at Eperjes (now Prešov, Slovakia), and in 1835 he went on a round trip in Western Europe. He became the first Lutheran minister for the Hungarians in Pest. In 1842, together with Pál (Paul) Török, Bishop of the Reformed Church, he started the journal Protestant Church and School Journal (Protestáns Egyházi és Iskolai Lap). During 1848-1849, he supported the case of the War of Independence from the House of Habsburg; after its collapse he was forced to go into hiding for a while. In 1859, he was one of the leaders of the resistance to the Protestant Patent of the Habsburg rule (Patens). In 1860 the Bánya Church District elected him Bishop, a position he held until his retirement in 1872. Then, until his death, he was Parish

Pastor of the Lutheran Congregation in the Deák Square Church in Budapest. He was an excellent orator. For his literary work (mainly translations of literature from Serbian, Greek and Latin), the Hungarian Academy of Sciences made him a corresponding member, and the Kisfaludy Literary Society elected him an ordinary member. His main works are Serbian Folk-tales and Heroic Stories (Szerb népdalok és hőmesék) (1836); Smaller Prayerbook (Kisebb imakönyv) (1868), and Collected Sermons (Összegyűjtött egyházi beszédei) (1871). Schools in Orosháza bear his name. – B: 1050, T: 7456. → Patens of February; Török, Pál; Podmaniczky, Baron Frigyes.

Székely, Arnold (Budapest, 6 November 1874 - Montreal, PQ, Canada, 24 September 1958) – Pianist and piano teacher. Originally he studied Law, but chose music as his career. After studying abroad, first as a student of István (Stephen) Thomán, then from 1903 a student F. Busoni in Berlin, he returned to Hungary in 1905. Between 1907 and 1939 he was a professor at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. From 1945 he was a teacher at the Fodor Music School and in 1948 he gave a series of lectures in Paris on music education. From 1951 on, he worked in Montreal, Canada, where he taught and gave concerts. He gave several successful concerts abroad. Among his more noted students were: Antal Doráti, Edit Farnady, Anni Fischer, Andor Földes, Louis Kentner and Georg Solti. – B: 0883, T: 7684. → Thomán, István; Doráti, Antal; Kentner, Louis; Fischer, Anni; Solti, Sir George; Rév, Livia.

Székely, Bertalan (Bartholomew) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 8 May 1835 - Budapest, 21 August 1910) – Painter. First he studied to become an engineer, attending lectures at the Vienna Polytechnic; later, from 1851 to 1855 at the University of Vienna, he studied under J.N. Geiger and K. Rahl. In 1855 he returned to Transylvania, where for years he earned a living as a sign painter and by giving drawing lessons. In 1858 he worked on the estate of Count Aichelburg's family at Marchendorf in Bohemia, where he married.

In the winter of 1859, he went to Munich to study with the famous painter Karl Theodor von Piloty. It was there that he painted his early self-portrait, a masterpiece of realism, and his first famous historic composition, Discovery of the Corpse of King Louis II (II. Lajos király holttestének megtalálása). In 1861 he painted the historical picture Dobozy and his Spouse (Dobozy és hitvese). From then on, his individual style increasingly began to emerge, characterized by academic composition, psychological character description, and naturalistic depiction of material objects. In 1862 he moved to Pest. In 1863 he won a scholarship with his mural Flight of Emperor Charles VII (VII. Károly császár menekülése) held in the Bayerisches Nationalmuseum in Munich. With the scholarship he went to Holland and Paris. He returned to Hungary in 1864. Later, in 1866, he finished the Mohács Disaster (Mohácsi vész), and the following year the Women of Eger (Egri nők), very successful historical paintings. In 1869 he went on a study trip to Italy. During this period he also prepared numerous illustrations for poems of Sándor Petőfi, József Eötvös, and others. In 1870, his historical composition, László V. was completed and, in 1871, he painted the 12-piece cycle Woman's Life (Nő élete). In 1875, Bertalan produced one of his main works, Thököly's Farewell (Thököly búcsúja). In 1879 he completed his last large-scale historical work, Zrinyi's Outbreak (Zrinyi kirohanása). He completed a number of large frescos toward the end of the 19th century: between 1887 and 1889 the two frescos for the cathedral at Pécs, and the murals for its St. Mór Chapel. The frescos of the Tihany Abbey were completed with the collaboration of Károly Lotz and Lajos Deák-Ébner. He also painted several frescos for the Coronation Church (Matthias Church) of Buda (1890-1896), and the frescos for the assembly hall of the municipal council of Kecskemét. In addition to all the fresco works, he painted portraits, female figures, the well-known Léda compositions, and most of his fine Scenes (1880-1890). In his last period he was increasingly occupied with teaching of the art of painting. From 1871, he was a teacher at the School of Decorative Arts, Budapest, from 1902 its director. Bertalan was the greatest representative of the fusion of Romanticism with Academicism in Hungarian historical painting. He was ideally qualified technically and theoretically to carry on with teaching as the most learned master of the age. Memorial exhibitions of his works were held in the Art Gallery of Budapest in 1911 and 1956. His house at Szada (northeast of Budapest) is now a Memorial Museum. His book entitled Selected Artistic Writings of Bertalan Székely (Székely Bertalan válogatott művészeti írásai) was published in 1962. – B: 0883, 1105, 1445, T: 7456. → Lotz, Károly, Deák-Ébner, Lajos; Tornyai, János.

Székely, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest, 6 April 1912 - Budapest, 14 April 1989) – Composer, chorus master, music teacher. From 1932 to 1935, he studied composition under Zoltán Kodály, Antal Molnár and Albert Siklós at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest. He obtained a diploma in composition in 1937. Until 1945, he led the choir of the Börös Union, while in the Vándor Choir he was deputizing for Sándor Vándor. In 1945, when Hungary was under Soviet military occupation and a Communist system of government was unfolding, he organized the Workers' Cultural Association; he was also Secretary of the Bartók Association, which coordinated all the choirs of Hungary at the time. From 1950 to 1952, he directed the choir of the Hungarian Radio; from 1952 to 1956, he organized a choir at Dunaújváros (Sztalinváros, Stalintown at the time). He became a teacher at the Teachers' College of Budapest from 1959 to 1972. To advance his erudition in music, in the early 1960s he learned all about modern composing and, by 1967, he had completely formed his own musical language. The high-water mark in his career as a composer was reached between 1986 and 1988; he scored much success with his compositions both in Hungary and abroad (e.g. at Darmstadt). He composed vocal and stage works, orchestral and concerto works, chamber music and solo works. His works include Gold Star (Aranycsillag) operetta (1950); Attila József Cantata (1954); György Dózsa Oratorio (1958); five String Quartets, and a Sonata for Solo Violin (1980). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Kodály, Zoltán, Molnár, Antal; Siklós, Albert.

Székely, Éva (Budapest, 3 April 1927 - ) – Swimmer. She was forty-six times individual Hungarian champion, ten-times world and twelve times European record-holder. She was Champion in the Helsinki Olympics of 1952, and Silver-Medalist of the Melbourne Olympics of 1956. After her active sports career, she worked as a trainer; her best-known pupil, her daughter Andrea Gyarmati, was Silver-medalist at the Munich Olympics of 1972. She was the Nation's Sportswoman. Her husband, Dezső Gyarmati, was also the Nation's Sportsman and Olympic Champion as a water-polo player. She was a recipient of the Oeuvre Prize (2006). – B: 1051, T: 7456.→Gyarmati, Dezső; Gyarmati, Andrea.

Székely, Gábor (Gabriel) (Jászberény, 26 May 1944 - ) – Stage manager, theater director. He studied at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest. From 1968 he was Manager of the Szigligeti Theater (Szigligeti Színház) of Szolnok, and from 1971 to 1980 he was its senior manager. In the meantime, he studied stage management from Tamás (Thomas) Major. From 1980 to 1982 he was Head Manager of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In 1982, he was a founding member of the József Katona Theater (Katona József Színház), and later that of New Theater (Új Színház), Budapest, where he worked as a director until 1989. He played a significant role in developing the artistic aspect of this theater. Later, he became Manager of the Theater tri-Bühne of Stuttgart. From 1973 he worked as a lecturer at the Academy of Music, Budapest, and later, he was its Vice-Chancellor till 2006. He has been a professor at the University of Theater and Cinema Arts, and between 1990 and 2002 he taught stage management. His stage managerial work is characterized by well-considered analytical ability, and the development of the human, true to life psychological accuracy of the stage figure. In his presentations a high-level of organization, esthetic rigor and evocation of extreme emotions are achieved. His manager's work includes Büchner's Woyzeck; Miller's After the Fall (Búnbeesés után); O'Neill's Long Day's Journey Into Night (Utazás az éjszakába); Chekhov's The Seagull (Sirály), Three Sisters (Három nővér); Shakespeare's The Life of Timon of Athens (Athéni Timon), Troilus and Cressida, As You Like It (Ahogy tetszik), Coriolanus, and M. Füst's The Wretches (Boldogtalanok). He received the Kossuth Prize in 1988, and the Mari Jászai Prize in 1974, as well as the Merited Artist (1978) and Outstanding Artist (1986) titles. – B: 1445, T: 7456.→Major, Tamás.

Székely, István, de Bencéd (Stephen) (Bencéd, now Bentid, Transylvania, in Romania, ca 1500/1510 - after 1593) – Schoolmaster and preacher of the Reformed Church. From 1529 he studied at the University of Krakow. From 1538 on, he was a schoolmaster in Szikszó, in 1546 in Olaszliszka. From 1548 he was a preacher in Szikszó, and from 1563 in Gönc. Being of Szekler origin, he devoted his whole life to the Reformation Movement. He felt it was his solemn duty to proclaim not only from the pulpit, but also through his writings all that he held to be sacred and true. His work, Calendarium in Hungarian, was published in Krakow in 1538. It was the first such work in Hungarian; all his writings were produced in Hungarian. The Book of Psalms (Zsoltárkönyv) in prose text, published in Krakow in 1548, contains valuable information, notably in the Appendix, describing the names of old musical instruments. The Chronicle About this World's Eminent Things (Chronica ez világnac yeles dolgairol) highlights important world events: it was a first attempt to record world history in the Hungarian language (1559). – B: 1197, 0883, 1153, T: 7682.

Székely, István (Steve Sekely, S.K.Seeley) (Budapest, 25 February 1899 - Palm Springs, California, USA, 11 March 1979) – Film director. After two years at the Budapest Polytechnic, he gave up studying and became a journalist, becoming a correspondent for the daily, The Week (A Hét), sub-editor of Mad Steve (Bolond Istók), Editor of Somersault (Bukfenc), and Manager of the Cabaret Apollo. In the 1920s, he was the Berlin reporter for the The News (Az Újság); he was also a scriptwriter and co-author of writer Ludwig Wolf. In 1929, he started work as a stage manager. In 1931, he returned to Hungary. By the end of 1937, he had 24 feature films to his credit. Linked with his name is the second Hungarian sound film Hyppolit, with its satirical humor; its adaptations also bear witness to its high standard, based on the novel by Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz: Be Good Unto Death (Légy jó mindhalálig) (1936), and Two Prisoners (Két fogoly), based on Lajos (Louis) Zilahy's novel (1937). Before National Socialism gained strength in 1938, he left Hungary and with his wife, Irén Ágai, settled in the USA, where he established a film company the Star Pictures in 1945. In 1950 he worked successfully in Mexico; in 1953 in West Germany; in 1954 and 1955 in Italy, and in England in 1962. From 1972 on, at the invitation of István Nemeskürty in Budapest, he completed a film based on Ernő Szép's novel Purple Acacia (Lila akác), already staged in 1934. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Móricz, Zsigmond; Zilahy, Lajos; Nemeskürty, István; Szép, Ernő.

Székely, János (John) (Torda, now Turda, Romania, 7 March 1929 - Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș, Romania, 23 August 1992) – Transylvanian Hungarian poet, playwright and translator of literary works. He studied at the Reformed College of Marosvásárhely, and later, he was a Hussar cadet at the Military School. Near the end of World War II, as a teenager, he was conscripted into the army and taken to the western front, where he was taken prisoner. After returning home to Transylvania, he attended the Philosophy Department of the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), where he obtained an Arts Degree; afterward he worked as the poetry editor for the journal, True Word (Igaz Szó) of Marosvásárhely until his retirement in 1989. Ilona Varró, his wife, was a writer and editor, and his son was the sculptor János Jenő (John Eugene) Székely. In the first generation after World War II, he followed the traditions of the West in Hungarian lyrics, while his plays were based on documents. His best pieces include In Star Light (Csillagfényben) poems (1955); The Curse of Flowers (A virágok átka) poems (1966); The Tower of Silence (A hallgatás tornya) selected poems (1972); Protestants (Protestánsok) drama (1978); Illuminated Chronicle (Képes krónika) plays (1979), and The Western Army Corps (A nyugati hadtest) novel (1988). His collection of poems Nothing – Never (Semmi – soha) was published after his death. His foreword to this posthumous work ended with the sentence: “I wrote my poems in an age, when it was a disgrace to be human. This would be terrible in a moral situation, but for a poet it is not exactly devoid of interest.” He interpreted the works of contemporary Romanian authors and translated German and Russian works as well. He was awarded the Endre Ady Prize posthumously. – B: 1918, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Székely, Júlia (Budapest, 8 May 1906 - Budapest, 19 March 1986) – Writer, pianist and teacher. She began her piano studies under Tibor Szatmári at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest, and studied under Zoltán Kodály and Béla Bartók, obtaining a piano teacher's certificate in 1934. Concurrently, she completed a stage-managing course at the Academy of Dramatic Art. In 1929 she appeared as a concert pianist in Vienna. Her play Nóra's Daughters (Nóra leányai,) directed by Gizi Bajor was staged in the National Chamber Theater in Budapest on 28 April 1938. Between 1945 and 1948 she worked as a critic for the magazine Theater (Színház). From 1952 to 1968 she was engaged as a voice teacher at the Teachers College of Pécs, where she became a lecturer, later a senior lecturer. She pursued significant literary activity as well. She scored great success with her novel: The Flying Mouse (A repülő egér) (1939). In articles and radio talks she featured Béla Bartók's teaching method and she prepared numerous Bartók transcriptions. She wrote radio plays, biographies of musicians, and TV plays for the Hungarian Radio and Television. Her works also include Criminal Case (Bűnügy) novel (1941); Musicians (Muzikusok) novel (1950); Vagrant Years (Vándorévek): Franz Liszt's Life (1962); I Departed From My Nice Country (Elindultam szép hazámból): Béla Bartók's life (1965), and Blessed Solitude (Áldott magányosság), novel (1986). – B: 0883, T: 7456.→Liszt, Ferenc; Kodály, Zoltán; Bartók, Béla; Bajor, Gizi.

Székely, Mihály (Michael) (Jászberény, 8 May 1901 - Budapest, 22 March 1963) – Opera singer (base). He studied singing privately under Géza László. He became a member of the Opera House of Budapest at the age of 22, and remained a member until his death. Already in the 1930s, he had gained international recognition, singing in Vienna and in Italy. After World War II, he had successes in the USA; between 1946 and 1950, he appeared at the New York Metropolitan Opera in every season. Between 1948 and 1958, he appeared almost everywhere in Europe, including Russia (Soviet Union at the time). In 1956, at the Festival of Holland, he made a great impression with his wonderful rendering of the Duke in Béla Bartók's Bluebeard's Castle; he also sang this role in Brussels, Paris in 1957, and at the Royal Festival Hall of London in 1962. Between 1957 and 1961, he sang yearly at the Glyndebourne Festival, mainly in Mozart operas. Toward the middle of the 20th century, he was one of the greatest opera singers of Hungary. His outstanding base roles were in Mozart operas, which he interpreted humanely and colorfully with great musicality and artistry. In the case of the Duke in Bluebeard's Castle, Székely virtually became one with the role. In 1964, a commemorative Mihály Székely Medal was founded. His roles included Ozmin in Mozart's Il Seraglio (Szöktetés a szerályból); Leporello in Mozart's Don Giovanni; Sarastro in Mozart's Magic Flute (Varázsfuvola); King Philip in Verdi's Don Carlo; Boris in Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov, and Baron Ochs in Richard Strauss' Der Rosenkavalier (Rózsalovag). He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1949 and 1955, and the title of Outstanding Artist in 1950. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Székely, Mózes (1) (Lövéte, now Lueta, Romania, around 1550 - Brassó, now Braşov, Romania, 17 July 1603) – Military officer, administrator and politician. He was a descendant of Szekler (Transylvanian Hungarian) untitled noble family, and started his military career in the army of István (Stephen) Báthory, Prince of Transylvania (1571-1576). In the battle of Szentpál (1575), he was already the Commander of the Szekler troops. He followed Báthory into Poland, where he was the Commander of the Hungarian Infantry; in that capacity he took part in Báthory's Russian campaign. On his return, he became the confidant of Zsigmond (Sigismund) Báthory, Prince of Transylvania (1581-1598), he received large land grants and, in 1591 he rose to nobility status. He was Commander-in-Chief of András (Andrew) Báthory (1598-1605), later that of Voivode Mihály. In 1601, he turned against the reign of terror of the Voivode and General Basta. First, he tried to return Zsigmond Báthory to the throne; and after the battle of Gorosló he himself became the head of the anti-Imperial party. In 1603 he broke into Transylvania aided by the Turks. With the help of the nobility he drove out the Imperial forces from the Principality of Transylvania and, on 8 May 1603, he assumed the title of Prince. However, the Szeklers turned against him. They combined with the forces of Radul, the Voivode of Wallachia and annihilated his army of noblemen in the battle of Brassó; he himself fell on the battlefield. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Báthory, Pince István; Báthory, Prince Zsigmond; Basta, Giorgio.

Székely, Mózes (2) →Daday, Loránd.

Székely, Pierre (Péter) (Budapest, 11 June 1923 - Paris, 3 April 2001) – Sculptor, ceramist. In 1941, he studied graphics and engravings with Hanna Dallos, Budapest. At the end of 1944, he was arrested and was taken to a concentration camp and was to be transported to Germany. He somehow managed to escape and was in hiding until the war was over. In 1946 he went to Paris on a scholarship, where he remained permanently. Later his wife joined him. In Paris he started working as engraver, poster artist and ceramist. He created an enormous output of ceramics furniture and public sculptures, out of his conviction that art is a form of communication. He developed a sign language, which was read intuitively in the context of his works, including his non-representative sculptures. His ideas grow out of his media, be it wood, stone or metal; so that the matter of his sculptures lives through the forms, which suggest harmony and peace. Among his works are a Monumental work for the Olympic Games in Mexico (1968); a Monumental work in Lisbon, Portugal (1981); a Sculpture in the U.S. Presidential collection (1989); a Sculpture in the garden of the Elysée Palace in Paris, and a Sculpture in the President's residence in Budapest (1995); a large sculpture in the Hungarian Institute of Paris, and sculptures in the Pompidou Center (1996). His works are also in the museums of Hungary, Japan and France. He lectured on philosophy in the universities of Kanazawa, Hong Kong, New York, Detroit, Thessaloniki and Athens. A Hungarian film was made about Székely's lifework (1997). His biographical book entitled Forbidden Gods (Tiltott istenek) was published in Budapest. Among his distinctions are an Honorary Doctorate from the Royal Academy of Fine Art of the Hague in Holland; an the Honored Artist title of Hungarian Government and County Baranya, and he was awarded the Legion of Honour of France (1998). – B: 1031, T: 7103.

Székely, Zoltán (? Hungary, 8 December 1903 - Banff, Alberta, Canada 5 October 2001) – Violinist and composer. He studied at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest and, by the age of 18, he had already appeared at public recitals with Béla Bartók. Their partnership reached its zenith in 1939, in Amsterdam, where he performed Bartók's Violin Concerto, a work Bartók dedicated to him. His greatest fame came as first violinist of the Hungarian String Quartet, which he led from 1939 to 1972. After emigrating to Canada, he worked at the Banff Center, where he also made several recordings. In 1975 the Province of Alberta granted him special status: he became the Province's artist-in-residence. This sent him traveling across the Province as a role model for developing musicians. In 2001, an award in his honor was established at the Banff International String Quartet Competition. He was named Honorary Professor by the Music Academy of Budapest in 1981. – B: 0938, 1031, T: 7670.→Bartók, Béla.

Székelyhid, Ferenc (Francis) (Tövis, 4 April 1885 - Budapest, 27 June 1954) – Opera singer (tenor). He studied under the direction of Ödön (Edmund) Farkas, but started his career as a civil servant. From 1909 to 1935, he was a member of the Budapest Opera House. His first appearance was on 26 November 1909, in the title role of F. Erkel's opera, László Hunyadi. From 1923 he became a life member of the Opera House. In 1933 he was a singing master, and from 1933 to 1944 a teacher at the Academy of Music. He also appeared as a concert artist. He was one of the outstanding Hungarian singers in the first half of the 20th century. He especially excelled in singing the works of the Viennese classics. He was also expert in the works of the more recent Hungarian masters. On the occasion of the premier of Kodály's Psalmus Hungaricus in 1923, he sang the tenor solo of the work. He also had successful appearances abroad. In 1911 and 1913 he participated in the Wagner Festival Plays in Bayreuth. His roles included Pinkerton in Puccini's Madama Butterfly (Pillangókisasszony); Walter of Stolzing in Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg (Nürnbergi Mesterdalnokok), also in Tannhäuser, Parsifal and Lohengrin; in Gounod's Faust; Don Ottavio in Mozart's Don Giovanni, and Belmonte in Mozart's Die Entführung aus dem Serail (Szöktetés a szerályból). – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Kodály, Zoltán; Erkel, Ferenc.

Székelyudvarhely Codex – Judith's Book, a manuscript containing 188 letters of evangelical passages, contemplations and examples – similar to the contents of the Döbrentei Codex. It appeared around 1528, mainly written by András (Andrew) Nyújtódi, a friar in Udvarhely, for his sister, Judith, living in the Monastery of Tövis (now Teiuș, Romania). This important linguistic record is stored in the Library of the Senior High School of Székelyudvarhely's (now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Romania). – B: 1150, 1153, T: 3240.→Döbrentei Codex; Codex Literature.

Szekeres, Miklós (Sir Nicholas Sekeres) (Hungary, 1910 - Dubrovnik, Croatia, June 1972) – Industrial developer. Although, he was attracted by the theater from his early childhood, he obeyed his father's wishes and, on completion of his studies at the Academy of Commerce, he studied the textile industry in Germany. By the age of twenty-four, he had become the technical director of the Adria Silk Weaving Mill. At that time, a Mr. Adams arrived in Hungary to recruit young Hungarian industrialists to establish new industries in certain areas of England, subsidized by the government's job creation program. Szekeres signed up in 1937.

The wooden ship manufacturing plant of Cumberland floundered, the mines were exhausted, and there was a need for job opportunities. Szekeres imported weaving girls from Hungary to teach the local workers. The West-Cumberland Silk Mills Ltd. started operation in 1938. They won a contract from the British Government to manufacture silk textile for parachutes at the beginning of World War II. When the supply of silk was jeopardized, he experimented with nylon as a new weaving material for parachute construction. After end of the War, he began exporting his fabrics to Western Europe, the Americas and Australia. His three factories were working three shifts daily.

His youth dream became a reality in 1959, when he had a theater built on his property, called Rosehill Theater, which is one of the most important music art centers not only for that district, but also for all of England. The best theater groups, orchestras, conductors and soloists performed there, including many world famous Hungarians.

Queen Elizabeth II of England dubbed him a knight. A mulberry tree symbolizing raw silk material and two masks, ancient emblems of theater, are displayed on his coat-of-arms. His eventful life came to a sudden end at the tragic excursion on a ship to Dubrovnik. There was a Rosehill Festival between 3 and 5 September 2009, for the 50th anniversary of the opening the theater. During the past 50 years, among the guest artists who appeared on the stage were Sir George Solti, György (George) Pauk, Yehudi Menuhin, Szvjatoszlav Richter, Victoria de Los Angeles, Mstislav Rostropovich, KBE, and Peggy Ashcroft. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7675.→Solti, Sir George.

Székesfehérvár (German: Stuhlweissenburg, Alba Regia for the Romans) – Town in western Hungary (Transdanubia), an old Hungarian settlement with an 1100-year history (from the appearance of Kagan Árpád, during the Carpathian conquest, about 900 AD). It is situated 111m above sea level, about 65 km southwest of Budapest, and ca. 30 km northeast of Lake Balaton, and is surrounded by a partly swampy environment (a naturally defensible hinterland) south of the Vértes Mountain, originally called Bodóhát (highest point 481m). In the historic Kingdom of Hungary it was the coronation town (37 kings were crowned here) and the burial place of 15 Hungarian kings (1028-1527). It was the most important town in Hungary in the Middle Ages, then known as Alba Regia, as in Roman times. Diets were held there and it was the home for the crown jewels. King St. Stephen granted the town its rights, and surrounded the town with a plank wall. The Golden Bull (Arany Bulla), an important Charter by King András II (Andrew) was released here in 1222. It is a market center for the truck farmers, vine growers and horse breeders of the town's surroundings; and the town is an industrial center, producing aluminum (bauxite deposits nearby), machinery, chemicals and leather; it is also the seat of the Roman Catholic bishop. Its population was 32,167 in 1901; 40,714 in 1930; 98.7% Magyars, 81.0% Roman Catholic, 10.3% Calvinist, 2.0% Lutheran, 6.0% Jewish; 55,934 in the 1970s; 106,346 in 2001. The town is an important rail and road junction on the main route southwest to Lake Balaton, Croatia and the Mediterranean world. One of Europe's largest autobus factories is in this town. The present-time appearance of the town is mainly due to the recent and post-18th century re-building activity, hence the richness of the town in Baroque buildings. Of the Romanesque Coronation Church with four towers, and the royal palace, destroyed by the Turks in 1601, only the St. Anna chapel remains. The Town Hall (late 17th. century) was combined with the 1781 Zichy Palace (manor house). The County Hall (1807) was planned by Mihály (Michael) Pollack. The Cathedral was built between 1758 and 1768, utilizing the ruins of the medieval St. Jacob Church. The town has municipal offices, high schools, a Museum containing Roman antiquities, the Bishop's Palace, and several churches. A Byzantine-style church won a Europa Nostra award in 1990. There are also 3 monasteries, a fine seminary church, and two synagogues. There are several fine buildings on Vörösmarty Square, which are the work of the well-known architect Miklós (Nicholas) Ybl. The Ybl Museum houses a collection of his works. A more recent building is the Vörösmarty Theater. There is the house of birth of Ignác (Ignatius) Goldziher; the memory of the great Bishop Ottokár Prohászka is cherished in the memorial church; his mortal remains are kept in a sarcophagus. Noteworthy are the statues of the poet Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty (work of Baron Miklós Vay), King Lajos (Louis the Great) (by Ödön Moiret), and St. Emeric (by Elek Lux), and also the equestrian statue of St. Stephen, first king of Hungary (by Ferenc Sidló). In the center of the town is the Árpád Bath with carbonic and chalky mineral water used for the treatment of cardiac and neurological illnesses. The town's sports grounds and public health institutions are exemplary. The Roman settlement of Herculea stood on the site of the town (superseding an earlier Celtic village). During the Carpathian settlement in 896, Árpád's Magyars settled in the area from the beginning. King István I (St. Stephen) chose it as the capital of Hungary. It was first mentioned in a document by the Bishop of Veszprém in 1009 as Alba Civitas. King István I endowed it with privileges known as the "rights of Fehérvár". He also built in this town one of his palaces and the basilica, which was only completed one year after his death (1039); therefore he could not have been crowned in it. After the town was freed from Turkish rule, it was depopulated; German and Serb settlers made their home there. The town wall was pulled down in 1709. At the end of the Communist regime in 1990, all the important factories collapsed and thousands of people lost their jobs. In place of the inefficient companies, numerous foreign firms invested in Hungary, and Székesfehérvár was turned into a success story of Hungary's transition into market economy. Ford and IBM, and a few years later Alcoa, Denzo and Sanmina-SCI settled in the town. – B: 1031, 1068, 1081, 1582, 1789, 1816, 7456; T: 7456. → Most of the persons in the article have their own entry; Golden Bull.

Székesfehérvár Provostship and Chapter – Founded by King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038) it is next to the cathedral and dedicated to the Fruit-grafting Madonna (Gyümölcsoltó Boldogasszony). It became a Registry Place by 1184, and issued validated documents. It had its own circular shaped seal, with the Virgin Mary and Archangel Gabriel. Its inscription read: Capituli Albenses Ecclesie; on another seal the inscription Sigillum Memoriæ Capituli Ecclesie Albensis appeared. Before the 14th century, the Holy Crown was guarded here. The Canons of the Cathedral recorded the histories and other important documents of the Royal Family, including a copy of the Golden Bull (Arany Bulla), the Hungarian Constitution of 1222. The Cathedral Chapter owned 61 parishes. The provostship possessed vast real estate holdings through the generosity of successive kings. The Chapter ceased to operate during the Turkish occupation (1541-1686). Queen Maria Theresa, however, re-established it and replaced its old structures in disrepair with a new cathedral in the 18th century. – B: 0945, 1078, 1020, T: 7103. → Golden Bull.

Székesfehérvár, Royal Sarcophagus – The age of the white limestone sarcophagus was determined to be from the 10/11th century. It survived the vicissitudes of the centuries. Formerly, it was believed by the majority of researchers to be from the age of King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038); but there are many others who are certain that it was the stone coffin of the Grand Duke Géza István, the father of St István. It was dug up from under the ruins of the Cathedral in 1813 and – on the order of Palatine József (Joseph) – it was transported to the Hungarian National Museum. For more than one hundred years, it was believed that it originated in Roman times; later, that it was from the early Middle Ages. It was stored at a remote corner until archeologist, Elemér (Elmer) Varju, in 1929, concluded that the remains of the first Hungarian King occupied it. Three sides of the marble-like finely carved limestone sarcophagus display deep bas-relief motives. On the main part of the carved ornament there are pagan symbols. The eight-stem rosette is of varying shapes; in the smaller part there is also Christian symbolism, depicting an angel lifting high an infant wrapped in fine linen. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7675.

Szekfű, Gyula (Julius) (Székesfehérvár, 23 May 1883 - Budapest, 29 June 1955) – Historian, publicist. After completing his Arts Course with a BA Degree at the University of Budapest in 1904, he worked at the Hungarian National Museum and, between 1909 and 1913, worked at the National Archives and at the State Archives of Vienna. In 1916 he became an Honorary Lecturer at the University of Budapest; in 1924 he became an associate professor, and in 1925 Professor of Modern Hungarian History. From 1927 to 1938, in support of Count István (Stephen) Bethlen's policy, he edited the journal Hungarian Review (Magyar Szemle). After World War II, he was Hungary's Ambassador to Moscow in 1948; from 1953 was a Member of Parliament and, from 1954, a Member of the Presidential Council. His early works were influenced by idealistic philosophy of history (1904-1916) through the trend of history of ideas (1916-1935) to his open opposition of fascism. His early works were characterized by a pro-Habsburg approach, combined with great learning, a high level of source criticism, and a mastery of historical data and literature. With this degree of scholarship, he turned against the romantic-nationalistic historiography represented by Kálmán (Coloman) Thaly. Szekfű's later works show the influence of Leopold von Ranke (Wie es eigentlich gewesen) and the comparative study of ideas in history, especially those of Friedrich Meinecke. After the revolutionary times of 1918-1919, he employed the comparative study of the history of ideas. His work, entitled Three Generations (Három nemzedék) (1920), is the ideological foundation of the era of Regent Horthy's reign. The resignation of Prime Minister István (Stephen) Bethlen in 1931, and the appearance of Gyula (Julius) Gömbös as the new head of government, turned him away from the policy of the new regime; he joined the opposition and pointed out the dangers of German National Socialism from a conservative, Catholic point of view. Szekfű published a series of articles in the daily Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet), and drew attention to his study Somewhere We Lost Our Way (Valahol utat veszítettünk). In the first half of the 20th century, he was one of the outstanding figures among Hungarian historians. Other works of his include Széchenyi's Words of Wisdom (Széchenyi igéi) (1921); Hungarian History vols. i-v (Magyar történet, I-V) with Bálint Hóman (1935-1936), by him vols iv - v, (1935-1936); State and Nation (Állam és nemzet) (1942); After the Revolution (Forradalom után) (1947), and The Old Kossuth (Az öreg Kossuth) (1952). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. – B: 0883, 1068, T: 7456. → Thaly, Kálmán; Horthy, Miklós; Bethlen, Count István; Gömbös, Gyula; Hóman, Bálint.

Széki, Tibor (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 18 April 1879 - Budapest, 4 December 1950) – Pharmacist. He earned his Degree in Pharmaceutics at the University of Kolozsvár in 1900, and his Degree in Chemical Science at the University of Budapest in 1902. From 1902 to 1913, he was a Demonstrator in the Pharmaceutical Institute of the University of Budapest. In 1907 he was also an assistant to K. Liebermann at the Polytechnic of Berlin-Charlottenburg; and also from 1907, a titular honorary lecturer on cyclic carbon compounds. From 1913 he worked at the Department of Experimental Biology at the University of Kolozsvár, where he became a titular professor in 1917. As a result of the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon in 1920, Transylvania was severed from Hungary and ceded to Romania. Consequently, Széki had to move with the entire staff of Kolozsvár to the University to Szeged, where the two universities were fused to form the University of Szeged. From 1922, Széki became a full Professor of Organic Chemistry; he also set up the Institute of Organic Chemistry of the University. From 1934 he was made Professor of Analytical and Pharmaceutical Chemistry at the University of Budapest. He was the pioneer of organic chemical research in Hungary; his main field of research being the synthesis and study of azaron compounds. He was also engaged in pharmaceutical research and developed medicines to prevent thrombosis. From 1910 to 1922, he edited the Hungarian Chemists' Journal (Magyar Kémikusok Lapja). His works include Studies of Asaron-derivatives (Tanulmányok asaron-származékokról) (1902); Über die Condensation von Brenzcatechin mit Ketonen (1905); Pharmaceutical Chemistry (Gyógyszerészi kémia) (1944); Organic Chemistry (Szerves kémia) (1947), and Pharmaceutical Chemistry – Inorganic Compounds (Gyógyszerészi kémia – Szervetlen vegyületek) (1949). He was member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1934, ordinary 1945). – B: 1730, T: 7456

Szekler Art – The Szeklers, have been living in Romania since 1920 and 1947, as a result of the Trianon (1920) and Paris Peace Dictates (1947), but retained their national characteristics much longer than other ethnic minorities. The thousand-year-old Szekler art was always part of Hungarian art. Their oldest churches were built at Marosszék (now Scaunul Mureş) about the year 1200 and in Aranyosszék (now Scaunul Arieşului) in the 13th century. These early churches generally had two transepts with a semi-circular sanctuary attached to the nave. In Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) churches rarely had the popular straight-wall type of sanctuary closing, such as found in Icafalva (now Icafalău) and Nyárádszentmárton (now Mitreşti). Churches having a quatrefoil center plan as in Gyergyószentmiklós (now Gheorgheni), and Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc) were rare. The simple carved decorations of the smaller churches were either on the semi circular arched entrances as in Csíksomlyó (now Şumuleu Ciuc), and Gyergyófalva (now Vărgata/Cicfalău), or the distinct feature of the inwardly narrowed stone window frames, as in Marosszentkirály (now Sâncraiu de Mureş). From the 13th century, the church interiors were richly painted. The figurative painter's favorite subject was the Legend of King St László (Ladislav) (1077-1095), depicting the Szekler military organization. These wall paintings were found in small Transylvanian churches.

The important market towns came to existence in the 14th-15th centuries, such as Marosvásárhely with its large one-nave Franciscan cathedral. The tower designs of the village churches probably originated in this cathedral tower with its great Gothic windows; and in the already rebuilt, but originally Gothic Franciscan church of Csíksomlyó (now Şumuleu Ciuc). The fortress church of Sepsiszentgyörgy (now Sfîntu Gheorghe) the towered churches of Gyergyószentmiklós and Székelyudvarhely (demolished in the 18th century) testify to the once central characteristics of these towns.

The second wave of the religious village architecture flourished in the 15th century, when the churches were expanded, often with towers on their western corner. The threat of Turkish danger prompted the construction of fortress churches as in Counties Csík and Háromszék (now Comitatul Ciuc and Trei Scaune). Their carved decorations reflect a refined and varied Gothic style. These churches are found all over Szekler-land, especially at Csíkdélne, Csíkrákos, Kövend, Nyárádszentlászló and Zabola (now Delnița, Racu, Plăieşti, Sânvăsi and Zăbala).

From the 15th century, the internal church decor became much richer. Besides the late Gothic wall paintings at Derzs, Marosvásárhely and Székelydála (now Ders, Târgu Mureş and Daia), the winged altars decorated with paintings and statues made of painted wood appeared. For example, at Csíksomlyó, Csíkszentimre, Csíkszentlélek (now Șumuleu Ciuc, Sântimbru, Lelicieni), and the individual Gothic wooden statues such as the Madonna of Csíkménaság (Armășeni), the patron picture of Csíksomlyó and the Madonna of Szenttamás (Tomești). In spite of their Saxon origin, the winged altars quickly became part of the local culture. The stone baptisteries with their varied dynamic folk decorations also became popular in the Gothic era. The finest examples are found at Miklósvár, Nagykászon and Nyárádszentháromság (now Micloșoara, Plaiesii de Jos, and Troița).

The influence of the Renaissance and its blend with Gothic elements was evident throughout the beginning of the 16th century. The most favored and most beautiful genre was the painted wooden ceiling and the coffered ceiling. In the 17th and 18th centuries these ceilings, richly decorated with flowers and geometric designs, were often the works of well-known village artists. Such is the case of Felsőbolgodfalva (now Feliceni) and Gyalakuta (now Gilău).

The onset of secular art began in the 15th-16th centuries. Due to the small number of aristocratic landlords among the Szeklers, initially only a handful of fortresses were built, such as Bálványosvár, erected by the Apor family. The fortress of Székelyudvarhely (now Odorheiu Secuiesc) was built at the end of the 15th century, while the fort of Csíkszereda (now Miercurea-Ciuc) was constructed at the beginning of the 17th century. Szárhegy (now Lăzarea), and the Castle Lázár, both decorated with friezes, are the only examples of a greater scale in Transylvania. Smaller country houses were most popular in the 17th-18th centuries.

The Dániel Castle in Vargyas (now Vârghiș) shows some Baroque forms in its porch of three-centered arches under a great mansard roof. The Salvator Chapel of Csíksomlyó is the earliest example of a Baroque interior from the end of the 17th century. Carved apostles decorate the wooden annular vaults of the nave. The renovated churches of the Middle Ages in Csík were often refurbished with Baroque altars, statues and furniture in folk style. The churches of Csíkkozmás (now Cozmeni) and Gyergyóalfalu (now Joseni) are best examples of this.

The Szekler art of woodcarving and wooden architecture molded and used the different historical styles to its taste. Szeklers mostly preferred the rich Renaissance forms, and that preference lasted well into the 20th century. The oldest example of the richly carved Szekler gate, kept at the Museum of Ethnography of Mikeháza (now Mica) belonged to the Franciscan Monastery, dating from 1673. It still has geometrical decorations, while later examples of the large or small Szekler gates are mostly decorated with traditional flower motives. – B: 1144, T: 3240.→Szeklers; Painted Wooden Ceiling.

Szekler Coat of Arms – On its heraldic right side, against a sky blue field, rests a resplendent golden sun disk, on the left side, a waning silver Moon. The Sun and Moon are the symbols of the Székelys (Szeklers), and are used in the coat of arms of Transylvania. The Sun and Moon symbols represented proto-Hungarian gods. After the Hungarians became Christians in the 11th century, the importance of these icons became purely visual and symbolic. Their original religious significance was lost.

This coat of arms was already known at the time of King András II (Andrew, 1205-1235). For a time, the use of this coat of arms was forbidden but, in 1437, King Zsigmond (Sigismund of Luxembourg) (1387-1437), restored its function. In 1659, the issuing of this permit was reinforced at the assembly in Szászsebes (now Sebeș, Romania). The Szekler coat of arms has also been incorporated into insignias of the Szekler counties and villages. The Szeklers have succeeded in preserving traditions to an extent unusual even in Central and Eastern Europe. – B: 1030, 1020, T: 7671.→Szeklers.

Szekler Folk Poetry – It has a common body with the Hungarian and Szekler folk poetry, stemming from a common body of expression. Their differences are mainly in the legends and ballads. Following some early publications, the attention focused on it around the end of the 1850s after Pál (Paul) Gyulai and János (John) Kriza, began to outline the Szekler ballads. All its richness opened up in 1863, when János (John) Kriza published his well-known selection in the first volume of his Wild Roses, vol.i (Vadrózsák, I). Later Pál Gyulai published his Hungarian Folk Poetry Collection, vol.i (Magyar népköltési gyűjtemény I), in 1872. He attached some data of Kriza's work to his detailed comparative study of the Ballads of the Plains and of the Szeklerland. In 1882, another Szekler poetry collection was published as part of the folk poetry collection's third volume, edited by Elek Benedek and Jób Sebesi. Oszkár Malland expanded the seventh volume with more Szekler ballads in 1911. – B: 1078, T: 3240.→Kriza, János; Szeklers; Gyulai, Pál; Benedek, Elek.

Szekler Gate, Traditional – Decorated gates are found mainly in the Szekler region of Transylvania: in the Counties of Csík, Háromszék, Maros-Torda, and Udvarhely. Usually a small gate and a large gate are erected side by side as a single unit. Three wooden columns connected with a horizontal wooden beam serve as the frame of the two gates. Diagonal bracing gives rigidity for the frame, and helps the arch-like finish of the gates. The gates are protected by a roof or a pigeon coop. The beam, the columns and the planks covering the empty surfaces are richly decorated with ancient Hungarian motifs carved into the wood. The horizontal beam also bears the name of the builder and the date of completion. These artistic gates are the most decorated part of a Szekler house and yard. In some places the gate is made out of stones. – B: 1078, 1020, T: 7663.→Szeklers; Szekler Art.

Szekler-Hungarian Runic Writing – Hungarian language text written from right to left with runic signs similar to Turkish writing. The Illuminated Chronicle writes as follows: "These Szekler-Scythian letters, not yet forgotten, are used not with the help of ink and paper, but by mastering the carving of incisions on sticks, they use them as carvings". The first scientific research was done by János (John) Telegdi. Mátyás (Mathew) Bél developed the line of letters, which was relatively well spread in Northern Hungary (now Slovakia). – B: 1174, 1020, T: 3240.→Runic Writing; Runic Writing, Hungarian; Runic Writing Research; Telegdi, János; Bél, Mátyás; Forrai, Sándor; Sebestyén, Gyula; Linear Writing; New Trends in the Research of Hungarian Ancient History.

Szekler Hymn (Székely Himnusz) – The national prayer of the Szeklers, originating in the painful years following the Dictated Peace Treaty of Versailles-Trianon, in 1920. The poet, György (George) Csanády wrote the lyrics in 1921, while a medical student; Kálmán (Coloman) Mihalik later composed the music. It officially premiered in Budapest in the amphitheater of Aquincum in Budapest in 1922, during the Szekler Association of University and College Students' Annual Meeting, and was sung by a choir in front of more than a thousand spectators. Only the original first verse was written by Csanády, the rest came later. In the occupied Transylvania it was always forbidden by the Romanian authorities to sing it publicly; and in the Soviet-occupied Hungary it was also blacklisted for 44 years. In spite of the prohibition, it was recognized all over Transylvania and was sung whole-heartedly following North-Transylvania's re-annexation to Hungary in 1940. Throughout the world, Hungarian communities in diaspora sing both the Hungarian National Anthem and the Szekler Hymn at their meetings and assemblies. – B: 1020, T: 3240.→Szeklers.

Szekler National Council (Székely Nemzeti Tanács - SZNT) – Formed on 26 October 2003, in Sepsiszentgyörgy (Sfintu Gheorge, Transylvania, Erdély, now in Romania), Kovászna (now Covasna) County, by some 200 representatives of eight Szekler “Szék” (Seat, historical Szekler region). It elected the governing body, which include Dr. József (Joeph) Csapó, ex-senator, President, twelve vice-presidents and four notaries. The Council is the representative body of historical Szeklerland, a region similar in extent to Slovenia, with almost 1 million Szekler inhabitants in a block, which made up 78% of the region's population. The Council seeks territorial autonomy for the Szeklerland within Romania, and dual citizenship (Hungarian and Romanian) for the Szeklers. In 2010, the Hungarian Government granted citizenship to all compatriots living abroad. The Szekler territorial autonomy is on the program of both the Romanian Hungarian Democratic Alliance (Romániai Magyar Demokratikus Szövetség – RMDSZ), and the Szekler National Council. The territory (within Transylvania) has been under Romanian rule since 1918, when it was occupied by the Romanian army, and the Dictated Versailles-Trianon Peace Treaty (1920), when it was ceded to Romania, an act which was re-endorsed by the Paris Peace Treaty of 1947. However, this territory, together with Northern Transylvania, came under Hungarian rule again briefly between 1940 and 1944, in accordance with the Second Vienna Awards. – B: 1094, T: 7103.→Trianon Peace Treaty; Paris Peace Treaty; Vienna Award II; Markó, Béla; Tóké, László; Toró, T. Tibor.

Szeklerland Runic Calendar – Count Luigi Ferdinando Marsigli, an Italian military engineer, who worked in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania), in the service of the Vienna court, saved the – until now – largest and continuous runic relic for posterity around 1690. He sent home to Bologna his diary-type observations on the runic relics. The original long Italian title in translation reads: “Collection carved on wood in the language of Szeklerland's earlier Scythian inhabitants, showing the order of movable holidays for use by the recent converts to the Catholic faith, on wooden pieces which I, myself collected, and sent these to my collection in Italy, during the time I was in Transylvania to secure the mountain passes”. – B: 1174, T: 7669.→Szeklers.

Szeklerland Sculpture (Transylvanian sculpture, now in Romania) – Among the oldest relics found include: a column head of Kolozs from around 1210; the double-bodied, single-headed ornamental dragon on the steeple of the Gyerőmonostor (now Mînaștirea) Church; and the Gyerőmonostorian “Bird-Maiden” from the same locality. Examples of mature romanticism can be seen on the pilaster-head of Gyalú (now Someșu Cald); the door-details of Türe (now Turea), and the church-entrances of Bodonkút (now Vechea), Nagykapus (now Copșa Mare), Sajóudvarhely (now Șieu-Odorhei), Szamosfalva (now Someșeni), and Vista (now Viștea). Two talented Szekler sculptors, the brothers Márton and György Kolozsvári, were considered to be on a par with the European artists. Their large-scale works were statues of Kings: St. István, St. László and St. Imre. They are full-sized statues, including the equestrian statue of St. László from the 1390s. Their only surviving work is the equestrian statue of St. George in the court of the Hradcany Castle in Prague. This is considered to be one of the greatest masterpieces of proto-Renaissance art. The crest stone from around 1480 of the Fort of Gyalú is also a memento of the Renaissance, as are the Telegdi tombstone in Mezőtelegd (now Tileagd); the Veress sepulchral monument at Farnas (now Sfârș); the Lászai Chapel at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia); the red marble door frame of the Reformed church at Menyő (now Mineu); the south gate of the church at Keszü (now Chesau); the priest's niche at Szilágycsehi (now Cehu Silvaniei); the Jagello crest of the Görgény (Gughiului) Fort, and the sacristy door of the Roman Catholic Church at Szilágyosomlyó (now Șimleu Silvaniei). After 1510, the Szekler sculpture underwent a stylistic change. The carved stones of the mansion at Zabola (now Zăbala); the gates of the Dániel Castle at Vargyas (Vârghiș), and also the Perkő Chapel at Kézdiszentlélek (now Sănzieni) are all examples of the stylistic changes. The bust of Count István Széchenyi heralded the beginning of the custom of displaying sculptures in public squares in Transylvania. Most of these sculptures were contracted from Budapest. Some of the sculpted images of the great heroes of Hungarian history disappeared during the Romanian era. The municipal council at Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca) decreed in 1881 that a statue be commissioned by János (John) Fadrusz in commemoration of its great son King Mátyás I (Matthias Corvinus) (1458-1490). The inauguration took place on 3 October 1901. – B: 1020, T: 7675.→Kolozsvári, Márton and György; Mátyás I, King; Fadrusz, János

Szeklers (Székelys – Székelyek) – Today, the majority of the Szeklers live in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). They are believed to be descendants of the Huns, and were long time inhabitants of Transylvania well before the advent of the Magyars.

After the dissolution of the Hun Empire, the Huns survived in the mountains of Transylvania. The chronicler Anonymus recorded them as the people who greeted and helped Árpád's Hungarians to establish their rule over the Carpathian Basin. János (John) Túróczy, in the Hungarian Chronicles, perceived them as the remnants of the Huns, who had never mixed with other "bloods". Three ethnically similar tribes of Transylvanian Szeklers settled in three distinct waves. Their ancient tribe is believed to be the remnant of Attila's people. According to some historians, the Avar tribes too were Attila's people, who settled around 678, and also the White Huns from the Hun territory of Khorezm. Based on the study of their traditions, some considered them to be remnants of the Scythians. The historian György (George) Bodor assessed that, in spite of the assimilation of a number of Pechenegs, the peoples of Khorezm and the Blaks (Bulaks), the Szeklers retained their Magyar (Hungarian) native tongue.

Ever since the Magyars settled in the Carpathian Basin, the Szeklers have been part of the Hungarian nation. While their language and folk culture are distinctly Hungarian, their lifestyle and social status may differ from other Hungarian groups. At the beginning of the Árpád era, they were considered to be military auxiliaries, who defended the country's northern, southern and western borders; and later, from the 12th century, protected the marked borderline known as the "gyepű", as it extended to the Carpathian Mountain range. In times of danger, they acted according to the custom of their Eastern ancestors. They carried a bloody sword around their villages to mobilize the men for active service, who then assembled at the appointed camps. Since the majority of the recruits were engaged from the earliest time in wild pasturing, they were fully self sufficient in their needs. Until the most recent times, they were well known for breeding the Szekler horse.

Between the 12th and 14th centuries, the Szeklers gradually extended their autonomous regions endowed by the king's privileges, called "Szék" (Seat). They extended toward the western region: Marosszék (its center was Marosvásárhely, now Târgu Mureș), and Udvarhelyszék (its center was Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu-Secuiesc), in the 12th century, and Háromszék (Trei Scaune, its center was Sepsiszentgyörgy, now Sfântu Gheorghe), and Csíkszék (its center was Csíkszereda, now Miervurea Cicuc) in the 13th century. They occupied Aranyosszék (Scaunul Arieșului, its center was Felvinc, now Unirea village) following the Mongol invasion. This historical movement of these people is well reflected in the style of their churches.

Observing pre-Christian practices, the three blood clans split into six tribes and into further twenty-four branches. When young people got married, the members of the clan helped to build their house in a voluntary co-operative work called "kaláka". In time of war, they helped each other; also at harvest time with harvesting; and in sorrow, they helped to arrange the burial. The majority of the Szeklers were free people. Their original main occupation was pasturing; after settling down they also became farmers and soldiers. They did not belong to any landlords, and paid taxes only with their blood in war times. The only exception was the "ox roast" and the "oxen tax".

In the 15th century, some families emerged as leaders and assumed prominence; the less wealthy middle class, called "lófő" (primipilus in Latin, meaning primary/chief centurion of a legion) Szeklers, provided the mounted soldiers, while the public order was maintained by the "foot" Szeklers.

In 1437, at the Union of Kápolna, the legally homogeneous and privileged Szeklers formed an alliance with the Hungarian aristocracy and the Transylvanian Saxons. Following the suppression of the free Szeklers' revolt in 1562, Prince János Zsigmond (King János II, 1540-1570) revoked the collective freedom of the common Szeklers, but still recognized the privileges of the nobles and lófő Szeklers. The majority of the population remained in serfdom until 1848. Following their protest over Queen Maria Theresa's order to establish Szekler border guards and conscription, they migrated in large numbers to Moldavia to escape a reprisal known as the "danger of Mádéfalva". Their feudal autonomy was abolished in 1848. The 19th century Szeklerland, left out of the Habsburg economical policies, triggered another wave of immigration to the United States. Most recently in 1989, the oppressive Romanian regime of Nicolae Ceausescu prompted still more emigrations. – B: 1020, 1153, 1231, T: 3240.→Gyepű; Lófő; Zsigmond, King; János II, King; Mária Terézia Queen and Empress; Anonymus; Thuróczy Chronicle.

Szeklers' Name (Székely) – Many researchers think that their name derives from the name 'Sikil', a Prince in the Hun community. In other words, it comes from the name of that princely tribe. The most ancient written records mention the Szekler people as "Siceli", "Siculi", and later "Szekul". During the times when the Szeklers were part of the Border Guard Patrol – the gyepű –, many Szekler settlements sprang up in the northern and western parts of the Carpathian Basin. As a result of their west to east migration, the same was noted in the Dunántúl (Transdanubia) and the Tiszántúl (Eastern Hungary) regions. Besides localities with Szekler name, there were other documented Szekler settlements as well: Döbréte and Váty in the Dunántúl, Sényő and Székelyszás in the Tiszántúl, while Boleráz, Nagylévárd and Sósvár were in Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). – B: 1020, T: 7669.→Gyepű; Szeklers.

Szekler's Law – István (Stephen) Werbőczy, the author of the 1514 Tripartitum, (state-laws, highly regarded the unusual laws of the Szeklers that were based on the Szekler people's privileges and were granted or reinforced by the Charters of the Hungarian Kings and Transylvanian Princes.

(1) All Szeklers were nobles, divided into three classes, namely the “aristocrats”, the so-called “lófő” Széklers, and the “foot” Szeklers.

(2) Regarding estate possessions: there was a difference between a homestead inherited by a Szekler, and an estate granted by the King. The Szekler homestead had nothing to do with royal rights; hence it was not subject to royal endowment. In case of a sale or exchange of an estate, the family members had the first right of purchase, followed by the neighbors; and only at their refusal was it possible to sell to anyone else.

(3) The law of inheritance decreed that male descendants enjoyed all the rights over a female child; but the maiden's privileges stipulated that she was to be provided for and equipped with a dowry on her marriage. If there were no male offsprings, a female – “a girl-child” – could inherit. If there were no children, then the female bloodline could inherit, but only if there were no male descendent in the immediate male family line. If there were no more living family members, instead of the State Treasury, the nearest next-door neighbor inherited the estate. – B: 1078, T: 3240.→Lófő; Szeklers; Werbőczy, István; Tripartitum.

Szeklers of the Lower-Danube – The Hungarian inhabitants of Hertelendyfalva, (now Vojlovica), Sándoregyháza (now Ivanovo) and Székelykeve (now Skorenovac), in the vicinity of Pancsova (now Pančevo), Serbia. They were resettled after the commencement of the project for water regulation works on the Lower-Danube toward the end of the 19th century. Parliamentary representative, László Mihály, born in Bukovina, and a government commissioner, György (George) Nagy, pushed for and eventually organized the transfer and resettlement of the Bukovina Szeklers into the Lower-Danube region. Although they established the Csángó Committee with the participation of Count Pál Somssich, Parliamentary President, Count Albert Apponyi, Prince Artur Odeschalchi, Baron Károly (Charles) Eötvös, Mór (Mauric) Jókai and Jenő (Eugen) Rákosi, the resettlement was accomplished entirely without government involvement with public assistance. Apparently the government was sensitive to Vienna's disapproval. The Szeklers were resettled around Pancsova and Kubin on a wetland endangered by regular floods. The number of the newly arrived was unexpectedly so large that many were unable to find lodging. For long years after the resettlement, numerous families still lived in barracks built by the Red Cross. They cleared the forest to build their houses and to gain arable land but, since they were not laborers, they did not know how to drain the marches. 188 families settled in Hertelendyfalva, 199 in Sándoregyháza and 357 families went to live in Székelykeve. These villages were built on the often-flooded lowlands of the Lower-Danube. Following the first floods, some of the settlers returned to Bukovina, but the majority stayed. After building their churches and opening their Hungarian schools, these colonies became stabilized around 1888. When the Austrian-Hungarian Monarchy collapsed, they came under Serbian authority (1920), lost their voting privileges and had limited rights to Hungarian language education. Due to their language isolation, their folk culture preserved its archaic characteristics. The massive exodus of Hungarians to the western countries since the 1960s endangered the survival of the remaining Hungarians in the region. Today, these villages belong to Serbia; their number is estimated to be around fourteen thousand. – B: 1078, T: 3240.→Szeklers.

Szekszárd Abbey – In 1061, King Béla I (1060-1063) established it for the Benedictine Order. Perhaps the Italian, William, its first abbot, may have been the one who notified Prince Géza of the ulterior plans of Salamon and Vid. After 1526, the monastery dissolved during the Turkish invasion. Its title, however, was kept alive, and awarded on occasion. In 1777, when the University of Nagyszombat (now Trnava, Slovakia) was relocated to Buda, Queen Maria Theresa transferred its estates to the University of Buda. The remnants of the ruined foundation were uncovered in 1897. – B: 1078, T: 7103.→Béla I, King; Mária Terézia, Empress and Queen.

Szelezky, Zita (Budapest, 20 April 1915 - Érd, 12 July 1999) – Actress. She completed the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest in 1937, and became a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest, first on scholarship, later as a full member from 1936 to 1941. She received a contract with the Metropolitan Operetta Theater (Fővárosi Operettszínház) during 1942 and 1943. Early in 1944, she appeared as a guest artist at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház) and, in the fall of 1944, she was again on contract with the National Theater. In March 1945, when the Soviet forces were occupying more and more of the country, she left Hungary. In her absence the Communist People's Tribunal convicted her for her wartime stance in 1947. In 1990, the Supreme Court acquitted her, cleared her of trumped-up charges, and granted her complete rehabilitation. From 1945, she lived in Austria and Italy; in 1948 she emigrated to Argentina, where early on she appeared in the performances of the Hungarian Theatrical Company. In 1951 she founded the Argentinean Hungarian National Theater (Argentínai Magyar Nemzeti Színház), and also appeared in the performances of émigré German theaters. In 1962 she moved to the USA. Between 1949 and 1974, she visited the Hungarian settlements of the world as far as Australia, using her own programs. She made several records as well. After 1990 she visited Hungary several times. In 1998 she returned and settled in Hungary and lived in Érd. When she died, according to her will, she was buried in the family tomb at Nekézseny. With her attractive person, stage appearance, intelligent and natural acting, she played young girls, lyric leading ladies and ingénues during her short career in Hungary. Zita Szelezky's émigré artistic activity was broadened to a cultural mission. Her roles included Titania in Shakespeare's Midsummer-Night's Dream (Szeniványéji álom); Juliet in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Ledér in Vörösmarty's Csongor and Tünde; Solvejg in Ibsen's Peer Gynt, and Sata in L. Németh's By Lightning Glare (Villámfénynél). From 1936 to 1944 she played the leading female roles in 26 Hungarian and one Italian-Hungarian feature film, among them: Azurexpress (1938); Gül Baba (1940); One Night in Transylvania (Egy éjszaka Erdélyben) (1941), and Musical Mill (Zenemalom) (1943). In emigration she was a recording artist, nine records and twelve cassettes appeared. She received several distinctions: the Farkas-Ratkó Prize (1939); from President Ronald Reagan she received the Miss Szelezcky decoration in 1987, the Middle Cross of the Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary in 1993, and the Golden Butterfly Prize in 1996. – B: 1031, 1427, 1445 T: 7456.

Szelényi, Lajos → Stessel, Lajos.

Szelepcsényi, György (George) (Szelepcsény, 24 April 1595 - Letovice, Moravia, 14 January 1685) – Archbishop of Esztergom, Prince-Primate of Hungary. Having completed his Theological schooling in Rome, he returned to Hungary in 1627 and became Rector of the Parish in Szenc, and Canon in Esztergom in 1635. In 1644, he was Bishop of Veszprém; and in 1648, Bishop of Nyitra (now Nitra, Slovakia), and President of the Chancellery of Hungary. In 1657 he was appointed Archbishop of Kalocsa, while retaining his bishopric of Nyitra. He was Archbishop of Esztergom and Prince-Primate of Hungary in 1666. In 1667 he became the Governor General of Hungary. Though he had been an ardent supporter of the Habsburg Dynasty, he took part in the so-called Wesselényi movement. Upon the death of Wesselényi he retired, but continued to use his influence at the Habsburg court to block, or at least hinder any action affecting the Hungarian constitution. He was a great philanthropist: he established new seminaries and schools for the sons of the nobility; he founded the Misericordia Order in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), the Carmelite Order in Szentgyörgy, and established monasteries in numerous places. He was involved in literary works, published Latin essays and poetry in Rome, and produced a prayer book called Divine Songs (Istenes Énekek) in Hungarian, in 1672. He fled from Hungary as a result of the Turkish occupation and died in exile. His remains were interned in the crypt, under the St László Chapel of the Basilica at Mariazell, Austria. – B: 0932, 1078, T: 7103.

Széles, Gábor (Gabriel) (Újpest, 8 July, 1945 - ) – Businessman. He studied at the Electrical Engineering Department of the Budapest Polytechnic (1971), and at Harvard University (1990). He was an engineer at the Geophysical Institute (1971-1981), and in charge of a laboratory there. In 1981 in Hungary, he founded the Technical Instrument Company (Műszertechnika). The Videotron Company and the Ikarus Company came under his direction. In 1998-1999, he was Co-President and, from 1999 President of the National Association of Industrialists (Magyar Gyáriparosok Országos Szövetsége). In 2005 he founded the first Hungarian Economic Television, Echo TV. In the same year, he bought the daily Hungarian News (Magyar Hírlap) too. He was the fifth richest man in Hungary in 2007. He is one of the top economists in the country. He was awarded the János Neumann Prize (1993), the Loránd Eötvös Prize (1994), and was made honorary freeman of the town of Székesfehérvár. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.

Szeles, Mónika (Monica Seles) Újvidék, now Novi Sad, Serbia, 2 December 1973 - ) – Tennis-player. She was born into a Hungarian family. She has been playing tennis since 1981. Since 1986 she has been living in the USA as a citizen. She became a professional player in 1989. She was Yugoslav champion eleven-times; in 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1996 she was Australian champion; in 1990, 1991 and 1992 French champion; and in 1991-1992 USA champion in singles. In 1992 she was World Champion. She received the Olympic Bronze Medal in 2000. She was the World No. 1 player in the women's game during 1991 and 1992, but in 1993, following an on-court attack, in which a man stabbed her in the back. She recovered but retired in 2008. She won nine Grand Slam singles titles, winning eight of them while a citizen of Yugoslavia, and one while a citizen of the United States. She was declared the world's best sportswoman in 1992. She received a Hungaian citizenship in 2007. Her book is Monica: From Fear to Victory (1996). She was awarded the Flo Hyman Prize. In January 2009, Seles was elected to the International Tennis Hall of Fame. – B: 0874, 1031, T: 7456.

Szelestey, László (Ladislav) (Felső-szelestey) (Uraiújfalu, County Vas in western Transdanubia, 14 September 1821 - Budapest, 7 September 1875) – Lyric and folk poet, and lawyer. He was a descendant of wealthy parents. He studied in Kőszeg, Sopron and Szombathely, and then he passed his law finals. He worked as the attorney for the Pinkafő estate, but soon turned to literature. His volume Flowers of Feeling (Érzelemvirágok) (1842) was published when he was 21. He liked to engage in politics; he acted as one of the speakers of the liberal opposition of his County Vas. He published his Collected Poems at Istvánfa (Istvánfalu) in 1852. Influenced by the great poet Sándor Petőfi, he began to compose in the popular folk-style, as seen in his selection of poems collectively entitled Cimbalom of Kemenes (1853). After its success, he published the volume of poems, the Lark of the Village (Falu pacsirtája) (1854), regarded as the peak of his career as a poet. With these folk-flavored songs, Szelestey came to be regarded as one of the best-known scenic poets. After the death of his wife he moved to Pest and published his latest poems, Fairyland (Tündérvilág) (1855); he also published his Collected Poems (Összes Költeményeim) in a second edition. Following this, more poems appeared in the volumes Book of the Hussars (Huszárok könyve) and Hours of Dalliance (Pásztorórák) (both in 1859). He edited the Literary Album (Szépirodalmi Album). He wrote poems and articles in the papers of the 1850s. In 1860 he became the town clerk of County Vas, later Member of Parliament representing the County. On 15 March 1864, suspected of political conspiracy, he was arrested, locked up in the New Building (Újépület) of Pest, and sent to prison in Olmütz and Theresienstadt. He was freed in 1867. His years in prison were immortalized in the volume of poems, The Dreams of a Prisoner (Egy rab álmai) (1867). Returning home, he lived in Budapest, returned to politics, and was elected Member of Parliament again. Baron József (Joseph) Eötvös, Minister of Education, appointed him school inspector of County Vas. Later he resigned from his position. – B: 0907, 1031, T: 7456. → Eötvös, Baron József; Petőfi, Sándor.

Szeletz, Arnold Ferenc O.S.B. (Francis) (Pér, 20 February 1900 - Sao Paulo, Brazil, 20 September 1972) – Missionary and teacher. He studied in Győr, but World War I interrupted his schooling. He served on the Italian front. After the War, he continued his studies at the Benedictine College of Pannonhalma, joined the Order and completed his theological and teacher training. He was ordained into priesthood in 1928, and taught at the Teacher Training Department of the College and at the Oblates. He was the Monastery's main confessor, an enthusiastic orator, religious teacher and Editor of the periodical Pannonhalma Review (Pannonhalmi Szemle). He was appointed the first pastor of ca. 60.000 ethnic Hungarians in Brazil. He arrived in Sao Paulo, Brazil on 23 March 1931. He carried out pastoral work as a guest of the São Bento, German and Brazilian Benedictines. He carried out his missionary work on foot or horseback to the far-away settlements, such as Árpádfalva, Boldogasszonyfalva, Mátyáskirlyfalva, Istvánkirlyfalva and other Hungarian-named pioneer settlements. The largest such settlement, Árpádfalva, was 900 km from São Paulo, where, in 1936, he built a church. In the State of Parana, in the Bocskai and Bethlen settlements, he erected wooden churches. He continued to send accounts to the Mother House, which were published in Pannonhalma. In 1931 he organized the Brazilian Parish of Anastacio, where he was Rector for 33 years, and was also a spiritual leader of all ethnic Hungarians. He was a teacher of Geography in the newly founded St.Imre College. He published several spiritual pamphlets, and the book Blazing Flames (Lobogó tüzek) (São Paulo, 1937, 1938). He took an active part in founding the New Pannonhalma (Új Pannonhalma) monastery in São Paulo. – B: 0945, T: 7103.

Szeli Joseph's Chronicle – Work of a Parish Priest. In 1757 he was Parish Priest in Hosszúfalva, (now Săcele, Transylvania, Romania) and in 1763 he wrote his interesting chronicle about the history of the Hungarians in the Barcaság, which was included in the official record of Hosszúfalva. It was published by Mihály (Michael) Borcsa in installments in a Protestant Church and School Journal's 41st and 42nd editions of 1862. It was falsely presented as Márton-Barthos' Chronicle who, in reality, was only its copier. – B: 1346, T: 3240.

Széll Codex – A hand written songbook from the 16th century named after its discoverer, Farkas Széll. It was published in 1884. Its 76 letters are truncated in several places and contain 6 historical songs from the 16th century, making it that century's most important and precious epic poetry resource. The manuscript also contains the renowned legend tellig the romance between King Béla III and the daughter of Bankó, based on the poem of Semptei Anonymus. (Az Béla királyrul való és az Bankó leányárul szép história...). It is stored in the University of Prague Library. – B: 1150, T: 3240.→Codex Literature.

Szell, George (György Széll) (Budapest, 7 June 1897 - Cleveland, Ohio, USA, 30 July 1970) – Pianist, conductor and composer. He studied composition and music in Vienna, Austria, and in Leipzig, Germany. In 1908 he enjoyed outstanding success with his works and piano playing in Munich, Vienna and London. From 1914 he regularly conducted in Berlin where, in 1915, he was appointed conductor of the Royal Opera House. He was invited to conduct at the Strasbourg City Theatre between 1917 and 1919. He also worked in the German Theatre in Prague. He introduced himself on 13 February 1920 to the Budapest Opera House with the performance of Bizet's Carmen. Between 1922 and 1924, he undertook a job in Düsseldorf, Germany; but moved to Berlin again in 1924 to become the first conductor of the National Opera House until 1929. In addition, he also lectured at the Music Academy of Berlin. In 1930 he again worked in Prague. From 1932 he did guest appearances regularly in Western Europe. Széll moved to the U.S.A. in 1939 and, between 1942 and 1946, he was a permanent guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. From 1946 until his death, he was General Music Director of the Cleveland Orchestra, where he brought the orchestra up to world level. He performed in Europe again in 1954, and from 1958 with the New York Philharmonic as a permanent guest, where he even gained the title of Artistic Director. In the last years of his life he was Artistic Director of the Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam. Several universities bestowed on him the title of Honorary Doctor. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7684.

Széll Kálmán (Coloman) (Gasztony, 8 June 1843 - Rátót, 16 August 1915) – Politician. In 1867 he was chief magistrate of County Vas. From 1869 until 1911 he was Member of Parliament of Szentgotthárd district, representing the Deák, i.e. the Liberal Party, and then, from 1906 the Constitution Party. From 1875 until 1878 he was Finance Minister in the Governments of Baron Béla Wenckheim and Count Kálmán (Coloman) Tisza. Following this, he founded the Hypothecary Credit Bank, and became its Managing Director, and later President. On his property in Rátót, he established a famous cattle ranch. In 1899 he became Prime Minister, then Minister of the Interior. With the Austrian Prime Minister Körber, he signed the Széll-Körber Pact for economic reconciliation with Austria, which was implemented using the so-called “Széll Formula”. He was defeated in the crisis triggered by his Recruiting Proposal in 1903. In 1906 he joined the dissident group of Andrassy. During the Coalition, he was the leader of the Constitution Party. After the fall of the Coalition, he withdrew from political life. He was directorial member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. He continued to be active in the economic arena. Work: Report of the Number Nine Subcommittee (A kilences albizottság jelentése). A Square in Budapest was named after him, which in 1951 became Moscow Square during the communist era (until 1989). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667. → Deák, Ferenc; Tisza, Count Kálmán; Andrassy, Count Gyula (1).

Szemere, Bertalan (Bartholomew) (Vatta, 27 August 1812 - Pest, 18 January 1868) – Poet, politician. At the start of his career in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) in 1832, as a young Member of Parliament, he promoted liberal reforms. In 1836 he traveled all across Europe and wrote several books based on his experiences. Between 1841 and 1867, he was one of the chief constables of County Borsod. During the 1843-1844 and 1847-1848 parliamentary sessions, he was one of the leaders of the opposition. In 1848 from April until September, he was Minister of National Affairs in the first responsible government; then, as member of the National Defense Commission, he was Commissioner with full authority of Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). After the dethronement of the Habsburgs as kings of Hungary, he was Prime Minister and Minister of National Affairs. Following the fall of the Revolution and War of Independence in 1849, he lived in Turkey, Paris and London. Szemere was condemned to death in 1851 in contumaciam. In the 1850s he established contact with Marx, providing him with information regarding the situation in Hungary. During his emigration, he came into opposition with Lajos (Louis) Kossuth. From 1860 he took a stand in favor of conciliation with Austria. He returned to Hungary in 1865, suffering from dementia. His main works are: Count Ludwig Batthyány, Arthur Görgey, Ludwig Kossuth, vols. i,ii,iii (Hamburg, 1853); The Hungarian Question 1848-1860 (La question hongroise 1848-1860), (Paris, 1860); My Diary (Naplóm) (1869); Collected Works vols. i-vi (Összegyűjtött munkái I-VI) (1869-1870); Memoirs of Prime Minister Bertalan Szemere on Nationality Politics of the Hungarian Government, 1848-1849 (Szemere Bertalan miniszterelnök emlékirata a magyar kormányzat nemzetiségi politikájáról 1848-1849) (1941), and The Works of Prime Minister Bertalan Szemere (Szemere Bertalan miniszterelnök iratai) (1941). A high school in Budapest named after him; his statue is in Dombóvár. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667. → Kossuth, Lajos.

Szemere, Pál (Paul) (Pécel, east of Budapest, 19 February 1785 - Pécel, 14 March 1861) – Poet and writer. He grew up in the Buda suburb of Krisztinaváros, where his father was Manager of the Royal Hungarian Governing-Council. He went to school in Buda, Kiskunhalas, Nagykőrös, Pápa, Sárospatak, Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), and a second time in Sárospatak between 1791 and 1804. He became a clerk at the Royal Court of Appeals in 1805. On 4 June 1808 he passed his exam to become an attorney. In 1808 and 1809 he attended the lectures of Schedius on Esthetics at the University of Pest. It was at this time that he developed a close friendship with István (Stephen) Horváth and Mihály (Michael) Vitkovics, thus forming the so-called “triad”, leaving enduring marks on the history of Hungarian literature. It was at this time that he attracted the attention of Ferenc (Francis) Kazinczy’s attention, and they started a regular correspondence; he also became acquainted with Ferenc (Francis) Kölcsey at this time. In 1810, he was a contributor for István (Stephen) Kultsár, Editor of the journal Reports from Home and Abroad (Hazai és Külföldi Tudósítások). Szemere translated the famous Neuwieder Zeitung as a supplement of the journal. In 1811 he was the assistant of László (Ladislav) Vida at the Hungarian Theater (Magyar Színház). In 1817 he founded the journal Scientific Collection (Tudományos Gyűjtemény), collaborating with Miklós (Nicholas) Jenkovich, György (George) Fejér and István Horváth. From 1818 to 1829 he worked at the Personnel Department of County Pest as Deputy Prosecutor. He was a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in its linguistic section. On 1 February 1840 he became a member of the Kisfaludy Society. He lived solely for literature and the arts. His works include Gedicht an den Herrn Ladislaus Vida (Poem to Mr. Ladislaus Vida) (1810). A school at his birthplace, Pécel, bears his name. – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→Horváth, István; Vitkovics, Mihály; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Kölcsey, Ferenc.

Szemerédi, Endre (Andrew) (Budapest. 21 August 1940 - ) – Mathematician. His higher studies were at the University of Budapest and received a Ph.D. from the State University of Moscow. His adviser in mathematics was Israel Gelfand. He has held visiting positions at Stanford University, California (1974), McGill University, Montreal, Canada (1980), University of South Carolina (1981-1983) and University of Chicago (1985-1986). He has been in the State of New Jersey Professor of computer science at Rutgers University since 1986. His field of research is combinatorics and theoretical computer science. Szemerédi has published over 200 scientific articles in the fields of Discrete Mathematics, Theoretical Computer Science, Arithmetic Combinatorics, and Discrete Geometry. He is best known for his proof from 1975 of an old conjecture of Paul Erdős and Paul Turán: if a sequence of natural numbers has positive upper density, then it contains arbitrarily long arithmetic progression – known as Szemerédi’s theorem. One of the key tools introduced in his proof is known as the Szemerédi regulatory lemma, which has become a very important tool in combinatorics. He is also known for the Szemerédi-Trotter theorem in incidence geometry and the Hajnal-Szemerédi theorem in graph theory, as well as other important theorems. Endre Szemerédi has published over 200 scientific articles in the fields of Discrete Mathematics, Theoretical Computer Science, Arithmetic Combinatorics and Discrete Geometry. Szemerédi is a corresponding member (1982), and member (1987) of the Hungarian Academy of Science, and a member (2010) of the National Academy of Science. He is also a member of the Institute for Advanced Study (IAS), Princeton University, and a permanent research fellow at the Rényi Institute of Mathematics, Budapest. His great achievements were recognized by many tributes, including the Grünwald Prize (1967, 1968), Rényi Prize (1973), Pólya Prize (1975), Prize of the Hungarian Academy of Science (1969), the AMS Leroy P. Steele Prize (2008), the doctor honoris causa of the Charles University of Prague (2010), and the Abel Prize (2012). Endre Szemerédi is a world renowned mathematician. – B: 1031, T: 7103.→Erdős, Pál; Turán, Pál; Rényi, Alfréd; Pólya, György.

Szemerei, János (John) (Lajoskomárom, 1963 - ) – Lutheran Bishop. He was born into a family of many children. His high school studies were at the Endre Ságvári Technical High School of Székesfehérvár, and he studied theology at the Evangelical-Lutheran Theological Academy of Budapest (1982-1987). He was ordained in 1987. He served as assistant pastor, later as pastor in Gyúró. In 1994, the Evangelical-Lutheran Congregation of Kaposvár called him as their pastor. Between 1994 and 2003 he was leader of the Religious Teacher Training Institute in Kaposvár. From 2000 he was the Dean of the Evangelical Deanery of County Zala-Vas. In March 2011 he was elected Bishop of the Western (Transdanubian) Evangelical Diocese, as successor of the retired Bishop János (John) Ittész. He was consecrated on 25 June 2011 at the Old Church of Győr. – B: 1031, T: 7103 → Ittész, János; Evangelical Lutheran Church in Hungary.

Szemes, Mari (Mary) (Sasvár, now Šaštín, Slovakia, 7 May 1932 - Budapest, 10 December 1988) – Actress. She obtained a diploma from the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest, in 1952. She played at the Madách Theater (Madách Színház), then at the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Szeged. In 1954 she was a member of the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház); from 1955 till 1984 was the leading actress of the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház) and, from 1984 until her death, a member of the National Theater of Budapest. She was an actress with great dramatic power and an excellent sense of humor. She played successfully in classical dramas, but she was most at home in depicting modern women. From 1949, she appeared also in films, and later in TV plays. Her roles included Canina in Jonson's Volpone; Kate in Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew (A makrancos hölgy); Kata in László Németh's The Nagy Family (A Nagy család); Ilona in Ákos Kertész's Name Day (Névnap); Nurse in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; Eszter Gondos in Áron Tamási's Singing Bird (Énekes madár), and Sarolt in Szörényi-Bródy's Stephen the King (István a király). Her film roles include Shower (Zápor) (1960); Cold Days (Hideg napok) (1966); The Black Town (A fekete város), TV-series (1971); The Sword (A kard) (1976), and Somewhere in Hungary (Valahol Magyarországon) (1987). She was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize (1960 and 1970), the titles of Merited Artist (1975) and Outstanding Artist (1979), the Pro Urbe Prize (1981), and the Kossuth Prize (1985). – B: 0883, 1122, 1445, T: 7456.

Szemlér, Ferenc (Francis) (Székelyudvarhely, now Odorheiu Secuiesc, Transylvania, Romania, 3 April 1906 - Bucharest, 9 January 1978) – Poet and writer. His daughter is poetess Éva Lendvai Szemlér. He studied in his native town, also in Brassó (now Braşov, Romania), and in the Law Faculty of Bucharest University. He worked in Brassó as a solicitor and journalist. His poems, translations of literary works, prose writings and studies appeared in Transylvanian (Erdélyi Helikon), Our Age (Korunk), West (Nyugat), Answer (Válasz), and People of the East (Kelet Népe), while his articles appeared in the dailies Pages of Brassó (Brassói Lapok) and Southern News (Déli Hírlap). He was follower of the “West-oriented” poetry, and was also influenced by expressionism. After the publication of his Collected Poems, vols. i,ii (Összegyűjtött versek I,II) (1967), the basic tone of his poetry changed noticeably. His volume, entitled Growth Rings (Évgyűrűk) (1970) contains all his pre-1945 prose writings. He was also a productive translator of literary works. Many of his poems appeared also in Romanian. He was a recipient of the State Prize of the Romanian People's Republic (1953). From 1945 he played a leading role in Hungarian literature and community life. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456. → Lendvai Szemlér, Éva.

Szenczi Kertész, Ábrahám (Szenc, ? - Nagyszeben, now Sibiu, Romania, Spring 1667) – Printer. It is most likely that he studied in Elzevir's atelier in Leyden, Holland. In 1640 he headed the Reformed Church's printing house in Várad (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania). Aided by Prince István (Stephen) Bethlen, he equipped his printing shop with the Elzevir-type letter set. In 1660 he escaped with his printing equipment from the city, ahead of the advancing Turks, to Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). In 1662 he settled in Nagyszeben (now Sibiu, Romania). His beautiful books are outstanding works among the contemporary Hungarian printings. In 1648, Reigning Prince György (George) Rákóczi II (1648-1660) ennobled him for his prominent printing works. His most important publication was the Bible of Várad, (completed in Kolozsvár), the new edition of Gáspár Károli's Bible translation in 1661. From it 10,000 copies were published. Upon his death, the printing equipment reverted to the Treasury, until 1671, when Prince Mihály Apafi (1662-1690) gave it to the Reformed College of Kolozsvár and Nagyenyed (now Aidu, Romania). His printing house produced 109 Hungarian and 26 Latin publications. – B: 1078, 0883, T: 3240.→Rákóczi II, Prince György; Károli, Gáspár; Apafi I, Prince Mihály.

Szenczi Molnár, Albert (Szenc, 30 August 1574 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 17 January 1639) – Minister of the Reformed Church, linguist and writer. He studied in Szenc, Győr, Gönc, and in Debrecen. He was a tutor in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) in 1590, in 1590 in Wittenberg, in 1592 in Heidelberg, and between 1593 and 1596, in Strasbourg. Amidst great poverty in Heidelberg between 1597 and 1599, he further developed his knowledge. Until 1600, he lived in Szenc, and traveled all over Northern Hungary (Felvidék, now Slovakia). He studied further in Herborn, worked as a corrector in Frankfurt then, in 1602, at Amberg, as a private tutor. He started writing his Latin-Hungarian dictionary in 1603 and, from 1604, lived in Nuremberg to oversee its printing. Szenczi's works, Dictionarium latino-hungaricum and Dictionarium hungarico-latinum (Latin-Hungarian and Hungarian-Latin Dictionaries), were published in Nuremberg in 1604. He presented the work, dedicated to Rudolf II, Holy Roman Emperor, King of Hungary and Bohemia in person in Prague. He became the protégé of Moritz, Prince of Hessen at Altdorf, Marburg and Oppenheim. From 1612 he was a minister of the church at the Court of Count Ferenc Batthány, Chief Captain of Transdanubia (Dunántúl) at Rohonc and, for a short time, minister of the church in Komárom. In 1614, he traveled around Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Its Reigning Prince, Gábor (Gabriel) Bethlen offered him a professorial position, which he refused. In 1615 he returned to Germany, became an assistant teacher in Amberg; he later worked as a cantor and schoolmaster in Oppenheim. His activities established contact between Hungarian and German scientific centers. On Gábor Bethlen's renewed invitation in 1624, Szenczi returned to Kassa, where the Prince provided for his livelihood. Thus he could devote himself exclusively to his scientific and literary activities until his death in Kolozsvár. He was a purposeful scholar, who wanted to be useful with his whole life's work. His Latin dictionary, with several revisions, remained the most used dictionary until the middle of the 19th century. With his grammar book of the Hungarian language, written in Latin, following János (John) Sylvester's, he gave to Europe the knowledge of the specific features of the Hungarian language. He gave the Reformed Church the gift of adapting the Geneva Psalms, the improved Károli Bible, and the translation of Calvin's Institutions, the Catechism of Heidelberg, and the Scultetus-type sermon collection. His most significant work is the Psalterium Hungaricum, translation of psalms, prepared after the French psalms by Marot and Béza, published in Herborn in 1607. The effect of his work on the development of the Hungarian literary language and Hungarian poetry is epoch-making. – B: 1197, 0883, 1138, 1153, T: 7669.→Bethlen, Prince Gábor; Sylvester, János; Károli, Bible.

Szendrey, Júlia (Mrs. Sándor Petőfi) (Keszthely, 29 December 1828 - Pest, 6 September 1868) – Writer. She met the great poet Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi on 8 September 1846, and they married a year later. As Sándor (Alexander) Petőfi's spouse and muse, she is a central figure of 19th century feminine characters. After her husband's death in 1849, she lived in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), then with his father in Erdőd. On July 1850, she married the historian and professor Árpád Horvát, from whom she separated a year and a half before her death. She wrote a few short novels and poems, and a diary. Her works are: Her Poems and Diaries (Költeményei és naplói), collected by Mór, Bihari (Bp., 1909); Her Original Stories (Eredeti elbeszélései), collected by Mór Bihari (Bp., 1909); Her Unknown Diaries, Letters and her Confession on her Deathbed (Ismeretlen naplója, levelei és halálos ágyán tett vallomása), made public by Lajos Mikes and László Dernői Kocsis (Bp., 1930). – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7679.→Petőfi, Sándor.

Szendrő, József (Joseph) (Budapest, 18 August 1914 - Budapest, 22 October 1971) – Actor, stage manager and translator of literary works. In 1931, at the age of 17, he published a volume of poems, followed by another one in 1933 (Bravó, Ézsau). He completed his studies at the Academy of Dramatic Art, Budapest in 1936, and in the following year he received a scholarship from the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Budapest. In 1938 he worked in Miskolc for a little while; then returned to Budapest to work at the Royal Theater (Royal Színház), later at the Comedy Theater (Vígszínház) until he was called up to join the army in 1939. After two years of military service, he was contracted to the Independent Theater (Független Színház) but, because of the war, he was again conscripted. On 15 October 1944, he was taken prisoner by the Russians, and taken to Georgia (Gruzia). In the prisoner-of-war camp, Szendrő organized a camp theater. On 22 September 1947, he was sent back to Hungary. He joined the National Theater again; then he was contracted for three years to the Theater in Pécs, where he was director as well. In 1952 to 1954 he played at the Hungarian People's Army Theater (Néphadsereg Színháza), Budapest. In 1954 he founded and organized the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház), Budapest, where he worked as a director. Between 1955 and 1958 he was stage manager at the Vígszínház (Comedy Theater), Budapest. From 1958 to 1960 he occupied the position of director at the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház) Debrecen; then he worked as senior stage manager at the National Theater of Szeged. He also played at the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) and the Operetta Theater (Operett Színház) in Budapest. From 1966 he was again an actor at the National Theater of Budapest. In the 1960s, he scored great success with his recital evenings. He published his writings in the journal Film, Theater, Music (Film, Színház, Muzsika). His roles included Jepihodov in Chekhov's Cherry Orchard (Cseresznyés kert); First senator in Shakespeare's Timon of Athens (Athéni Timon), and Giskra in Vörösmarty's Czillei and the Hunyadis (Czillei és a Hunyadiak). His stagings included E. Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac, and János (John) Kodolányi's drama, Earthquake (Földindulás). His films included Two Half Times in Hell (Két félidő a pokolban); Lujzi (TV film, 1970), and Chaotic Night (Zürzavaros éjszaka)

(TV film, 1971). He was awarded the Mari Jászai Prize in 1970. In 2004, a memorial tablet was dedicated to him on the wall of his one-time home at No. 1 Bajza Street, in District VI of Budapest. – B: 1105, 1427, T: 7456.→Ódry, Árpád.

Szendrőd Nameless (Szendrődi Névtelen) – Historical songwriter from the 16th century, who wrote the epic story of Szilágyi and Hajmási in 1571. The subject of his narrative is based on old Hungarian beliefs and poetic accounts remodeled to the Turkish era. His work, outstanding on the emotional level and its versification, is the best among similar 16th century poetry. – B: 1150, 0942, T: 3240.

Szendrovits, Andrew Zoltán (Budapest, 1919 - ) – Engineer, educator. He obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). He was Adjunct Professor of Technology (Engineering), University of Budapest (1953-1956). He emigrated to Canada after the 1956 Revolution and Freedom Fight and became Director of the Effort Trust Co. in Hamilton, Ontario. He was Professor of Production and Management of Science at McMaster University in Hamilton (1962-1985), Chairman (1971-1977) and Dean of Business Management (1979-1985). He became Professor Emeritus at McMaster University. He published several research papers and books, including Models and Solutions in Connection with Organization and Planning in the Machine Industry (1955); Introduction to Production Management: Technical Notes, 5th edition (1981), and Business Simulation Participants' Manual, 6th edition (1988). – B: 0893, T: 4342

Szedy, Árpád (Goluhofér) (Szarvas, 11 August 1863 - Budapest, 10 September 1922) – Pianist, pedagogue and composer. He was a student of Antal Zopf, Henrik Gobbi and, in 1881, of Ferenc (Franz) Liszt; he later studied under János (John) Koessler and Hans von Bülow. He went on a concert tour in Russia. From 1911 he was a professor at the Academy of Music in Budapest; from 1911 he was Head of the pianist training section. From 1920 he was Director of the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede), Budapest, for a year and a half. As a teacher, he was a worthy representative of the Liszt traditions; numerous notable pianists were his students. In his composition, the national coloring shows strong western influence. His works include Orchestral Works (Symphony, Suite); Chamber Music; Piano pieces (Poèmes hongroises, etc.); an opera: Mária, based on Géza Moravcsik's libretto (1905), and some songs, and pedagogical works. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456.→Liszt, Ferenc.

Szenes, Iván (Budapest, 25 April 1924 - Budapest, 13 September 2010) – Writer, drama critic and composer. Between 1945 and 1948, he was a civil servant; in 1948 and 1949, a correspondent for the paper Brightness (Világosság); during 1949 and 1950, a dramaturge at the Institute of People's Entertainment (Fővárosi Népszórakoztatási Intézet) and, during 1951 to 1956 of the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad). Between 1956 and 1961 he was artistic manager of the variety section and open-air stages of the National Circus Company (Országos Cirkuszvállalat). From 1961 to 1979 he was a dramaturge of the Kisfaludy Theater (Kisfaludy Színház) in Győr, and the Attila József Theater (József Attila Színház) in Budapest. Since 1979, he had been a dramaturge of the Merry Stage (Vidám Színpad), an organizer and manager of cabarets. He created several dozen musical comedies with his two chief composer colleagues, Szabolcs Fényes and Gábor (Gabriel) Náday. He made arrangements of several large operettas, modernizing them as well, such as I. Kálmán's

Violet of Montmartre (Montmartre-i ibolya). He was the librettist of more than a thousand songs and hits. More than a hundred plays, screenplays, radio-plays and TV-plays have been presented with his verses and part-transcriptions, e.g. Let Us Get Divorced (Váljunk el); Lulu; Cactus Flower (Kaktusz virága), and Good Night Bessy (Jó éjt Bessy). His films include State Department Store (Állami Áruház); At Midnight (Éjfélkor), Twice Two is Sometimes Five (Kétszer kettő náha öt), and Vuk. He is the author of one TV-film: Oyster Mici (Osztrigás Mici). His book is entitled His Majesty, the Star (Őfelsége a sztár) (1962). He received the Merited Artist title, won First Prize in Malta, Ireland and Germany, and also won the Europe Prize at the Puerto Rico Festival. In Berlin, he received the German Gold Prize. – B: 1445, 1031, 1881, T: 7456.→Fényes Szabolcs.

Szenkár, Jenő (Eugene) (Budapest, 9 April 1891 - Düsseldorf, 25 March 1977) – Conductor. He studied composition at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, with János (John) Kessler and Viktor Herzfeld. In 1911, he was at the Budapest Opera for one season as an instructor but, from the subsequent season, for the rest of his life, he worked abroad. The only exception was the two-year period between 1913 and 1915 at the People Opera of Budapest (today's Erkel Theatre), where he was a conductor, following a season in Prague. After this, he was a conductor in Salzburg, then in Altenburg, Germany. In 1920 he joined the Frankfurt Opera for three seasons, then for one season, he was Director of the Berlin Volksoper. From 1924, he was the leading conductor in Cologne. There he performed for the first time Béla Bartók's pantomime ballet, The Miraculous Mandarin (Csodálatos mandarin), and Zoltán Kodály's Hungarian folk opera, Háry János. Between 1934 and 1939, Szenkár was the leading conductor of the Moscow Philharmonic, and taught conducting at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory of Moscow. Between 1939 and 1949, he was in Rio de Janeiro; but during this time, he also performed in the Metropolitan Opera of New York. In 1950 he returned to Europe. For two seasons he worked in Mannheim and Cologne; then, from 1952, he received his last permanent contract from the Düsseldorf Theater. His concert performance was the most celebrated event of the 1958 Budapest Musical Weeks. His last appearances in Budapest were in 1963 and 1964, both times at the Hungarian Opera. He was also active as a composer of symphonic and chamber music works, as well as songs and piano works. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7667.→Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Szentágothai, János (John) (Budapest, 31 October 1912 - Budapest, 8 September 1994) – Physician, cerebral specialist. He was a descendant of a family of physicians: his father and his five brothers all chose the medical profession. Among his ancestors were men like Sándor (Alexander) Lumniczer, Ágoston (Austin) Schöpf-Mérei and Géza Antal. From the age of 17, he dealt with microscopic studies. In 1936 he received his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest; then worked as a demonstrator at the Anatomical Institute of Mihály (Michael) Lenhossék. Later, it was here that he started his medical and research career. In 1946, he was invited to become Head of the Anatomy Institute at the Medical Faculty of the University of Pécs, where he also worked as Professor of Medicine until 1963. In that year, he became Professor of Anatomy at the University of Budapest. He resigned from this position, but carried on with his research work until his death. He became a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1948, ordinary 1967), where he was also President in 1977. He was a Member of Parliament between 1985 and 1994. First and foremost a research scientist, Szentágothai mainly studied the structure of the nervous system. The results of his first independent investigations supported the neuron theory: the concept that the morphologically and functionally interconnected nerve cells and neurons constitute the whole nervous system. His experimental techniques enabled him to follow and describe a number of nerve tracks of spinal marrow (myelon) and the brain stem. He was the discoverer and explainer of a number of ontogenetic studies. He wrote monographs during his sojourn in Pécs on the research results of the connections between the vestibular system and the ocular muscles (1952) and on the mechanism regulating the neuro-endocrine glands. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize, which was followed by numerous foreign acknowledgements of his medical results. Later in his research studies, the connections between neurons became central, in his investigation of the spinal marrow as well as the cerebellum. This was followed by his study of the cerebral cortex, which he conceived of as being made up of modules. He was an outstanding trainer and teacher. His outstanding work was: Atlas of Human Anatomy vols. i, ii, iii (Az ember anatómiájának atlasza I, II, III) (1946), co-authored with Ferenc (Francis) Kiss, which reached eight translations; then he wrote the textbook Functional Anatomy, vols. i, ii, iii (1972). He was well-known as a politician of science, a nature-protectionist, a true Homo universalis. He became honorary member of several societies in Hungary, and Academies abroad. His works in addition to the above include Hypothalamic Control of the Anterior Pituitary (1962) and Conceptual Models of Neural Organization, with M.A. Ardib (1975). – B: 1730; T: 7456. → Schöpf-Mérei, Ágoston; Lenhossék, Mihály; Kiss, Ferenc.

Szenteleky, Kornél (Cornelius) (Sztankovits) (Pécs, 27 July 1893 - Ószivác, now Stari Sivač, in the Bácska part of Southern Hungary, now Serbia, 20 August 1933) - Writer, poet and translator of literary works. He obtained a Medical Degree from the University of Budapest and, for a while, he practiced in the Capital City. His first writings and poems appeared in the journal The Week (A Hét) around 1910. After World War I, he moved to Ószivác (then in the newly created Yugoslavia) and he opened a medical practice there. His home became the center of Yugoslav-Hungarian literary life. He founded journals, serial publications, and also developed contact with Hungarian writers in the newly created Czechoslovakia, as well as in Transylvania, ceded to Romania by the 1920 Peace Treaty of Trianon. In 1928, he launched the journal, Writing From Voivodina (Vajdasági Írás), and in 1932 the Kalangya, which he edited with Tibor Radó until the end of his life. As an offshoot of this, he established the Kalangya Library. In 1928, to serve a better understanding between Magyars and Serbs, he published an anthology of Serbian poetry in Hungarian translation. In 1933, he compiled, under the title Acacias (Akácok), a collection of short stories by Yugoslav-Hungarian writers. His works include Grieving Love (Kesergő szerelem) (1920); How Painful is Life (Úgy fáj az élet) sketches, short stories (1925), and Isola Bella, novel (1931). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Szentendre (German: Sankt Andrä, Serbian: Sentandreja) – Town on the right bank of the Danube, 15 km north of Budapest, 124 m above sea level, at the foot of the Pilis Range; with attractive geographic location and Danube baths. The town's natural lookout is Castle Hill (Várdomb) above the Main Square. Its more important industries include cement and stove factory, brickyard, railway repair workshop, electricity station, and large stone quarries. It had 4822 inhabitants in 1901; 7214 in 1930 (mostly Magyars, 560 Germans and 400 Serbs); 9644 in 1941, and 18,000 in 1983. Noteworthy buildings include the Roman watchtower and the museum rich in Roman finds. Its artist colony was founded in 1926, led by Béla Iványi-Grünwald. The Charles Ferenczy Museum is in the town. There is the Serbian Episcopal Church, several Greek Orthodox churches with fine frescoes and iconostases; it is the seat of a Greek Orthodox Bishop for the Serbs, who settled there in the 15th and 16th centuries. On the site of the ruins of the villa rustica there is the Open Air Ethnographic Museum in the outskirts of the town, where stone walls of Roman times are intermixed with Hungarian peasant houses, bridging a time gap of 1500 years, intended to exhibit Hungarian folk architecture and dwelling culture. The House of Folk Arts, as a Museum, usually presents a certain branch or aspect of folk art. The Teatrum of Szentendre gives open-air theatrical performances in the summer. The Vastagh House (1973) presents the work of sculptor-ceramist, Margit Kovács in the building of the one-time mail-coach station (now a popular museum). In Roman times, the town was a fortified camp, defending the border limes, called Ulcisia Trajana, also called Ulcisia Castra (Wolf Castle), a famous Avar gravesite from the 7th century, containing two iron stirrups. The first written mention is dated 1146 from the estate of the Bishop of Veszprém. During the Ottoman Turkish occupation, the town suffered a lot; by 1588 it had only 6 households. In 1590, Serbs settled there, who were clever tradesmen and businessmen. They also fought in the Austrian Imperial Army against Prince Ferenc Rákóczi's men. In 1757, the town became a crown estate. Empress Maria Theresa leased it to the inhabitants of the town for an annual 6000 forints. In 1872, it became a corporate town. The old Serbian settlers became absorbed into the Hungarian population. Szentendre is known for its fine Baroque-style gates. The wine-growing peasants formed a guild and, in the 18th century, set up an iron double-cross, which was supposed to defend their crop from frost and hail. There is a bronze statue in a sitting position on a seat of the painter Béla Czóbel (1977), the work of Imre (Emeric) Varga. Czóbel was awarded the Kossuth Prize and, in 1974, he was among the first to be made an honorary freeman of the town, at the age of 91. The Czóbel House, in which he used to live, was opened to the public in 1975. – B: 1068, 1582, 1816, 7456; T: 7456. → Iványi-Grünwald, Béla, Ferenczy, Károly, Czóbel Béla.

Szentendre Artist Colony (Szentendrei művésztelep, Szentendrei iskola) – Founded by the Painters' Society of Szentendre in 1929. Its members, besides keeping the traditions of the Nagybánya colony, followed also the reviving neo-classicistic style. Lajos Vajda and Dezső Korniss may be regarded as its foundation members. The painters connected with Szentendre and Szigetmonostor obtained their motives from the traditions of the inhabitants living in this region, while among the modern styles mainly surrealism and non-figurative art were followed. Those artists who did their creative work here include Imre (Emeric) Ámos, Endre (Andrew) Bálint and János (John) Tornyai, all painting at Szentendre as well. The constructive trend was followed by István (Stephen) Ilosvai Varga, Béla Czóbel, Jenő (Eugene) Barcsay, János (John) Kmetty and Jenő (Eugene) Kerényi. The artists have been organizing collective exhibitions in in Budapest and the Ferenczy Museum in Szentendre. After the Dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920) gradually the Szentendre School took over the role of the Nagybánya Colony. – B: 1031, T: 7456. → Nagybánya Artist Colony; Kecskemét Artist Colony; Vajda, Lajos; Korniss Dezső; Ámos, Imre; Bálint, Endre; Tornyai, János; Ilosvai Varga, István; Czóbel, Béla; Barcsay, Jenő; Kerényi, Jenő; Kmetty, János.

Szentgotthárd Abbey – A Cistercian Abbey founded by King Béla III (1172-1196) at the Rivers Rába and Lapincs; the members of the Order were invited from France. The Abbey was dedicated in honor of the Blessed Lady and the martyr St. Gotthard, in 1181. Since 1467, it was gradually fortified to withstand possible Turkish assault after the lost Battle of Mohács in 1526 against the Turks. Due to the reorganization of border fortresses, the members of the Order were relocated to the neighboring Monastery of Rein in Graz, Austria. In 1532, the town was almost depopulated. In 1605, in fear of the Hajdús of Bocskai, an Austrian general blew up the three-naved church. In 1677, the church was rebuilt. In 1790, the buildings of the Monastery were converted into a granary. In 1734, Emperor Károly III (Charles) (1711-1740), returned the Abbey to the Cistercians. Today, the church's frescos and oil paintings, depicting Hungarian themes, make it one of the most beautiful in Western Hungary. Until 1950, the Cistercian monks served the parish. – B: 0945, 1020, T: 7103.

Szent-Györgyi, Albert (nagyrápolti) (Budapest, 16 September 1893 - Woods Hole, MA, USA, 22 October 1986) – Physician and biochemist. He graduated from the Lónyai Street Reformed High School of Budapest, and obtained his Medical Degree from the University of Budapest, in 1917. After returning from the front in World War I, he became a lecturer at the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and, for more than a decade, he continued his studies at the Universities of Prague, Hamburg, Leiden, Groningen, Cambridge and Rochester. In the course of his research at Cambridge, he succeeded in isolating hexuronic acid and, while in Cambridge, he obtained his Doctorate in Chemistry in 1927. Following up his research results, he went to the USA for a year to engage in the manufacture of hexuronic acid.

On the encouragement of the Minister of Culture, Count Kunó Klebelsberg, Szent-Györgyi returned to Hungary in 1930 and, until 1945, he was Professor of Medical Chemistry at the University of Szeged, where he surrounded himself with outstanding co-workers. Meanwhile, as a visiting professor, he gave lectures at the Universities of Liège (Belgium) and at Harvard University, USA. For his scientific achievements the Hungarian Academy of Sciences elected him an ordinary member. For the results of his researches on the catalysis of vitamin C (ascorbic acid) from red paprika (capsicum) and fumaric acid, he received the Nobel Prize in Medicine on 28 October 1937. While studying the oxidation process in the living cells, he recognized the important role that fumaric acid plays in increasing the respiration of tissues. During the years 1940 to 1942, he and his team achieved great success in the field of muscle contraction. His discovery of the mutual effect in vitro of myosin, actin and ATP, marked the beginning of modern muscle biology: this was another great accomplishment by Szent-Györgyi. He also conducted research on the structure of albumin in the various human organs. Between 1945 and 1947 he was a professor at the University of Budapest.

With the approach of Communism and the Soviet military occupation of Hungary, Szent-Györgyi emigrated to the United States in 1947, and he did not return to his homeland again. He settled at Woods Hole, where he became Director of the Sea Biology Laboratory of the Muscle Research Institute. Even at the age of 90, he was searching for the elusive cause of cancer, which took his wife, his daughter and his friend, János, John von Neumann. Besides his scientific work, he dealt with social questions as well, criticizing aspects of human life of his times, many of his discussions appearing in published form. He received an honorary doctorate from the University of Paris (Sorbonne), and was a recipient of the Corvin Wreath. He was a member of numerous scientific societies in Hungary and the West. To enlarge the scientific life in his native land, he founded the Hungarian Biological Society. More than a hundred of his studies were published in Western journals. Some of his works include Studies on Biological Oxidation and Some of its Catalysts (1937); Studies on Muscle (1945); Bioelectronics. A Study on Cellular Regulation, Defense and Cancer (1968); The Crazy Ape. Written by a Biologist for the Young (1970); The Living Condition of Matter (Az anyag élő állapota) (1985, original English version: 1978) and Selected Studies (Válogatott tanulmányok) (1983). A television portrait film was prepared about his life and work. His marble bust stands outside his Research Institute in the Cathedral Square in Szeged; his name is born by the Medical School of the University of Szeged and a Memorial Medal. – B: 1153, 1020, 1031, T: 7660, 7456.→Klebersberg, Count Kunó; Neuman, von John.

Szentimrei, Judit (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 19 May 1921 - ) – Industrial designer and ethnographer. Her studies were in Kolozsvár, Budapest and Helsinki. In 1940 she worked and taught at her Industrial Designing Studio in Sztána (now Stana, Romania). From 1941 to 1944, she was a home-craft supervisor of the Kalotaszeg (now Țara Călatei, Romania) region. From 1945 to 1949 she was a teacher at the Girls' Lyceum of Kolozsvár. In 1949 she was a founding and contributing member of the Industrial Designers Cooperative. From 1950 until her retirement in 1974, she worked as a teacher in the Ion Andreescu School of Arts, and was also an active researcher of Hungarian and Romanian peasant textiles. From 1940 on, she has been exhibiting her industrial designs at home and abroad. Between 1955 and 1989, she was a columnist on folk art for magazines. She has been a member of the Miklós Barabás Guild of Kolozsvár; an honorary member of the Hungarian Ethnographic Society of Budapest, and also a member of the Balázs Orbán and Hungarian Philological Societies. For the honor of her parents, she created the Szentimrei Cultural Foundation. Her works include Székely Hungarian Folk Art of Kászon (Kászoni székely népművésze) co-author (1972); Hungarian Folk Art of the Szilágyság Region (Szilágysági magyar népművészet), co-author (1974); Hungarian Folk Art of the Little-Küküllő River Area (Kis-Küküllő vidéki magyar népművészet) co-author (1978); Colored-painted Folk Art of the Szék Area (Széki iratosok) (1982), and Hungarian Peasant Embroidery of the Torockó Area (Torockói varrottasok), co-author (1997). She was awarded a gold medal in 1940, and also honored in Finland (1939), France and Switzerland (1980), and Canada. – B: 1036, T: 7456.

Szentiványi, Márton S.J. (Martin) (Szentivány, 20 October 1633 - Nagyszombat, now Trnava, Slovakia, 5 March 1705) – Writer. Upon completion of his education in Theology, he was ordained priest and became a Jesuit teacher in Vienna and Nagyszombat, He was Chancellor and Governor of Vienna's Pazmaneum Seminary for twelve years. From 1675, he edited the Latin publication of Calendarium Tyrnaviens in Nagyszombat. From it he compiled his main work, Curiosa et selectiora... a theological contemplation, written in encyclopedic style as a scientific summary of his era's scientific knowledge. András (Andrew) Spangár incorporated the list of authors from Szentiványi's manuscript into his Hungarian Library (Magyar Bibliotéka), a bibliography of writers. – B: 1150, T: 3240.

Szent-Iványi, Sándor (Alexander) (Marosvásárhely, now Targu Mureș, Transylvania, Romania, 8 January 1902 - Lancaster, MA. USA, 6 October 1983) – Unitarian pastor and writer. He obtained qualifications from the Theological Academy of Kolozsvár, (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania), and from the Universities of Harvard and Chicago, followed by a private teacher's Degree in 1934 from the Unitarian Theological Academy, Kolozsvár. He worked as a pastor (1927-1934), and then held a theological teaching position in Kolozsvár (1939). He was a pastor in Budapest (1939-1947). He was Ministerial President of the Hungarian Unitarian Church, and a Member of Parliament (1945-1947). After World War II, he aided his people as President of the Hungarian Red Cross. Upon the Communist takeover of Hungary in 1948, due to his presidency of the Civilian Democratic Party, he left Hungary for the United Kingdom, and eventually settled in the USA. After working for Radio Free Europe, to continue his pastoral work, he retired to Lancaster, MA, where he was the president of several local Hungarian associations. Most of his Hungarian literary works were published in Kolozsvár; only one was issued in the USA. Besides his books, he published many Hungarian and English religious and Church related articles. – B: 1150, 1020, T: 3240.

Szent-Iványi, Tamás (Thomas) (Szentivánlaborfalva, now Sântion-Lunca in Transylvania, Romania, 2 November 1920 - Budapest, 14 April 1991) – Veterinarian. He obtained his Veterinary Degree from the University of Budapest, in 1946. Between 1946 and 1948 he was a veterinary specialist of the Benedek Factory; from 1948 to 1950 of the Phylaxia Factory. From 1950, he was a demonstrator at the Institute of Epidemiology of the Veterinary College. From 1956 to 1970, he was a scientific associate and, from 1970 to 1975, an associate of the College's Center in Rome. He received a Doctorate in Veterinary Science in 1965. From 1976 till 1985 he was Professor and Head of Department in the Epidemiological Institute of the Veterinary Faculty of the University of Budapest. He dealt chiefly with infectious animal diseases, bacteriology, immunology and virology, but also with Aujerszky disease, pig diseases and foot-and-mouth disease; his classificatory system in relation to the description and classification of the entero-viruses of pigs was internationally recognized. He was a member of the Leopoldina Natural Science Academy of Halle (1977) and was made an honorary doctor of the University of Giessen and an honorary member of numerous foreign societies. His works include The Character of the Hungarian Speckled Cattle (A magyar tarka marha jellege) (1946), and The Contagious Diseases of Domestic Animals (A háziállatok fertőző betegségei) (1985). He was awarded the State Prize in 1983 and was a Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1973, ordinary 1979). – B: 1730, T: 7456.

Szentjóni Szabó, László (Ladislav) (Ottomány, now Otomani in Romania), 22 June 1767 - Kufstein, Austria, 6 October 1795) – Poet and writer. He was a descendant of the lesser nobility. He studied at the Reformed College of Debrecen. From 1786 he was a teacher in Nagyvárad (now Oradea in Romania). He became a qualified high school teacher in 1789, and started in that capacity in Nagybánya (now Baia Mare in Romania); the city did not welcome Protestant teachers, and he lost his position at the nationalized Minorite High School in 1791. In the same year, he published his first book of poems, the Poetic Works of Sz.Sz.L. (Sz.Sz.L. költeményes munkái). He applied, without success, for the Chair of Esthetics at the University of Pest. However, he received a position at the Council of the Governor-General in Buda, studied Law at the University of Pest, and worked in the legal field; finally, he passed the law examinations in 1794. In 1790-1791 his position as Member of the National Assembly lent voice to the aristocratic resistance, and the internal revolutionary movement of the aristocracy and the shadow of the French Revolution turned his attention to history. He joined the first Hungarian republican movement, the Martinovics conspiracy. He met J. Hajnóczy and F. Szentmarjai, forged a friendship with János (John) Batsányi. When the conspiracy was detected, he was also captured on 8 May 1795. He was sentenced to death; but the penalty was commuted to an indefinite prison term. He was gravely ill, broken in body and spirit, and was transferred to Kufstein, where he died soon after. Szentjóni Szabó was not a revolutionary, but his prosaic works reflected the idea of bourgeois equality. With his impeccable sense of language, he instinctively used Hungarian properly, and was a conscientious stylist. Alongside József (Joseph) Kármán, he was the greatest artist of Hungarian prose in the 1790s. His barely started poet's life was characterized by a sentimental tone of noble quality and accurate artistic form. Perhaps his most popular poem is The Simple-Minded Peasant (Az együgyü paraszt). His early tragic death cut short his great lyric promise. Some of his poems were translated into German. – B: 0877, 0883, T: 7456.→Jacobites in Hungary; Martinovics, Ignác; Szentmarjay, Ferenc; Hajnóczy, József; Batsányi, János; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Verseghy, Ferenc; Öz, Pál; Kármán, József.

Szentkuthy, Miklós (Nicholas) (Pfisterer) (Budapest, 2 June 1908 - Budapest, 18 July 1988) – Writer, essayist and translator of literary works. He studied at the Petőfi (formerly Werbőczy) High School (1918-1926), and in the Arts Faculty of the University of Budapest, majoring in French and Hungarian (1926-1931), obtaining his Ph.D. on Ben Jonson's Naturalism, in 1931. Thereafter, he taught at the Madách High School in Budapest (1932-1939), at the Árpád High School (1939-1948), and in the Louis Kossuth Technical College (1949-1958). He made extensive study trips, which determined his future career: Italy, England and other European cultural centers, some with his wife, Dóra Eppinger. His first critiques and studies appeared in the journal Sunrise (Napkelet) from 1926 to 1931. He was an associate of Answer (Válasz), edited by László (Ladislav) Németh, then of Hungarian Star (Magyar Csillag) with Gyula (Julius) Illyés and of New Writing (Új Írás), edited by Ferenc (Francis) Juhász. He gave lectures at the Budapest Free University (1945-1948). He wrote studies for various journals and for the Hungarian Radio. From 1957, he worked as a freelance writer. He translated Swift's Gulliver, Dickens' Oliver Twist, and Joyce's Ulysses. His novel, called Prae, created some stir in 1934 (2nd ed. 1980). In his life's work he succeeded in conjuring up the everyday life of bygone times. His numerous works include Orpheus, novel (1939); Confession and Puppet-show (Vallomás és Bábjáték) (1942); Divertimento, Mozart's biographical novel (1957, 1976); Face and Mask (Arc és álarc), Goethe's biographical novel (1962, 1982), and Breviary of St Orpheus, i-iv (Szent Orpheus breviáriuma, I-IV), novel (1973-1984). He translated from Swift, H. Fast, Charles Dickens, Halldór Kiljan Laxness, Robert Lawson, Mark Twain and James Joyce. He was a recipient of a number of prizes including the Baumgarten Prize (1948), the Attila József Prize (1977), and the Kossuth Prize (1988). – B: 0877, 0878, 0883, 1031, 1257, T: 7456.→Németh, László; Illyés, Gyula; Juhász, Ferenc.

Szentmarjay, Ferenc (Francis) (? , 1767 - Buda, 20 May 1795) – Political writer. He was a descendant of a family of landed gentry. He studied Law at the Academy in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). From 1790 he was the secretary of László (Ladislav) Orczy, and Vice-President of the Treasury. He was a radical democrat, an enthusiastic follower and propagandist of the ideas of the French Revolution. The secret police kept him under observation from 1792. He translated into Hungarian Rousseau's Social Contract and the French Jacobite Constitution of 1793; a number of articles by Moniteur, and also the open letter that Ignác (Ignatius) Martinovics wrote to Emperor Ferenc I (Francis) 1792-1835). His translations traveled in manuscript form from hand to hand. In the spring of 1794, Martinovics drew him into the secret Republican organization and made him one of the directors of his Society of Liberty and Equality, rallying radical democrats. He gained a large number of members in the Capital City and the Counties of Zemplén and Abauj in the northern part of Hungary. In the night of 16 August 1794, he was arrested. First he was interrogated in Vienna; later, in the lawsuit against the Hungarian Jacobites, he was committed to trial in Hungary, in which he was sentenced to death for high treason and treason against the Hungarian State. He was decapitated on the grassy field called the Vérmező (Blood Field), south of the Castle Hill of Buda. – B: 0883 T: 7456.→Martinovics, Ignác; Jacobites in Hungary; Batsányi, János; Kazinczy, Ferenc; Szentjóni Szabó, László; Hajnóczy, József; Versegly, Ferenc.

Szentmártoni Szabó, Géza (until 1990 Géza Szabó) (Tiszanagyfalu, 1 October 1950 - ) – Literary historian. He graduated from high school in Békéscsaba, and studied at the Protestant Theological Academy in Debrecen between 1969 and 1971. He graduated from the University of Budapest, majoring in History and Latin (1973-1978). He was employed at the Széchenyi National Library (1978-1987) and, between 1984 and 1986 he received a scholarship from the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Since 1987, he has been an associate professor at the Department of Old Hungarian Literature of the Budapest University. Since 1996, he has been Editor of the series of 16th Century Hungarian Poets. His main areas of research are the work of Bálint (Valentine) Balassi, and 16th century Hungarian literature, with the accompanying music and symbolism. In 2009, he discovered in a library in Naples the complete text of the presumably lost work of Janus Pannonius, the Renatus-panegyrius. Some of his works are The Poets of Love (A szerelem költői) (2004), and The Peril of Parthenople (Parthenople veszedelme) (2010). He edited several literary works. – B: 0874, 2100, T: 7697.→Janus Pannonius; Balassi, Bálint.

Szentmártonyi, Ignác (Ignatius) (Kotor, Montenegro, 28 October 1718 - Belica, Croatia, 15 April 1793) – Astronomer and geographer. He studied Arts and Science in Graz, Austria, entered the Jesuit Order in 1735, and studied Theology in Vienna, Austria, while obtaining an education in Astronomy. Until 1749, he taught Mathematics in Graz. When the Portuguese King Juan V sought astronomers and geodesists for colonial service, he applied. He arrived in Maranhão, Northern Brazil, at the headquarters of the Jesuit missionaries. His task was the mapping of the area adjacent to the Spanish colonies. In about 10 years, he covered 30,000 to 35,000 kilometers in the primeval forests of the Amazon, satisfying both parties with his work. When, in 1758 the Order was dissolved in Portugal, the Jesuits living in Brazil were taken captive. He was not a missionary, in the religious sense, but an astronomer in the service of the King. Yet, because of his link with the Missionary Order, he languished for 18 years in the fort-prison of Sao Julian, near Lisbon. After his release in 1777, he returned to Hungary, lived in Csáktornya (now Čakovec, Croatia) for a while, and was a parish priest in Belica (now in Croatia) until his death. – B: 0883, 1123, T: 7674.

Szentmihályfalva, Inscription in the Church (Felsőszentmihály, now Mihai Viteazul, Transylvania, Romania) – Several inscribed stones were found built into the church wall of medieval origin in this village near Torda (now Turda, Romania). The erosion caused by the current of the River Aranyos endangered the church on its original site; therefore it was demolished in 1674, and rebuilt with its stones on the present site. On one of the inscribed stones the fragment of a Latin word and three lines of fragmented and subsequently carved runic inscriptions were visible. The Latin inscription, judged on the form of the letters, was possibly made at the turn of the 16th-17th centuries. The runic writing text was chiselled later, but definitely before the reconstruction (1674-1685), when the wall was plastered over. The forms of the runic letters were very similar to the signs of the runic inscription found at Énlaka (now Inlăceni, Romania) in 1668. – B: 1174, T: 7669.→Runic Writing; Runic Writing, Hungarian.

Szentmihályi Mrs. Szabó, Mária (Ottomány, now Otomani, Romania in former County Bihar, 31 October 1888 - Leányfalu, 24 June 1982) – Writer. She completed her high school in Debrecen; then, started working as a journalist in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). She was a member of the circle of writers that developed around the journal Transylvanian Helicon. (Erdélyi Helikon). On moving to Budapest, she became a correspondent for the paper, Hungarians (Magyarság), and also published works in the paper New Times (Új Idők). Her works are characterized by strong religiousness; in her novels she portrays the life-path of great historic female personages and also the fate of the bourgeoisie and intelligentsia developing in the 19th century. She was a member of the Transylvanian Hungarian Literary Society, the Szigligeti Society, the Petőfi Society, the Lea Ráskai Literary Society, and the Pen Club. Her works include Apassionata, novel (1926); Irene's Years (Iréni évei), novel (1933); Man Toils, God Blesses vols. i,ii (Emberé a munka, Istené az áldás, I,II), a novel about her family in Debrecen, (1936, 1937); Zsuzsanna Lorántffy, historical novel (1938); Ilona Zrinyi, historical novel (1939); The Music of Life (Az élet muzsikája) novel (1940), and Harvest (Aratás), novel (1943). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Lorántffy, Zsuzsanna; Zrinyi, Countess Ilona.

Szentpétery, Imre (Emeric) (Középpalojta, now Plachtince Prostredne, Slovakia, 23 September 1878 - Budapest, 14 July 1950) – Historian. As a member of the Eötvös College, he studied at the University of Budapest, and then he went to study in Germany and France for one year, as well as for six months in Italy, conducting art-historical and document research (diplomats). He obtained his Ph.D. in Arts with his dissertation On the Beginnings of Modern Times in History, in 1901, and his Dip. Ed. in 1902. He became teacher of Latin and History at the High School in Lugos (now Lugoj, Romania) in 1907. During these years he was a member of the János Arany Society of Temesvár (now Timișoara, Romania) and also of the Historical Society. He was mainly engaged in diplomatics and source-material research. In the 1904-1908 period, his works appeared in the journals Centuries (Századok) and Urania. In 1914 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Budapest, and from 1918 to 1923, he taught History at the University of Debrecen. After the dictated Peace Treaty of Trianon (1920), which reduced Historic Hungary to the present-day Hungary, from 1923 he worked as Professor of Auxiliary Sciences, lecturing on Heraldry and Diplomatics at the University of Budapest. During 1937 and 1938, he edited the new editions of sources in narrative art of the Árpadian era (1000–1301 AD). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His works include On the Critique of Objectivity in History (A történelemtudomány objektivitásának kritikája) (1906) and Hungarian Diplomatics (Magyar oklevéltan) (1930). He was a recipient of the Corvin Wreath in 1941. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Szentpétery, József (Joseph) (Rimaszombat, now Rimavská Sobotá, Slovakia, 12 April 1781 - Pest, 12 June 1862) – Goldsmith, outstanding Hungarian master of the 19th century. He studied under artist Pál (Paul) Szathmáry-Király in 1794; and from 1796, under the resident goldsmith of the town of Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), István (Stephen) Vásárhelyi. From 1805 he continued his studies in Vienna. From there he went to Paris; however, due to the Napoleonic wars, he got stuck in Trieste. In 1808 he was again in Vienna, working with the Court goldsmith, Wirth. In 1811 he became a member of the Goldsmith Trade Guild of Pest, where he presented his masterpiece: the The Chalice of the Last Supper (Az utolsó vacsora kelyhe) of the Szilvásvár Reformed Church (at the northwest-foot of the Bükk Mountains). Because of financial difficulties he lived in Losonc (now Lučenec, Slovakia) between 1812 and 1818. In 1818 he returned to Pest, where he created numerous personal articles of artistic value in his workshop. His talent made him to create even greater, multiform embossed works. Such works include Traversing the River Granicus, copper embossing (1830), at present in the National Museum; The Battle of Arbela, on which he worked for seven years; and King Porus Falling into Captivity, a silver embossing (1850). The Recapture of Buda Castle (1853) is a composition of embossed copper sheet, as is also the Calvary (Kálvária) (1855). A number of his works are kept in public collections in Budapest (National Museum, Museum of Applied Arts, at the Metropolitan Museum), as well as in country towns. A number of his works are held mainly in Reformed churches. In 1964, the Museum of Applied Arts presented a collection of his works in an exhibition. The goldsmith guilds of Vienna and Besztercebánya (now Banská Bystrica, Slovakia) elected him an honorary member. In his writings, he demanded the abolition of trade-guilds and urged the raising of the educational level of workers in art. He was the most prominent goldsmith in Hungary in the 19 century. – B: 0883, 1440, T: 0883.

Szentpétery, Zsigmond (Sigismund) (Rohod, 31 July 1798 - Pest, 13 December 1858) – Actor. He studied Reformed Theology in Debrecen and Sárospatak. However, against the wishes of his family, he became an actor and joined the company of Ádám Láng and Miklós (Nicholas) Udvarhelyi, setting out with them in the countryside. Later he played at the Belezsnay-garden Theater (Belezsnay-kerti Színház) of Pest, from where he moved to Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia). From there he went to Buda with a company from Kassa in 1835. He was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Budapest ever since its foundation. He was at his best in the personification of the typical figure of contemporary Hungarian life: the judge of the County Court, the notary, the district administrator, the parish choir-master – all roles which he could interpret best. With his imposing appearance, refined manners and polished style he was also eminently suited for the role of the father in French conversational pieces. He also translated plays into Hungarian. His roles included Baltafy in K. Kisfaludy's Suitors (Kérők); Petur, Michál in Katona's Bánk bán; Banquo in Shakespeare's Macbeth; Gloucester in Shakespeare's King Lear (Lear Király); Menenius Agrippa in Shakespeare's Coriolanus; Miller in Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem), and the Marquis of Posa in Schiller's Don Carlos. He was one of the most original talents of the founding group of actors of the National Theater. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Szentsei Book of Songs – A manuscript collection of songs from the beginning of the 18th century. It was written in County Veszprém by a Lutheran scribe or teacher, calling himself a Kuruc, a sympathizer with the nationalist cause in Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II's time. The author is thought to be György (George) Szentsei, whose two songs are also included. The book was probably compiled between 1705 and 1710. This book of songs is one of the most important sources of 17th century Hungarian poetry with a varied content, including songs not found anywhere else. Especially important are his songs of the Kuruc era; among them are the most precious pieces of old Hungarian poetry, such as the Transylvanian Haidu-dance (Erdélyi hajdútánc); Clerics' World in Hungary (Papvilág Magyarországon), and the Plight of the Poor Lad (Szegénylegény dolga), all fugitive songs. It is especially rich in the jeremiads of the Protestant persecution and includes a rich collection of amusing wedding songs. It is kept in the National Széchényi Library in Budapest. – B: 1150, 1138, 1031, T: 3240.→Kuruc.

Szép, Ernő (Ernest) (Huszt, now Khust, Ukraine, 3 June 1884 - Budapest, 2 October 1953) – Poet, writer, journalist and playwright. His father was a teacher, his mother a seamstress. He attended high school in Hajdúszoboszló, Debrecen and Mezőtúr. As a student he already excelled with his poems. In 1903 he moved to Budapest and contributed to journals such as The Week (A Hét), the West (Nyugat) and The Evening (Az Est). He was conscripted into the army in 1914. He was in Vienna in 1920-1921. He was a contributor of The Newspaper (Az Újság) from 1925. He became a popular playwright and chanson writer for the Cabaret Theater, and wrote excellent short stories as well. He was arrested several times in 1944, was sentenced to a forced labor unit, and was interned in a Jewish Ghetto. After 1948 he lived in poverty. He was a member of the Petőfi Society and was a friend of Endre (Andrew) Ady. He was a sensitive writer with liberal ideas. He wrote more than 60 books, among them The First Bouquet (Az Első csokor) poems, translations (1902); Songbook (Énekeskönyv) poems (1912); Pharmacy (Patika) drama (1919); Violet Acacia (Lila ákác) novel (1922); The Groom (Vőlegény) drama (1922); Valentine, novel (1927); Heartbeat (Szívdobogás) play (1936); Give Me Your Hand (Add a kezed) poems (1958), and The Smell of Humans (Emberszag) (1945, in English 1994). His selected dramas were published in 1975, his articles in 1992 under the title Small Complaint (Kispanasz), and his collected poems in 1995. A literary prize bears his name. – B: 0878, 0877, 0883, 1031, T: 7103.→Ady, Endre.

Szepes Castle – Szepes, (now Spišský hrad) is situated in the northern hilly region of Historic Hungary, (Upland, or Northern Hungary, Felvidék, now Slovakia). The castle built on a granite hilltop for the royal overseer, responsible for the protection of the northern border of the country. According to written records, the castle was already standing in 1249. The original living tower and a Romanesque style palace received their final form in the 15th and 16th centuries. It was the first county seat for Szepes County. During the Tartar invasion (1241-1242), most of the building was destroyed, but was later rebuilt and enlarged. In later centuries, many battles were fought for its possession, because it was built adjacent to a key road. In 1703 the Kuruc army occupied it and, until 1710, the castle belonged to the famous Kuruc leader, Prince Ferenc Rákóczi II (1705-1711). It was burned down in 1780, and is now in ruins. It consisted of 135 rooms and is the largest castle ruin in the Felvidék. The walls were 3 meters thick, and some 20-30-meter high sections are still standing, with one of the towers still in good shape. During its heyday the castle supported its own agricultural program, including a mill, and even had its own cemetery. Hundreds of soldiers protected the castle with 75-100 cannons. The view from the ruin is quite spectacular. The place is protected and now some renovation work has commenced. The castle and its region is part of the World Heritage. – B: 1078, 1144, 1020, T: 7663. → Rákóczi II, Prince Ferenc.

Szepeshely, Woodcarving Workshop at (now Szepeskáptalan, Spišská Kapitula, Slovakia) – The woodcarvings of the cathedral date from the 1470s. Several retabuli, which are relics of Gothic plastic works of the same age, remained. The harmony in their style proves that the following art pieces came from the same woodcarving workshop: Adoration of Kings, Altar of Mary's Crowning and the Altar of Mary's Death. The most important of these is the Altar of Mary's Death; the magnificent main altar at the Krakow Cathedral inspired the iconographic structure and the main scene with its composition. This workshop filled the local needs in the beginning of the 16th century and contributed to the building of the cathedral by providing the altars. – B: 1020, 1031, T: 7675.

Szepes, Mária (Magda Scherbák) (Budapest, 14 December 1908 - Budapest, 3 September 2007) – Actress, scenarist, writer and poet. Her pen name was Maria Orsi; as an actress, she was known as Magda Papir. Her father was the actor Sándor (Alexander) Scherbach (1877-1911); her mother was the singer and actress Maria Kronemer (1883-1953), whose artist name was Margit Kornai. Maria Szepes entered the stage at the age of 3, and appeared in a number of silent films, among them The Frozen Child (A megfagyott gyermek), which was stage-managed by her foster-father, Béla Balogh. She also began writing later on, under the influence of her brother. In 1925, aged 17, she passed the examination for ballet dancing and completed a commercial high school. After that she studied art history, literature and psychology at the Walter Seminary. In 1929, aged 21, she began writing her diary notes. In 1930 she married Béla Szepes (1903-1986), who was an artist and a sportsman with an Olympic silver medal. It was at this time that she assumed the name Mária Szepes. Though she grew up in a religious Jewish family, the Christian faith proved decisive for her. From 1931, she spent three years in Berlin with her husband, where she studied Psychology, Literary History and Comparative Philosophy of Religion under Professor Samuel Gerling and, in the meantime, she wrote sketches for the daily paper, Ullstein Berliner Zeitung im Mittag. She returned to Hungary in 1933, and became a correspondent for the paper, Budapester Rundschau. In 1939, inspired by the Rosicrucians, she began writing her best-known novel, The Red Lion (A vörös oroszlán) (1946). Her other works are Mirror-door in the Sea (Tükörajtó a tengerben) (1976): The Cart of Mars (Mars szekere) (1999). She wrote a number of children's books, and is the author of the Spotted Panni novels (1953-1973), as well as Auntie Boroka's Treasure (Boróka néni kincsa) (1979), and Lively Picture Book (Eleven képeskönyv) (1983). Her spiritual works include The Magic of Everyday Life (A mindennapi élet mágiája) (1989); The Magic of Fate and Miracle (A sors és csoda mágiája) (1995), and The Anatomy of the Soul (A lélek anatómiája) (2002). A number of her books appeared also in other languages (German, English, Polish, Spanish and Italian). As a writer and drama critic, she appeared in several films. She was a life member of the Hungarian Writers' Association. She was one of the outstanding representatives of the fairy-tale, science fiction and spiritual literature. Her life-work was recognized by the Gold Meteor Prize in 1972, by the Galaktika Prize in 1987, and the János Arany Prize in 2001. – B: 1031, 1257, T: 7456.

Szepesi, György (George) (Budapest, 5 February 1922 - ) – Journalist and sports-reporter. He was educated at the College of Physical Education, Budapest (1951-1954). From 1945 he was a staff member of the Hungarian Radio. From 1946 he published regularly in journals. From 1975 to 1978 he was a radio correspondent in Bonn, West Germany. From 1981 to 1992 he was Head of the Entertainment and Sports Department of the Hungarian Radio and TV; his sports-reporter career includes reports from 13 Summer Olympic Games and 11 Football World Championships. In 1996 and 1997 he was a Board Member of the Hungarian Radio Public Foundation (MSZP). From 1978 to 1986 he was President of the Hungarian Football Federation, then honorary president. From 1982 to 1994 he was a member of the Executive Board of Fédération Internationale de Football Association – FIFA, from 1994 a life member. Since 1995 he has been an honorary citizen of District XIII, Budapest. His major works include Patron on the Football-field (Civil a pályán) co-author (1951); Eye-to-Eye with Four Olympics (Négyszemközt négy olimpiával) with László Lukács (1959); Report from Rome (Római riport) with László Lukács (1961); We Report from Chile... (Chiléből jelentjük...) with Endre Tabák (1962); Goal! Gooool! 2000 Goals! (Gól! Góóóól! 2000 gól!), (1963); Unforgettable 90 Minutes (Felejthetetlen 90 percek) co-author (1964); Our Love, the Microphone (Szerelmünk, a mikrofon) with István Pluhár (1967); Hungarian Football Rhapsody (1968); A History of the Hungarian Olympic Gold-medals (A magyar olimpiai aranyérmek története) with László Lukács (1976); Sportmikrofon (1982); The FIFA Story (1989), and Farewell to the Microphon (Búcsú a mikrofontól), (1998). Szepesi is one of the popular sport-reporters beside István (Stephen) Pluhár and Tamás (Thomas) Vitray. He is a recipient of the Ferenc Rózsa Prize (1963), the SZOT Prize (Szakszervezetek Országos Tanácsa) (1969), the Egon Erwin Kisch Prize (1995), the György Orth Prize (1996), and the Aranytoll Award (1999). – T: 0874, T: 7103. → Pluhár, István; Vitray, Tamás.

Szepesszombat Chronicle (Szepesszombat, now Spišská Sobota, Slovakia) – A 15th century Chronicle written in German that includes Hungary's history from King István I (St. Stephen, 997-1038) to 1457. Its beginning originates from the Chronicles of Márk Kálti, while the rest is from contemporary sources. It was discovered by Kálmán (Coloman) Demkó together with the story of Zipser Willkühr at the Captain's office of Szepesszombat. In 1891 it was reviewed by the Historical Society of County Szepes their 7th Yearbook; it also appeared in separate print. – B: 0942, 1078, T: 3240. → Codex Literature; Kálti, Márk.

Szépfalusi, István (Stephen) (Budapest, 21 February 1932 - Vienna, 30 November 2000) – Lutheran pastor and writer. He completed his high school studies in Budapest (1950-1955), and his Lutheran Theological studies in Sopron and Budapest. He was ordained in Budapest in 1955. In 1956 he moved to Vienna to become Pastor of the Hungarian Evangelical Congregation. From 1962 to 1969, he studied History at the University of Graz, Austria, and qualified as an interpreter in Hungarian. From 1977 he was a language master of the Hungarian section of the Institute of Interpreters and Translators of the University of Vienna, and also Secretary of the Peter Bornemisza Society of Vienna. From 1969 to 1984 he was a founding member, secretary, editor and literary reviewer of the European Protestant Free University of Bern, Switzerland. Between 1957 and 1983, he arranged 57 books for printing, and assisted in the publication of 37 others. From 1995 he was a member of the Committee of the Hungarian Writers' Confederation. His main works are New Transylvanian Hungarian Lyric Anthology (Új erdélyi magyar lírai antológia) edited in German (1974); Literature in the Service of the Future (Irodalom a jövő szolgálatában) (1976); Preaching in the Service of the Future (Igehirdetés a jövő szolgálatában) (1976); See and Hear Each Other! Today's Hungarians in Austria (Lássátok, halljátok egymást! Mai magyarok Ausztriában) sociography (1980, Budapest 1992); Second University Examination: 1955, 1983 (Pótszigorlat: 1955, 1983) (1984); Lajos Ordass, vols. i-iv – selected and biographical writings (Ordass Lajos I-IV, válogatott és önéletrajzi írások), edited (1982, 1998); Encounters with Europe (Találkozások Európával) edited (1995); Stones of Murter. Guest-book of the Péter Bornemisza Society (Találkozások Bécsben. A Bornemisza Péter Társaság vendégekönyve) (2000). He was awarded a number of decorations, prizes and medals by various organizations. – B: 0874, 0878, 0877, 1050, T: 7456.→Szépfalusi, Márta; Ordass, Lajos.

Szépfalusi, Márta (née Wanner) (Budapest, 17 May 1935 - Vienna, 24 January 2004) – Translator of literary works. First, she attended the Baár-Madas Reformed High School for Girls, Budapest; then matriculated in 1955 at Basel, Switzerland. She studied university-level English, French, Spanish and Hungarian languages, and received the Hungarian-German interpreter diploma in 1968. She translated works of Hungarian writers, including Gyula (Julius) Illyés, Sándor (Alexander) Csoóri, Anna Jókai, Attila József, András (Andrew) Sütő, and István (Stephen) Vass. – B: 0874, 0878, 0877, T: 7103.→Szépfalusi, István; Illyés, Gyula; Csóri, Sándor; Jókai, Anna; Vass, István.

Szepsi Csombor, Márton (Martin) (Szepsi, now Moldava nad Bodvou, Slovakia, 1595 - Varannó, now Vranov nad Topľou, Slovakia. ca. 1623) – Reformed preacher, writer of travelogues. He received his early schooling at Késmárk (now Kežmarok, Slovakia). In 1611, he moved to Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) for two years, and studied first in Nagybánya (now Baia Mare, Romania), later in Gönc. In 1613 he was Rector of the school in Telkibánya. From 1616 to 1619, he traveled extensively throughout Europe and attended lectures at the universities of Danzig, Strasbourg and London. In 1619 he returned to Northern Hungary (Upland, Felvidék, now Slovakia) to become a school principal in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia), later domestic Chaplain of the Nyári family in Varannó. In 1620, while in Kassa, he published his first travelogue, Europica varietas, in the Hungarian language (only the title was in Latin), and Udvári Schola (Court School) in Bártfa (now Bardejov, Slovakia) (1623). He viewed the world from the perspective of a poor student and described everything with simple, good humor. He traveled almost always on foot, observing with great interest the urbanization of the Western commercial and industrial world, which his writings supported. He became one of the most enthusiastic and important personalities of Protestant middle class literature in the early 17th century. He was the creator of the art of travelogue in the Hungarian language. – B: 1150, 0883, 1136, T: 7682.

*Szerb, Antal (Anthony) (Budapest, 1 May 1901 - Balf, 27 January 1945) – Writer and literary historian. He was born into a Jewish family that had converted to the Roman Catholic faith. In his Arts course at the University of Budapest, he majored in Hungarian, German and English, and in 1924 he obtained a Ph.D. Between 1924 and 1929 he lived in France and Italy, and also spent a year in London. As a student he already published essays and established his reputation as a scholar of literary history. He was elected President of the Hungarian Literary Academy in 1933. In 1934, he published his first novel, The Pendragon Legend, based on his experience of living in Great Britain. His second and best-known work is also a novel, entitled Traveler and Moonlight (Utas és holdvilág) (1937). In the same year he became Professor of Literature at the University of Szeged. Among his works are History of World Literature (A világirodalom története) (1941), considered a standard work ever since; earlier on he published his History of Hungarian Literature (Magyar irodalomtörténet) (1934), for which he was awarded the Transylvanian Helicon Grand Prix, (1934), and A Short History of English Literature (Az angol irodalom kistükre) (1929) He had chances to escape from anti-Semitic persecution as late as 1944, but he stayed in Hungary, where his last novel, entitled VII, Oliver was published in 1943; it appeared as a translation from the English: Oliver the VIIIth, published under the pseudonym A.H. Redcliff, because Jewish works could not be published in Hungary at the time. His late work, Hundred Poems (Száz vers), containing Greek, Latin English, French, German and Italian poems in the original languages and in Hungarian translation, was published during the critical late phase of World War II (1943/1944). In the autumn of 1944, he was deported to a concentration camp near the Austrian border, where he was beaten to death. Antal Szerb actively followed the so-called comparative studies in the history of ideas (Szellemtörténet) in essays like Courtier (Udvári ember); Hungarian pre-Romantics (Magyar preromantika); Vörösmarty Studies (Vörösmarty-tanulmányok), etc. He is recognized as one of the major Hungarian literary figures of the 20th century. Many of his works appeared in translation in ten European languages. He was twice awarded the Baumgarten Prize (1935, 1937). – B: 1031, 1068, 1105, 1257, T: 7103, 7456.

Szerdahely, Pauline Monastery – In 1335, the Ders family founded a Monastery for the a Pauline monks at Szerdahely, in County Somogy, in honor of King László I (St Ladislav) (1077-1095). King Lajos I (Louis the Great) ( 1340-1380) confirmed its foundation deed, so did King Ulászó II (Wladislas) (1490-1516). The Monastery was supported by the Ders family until 1470. In 1543 it was depopulated because of the Turkish occupation. - B: 0945, T: 7103.→Pauline Order.

Szerdahelyi, Ferenc S.J. (Francis) (Sáros, now Šariš, Slovakia, 24 February 1717 - after 1773) – Missionary. In 1734 he entered the Jesuit Order at Lőcse (now Levoča, Slovakia).

After ordination into the priesthood, he taught for a few years. In 1747, he was posted to a mission in South America. He arrived in Buenos Aires in 1748. At first he worked in Yapeju on the San Juan Batista Mission, where he introduced the production of cotton and tobacco. He developed a kind of tea, called Jesuit tea, which became popular. He was expelled as the leader of the Apostoles Mission. The town of Apostoles evolved from this Mission, where a number of ethnic Hungarian farmers settled after World War I. – B: 0945, T: 7103.

Szerdahelyi, Kálmán (Coloman) (Miskolc, 16 February 1829 - Nagybánya, now Baia Mare, Romania, 14 November 1872.) – Actor and literary translator. He first appeared on stage at the age of fifteen in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) with his father's theatrical company. He also appeared on stage in Arad (now in Romania) and other smaller cities. In the summer of 1848, he married Kornélia Prielle. He fought as a Hussar officer in the War of Independence (1848-1849). After the war he became a comedian in Arad and Kolozsvár. After Marosvásárhely (now Târgu Mureș, Romania), Brassó (now Brașov, Romania) and Kolozsvár, he received a contract with the National Theater in Budapest in 1854, where he remained to the end of his career. He was divorced from Kornélia Prielle in 1850 and, in 1857 he married Jozefine Benke, the sister of Róza Laborfalvi and sister-in-law of Jókai. From that moment on, Jókai wrote several plays for him, and used him as a character in several novels under a pseudonym. Szerdahelyi edited the Theater Observer (Színházi Látcső) in Pest, in collaboration with Mihály (Michael) Havi. He translated play scripts of Offenbach, Sardou, Murger, Meyerbeer-Seribe etc.. He acted in classical plays, starting in the late 1850s. He also performed in the operettas of Offenbach. He was the implementer of natural speech on stage. His main roles include Mercutio in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (Rómeó és Júlia); the Fool in Shakespeare's King Lear (Lear király); Polilla in A. Moreto's Donna Diana; Kalb in Schiller's Love and Intrigue (Ármány és szerelem), and the fiddler in Jókai's Dózsa György. His works include The Comedians Tricked Me (Rászedtek a komédiások) play (1856); His Artistic Letters from London (Művészi levelei Londonból) (1862); At the Parisian Theaters (A párizsi színházaknál) (1862), and About the German Theaters (A német színházakról) (1881). – B: 0883, 1445, 1031, T: 7697. → Prielle, Kornélia; Laborfalvi, Róza; Jókai, Mór.

Szerelmey, Miklós (Nicholas) (Lieb) (Győr, 3 July 1802 - Budapest, 5 August 1875) – Inventor, lithographer, engineer and the initiator of Hungarian caricature. He graduated from the Engineering Academy in Vienna, and he served as an officer of the engineering corps in Italy. After his discharge he traveled the world: Germany, France, Scandinavia, America and Egypt; after that he founded a lithographic shop in Vienna, in the mid 1830s. Finally, in 1844 he settled in Pest with his lithographic shop. His work entitled The Hungarian Past and Present (A Magyar hajdan és jelen) (1847) is a true textbook example of colored lithographic work. He published the first Hungarian political satirical newspaper, the Charivari with Gusztáv Lauka as Chief Editor, with his own illustrations (1848). He was among the first to recognize the importance of Lake Balaton, publishing a book in 1848 about the Lake, which was illustrated with his own landscapes. He participated in the Revolution and War of Independence of 1848-1849, as a colonel, in Komárom. Following these events, he settled down in London in 1850, where he advocated for the Hungarian cause with a lithographic illustrated album entitled Hungary 1848-1849. At the World Fair of 1862, he presented a whole series of his inventions, which are the Silicate zopissa, a stone-preserving substance, which was manufactured for a hundred years, and is still in use today. His graphical works are kept at the Hungarian National Gallery. He also worked as a writer and illustrator. His other work is the Balaton Album (Pest, 1848). A Street in Budapest is named after him. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7697.

Szerémi, György (George) (Kamánc, now Kamenitz, Croatia, ca. 1490 - after 1548) – Writer. He came from a family of serfs. His father was in the service of János (John) Corvin. He was educated at the town of Gyula, on the estate of the Corvins, where he became choirmaster (1088-1513). After his ordination he became court chaplain. After 1514 he was chaplain of the Bishop of Várad (later Nagyvárad, now Oradea in Romania); in 1520, he was at the Royal Court in Buda. In 1521, he was chaplain of András (Andrew) Báthory; in 1522 that of Jakab (Jacob) Bánffy, and he lived in the Southland (Délvidék, now Serbia). Between 1523 and 1526, he was Canon of Arad (now in Romania), and court chaplain. After the lost Battle of Mohács against the Turks (1526), he joined János (John) Szapolyai and accompanied him to Poland. In 1541 he was in the Castle Buda when the Turks occupied it. Then, with the entourage of Queen Isabella, he went to Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). Perhaps it was there that he wrote his memoirs, encouraged by Bishop Antal (Anthony) Verancsics, entitled Epistola de perditione regni Hungarorum (Writings on the Destruction of the Kingdom of the Hungarians – Iromány a magyarok királyságának pusztulásáról), published by G. Wenczel in Pest (1858); Lastly, he was registered among the students of the University of Vienna (1543). His works include the On the Decay of Hungary (Magyarország romlásáról), in which he talks about the important events of the age (1456-1543) in Hungarianized Latin, with many unchecked tell-tales, translated by L. Erdélyi, revised by L. Juhász, with introduction and notes by Gy. Székely, (Budapest, 1961). – B: 0883, T: 7103. → Mátyás I, King; Báthory, Prince András; Mohács, Battles of; Arad; Buda Castle; János I, King; Isabella Queen; Verancsics, Antal.

Szervánszky, Endre (Andrew) (Kistétény, 27 December, 1911 - Budapest, 25 June, 1977) – Composer. Between 1922 and 1927 he studied clarinet at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music. From 1928 until 1930 he was in Italy and Turkey on study tours. In 1931 he re-entered the Academy of Music to study composition with Albert Siklós and obtained a diploma in 1936. From the mid-1930s, he participated in the illegal Communist movement. Until 1940, he taught music theory in various schools. His first two significant compositions are from this time: String Quartet I of 1938, and Divertimento for Orchestra of 1939. From 1941 until 1948, he taught composition and theoretical subjects at the National Music School (Nemzeti Zenede). From 1949 until his death, he taught at the Academy of Music. From 1945 until 1949, he was a music critic for the newspaper, Free Nation (Szabad Nép). From 1949 until 1956 he was a directorial member of the Hungarian Music Artist's Association. His first creative period is characterized by compositions based on clean, diatonic folk music influences. The Soldier's Cantata (Honvédkantáta) of 1949, and the Rhapsody for Orchestra (Zenekari Rapszódia) of 1951 are two outstanding examples of this period, for which he was awarded the first Kossuth Prize. The second creative period, reflecting Bartók's style, marks the appearance of twelve-note compositional system. The second Kossuth Prize was awarded for the three large Petőfi Choral compositions, and the Clarinet Serenade of 1950. The third creative period was also dominated by twelve-note compositions. He launched his New Style with the Attila József

Concerto of 1957, the String Quartet II of 1957, and, importantly, with the Six Orchestral Pieces of 1959. The most noteworthy works from this period include Variations for Orchestra of 1965, the Clarinet Concerto, and the seven Flute Etudes, as well as the oratorio Dark Heaven (Sötét mennyország). Szervánszky's music is strongly influenced by folk music, much like that of his predecessors Béla Bartók and Zoltán Kodály. Later in his life he began exploring surrealism. He was a recipient of the Kossuth Prize (1951, 1968), the Merited Artist title (1963), and the Outstanding Artist title (1977). – B: 0883, 1031, 1426, T: 7667.→Sándor, Frigyes; Lehotka, Gábor; Bartók, Béla; Kodály, Zoltán.

Szervátius, Jenő (Eugene) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 4 July 1903 - Budapest, 15 September 1983) – Sculptor. He apprenticed as a wheelwright, and carved his first sculpture in 1924, Judith and Holofernes. After a study tour to Paris in 1925, he continued his education at Kolozsvár's Creative Arts School between 1927 and 1929. He exhibited in Bucharest, Romania in 1929 and took part in the exhibition of the Hungarian, Romanian and Saxon artists of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) in 1930. The first exhibition of his own was in Kolozsvár in 1933; the second one in Budapest in 1937. He taught at Csíksomlyó (now Șumuleu Ciuc, Romania), and at Kolozsvár between 1940 and 1965, before his next independent exhibitions at home and abroad. In 1977 he settled in Hungary and created wood, stone and marble sculptures. Typical of his art is a method of constructivism, a view of folkloristic expression, extremes from soft spoken dramatic lyricism to harsh drama His most famous work, created together with his son, and entitled Áron Tamási, was constructed in 1972-1973, from a single nine-ton piece of trachite stone. His artwork is preserved in museums and in private collections in fifteen countries. – B: 1144, 0883, T: 7675.→Tamási, Áron.

Sziget, Peril of – A historical song relating the peril of Szigetvár in 1566, written by an unknown author from the same period. Only a fragment of the printed version remained. The entire text is known only from handwritten songbooks. The chronicle, recorded in a dry style, relates some of the more interesting episodes of the siege of Szigetvár by the Turks. Keresztély Schesaeus, a Transylvanian Saxon poet, used the song to write his Latin elaboration of the fall of Szigetvár. Count Miklós Zrinyi, the great-grandson of the hero of Szigetvár, based his great epic Peril of Sziget (Szigeti veszedelem) on this Latin elaboration. – B: 0883, 1136, T: 3240.→Zrinyi, Count Miklós (2).

Szigethy, Attila (Kapuvár, 10 March 1912 - Győr, 12 August 1957) – Labor Party politician. He went to school in Kapuvár and earned a diploma in forest management at the Forestry and Mining Academy of Sopron. From 1929 he was a government official, became a clerk in the District Court of Kapuvár, and later, the local tradesmen invited him to work as clerk for the district Trade Association; he worked in this capacity until 1949. From 1945 he was Secretary of the National Peasant Party of Kapuvár, then County President of the Party. He was elected Member of Parliament in 1947, 1949 and 1953. From 1950 to the end of 1954, he was Deputy President of the County Council of Győr-Sopron. During the Communist regime of Rákosi, he was discharged from his post. He was appointed as Director of the State Farm of Kistölgyfajamajor and, became President of the National Council of Győr on 26 October 1956, and he also became President of the newly formed Transdanubian National Council on 30 October. He proved to be a dogged supporter of Imre (Emeric) Nagy. After the defeat of the Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight, the newly forming Communist regime under Soviet military occupation, took him into protective custody on 4 November 1956 but, on the demand of the still fighting masses, he was freed. He edited the paper Our Country (Hazánk), launched during the Revolution, and he also initiated the periodical, Sopron Diary (Soproni Napló) in December 1956. The Kádár regime tried to win him over, and he became a member of the delegation of the Patriotic People's Front (Hazafias Népfront). With this delegation, he went to Bulgaria. He also took part in the parliamentary work of County Győr-Sopron; but on 3 May 1957 he was arrested and, on 9 May 1957, he was reported to have resigned from his mandate in the Parliament. In his imprisonment he committed suicide. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.→Nagy, Imre; Freedom Fight of 1956; Rákosi, Mátyás; Kádár, János; Patriotic People's Front.

Szigethy, Gábor (Gabriel) (Budapest, 29 September 1942 - ) – Theater historian and stage manager. In 1967 he obtained a Degree in Hungarian Literature and Adult Education from the University of Budapest. From 1966 to 1971 he was an associate at the Institute of Theater Studies (Színháztudományi Intézet). Between 1972 and 1976 he was a deputy editor for the journal, Critique (Kritika); from 1976 he was an assistant lecturer at the University of Budapest. From 1993 he worked as stage manager at the Petőfi Theater (Petőfi Színház) of Veszprém. His studies embrace the history of literature, theater and education in the ages of enlightenment and reform. In the series edited by him, entitled Thinking Hungarians (Gondolkodó magyarok), he published, e.g. the pamphlet, Appeal in the Cause of the Hungarian Theater of Pest (Szózat a pesti Magyar Színház ügyében) by József (Joseph) Bajza (1986), and the essay entitled Shakespeare by Zsigmond (Sigismund) Móricz (1986). He also edited the work Selected Theatrical Writings of Imre Vahot, 1840-1848 (Vahot Imre válogatott színházi írásai, 1840-1848) (1981); the copy and complex documentation entitled, Victory (Győzelem) by László (Ladislav) Németh and Zoltán Latinovits (1992), and he also edited a volume from the bequest of Éva Ruttkai entitled Command Me, My Fairy-Queen! (Parancsolj, tündérkirálynőm!) (1989). He is doing important work in theater-museology: he is Curator of the É. Ruttkai, Z. Latinovits and M. Dajka bequests, runs the Ruttkai Memorial Room, and is one of the founders and secretary of the Latinovits Circle of Friends. His books include Ruttkai (1987); Latinovits (1988), and Collected Writings (1985). – B: 1445, 1257, T: 7456.→Bajza, József; Móricz, Zsigmond; Vahot, Imre; Németh, László; Latinovits, Zoltán; Ruttkai, Éva; Dajka, Margit.

Szigeti, György (George) (Szentes, 29 January 1905 - Budapest, 26 November 1978) – Electrical engineer, inventor. He obtained his tertiary training at the Budapest Polytechnic. From 1926 to 1928 he was employed as a technician with the United Incandescent Company (Egyesült Izzó), Budapest. From 1928 to 1950 he was a laboratory assistant, and later, Director of the Laboratories Firm. From 1950 to 1952 he was Director of Laboratory No. 3 in the Institute of Telecommunication. From 1958 to 1974 he was Director of the Research Institute of Technical Physics of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, where he was a corresponding member from 1954 to 1958 and an ordinary member from 1958; he was its Deputy Secretary General from 1958 to 1961. His main fields of study were: luminescent materials and semi-conductors. He was awarded the Kossuth Prize in 1959 and the Medal of the Eötvös Society in 1970. – A Technical High School bears his name in Budapest. – B: 0969, T: 7456.

Szigeti, József (1) (Joseph) (Budapest, 5 November 1892 - Luzern, Switzerland, 20 February 1973) – Violin virtuoso. He studied music at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and was a student of Jenő (Eugene) Hubay. From 1905 he toured almost constantly and performed with great success in Berlin, Dresden and London. He lived in England for a couple of years from 1906. He was a professor at the Conservatory of Music of Geneva (1917-1924). He settled in the USA in 1926, he became a naturalized American citizen only in 1951. He pioneered many new works of Béla Bartók, M. Ravel, I. Stravinsky and S. Prokofiev. Bartók dedicated his First Rhapsody to him in 1928. On 9 January 1939, Szigeti and Bartók performed the first two parts of Bartók's Contrasts (Kontrasztok) at Carnegie Hall, New York. He and Bartók worked together on the 7th piece of the "For Children" series, published under the title: Hungarian Folk Tunes (Magyar népi dallamok). Szigeti was considered a teacher of great ability. He visited Hungary before World War II, and after the war. He was the Honorary President of the Weiner-Bartók Festival in 1963, Budapest. He left behind a valued discography. Szigeti's works include With Strings Attached. Reminiscences and Reflections, autobiography (New York, 1947, London, 1949, Zürich, 1962); Talking Strings (Beszélő húrok), translated by Adorján Stella (Budapest, 1965); Beethoven's Violin Pieces (Beethoveen Violinwerke), translated by Imre (Emeric) Ormay (Budapest, 1968), and Joseph Szigeti on the Violin (London, 1969) (A hegedűről), translated by Ákos Fodor (Budapest, 1974). Szigeti, József (2) (Joseph) (Tripammer) (Veszprém, 11 May 1822 - Budapest, 26 February 1902) – Writer, actor and lawyer. He completed the earlier part of high school in Veszprém, when he was on friendly terms with József (Joseph) Radakovics, the writer Gereben Vas of later times. He left the Law School of the University of Budapest and became an actor; later became member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház), Budapest. In 1865 he became a teacher and later Director of the Academy of Dramatic Art, and was also appointed a member of the Kisfaludy Society and the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. Early in his acting career, he played juvenile leads, later comic roles of the French drawing-room plays fashionable at the time. He was one of the pioneers of realistic acting. His important Shakespearean roles were Polonius in Hamlet; Kent in King Lear; Menenius Agrippa in Coriolanus, and Falstaff in Henry IV. He was also the author of folk plays, popular at the time: they were lively comic plays, at times not even shrinking from satirical critic; he played leading roles in these as well. His works included Bootmaker as Ghost (Csizmadia mint kísértet) (1856); Diary of an Actor (Egy színész naplója) autobiography (1866); From the World of Sentiment (Az érzés világából) short-story (1886), and Adoration of Art (Művészet-imádása) novel (1896). A memorial plaque was erected on his house of birth in Veszprém in 1902. – B: 0932, 1257, T: 7456.→Vas, Gereben.

Szigeti, Miklós (Nicholas) (Abaújszántó, 5 July 1941 - ) – Sculptor. He studied at his birthplace from 1947 to 1955. He practiced stone masonry in Kassa (now Košice, Slovakia) from 1956 to 1959. He attended the stone-sculpture course at the Kassa High School of Applied Arts (1962-1966). From 1966 to 1971 he studied at the Academy of Applied Arts of Prague under Karel Hladík, Václav Večeřa, Jiří Dušek and Jiří Bradáček, and finally settled in Kassa. During the restoration of the Cathedral of Kassa, he directed the stone masonry works (1985-1987). Since 1991, he has been a stone-masonry and restoration teacher at the High School of Applied Arts of Kassa. He prepares monumental and decorative statues to enhance buildings and plazas, and restores classical monuments. He participated in about 30 group exhibitions. His statues in public squares include Cracking of the Kernel (A mag pattanása) on the Železníky Place, Kassa (1974); Memorial for the martyrs executed by the Arrow-Cross authorities in 1944 in Kassa; and Tranquility (Nyugodalom) a statue standing in the foreground of the Kassa cemetery (1988). – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Szigligeti, Ede (Edward) (József Szatmáry) (Nagyváradolaszi, now Olosig, eastern suburb of Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 8 March 1814 - Budapest, 9 January 1878) – Actor, dramatist, writer, stage manager. Originally he studied engineering; but on 15 August 1834, he became a member of the theatrical company playing in the Castle Theater (Várszínház), Buda. He was with them when the Magyar Theater (Magyar Színház) of Pest was opened in 1837. At the opening presentation Szigligeti played the role of Envy (Irigység) for the scene Árpád's Awakening (Árpád ébredése) in Mihály (Michael) Vörösmarty's curtain raiser. From this day until his death, Szigligeti was a member of the National Theater (Nemzeti Színház) of Pest. His work for four decades there had great influence on the life of the theater. Until 1854, he worked as an actor, though not in leading roles. At the same time, from 1845 right till 1859, he also actively performed secretarial, managerial (from 1854) and librarian tasks. From 1868 to 1873 he also worked as a drama critic. From 29 March 1873 he was Director in a temporary, in 1875 in a permanent position. During his time the theater building was renewed and extended. In the same year, the People's Theater (Népszínház) had just opened in Budapest, and it took away several leading artists from the National, together with the popular folk play genre. As an actor, Szigligeti did not have much success, though he played character roles. His stage managing work was significant, because he discovered many Hungarian writers and brought outstanding actors to the theater. He brought to the stage the new-age Hungarian dramatists, such as Lajos (Louis) Dobsa, Lajos (Louis) Dóczy, Gergely (Gregory) Csiky and Antal (Anthony) Váradi. He introduced five Molière plays into the Hungarian theater life, and also introduced Sophocles' Antigone, Gogol's The Inspector-General (A Revizor) (1836), and Björnson's tragedy A Bankruptcy (A csőd). He knew his actors well and took care of precise delivery of the lines. As a writer, he was the author of tragedies, comedies and folk plays; altogether he wrote more than a hundred pieces. With his folk plays he created a new genre, e.g. The Deserter (A szökött katona) (1843); Herdsmen (Csikós) (1847), and The Gypsy (A cigány) (1853). He wrote successful comedies, such as Liliomfi, and valuable historical dramas, such as Captivity of Ferenc Rákóczi II (II. Rákóczi Ferenc fogsága) (1848). He was Hungary's first and most productive dramatist, who wrote stage-worthy plays and, with his extraordinary productivity, he created a regular theater-going audience. The Hungarian Academy of Sciences invited him to become a corresponding member in 1840; he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society from 1846, and an instructor at the Academy of Dramatic Art from 1865. He wrote, among others, a valuable theoretical dramaturgical study: The Drama and Its Varieties (A dráma és válfajai) (1874). The theater of Szolnok bears his name. – B: 1068, 1445, 1257, T: 7456. → Váradi, Antal.

Szj, Rezső (Rudolph) (Mezőlak, 7 October 1915 - Budapest, 26 April 2006) – Minister of the Reformed Church, cultural and literary historian, writer on the arts, and publisher. His secondary and tertiary studies were in Pápa, where he studied Theology at the Reformed Theological Academy. Between 1937 and 1957, he was Parish Minister in Sárvár and Pétfürdő. From 1945 he was a Member of Parliament in the Smallholders' Party. Between 1946 and 1949 he was Director of the Misztótfalusi Book Publishers. From 1961 to 1969 he was Librarian of the Industrial Commerce Research Group of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (Magyar Tudományos Akadémia Ipargazdasági Kutatási Csoport). From 1969 to 1971, he was Chief Librarian of the National Széchényi Library, Budapest. His main fields of interest were book-artistry and modern Hungarian art, which were the main themes of his articles, essays and books. He organized, founded and led cultural and art societies, such as the Hungarian Bibliophile Society (A Magyar Bibliofil Társaság), the Art Collector and Friends of the Art Circle (A Műgyűjtők és Műbarátok Köre), and the Szenczi Molnár Society (Szenczi Molnár Társaság). The latter published a number of his works. Rezső Szij wrote more than 60 books and booklets, including Misztótfalusi Kis Miklós, study (1937, 1943); After the Lost Sheep (Az elveszett juh nyomában) (1942); The Reformed Church in Diaspora (A református egyház a szórványokban) (1944); Várpalota. Chapters from the City's History (Várpalota. Fejezetek a város történetéből) (1960); Gyula Nagy, study (1965); My Collection vols. i-viii, catalogue (Gyűjteményem, I-VIII, katalógus) (1966-1984); Gyula Xantus (1977); The Art of István Z. Soós (1982); György Váci, the Artist of Bookbinding (A könyvkötés művésze Váci György) (1991), Hungarians – on the Scale (Magyarság – mérlegen) (1993); Our Book-publishing and Book-culture in the Horthy Era (Könyvkiadásunk és könyvkultúránk a Horthy korszakban) (1993); Book-publishing, Book-artistry and Society, vols. i,ii,iii, (Könyvkiadás-könyvművészet-társadalom I-III, (1995-1997)); The Infamous Füred-speech...on 23 August 1956... 1995 (A hirhedt füredi beszéd...1956 augusztus 23... 1995); Confession and Credo, autobiographical fragments (Gyónás és hitvallás), önéletrajzi töredék (1997), and Architecture and Society (Építészet és társadalom) (2003). From his collection there were exhibitions at Pápa, Kecskemét, Lakitelek and Várpalota. He was the recipient of a number of distinctions including the Star Order of Merit of the Republic of Hungary (1991), the Honorary Doctorate from Gáspár Károli Reformed University (1995), the Kölcsey Memorial Medal (1995), the Mihály Táncsics Prize (1996), the Krúdy Memorial Medal (1996), and was made a Freeman of Várpalota (1996). – B: 0878, 1257, 1031, B: 7103.

Sziki, Károly (Charles) (Tiszaföldvár, County Szolnok, 13 April 1954 - ) – Actor, theater and stage-manager, writer and politician. At first he obtained a diploma from the Technical College of Light Industry, Budapest. In 1975 and 1976 he was an engineer at the Alföld Shoe Factory of Kecskemét. Between 1976 and 1980 he studied at the Academy of Dramatic Art, earning his diploma in 1980. Thereafter, he entered into a contract with the Csokonai Theater (Csokonai Színház), Debrecen, acting in leading roles. From 1987 to 1997 he became a principal artist and manager of the Géza Gárdonyi Theater (Gárdonyi Géza Színház), Eger. There are some 50 leading roles to his credit, including roles in works by Shakespeare, Molière, Dürrenmatt and Arthur Miller, and other roles in works by Ferenc (Francis) Molnár, Áron Tamási and András (Andrew) Sütő. He performed, among others, András Sütő's Allow the Words to Come to Me (Engedjétek hozzám a szavakat) (2001). From 1998 to 2002 he was Director of the Harlequin Puppet Theater (Harlekin Bábszínház) in Eger. In 2002, after the change of Government, he was discharged from this theater, because of his patriotic political association. In 2002 he founded, and ever since has managed his private theater, the László Varga Civic Theater (Varga László Polgári Teátrum) of Eger. He has performed on numerous occasions in literary programs in Hungary, and he has given talks to Hungarian émigré communities during his 25 North American trips since 1986, usually in the company of the artist Viola Szabó. They visited e.g. New York, Sarasota in the USA; Toronto, Calgary, Edmonton in Canada, as well as Australia. His roles include A. Farkas' This Is Also Theater (Ez is színház) (individual evening). Sziki also appeared in TV films, such as The Black Umbrella (A fekete esernyő) (1990), and King Matthias Corvinus at Debrecen (1990). He made documentary films such as 1956, You Star (1956, Te Csillag), with American and Canadian participants; 1956 Eger; Hungarians in America (Magyarok Amerikában); The Traitor (Az áruló); And Will the Star Be Turning Again? (És leszén csillagfordulás megint?) (1956-2006). He wrote books on Miklós (Nicholas) Tamási, Erzsébet Cserey, Pálma Tar, and also on the 1956 Hungarian Revolution and Freedom Fight. His best-known book is: The Rope is On My Neck – 25 Years on the Cart of Thalia, autobiography, memoirs (2004), Traitors (Árulók) (2009), and Szeleczky – the Exiled Legend (Szeleczky – a száműzött legenda) (2011). Since 2002 he has been increasingly active in political life: he writes articles and organizes demonstrations. He was the leader of a demonstration against the privatization of the 200-year-old Hospital of Eger in 2008. He is President of the Heves-County section of the Smallholders' Civic Society. He is a member of the Historical Order of Heroes (2007), a recipient the Gold Cross of Distinction of the Republic of Hungary (2002), the Knight Cross of St George (2004), and the Freedom Cross of 1956 (2006). – B: 1445, 1851, T: 7456, 7103.→Cserey, Erzsébet; Varga, László.

Sziklai, Erika (Sziklay, Silbernagel) (Rákospalota, 4 March 1934 - ) – Singer (soprano). She completed her musical studies between 1952 and 1957 at the Bartók Béla Musical High School, Budapest, and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt of Academy of Music under the guidance of Géza László and Mrs. I. Kapitánffy. From 1957 to 1960 she studied with Oszkár Maleczky. From 1960 to 1990 she was a soloist with the National Philharmonic Orchestra. From 1959 to 1964 she was a music teacher at the Music School in Jászberény. From 1964 she was an assistant professor at the Vocal Department of the Academy of Music, later an adjunct professor, and finally, a university professor. She performed more than ninety presentations of 20th century compositions. The works of Alban Berg, Arnold Schönberg, Anton Webern, Kurtág György, Luigi Dallapiccola and Pierre Boulez were presented for the first time in Hungary in her interpretation. She made many recordings, which won international recognition. She was awarded the Liszt Prize (1969), the Artist Emeritus title (1975), the Grand Prix de Disque (Paris, 1972, 1978), the Bartók Béla Memorial Medal (1981), the Ferenc Liszt Memorial Medal (1976), and the Bartók Béla-Pásztori Ditta Award (1996). – B: 0874, 1445, T: 7697.→Maleczky, Oszkár; Kurtág, György.

Szikszai, György (George) (Szikszay) (Békés, 21 March 1738 - Debrecen, 30 June 1803) – Reformed pastor, theological writer and linguist. For a time he was a teacher in Debrecen, then, in 1762 he went abroad on a study trip, returning to Hungary in 1764. He worked as a pastor at Makó and, from 1786, in Debrecen. In 1795 he became Dean of the Diocese of Debrecen, and participated in the editing of the Hungarian Grammar of Debrecen (Debreceni Magyar Grammatica). He is the author of the most widely used Reformed prayer book, entitled Christian Teachings and Prayers (Keresztényi tanítások és imádságok) (1786). It is popularly known as the Old Szikszay (Öreg Szikszay). His works include A Few Sermons (Egynéhány prédikációk) (1787); since then it has appeared in 76 editions; and The Natural and Christian Religion (A természeti és keresztyén vallás). A Reformed School at Makó bears his name. (1799). – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7456.

From 1857 he traveled to Constantinople and the Near East to study Turkish. From 1858 until 1859 he studied at the University of Göttingen. After returning home, he worked as an assistant minister, then from 1863 until his death, as Parish Minister at Kiskunhalas. From 1885 he was the Chief Notary of the Danubian Reformed Church District. He is known for furthering the development of the High School of Halas. From 1865 until 1878 he was a Parliamentary Representative. From 1867 he was a member of the Kisfaludy Society. From 1893 until his death, he was Editor of the journal Releases on the History of Literature (Irodalomtörténeti Közlemények). He was one of the most prominent scholars of early Hungarian literature. He published several works from 16th century authors (B. Balassi, L.S. Timódi). He was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His main published works include Historical Memories from the Turkish-Hungarian Age vols. i-ix (Török-magyorkori történelmi emlékek, I-IX); with S. Szilágyi and F. Salamon, the Turkish-Hungarian State Document Archives vols. i-vii, (Török-magyarkori államokmánytár I-VII) (1868-1872); Archives of Early Hungarian Poetry, vols. i-vii (Régi magyar költők tára I-VII) (1877-1912), and Life and Works of Pelbárt Temesvári (Temesvári Pelbárt élete és munkái) (1880). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7667. → Szabadi, Sándor; Temesvári, Pelbárt.

Szilády, Zoltán (Budapest, 21 May 1878 - Grosspösna, Saxony, Germany, 15 April 1947) – Zoologist and writer in natural sciences. After completing the Reformed High School in Budapest, he studied for a Dip. Ed. (Degree in Education) at the University of Budapest. Then he worked as a high school teacher. After earning his Ph.D. from the same University, from 1901 he was a teacher at the College of Nagyenyed (now Aiud, Romania), and from 1907 an honorary lecturer at the University of Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania). After 1922, he worked at the Zoological Section of the Hungarian National Museum. From 1928 he went on a research trip to Bulgaria; then worked at the Zoological Station of Naples. He dealt mainly with the etiology and anatomy of flies, and with the past of Hungarian zoological research. Szilády discovered Pholeuson hungaricum, an insect species, as well as the insect species named after him, Anophthalmus sziládyi. He also treated some aspects of botany and made studies of cultural history, linguistics and ethnography. From 1904 to 1926, he published and edited the natural scientific journal Biologica Hungarica. Several of his studies sum up the results of his research in the environs of Lake Balaton in Transdanubia. More than twenty of his papers contain zoological data on the Bakony Mountain areas and the environs of Lake Balaton. His works include The Realm of the Animals (Az állatok birodalma) (1926); The Plant Kingdom (A növények országa) (1926); The Past and Present of the Animal Realm of Hungary (A magyar állatvilág múltja és jelene) (1930); The Old Animal Islands of the Balaton Shoreline (A Balatonpart ősi állatszigetei, in: Természettudományi Közlemények, 1931), and The Mediterranean Animal Species of the Tihany Peninsula (A Tihanyi-félsziget mediterrán állatfajai) (Állattani Közlemények, 1931). – B: 0907, 0932, 1122, T: 7456.

Szilágyi, Ákos (Budapest, 18 June 1950 - ) – Poet, esthetician, translator of literary works. He studied at the University of Budapest, majoring in Hungarian and Russian Literature and obtained a Degree in 1974. Thereafter, he was an assistant lecturer at the Department of 19th Century Hungarian Literature; from 1977, in the same capacity in the Department of Esthetics. In 1979, he was a foundation member of the Spare Copy (Fölőspéldány) creative group (with its collection in 1986); he appeared in its literary events and took part in its anthology. Between 1980 and 1984, he was Secretary of the Attila József Writers' Association and, from 1990, a member of the Directorate of the Hungarian Institute of Russian Studies. He was Editor of the journal Presence (Jelenlét) (1970-1973); Bear's Dance (Medvetánc) (1981-1984); Film World (Filmvilág) (1983-1986); and from 1988, was founding Editor of the periodical, New Ladies' Messenger (Új Hölgyfutár), and its Editor from 1989 on. He translates literary works from Russian, including Gogol's The Inspector (A revizor) (1985); and from 1990, he has been a board member of the Institute of Russistics, and he edits collections of historical studies. As a lyric poet, he is most at home in the field of the grotesque. Most of his poems can be used equally well as musical scores, rhythmic presentations, for humming, and also for acoustic treatment. His works include Creations (Teremtmények) poems (1981); Head and Consciousness (Fej és Tudat) poems (1990); Pleasure Garden (Gyönyörök kertje) poems (1991); Turkish Prayer Rug (Török imaszőnyeg), and Collected Poems 1968-2003. Szilágyi, Dezső (Desider) (Nagyvárad, now Oradea, Romania, 1 April 1840 - Budapest, 30 July 1901) – Lawyer and politician. After he had studied Law in Budapest and in Vienna, he worked as an attorney; and then, from 1867, as a presidential secretary at the Ministry of Justice; from 1871 he was a member of the codifying committee of the Prime Minister's Office. In 1870 he studied the judicial system and criminal procedure. From 1874 to 1889 he was Professor of Politics and Criminal Law at the University of Budapest. Already prior to his university position, he took part in politics. In 1871, he was a Member of Parliament in the Deák Party and, in 1875 in the Liberal Party. In 1877, because of the customs problem, he resigned from the Liberal Party and became one of the leading members of the United Opposition. However, in 1886 he left the opposition and in 1889 he again became a member of the Liberal Party. From 9 April 1889 to 15 January 1895, he was Minister of Justice in the Cabinets of Kálmán (Coloman) Tisza, Gyula (Julius) Szapáry and Sándor (Alexander) Wekerle; his codifying activity was his main ambition. He prepared the Code of Criminal Procedure, which became law under his successor; he started the codification of the Civil Law, and prepared the reform of the material criminal law. He succeeded in moving the bill of religious matters through the Parliament in face of bitter opposition from the Monarch and the clergy, showing the aspirations of civic liberal circles concerning matrimonial law, the religion of the child, and state registration of births etc. From 1895 to 1898 he was President of the Lower House of Parliament, and corresponding Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1897). His works include Political Notes, vols. i-iii (Politikai jegyzetek I-III) (1887-1889). A square in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7456. → Tisza, Kálmán; Wekerle, Sándor.

Szilágyi, Domokos (Diminic) (Nagysomkút, 2 July 1938 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 27 October 1976) – Hungarian poet, writer and translator of literary works in Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania). He completed his studies at the High School of Szatmár, and studied Hungarian Literature at the Babes-Bolyai University, Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) (1955-1960). Until 1970, he was a contributor to the journal, Forward (Előre) in Bucharest. Then he fell seriously ill and committed suicide. In his view, the meaning of life is an endless struggle. The vicissitudes of the ethnic minority life shattered his optimism. His poetry gradually became full of gloom and depression. He was a talented representative of avant-gardism. A selection of his writings include Dream at the Airport (Álom a repülőtéren) poems (1969); Farewell to the Tropics (Búcsú a trópusoktól) poems (1969); Our Contemporary, János Arany (Kortársunk Arany János), monography (1969); Seashore Empire (Tengerparti Birodalom), left behind poems (1978); and Forced Landing (Kényszerleszállás) collected poems (1979). He translated works from Utan, Stanscu, Doinas and Walt Whitman. – B: 0881, 0878, 0877, T: 7103.

Szilágyi, Erzsébet (Elizabeth) (? – after 10 July 1483) – Wife of János (John) Hunyadi, mother of László (Ladislás) Hunyadi and King Mátyás I, (Matthias Corvinus, 1458-1490) and younger sister of Mihály (Michael) Szilágyi. She supported her husband's political designs through the management of the family's considerable estates. Her historical role commenced with the pledge from King László V (Ladislás, 1440-1457) that no harm would befall her sons for the assassination of Ulrik Cillei. However, the King broke his oath and beheaded her firstborn, László (1433-1457) and captured Mátyás. Using the family fortunes and armed assistance, she managed to have Mátyás elected King in 1458. She traveled to the Moravian border to receive her son and affirmed through her seal his betrothal and marriage to the daughter of Czech King Podiebrad, Katharina. Even the Pope was elated with the news. She lived her days on her estates, mostly in Ó-Buda. She also reconstructed the Vajdahunyad Fortress (now Belgrade, Serbia), and built a monastery on the site in 1465. In 1467, she donated a financially strong estate to a chapel in Ó-Buda. Poet János (John) Arany recorded her historical role in a poem entitled Szilágy Erzsébet. – B: 1078, 0883, 1138, T: 7658.→Hunyadi, János; Szilágyi, Mihály; Mátyás I, King; László V, King; Arany, János.

Szilágyi, Géza (Temesvár, now Timișoara, Romania, 29 December 1875 - Budapest, 7 April 1958) – Poet, writer and journalist. He obtained his Doctorate in Law and Political Science from the University of Budapest in 1901. While studying at the University, he was already Associate Editor of several daily newspapers. During the period between 1906 and 1919, he was an assistant editor of the paper, News (Újság). From 1905, together with a few friends, he published the literary and critical journal, Observer (Figyelő). After World War I, he worked at the paper, Evening (Est) from 1921 to 1928; later, he was a reporter from Budapest for the German news agencies. Szilágyi was one of the initiators of 20th century Hungarian lyric poetry. He also had some effect on the great lyric poet Endre (Andrew) Ady. Because of his first volume of poems, Tristia (1896), the attorney's department began an action against him. He participated in the work of the publications Observer, Wednesday (Szerda), and then West (Nyugat). In his poems the pessimism of the end of the 19th century and the feelings of physical love begin to speak. His works, in addition to Tristia, include On Dead Waters (Holt vizeken) poems (1903); Frost in May (Májusi fagy) play (1911); The Flock of the Devil (Az ördög nyája) short story (1917); St Vitus' Dance (Vitustánc) (1918); Words and Tears (Szó és könny) poems (1927); The Hell of John Vajda (Vajda János pokla) (1934); Selected Old and New Poems (1948), and Dancing-song of Beggars (Koldusok táncdala) selected poems (1958). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Ady, Endre.

Szilágyi, István (Stephen) (Nagykálló, 7 January 1819 - Máramarossziget, now Sighet in Romania, 12 April 1897) – Teacher, educator and writer. He studied Arts, Law and Theology at the University of Debrecen, where he was a fellow student of the great lyric poet János (John) Arany. He was Principal of the High School of Nagyszalonta (now Salonta, Romania), and there he had an encouraging effect on the initial stages of János Arany's career. From 1845 to 1896, he worked as teacher at the High School of Máramarossziget. He won the award of the Kisfaludy Society with his poem entitled Árpád in 1840, and with his short story, Csák and the Princess (Csák és a királyleány) in 1841. He received an award from the Hungarian Academy of Sciences in 1843 for his linguistic work entitled Rules of Sentence Construction (Szókötéstan szabályai). He wrote works on church history, local history and also on pedagogy. His other works include Christian Church History (Keresztyén egyháztörténet) (1860), and A Short Sketch of the History of Roman Literature (A római irodalomtörténet rövid vázлата) (1891). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Arany, János.

Szilágyi, János György (John Gregory) (Budapest, 16 July 1918 - ) – Scholar of antiquity, historian, philologist of classics and historian of literature. He studied Art at the University of Budapest from 1936 to 1941, after which he worked as a researcher in the Antiquities Section of the Museum of Fine Arts. He became its Section Head and Professor at the University of Budapest in 1952. He specialized in the art of antique theatrical art and earned a Doctorate in the study of art history. He was Secretary of the Society of Antique Studies for 16 years, and Editor of Bulletin du Musée Hongrois des Beaux-Arts; a member of the German Archeological Society and a member of the Instituto di Studi Etruschi of Florence; also a titular professor in 1973. His works include Greek Art (Görög művészet) (1954); The Golden Age of Greek Culture (A görög kultúra aranykora) with János Sarkady and Zsigmond Ritoók, (1984); The World of the Etruscans (Az etruszok világa) (1989), and Mythology and Humanism (Mitológia és humanitás) (1999). His numerous distinctions include the Kossuth Prize (1991), the József Eötvös Wreath (1996), and the Soros Foundation Prize (1998, 2000). – B: 0874, 1257, T: 7456.→Ritoók, Zsigmond (2).

Szilágyi, László (Ladislás) (Budapest, 2 October 1898 - Budapest, 6 September 1942) – Journalist and operetta librettist. He studied Law at the University of Budapest, but turned to journalism for a career. From 1919, he was a correspondent of Latest News (Új Hírek). The cabaret stages of Budapest liked putting on his jests and one-act plays, e.g. Seduce My Wife (Csábítsa el a feleségem). His first operetta, Levendula, was produced at the Castle Theater (Várszínház); after that he became one of the popular operetta and libretto writers. In 1928, he was contracted to the King (Király) Theater. Several of his pieces were played with success abroad. His operetta My Violin Broke (Eltörött a hegedűm) was made into a sound-film. Another of his well-known films is the Borrowed Husbands (Kölcsönként férjek) (1942). His operettas include Good Old Budapest (Régi jó Budapest) (1925); Kissing Woman (Csókos asszony) (1926); Golden Swan (Aranyhattyú) (1927); Falling Leaf (Hulló falevél) (1935) and Lieutenant Maria (Mária főhadnagy) (1943). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.

Szilágyi, Mihály (Michael) (? - Istanbul, 1461) – Commander and Governor. He was born into a noble landowner family, brother-in-law of János (John) Hunyadi via his older sister Elizabeth Szilágyi. He fought alongside János Hunyadi in the Battle of Várna (now in Bulgaria) in 1444, and at Rigómező (now Kosszovo Polje, Serbia) in 1448, where he fell into captivity, but was released by the Sultan. His personal enemy George Brankovics ruler of Serbia attempted to assassinate him. Instead, Hunyadi captured and released him after a ransom of 60,000 golden florins. During the Battle of Nándorfehérvár (now Belgrade, Serbia) in 1456, Szilágyi was its captain and rebuilder, and took part in the assassination of Ulrik Cillei; but remained free while some of the Hunyadis were captured in Buda. After the beheading of László (Ladislás) Hunyadi in 1457, he assumed command of the Hunyadi faction and became Governor of Macsó in 1457-1458 and, during his tenure, supported by Polish and Hungarian mercenaries, he led a campaign against King László V (1453-1457) and captured the royalist Saxon cities of Transylvania. Prior to the battle, assisted by his sister, Erzsébet (Elizabeth), he fought to free Mátyás (Matthew) Hunyadi, who was then elected as King Mátyás I (1458). He also signed the Treaty of Szeged in 1458, to ensure the disarming of the royalist Garai family. Mátyás had Szilágyi elected Governor of Hungary for five years, but soon excluded him from involvement in governmental affairs. He withdrew and watched the Turks' gradual intrusion into Hungary. When the King demanded his resignation, he aligned with László (Ladislás) Garai and Miklós (Nicholas) Ujlaki at Simontornya on 26 July 1458, against the King. While the King appeased him, he could not accept the reduction of power and influence and again marched against the King in 1459. The King incarcerated him in the Fortress of Világos (now Şiria, Romania) in the same year. Upon his release he became Voivode of Transylvania and Captain-General of Southern Hungary. In 1460, he engaged in a battle against the superior Turkish army, was captured by the Sultan and transported to Istanbul, where he was later beheaded for refusal to reveal tactical information about the weaknesses of the Fortress of Nándorfehérvár. – B: 0942, 0883, T: 7658. → Szilágyi, Erzsébet; Hunyadi, János; Hunyadi, László; Mátyás I, King.

Szilágyi, Sándor (Alexander) (Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 30 August 1827 - Budapest, 12 January 1899) – Historian. He studied Law and Arts in Kolozsvár. During the 1848/49 Revolution and War of Independence, he went to Pest and became a correspondent for the Pest News (Pesti Hírlap), and Life Scenes (Életképek). After the Revolution, he attempted to launch literary journals: with only 10 issues of Magyar Memorial Paper (Magyar Emléklap), 4 of Hungarian Writers' Fascicules (Magyar Írók Füzetei), and 10 issues of Pest Pamphlet. They failed because the Austrian-controlled police banned all of them, due to published poems citing the memory of the Revolution. Volume II of the literary annual Nagyenyed Album was also confiscated by the police, together with some of his other works. From 1852, Szilágyi was a mathematics teacher at the Reformed College of Kecskemét; from 1853 he taught at Nagykőrös, where his teacher colleagues included the great lyric poet János (John) Arany and Ferenc (Francis) Mentovich. In 1867, Baron József (Joseph) Eötvös, Minister of Religion and Public Education appointed him Secretary of his Ministry. From 1878 he was Librarian of the University Library, Budapest. At the beginning of the 1850s, he published writings on the Revolution and War of Independence and also published many data and documents from the history of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1875 he took over the editorial work of the high-level historical journal Centuries (Századok), and launched the journal Historical Magazine (Történeti Tár) in 1878, as well as the series entitled Hungarian Historical Biographies (Magyar Történelmi Életrajzok), in 1885. He conducted far-reaching scientific organizing work. He published the series Transylvanian Parliamentary Memorials, 1540-1699 (Erdélyi Országgyűlési Emlékek, 1540 - 1699), and edited the 10-volume History of the Hungarian Nation (Magyar Nemzet Története), published on the occasion of the millennial celebrations. He was Member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1857, ordinary 1873). His other works include History of Transylvania, vols. i,ii (Erdélyország története, I-II) (1866) and The Era of the Rákóczi in Transylvania (A Rákócziak kora Erdélyben) (1868). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Arany, János.

Szilágyiana Collection – A collection of Turkish documents, extremely rich in both quantity and substance. The “Bequest of Dániel Szilágyi” (1830-1885) is the most important part of the 438-piece manuscript collection. There are copious treatises of historical relevance to the history of Hungary. The document collection is very valuable and, among others, it also includes numerous original letters and codices. Dániel Szilágyi lived in Istanbul for 36 years, where he spent hours every day at the market place among piles of books with an excellent sense for discovering real treasures. After the demise of the War of Independence of 1848-1849, his goal was to obtain valuable data for the writing of Hungarian history by collecting books and rare manuscripts. He left his bequest to the Hungarian Academy of Sciences, which placed it under the above name in the Library of the Academy. – B: 0883, 1136, T: 7659.

Szilárd-Chalmers Effect – Nuclear-chemical occurrence, description of it was first given by Leó Szilárd, and T. Chalmers in London in 1934. The descriptions of its effects are referred to by this name in professional literature. – B: 1230, 1220, T: 7675.→Szilárd, Leó.

Szilárd, Béla (Steiner) (Mezőberény, 20 January 1884 - Paris, 2 June 1926) – Chemist. He started his high school studies at Békéscsaba and graduated in Debrecen. He studied Pharmacology at the University of Budapest, graduating in 1904, and he defended his doctoral thesis in 1905. The following year he became an assistant professor. In 1907, he traveled abroad with a scholarship, and continued his studies at the Sorbonne, Paris. In the meantime, he worked at the Curie Laboratories. In 1912 he opened his own research laboratory in Paris, the Laboratoire de Produits Radioactifs. From 1914 he lived in London, then in Madrid. From 1920 on, he continued his activity in Paris, where he published his results. He translated into Hungarian Jules Henri Poincaré’s book entitled Science and Hypothesis (Tudomány és föltevés) (Bp. 1908). He was preoccupied with the photochemical phenomenon, luminescence, and the biological effects of radioactive radiation. He was also interested in radioactive pharmaceuticals, the quantitative measurement of X-ray and radioactive radiation, colloids, the formation of living matter and the history and development of the above-mentioned topics. His research output is over a hundred and fifty publications, as well as numerous patents. The articles were published in Hungary and abroad. His documents and correspondence are kept in the Archives of the Budapest Polytechnic and the Manuscript Archives of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences.

His main works include Radium and Radioactivity (Radium és radioaktivitás) (Bp., 1905), and The Electrolytic Decomposition and Formation of Alcohols in Absolute Alcoholic Solution (Az alkoholok elektrolitos bomlása és képződése absolut alkoholos oldatban) (Bp., 1905). He was awarded the Legion d'Honneur distinction in 1925. – B: 0883, 1105, T: 7697.

Szilárd, Leó (Budapest, 11 February 1898 - La Jolla, CA. USA, 30 May 1964) – Physicist and biophysicist. He was born into a Jewish family of an engineer. He attended the renowned Lutheran High School of Budapest (Fasori Gimnázium) (1908-1916). His tertiary studies were in Engineering at the Polytechnic of Budapest. In 1917 he had to join the Army. In 1919 he resumed his studies, but after the introduction of numerus clausus for Jewish students in universities, he conducted his studies at the Technische Hochschule in Berlin-Charlottenburg, where he changed to Physics, and attended classes of Einstein, Planck and Max von Laue. He obtained his doctorate in Physics from the Humboldt University of Berlin in 1923, and worked as an assistant to von Laue. In 1927 he became an honorary lecturer (privatdozent) at the University of Berlin, where he worked with Einstein on numerous technical inventions. During 1933, Szilárd moved to London to avoid Nazi persecution, and there he attempted to create a chain reaction, which he actually patented in 1936. He was also the co-holder of the patent of the nuclear reactor with Nobel laureate Enrico Fermi. In 1938, Szilárd was invited to do research at Columbia University, and moved to New York, and Fermi joined him. They concluded that uranium could sustain chain reaction. Later they found that boron-free graphite could control chain reaction. As a result the first controlled chain reaction occurred on 2 December 1942. After learning about the German success in nuclear fission in 1939, Szilárd drafted a letter to Franklin D. Roosevelt, and convinced Albert Einstein to sign it, which resulted in the creation of the Manhattan project, i.e., the creation of the first atomic bomb. Szilárd hoped that it would not be put into action, that the mere threat of it would force enemies to surrender. However, the new President, Harry Truman agreed to use the atomic bomb against Hiroshima and Nagasaki. After World War II, Szilárd changed from physics to molecular biology. At the beginning of 1951, Szilárd proposed a new kind of nuclear weapon using a cobalt bomb. In his book, The Voice of the Dolphins, he dealt with moral and ethical issues raised by the development of nuclear weapons (1961). During 1962, Szilárd was a member of a group of scientists who founded the Council for a Livable World. The Council's goal was to warn the public and Congress of the threat of nuclear war and encourage rational arms control and nuclear disarmament. He spent his last years as a fellow of the Salk Institute in San Diego. He received honors from the American Academy of Arts and Sciences (1954), the American Physical Society, the Atoms for Peace Award (1959), the National Inventors Hall of Fame and the title of Humanist of the Year (1960). A library and a crater of the Moon bear his name. – B: 1031, 1123, 1138, 1672, T: 7103.

Szilárdi, János (John) (Szalárd, ca. 1616-1617 - Kolozsvár, now Cluj-Napoca, Romania, 3 August 1666) – Historian. He worked as an archivist at Gyulafehérvár (now Alba Iulia, Romania); later, as a young man, he became Court Secretary to Prince György (George) Rákóczi I (1630-1648) whose era people remember nostalgically in the times of decline of Transylvania (Erdély, now in Romania) after 1657. In 1660 he took part in the defense of Várad (later Nagyvárad, now Oradea in Romania) and, when this town fell, he lost all his wealth. In 1665, he fled to Kolozsvár and held smaller offices; he was elected among the custodians of the Reformed Church. Between 1662 and 1664, he wrote the history of Transylvania from 1526 to 1664. He treated the 16th century sketchily, but covered his own age in 9 volumes, containing also important documents, and scourges his native land's backwardness. The work contains two prophetic sermons of 1677 by Pál (Paul) Medgyesi. He was the supporter of an autonomous Transylvanian fatherland. He was the author of the Lamentable Hungarian Chronicle (Siralmas magyar krónika) (History of Transylvania 1526-1662), Published by Zsigmond Kemény (1853). – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Rákóczi I, Prince György; Medgyesi, Pál; Kemény, Baron Zsigmond.

Szilassy, László (Ladislás) (Szabó) (Nyírcsászári, 13 February 1908 - São Paolo, 30 March 1972) – Actor. Without attending a school of dramatic art, he started his acting career with the company of Károly (Charles) Szalay in Tata, at age 23, after completing his Law course at the University of Budapest. After Tata, he entered into a contract with the company of József (Joseph) Kallós in Kisújszállás; later Jenő (Eugene) Sziklai engaged him in Szeged. This was followed by his contract with Imre (Emeric) Miklóssy's company: playing in Újpest, Szolnok and Kecskemét. From 1936 to 1937, he played in Árpád Horváth's company in Debrecen. Later, he went to Budapest, where he appeared in the Inner City, the Artist, the Magyar, the Comedy and finally the New Hungarian Theaters. Szilassy's good stage appearance, pleasant singing voice and dancing skill rendered him ideal for hero roles in operettas; but also played in musical comedies and dramas, including Kálmán in J. Huszka's Erzsébet (Elizabeth); Pista in M. Eisemann's Old Tokay (Tokaji aszú); Pál in J. Bókay's Lie to Me (Hazudj nekem), and Korponay in L. Zilahi's The General (A tábornok). He added to his popularity with his films, including There Are no Accidents (Nincsenek véletlenek) (1938); The Armchair (A karosszék) (1939); Prince Bob (Bob herceg) (1941), and The Tell-Tale Mill (A mesélő malom) (1943). His book is entitled Laci (Les) (1941). In 1944, Szilassy was a member of the right-wing Arrow Cross Party and, using his original name as Lieutenant László Szabó, he participated in the coup d'état of the extreme right-wing political leader Ferenc (Francis) Szálasi but, after the end of the Arrow Cross rule, when Hungary was already completely occupied by Soviet forces, he went abroad. From Germany he emigrated to Argentina, where he was one of the founders of the Society of Hungarian Actors in Buenos Aires. In 1960 he moved to Brazil. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.→Szálasi, Ferenc.

Szili, Katalin (Catharine) (Barcs, 12 May 1956 - ) – Politician, lawyer, human ecologist. After obtaining a Degree in Law at Janus Pannonius University, Pécs, she majored in Human Ecology and Political Science. She has been a Member of Parliament since 1994. Between 1994 and 1998, she was the political secretary of the Ministry of Environmental Protection and Water. She was Speaker of the Hungarian National Assembly (2002-2009). She was the candidate of the Hungarian Socialist Party (Magyar Szocialista Párt – MSZP) for state presidency in the 2005, but lost. She previously held high office as the President of the Constitutional Court of Hungary (Alkotmánybíróság – AB). In 2009, Szili was the mayoral candidate of MSZP for the City of Pécs, but she lost the election. She gradually became the inner opposition of MSZP. In 2009, Szili resigned as Speaker of of the House. She formed the Movement of Alliance for the Future, in 2010. Szili was elected to the Parliament via Party list in 2010. On 3 October 2010, she founded the Social Union Party and became its first Chairperson. As a result, she left the Hungarian Socialist Party and continued the parliamentary work as a formally independent MP. In 2011, Szili became member of the National Consultative Body (Nemzeti Konzultációs Testület), preparing the new Constitution. She also wrote and presented her own constitution proposal. – B: 0874, T: 7103.→Social Union Party.

Szilvássy, Margit (Margaret) (Beszterce, now Bistrița, Romania, 16 November 1910 - Budapest, 7 February 1988) – Opera singer (soprano). From 1929 to 1934 she studied voice at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music in Budapest, under Laura Hilgermann, Imre (Emeric) Molnár and József (Joseph) Sík; for music theory she had Árpád Palotai and Mária Budánovits as teachers. In 1934, she earned a diploma in operatic studies at the Academy. From 1934 to 1936, she was on scholarship from the Opera House of Budapest, and from 1936 to 1968, she was its soloist; from 1968, in retirement, she taught singing. She was one of the most versatile member of the Opera House, coping equally well with soprano and mezzo-soprano roles; her range extended from operetta prima donna and soubrette to dramatic heroine. Her roles included Musette in G. Puccini's La Bohème (Bohémélet); Venus in Wagner's Tannhäuser; Marina in Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov; Santuzza in Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana (Parasztbecsület); Anina in R. Strauss' Der Rosenkavalier (Rózsalovag); Rosalinda in J. Strauss' Die Fledermaus (A denevér), and Glavari Hanna in F. Lehár's Merry Widow (Víg özvegy). She was awarded the Merited Artist Title. – B: 0883, 1445, T: 7456.

Szilvássy, József (Joseph) (Somorja, now Šamorín, Slovakia, 25 July, 1946 - ) – Journalist. Between 1960 and 1964, he completed the Hungarian High School in Somorja. From 1964 to 1968, he studied at the Faculty of Arts of the University of Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia) and obtained a Dip. Ed. Teacher's Degree in History and Slovakian language. From 1968 to 1974 he was an associate of the culture column of New Word (Új Szó), and from 1974 to 1989, he was its column editor. In 1989, he was the acting Editor-in-Chief, and from 1990 Editor-in-Chief for the paper, New Word (Új Szó). From 1970, he was a member of the Czechoslovakian Journalists' Association. He wrote literary and cultural commemorations, literary and theatrical critiques, cultural-political articles, notes, theoretical analyses, reports, and also translations from Czech and Slovakian languages. From 1990, it was under his guidance, that the party daily paper New Word (Új Szó) became an independent daily newspaper of the Hungarian minority in Slovakia. His articles appeared in papers like Adult Education (Népművelés); Woman (Nő); Free Farmer (Szabad Földműves); Fertile Discussion (Termékeny eszmecsere; New Word (Új Szó), and The Lesson of Half a Century (Fél évszázad tanulsága). Some of his translations have also been published (1982, 1983). – B: 1083, T: 7456.

Szilvássy, Miklós (Nicholas) (Márianosztra. 5 December 1925 - Budapest, 8 May 1969) – Wrestler. He began wrestling in the colors of the Budapest Railwaymen's Sports Club (Vasutas Sport Club – BVSC) in 1942; in these colors he became junior champion five times. In Greco-Roman lightweight and in team competition, as a competitor from the Budapest Club, he scored numerous victories in various classes: team (1946), welterweight (1947), team (1948), free style welterweight (1948), Greco-Roman welterweight (1949, 1950, 1951 and 1952), free style middleweight (1952) and Greco-Roman and free style welterweight (1953). Altogether, he was in the selected category 34-times during the period 1946-1956, and was a four-time Hungarian Champion. Later, representing the Budapest district of Ferencváros, he was Hungarian champion in Greco-Roman wrestling four times in welterweight, and also single Hungarian champion in free style middleweight. At the 1948 London Olympics, he received a silver medal in Greco-Roman welterweight wrestling. In 1949 in Budapest, and 1951 in Berlin, at the College World Championships, he received a silver medal. In the 1952 Helsinki Olympics, he won a gold medal in Greco-Roman welterweight wrestling. In 1953 he registered with the Dózsa group of Budapest and, in the same year, he placed second in the Naples World Championships. In the College World Championship of Budapest, he won a gold medal. He won the Greco-Roman championship of the 1954 World Championships held in Budapest. Later in his career, he worked as a trainer for the Hungarian select team and was also a trainer for Ferencváros TC and the Budapest Railwaymen's Sport Club. At the age of 44 he died as a result of an incurable illness. – B: 1031, 0883, T: 7456.

Szilvay, Csaba (Budapest, 5 September, 1941 - ) – Cellist. He studied at the Béla Bartók Conservatory of Music and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, as a student of Antal (Anthony) Friss. After having received his diploma in 1970, he studied at the Sibelius Academy in Helsinki, Finland, with Professor Erkki Rautio. Between 1971 and 1976, he taught cello at the Jyväskylä Conservatory in Helsinki. Since 1976, he has been teaching at the East Helsinki Music Institute, and since 1978, at the Sibelius Academy. – B: 0904, T: 7649. → Szilvay, Géza.

Szilvay, Géza (Budapest, 13 September 1943 - ) – Violinist. He studied at the Béla Bartók Conservatory, Budapest and at the Ferenc (Franz) Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest, and received his diploma in 1966. He also studied Law and Political Science at the University of Budapest and earned a Ph.D. in 1970. Since 1970, he has been teaching violin at the East Helsinki Music Institute and, since 1978, at the Sibelius Academy as well. In 1984, he was appointed Principal of the East Helsinki Music Institute. In 1972 Csaba and Géza Szilvay founded the Helsinki Strings, and have conducted the orchestra ever since. The Szilvay brothers gained international recognition both as string pedagogues and as conductors. In recognition of their work, they were awarded the Knight Order of the Finnish Lion, the Culture Prize of Finland, the Hungarian State Award for Cultural Activity, and the Pro Musica Prize. – B: 0904, T: 7649. → Szilvay, Csaba.

Szilvay, Kornél (Cornelius) (Budapest, 25 July 1890 - Budapest, 8 September 1957) – Mechanical engineer. He did well even internationally with his results in modern fire-prevention. With the rank of a colonel he was the Metropolitan fire-chief of Budapest. His best-known invention is the chemical extinguisher, which puts out enclosed fires by utilizing materials that check the burning process, such as gas or dust that extinguish fires, thus prevent fire damage occurring while fighting a fire (1923). In 1928, he had a patent issued for the Szilvay fire-fighting equipment for extinguishing a fire by means of dust or foam. His processes are employed nowadays worldwide. He is author of the work: Dry Fire-extinguishing (Szárasztás) (1941). – B: 0883, 1888, T: 7456.

Szilvay, Réka (Helsinki, 16 April, 1972 - ) – Violinist. At the age of four, she took violin lessons from her father Géza Szilvay. At the age of twelve, studied at the Sibelius Academy of Helsinki, and received a diploma in 2000. From 1992 to 1998, she studied at the University of Music in Vienna, Austria. She also participated in several master classes. As child soloist she performed on TV and Radio stations. She regularly appears with major orchestras in Europe, America and Asia, such as the Kirov Orchestra, the London Philharmonic Orchestra and the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra. She also performed in the Carnegie's Weill Recital Hall, New York, the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam, and the Vienna Konzerthaus. She performed for the BBC, London, and has recordings to her credit. – B: 0904, T: 7103.→Szilvay, Géza.

Szily, Kálmán (Coloman) (Nagy-szigethi) (Izsák, 29 June 1838 - Budapest, 24 July 1924) – Linguist and naturalist. He studied at the Polytechnic Institutes of Budapest and Vienna. From 1861 he was a demonstrator under József (Joseph) Stoczek, then a temporary lecturer; from 1869 he was Professor of Experimental Physics and, from 1870 to 1889, Professor of Theoretical Physics and Analytical Mechanics. He dealt with thermo-dynamic principles, based on mechanical principles. From 1871 to 1873, he was Vice-Chancellor at the University. It was during these years that the Polytechnic building was constructed on the Buda banks of the Danube, and the reforming of the organization of the University was linked to his name. Szily was a member of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (corresponding 1865, ordinary 1873, director 1883, honorary 1920, and secretary from 1889 to 1905). In 1890, he launched the monthly journal of the Academy, entitled Academic Bulletin (Akadémiai Értesítő), which he edited till 1905. He became Librarian of the Academy from 1905 on, and established the Széchenyi Museum within the Academy. He also played an important role as Secretary in the renewed development of the Natural Scientific Society (Természettudományi Társulat); as its Secretary in 1869 he launched, and until 1898 edited the Natural Scientific Gazette (Természettudományi Közlöny). He was the Society's President from 1880, and he founded a natural scientific book-publishing firm. Szily participated in the various natural scientific activities, and developed the special terminology in the language. This led to his interest in linguistics; from the end of the 1890s, he changed over to a systematic study of Hungarian linguistics. In 1904 he founded the Hungarian Linguistic Society (Magyar Nyelvtudományi Társág), and became its President; he also edited its journal, the Hungarian Language (Magyar Nyelv); furthermore, he edited the Dictionary of the Hungarian Language Reform, vols. i, ii (A magyar nyelvújítás szótára, I, II) (1902, 1908). From 1915, he was a member of the Upper House of Parliament. His other works include On the Technical Language of Natural Science (A természettudományi műnyelvről) (1879); Hungarian Natural Scientists in the Last Hundred Years (Magyar természettudósok száz évvel ezelőtt) (1888), and Is Runic Writing still Alive among Hungarian people? (Él-e a rovásírás a magyar nép között?) (1903). For his linguistic work, he received the Grand Prix of the Academy in 1913. A biligual technical school in Budapest bears his name. – B: 0883, 1257, T: 7456.→Runic Writing; Runic Writing, Hungarian.

Szily, Pál (Paul) (Budapest, 16 May 1878 - Magyaróvár, 18 August 1945) – Physician and researcher in biochemistry. He studied Medicine and Biology at the University of Budapest, where he became a demonstrator in Biology from 1901. Here he carried out his experiments, whereby he introduced the colorimetric measuring of pH. He obtained his Doctorate in 1902; then he went to Berlin as a research student; while there he discovered the artificial buffer solutions. After returning to Hungary, he went into private practice as a physician. From 1928 he became a urologist of the National Health Service (Országos Társadalombiztosító Intézet – OTI) in Magyaróvár. Early in 1945, the Hungarian Arrow-Cross authorities arrested him and sent him to the concentration camp in Győr. He was freed from there; but because of the illness he contracted there, he soon died. Pál Szily conducted some pioneering research and experimental work in the field of physiochemistry, serology and chemotherapy, the results of which he published in scientific journals in Hungary and abroad. In Mosonmagyaróvár a street is named after him. – B: 1406, 1031, T: 7456.

Szimonidesz, Lajos (Louis) (Pusztaföldvár, 4 November 1884 - Budapest, 18 July 1965) – Lutheran pastor, cultural historian. He studied Theology in Pozsony (now Bratislava, Slovakia), attended University in Göttingen, Germany, and Budapest, and he was Parish Pastor in Nagybörzsöny. He was candidate for the historical sciences and he was also editor of several religious publications, including the Evangelical Pages (Evangélikus Lap), The Theological Specialist Journal (A Teológiai Szaklap), and Compassionate Theology (Megértő Teológia). In 1919, during the Council (Soviet) Republic, he was President of the Community Council. After the fall of the Council Republic, he lost his pastoral job. His progressive articles on religious history appeared in a number of national and foreign periodicals. His main works include Did Jesus Live? (Élt-e Jézus?) (1916); The End of The World (A világ vége) (1917); Our Faith (A mi hitünk) (1917); The Life Of Jesus (Jézus élete) (1922); Religions of the World (A világ vallásai) (1928); Religious Revolutions of Our Days (Napjaink vallási forradalmi) (1936); Life And Death of Péter Fekete (Fekete Péter élete és halála) (1936); Miracles of Millenia (Évezredek csodái) (1936), and Jesus Christ in The Third Reich (Jézus Krisztus a Harmadik Birodalomban) (1937). Many of his works remained in manuscript and are kept in the University Library (Egyetemi Könyvtár), Budapest. After World War II, he was rehabilitated and was appointed the first Protestant Army Bishop in post-war Hungary. He had a 25,000-volume book-collection, which he sold to the National Széchényi Library (Országos Széchényi Könyvtár), Budapest. – B: 0883, 1031, T: 7667. → Council (Soviet) Republic of Hungary.
